In the course of his summing up, the Judge has a right to express his opinion, and if he expresses an opinion which is an unfair one, the High Court can interfere to remove the ill consequences of such action. But it is not necessary that the Judge should, in expressing his opinion, qualify it by the most elaborate safeguards. The question is, whether on the whole the case has been fairly left within the jury's province. If the Judge attempts to take the case out of the jury's province by something in the nature of imposing his own view upon the jury, it is a case of misdirection, but if a Judge simply states his opinion which the law allows him to state, in such a manner that intelligent jury men should see for themselves that it is only his opinion and nothing else, it is not necessary for him to add as a safeguard a remark that it is only his opinion and that the jury are perfectly at liberty to form their own—Des Raj v Emp., 5 O W N. 497, 29 Cr L.J. 721 (722). The Judge should not refrain from expressing his own opinion about the facts Any anxious care on the part of the Judge to avoid suggesting even the faintest suspicion of his own opinion to the jury is entirely misconceived A Judge ought to tell a jury what his opinion is, so long as he makes it clear that they are at liberty to regard or disregard it as they please. A charge which avoids any expression of opinion would generally amount to a

920. Inadmissible evidence:—It is the duty of the Judge to see that evidence which is not admissible in itself should not be allowed to go in, to the prejudice of the accused—Abbas v. Q. E., 25 Cal. 736. It is the duty of the Judge to interpose and see that no improper use of the law is made against the accused and that no improper evidence is given to the jury—Padam Prasad v. K. E., 33 C.W.N 1121 (1141) (S.B.), 50 C.L.J. 106; R. v Wakefield, (1799) 27 St. T 679 Where a document, which is not per se admissible, is admitted by the Court, and the accused having sufficient opportunity at the trial omits to take any objection, he cannot afterwards in appeal impeach the verdict of the jury on the ground that the document had been admitted without formal proof. But it is competent to the High Court to consider whether, after excluding the evidence wrongly admitted, the rest of the evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict—Ram Bhagwan v. Emp, 19 Cr L J 886 (Pat.). Where during the trial before a jury the Public Prosecutor read an alleged confession of the accused which not being recorded according to law was inadmissible in evidence, held that the irregularity of allowing it to be read might have influenced the minds of the jury, however carefully the Judge might have endeavoured to remove any impression caused thereby, and that the accused was entitled to a retrial—Damodar v Emp, 3 P.L.T. 52, 23 Cr.L J 141.

If inadmissible evidence has been admitted by the Judge, the High Court will consider whether the evidence improperly admitted is of such a nature that it possibly may have considerably influenced the minds of the jury, and whether it is reasonably certain that the jury would have acted on the unobjectionable evidence if the wrongly admitted evidence had not also been presented to them—Padam Prasad v. K E, 33 C W.N 1121 (1140) (S.B.), 50 C.L J 106, 30 Cr.L.J 993.

Meaning and construction of document.—The Judge must explain to the jury the legal construction to be put upon a document and its legal effect and bearing—Q v. Setul, 3 W.R 69 If there appears to be a palpable blot or alteration on the face of a document, the Judge has every right to draw the attention of the jury to it—Q. v. Kissoree, 17 W.R. 58.

921. Clause (c):—It is the duty of the Judge to decide upon all matters which it may be necessary to prove in order to enable evidence of particular matters to be given Thus, if it is proposed to give secondary evidence of a document the original of which is alleged to have been lost or destroyed, it is the duty of the Judge to decide whether the original has been lost or destroyed—Q E v. Lalsingh, Ratanlal 452 Where the accused made one confession before the committing Magistrate, and another confession before the Court of Session, retracting the previous confession, and alleged that he was beaten by the Police and the previous confession was caused by inducement offered by the Police, it was held that the Judge ought to decide whether the first confession was induced by illegal promise and whether that inducement still existed or had been effectually dispelled when the Magistrate recorded the confession—Q E v. Rupaya, Ratanlal 245.

they need not find which of the two statements is false—Id Humayun, 21 W R 72.

924. Questions of fact.—It is the duty of the jury and not of the Judge to decide all questions of fact. Where in the summing up, the Judge left no question of fact for the jury to decide but decided all himself, and said expressly that in his opinion it was proved that the accused had committed murder, and the only thing he left to the jury was to say which of the exceptions to sec 300 I P C. applied if the jury held that the offence did not amount to murder, it was held that such a summing up was not in accordance with law, and a new trial should be ordered—Q v Shamsheer, 9 W.R. 51. But although the jury are the sole judges of facts, still it is the duty of the Judge to help the jury to find facts. He has to advise the jury as to the logical bearing of the evidence admitted upon the matters to be found by them—Afruddi v. K E, 23 C W N 833, 20 Cr L J. 661.

The following are instances of questions of facts:—(1) The question of intent in a case of kidnapping—K E v. Hughes, 14 All 25; (2) the question as to whether there was free consent, in a case under sec. 376 I P C—Q v Gopaul, 1 W R 21, (3) the question whether a fact was or was not proved, or what fact was proved—Sadhu Sheekh v. Emp, 4 C W N 576, (4) the question as to the identity of thumb impressions on two or more documents for the purpose of ascertaining whether the thumb impressions are of one and the same person—Pancha Mandal v. Emp, 1 C L J 385, (5) the question whether possession of the stolen property was recent enough to warrant a conviction for the substantive offence of dacoity—Guzzala Hanuman v. Emp, 26 Mad. 467, (6) the question as to whether the accused was under 12 years of age and incapable of understanding the nature of his act—Emp v. Ali Raza, 28 O C 69, 26 Cr L J 310, (7). The question whether a confession is true or false is a question of fact to be decided by the jury, and the question whether the confession is voluntary (and therefore admissible) or not is for the Judge to determine. It is not open to the Judge to ask the jury to determine whether the confession is voluntary or not, even though it is a question of fact, for the result would be that the jury would have had put before them evidence which was inadmissible, and the difficulty of removing the effect of the inadmissible evidence from the jury's mind is obvious—Khiro Mandal v. K. E, 33 C.W.N. 1112 (1113), 1929 Cr. C. 362.

Illustration (a) :—Although Illustration (a) lays down that in a charge of murder the Judge should explain to the jury the distinction between murder and culpable homicide, still where in a trial for murder, a verdict for culpable homicide not amounting to murder could not be properly come to, under any aspect of the case before the Court, the Judge is not called upon to explain to the jury the distinction between murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Ngai Mja K. E., 8 L.B.R. 306 (F.B.), 17 Cr.L.J. 49, 32 I.C. 641.

300. In cases tried by jury, after the Judge has finished his charge, the jury may retire to consider their verdict.

Except with the leave of the Court, no person other than a juror shall speak to, or hold any communication with, any member of such jury.

925. After a charge is made to the jury, the jury should not be allowed to disperse but should at once retire to consider the verdict. Where after the charge, they were allowed to go home and come back some hours later, and then they considered their verdict, held that the trial was vitiated—Sariman v. Emp., 6 P.L.T. 552, 26 Cr.L.J. 861.

This section, which is explicit in its terms, should be strictly observed and it is highly undesirable that a jury in any case should have any communication with any body (even the Judge) who is not a jurymen upon the subject matter of the trial. It is also highly undesirable that a Police constable should be stationed anywhere or in any position in which he can hear the deliberations of the jurymen, or that anybody should be in a position where it is possible for him to know the form the deliberations of the jury took or what view any particular juror expressed about the matter—Banamali, 44 Cal. 723, 21 C.W.N. 167, 18 Cr.L.J. 311. Where it was proved that after the charge to the jury had been delivered, a person other than a juror spoke to or held communication with a member of the jury without the leave of the Court, it was held that that was sufficient to upset the verdict, and it was not necessary to consider whether the irregularity had in fact prejudiced the accused—Benimadhub v. K. E., 46 Cal. 207, 22 C.W.N. 740, 19 Cr.L.J. 737. But where during an adjournment of the Court before the Judge's charge was finished; one of the jurors was seen conversing with strangers but it did not appear that the conversation was about the case, it was held that this was not a sufficient ground for interfering with the verdict of the jury—In re Pulla Subba, 10 L.W. 379, 20 Cr.L.J. 790, 53 I.C. 694.

After the conclusion of the evidence and after the conclusion of the address of the Public Prosecutor, and before the defence had been heard in full and before the Sessions Judge had summed up the case to the jury, one of the jurors, in a room occupied by the clerks of the pleaders, in answer to some questions put to him, intimated that in his opinion the accused was guilty of the charge against him, and the Sessions Judge, although informed of the fact, proceeded with the trial, and took the verdict of the jury; held that the verdict must be set aside and there should be a fresh trial before a fresh jury—Emp. v. Nazir Ali, 25 C.W.N. 240. After the jury had retired to consider their verdict in a criminal case they saw the Judge in his chamber and asked him for a direction on a point of law. The Judge and the jury then went into the Court-room and the jury in the presence of the pleaders put certain questions to the Judge, and the answers thereto were recorded. Held that the mere fact that a question was put by the jury to the Judge, not in open verdict of a majority.

Court but in chamber did not vitiate the trial, but was at best an irregularity—Bilaschandra v. Emp., 27 C.W.N. 626 (628)

926. Verdict.—It is a dangerous thing for a Court to rely upon anything except the verdict of the jury, or to listen to the deliberations of the jury, or to the statements of individual jurymen made to this or that person after they had performed their duty and delivered their verdict—Banamali, 44 Cal. 723, 21 C.W.N. 167.

The law does not prescribe any specific form in which the verdict is to be returned. The jury may return their verdict in any form they think fit—Q. v. Hurry Prosad, 14 W.R. 59

The jury can return a verdict for a lesser offence, ignoring the graver charge, if the evidence before them does not warrant a verdict for the latter—Q. v. Saloo Sheikh, 3 W.R. 41. And the jury may do so, even though the accused was not charged with the lesser offence—Pattikadan v. Emp., 26 Mad. 243. Thus, the jury can return a verdict for abetment or attempt, though the prisoner was charged with the substantive offence only—S. P. Ghosh v. Emp., 8 Bur. L.T. 247, 16 Cr.L.J. 676; Subraji v. K. E., 13 O.C. 295, 11 Cr.L.J. 630. Where the charge against the accused was under sec. 149 read alternatively with sec. 325 I. P. C. (i.e. being members of an unlawful assembly, and causing grievous hurt by implication) a verdict of guilty of the offence under sec. 325 alone, although it did not form the subject of a separate charge, was legally sustainable—Govt. v. Mahaddi, 5 Cal. 871. When a person is charged with several offences arising out of a single act or series of acts, the word 'verdict' means the entire verdict on all the charges and is not confined to a verdict on a particular charge—Krishna Dhan v. Q. E., 22 Cal. 377. Where there are several accused, the jury have to give their verdict on the acts against each man severally, and even when several prisoners are jointly tried, the jury can convict one and acquit the others—Jamiruddi v. K. E., 16 C.W.N. 909, 13 Cr.L.J. 715.

By 'verdict' should be understood the collective opinion of the jury as a body, arrived at after mutual consultation and ascertained and announced by the foreman. In case of disagreement among the jury, the individual opinions of the members are never intended to be disclosed—Public Prosecutor v. Abdul Hamid, 36 Mad. 585. If a Judge records the individual opinions of the jurors by name, the procedure is opposed to the fundamental principle of the scheme of trial by jury—Jagannath v. Emp., 12 O.L.J. 643, 2 O.W.N. 534, 26 Cr.L.J. 1346. Where it was d that the verdict of the jury was arrived at by casting lots, wh the Judge held an inquiry and examined the individual jurors, h the statements of the jurors as to what happened in the jury-room the mode in which the verdict was arrived at were inadmissible—Emp. v. Harkumar, 40 Cal. 693, 17 C.W.N. 787, 14 Cr.L.J. 392.

Where after the delivery of the verdict the jury wants to say something more, it is undesirable to stop the jury at such stage of the proceedings, for it may happen that before the verdict is recorded the foreman may make some observations in respect of that verdict which may show the Judge that the jury have not properly understood the case. It would then be the duty of the Judge not to record the verdict, but to re-charge the jury so as to lay the case properly before them—Narayan v. Emp., 30 Cal. 485. Where the jury were apparently not able to follow the summing up of the Judge as regards the law bearing on the charges, it is the duty of the Judge, when the foreman told him of it, to explain it to them again—In re Palavcsa Tevan, 1911 M.W.N. 190, 12 Cr.L.J. 140. There can be no valid verdict if the jury have not rightly understood the nature of the offence in question—Q. v. Sustiram, 21 W.R. 1.

302. If the jury are not unanimous, the Judge may require them to retire for further consideration. After such a period as the Judge considers reasonable, the jury may deliver their verdict, although they are not unanimous.

927. Application of section :—Under this section the Sessions Judge can ask the jury, if they are not unanimous, to retire for further consideration, before the delivery of verdict, but cannot do so after its actual delivery—Kya Nyun v. K. E., 7 L.B.R. 140, 15 Cr.L.J. 678; Pub. Pro v. Abdul Hamid, 36 Mad. 585.

But if the verdict is not clear, the Judge may require them, after delivery of verdict, to consider it even though they be unanimous, since a verdict which is ambiguous or not clear cannot be received—Q. v. Ukoor, 1 W.R. 50.

928. If the jury are not unanimous:—A jury may be required to retire for further consideration, only when their verdict is not unanimous. An unanimous verdict of the jury, unless it is contrary to law, must be received by the Judge—Govt. v. Mahaddi, 5 Cal. 871; Q. v. Joykisto, 7 W.R. 22; Hia Gyi v. K. E., 3 L.B.R. 75. If the jury is unanimous, and there is no ambiguity in the verdict, the Judge cannot require them to reconsider their verdict—Q. E. v. Madhavrao, 19 Bom. 735; Q. E. v. Devji, 20 Bom. 215. If the Sessions Judge disagrees with the unanimous verdict of the jury, the only course open to him is to act under sec. 307—Emp. v. Kondiba, 28 Bom. 412.

When the jury are not unanimous, it is open to the Judge to require them to retire for further consideration, giving at the same time further directions on matters of law—Emp. v. Bhadmia, 6 Bom.L.R. 258. But the Judge is not bound to summon a fresh jury—Q. v. Gopaul, 1 W.R. 41.

303. (1) Unless otherwise ordered by the Court, the jury shall return a verdict on all the charges on which the accused is tried, and the Judge may ask them such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their verdict is.

Verdict to be given on each charge.

Judge may question jury.

Questions and answers to be recorded.

(2) Such questions and the answers to them shall be recorded.

929. Verdict on all the charges—The Judge ought to call upon the jury to return a verdict on each one of the heads of the charges. If the trial is for murder of two persons, and the jury return a verdict of guilty, the Sessions Judge should ascertain, whether the verdict relates to the killing of one or the other or both—Q E v. Berkia, Ratanlal 746; Krishna Dhan v. K E. 22 Cal 377

Where there are more than one accused as well as several charges, it would be a convenient course if the officer of the Court were to take a verdict of the jury upon each charge separately. Thus, in a case the accused were charged under sections 147, 148, 304, 325 and 326 I. P. C., and the Sessions Judge asked the jury the comprehensive question: "I shall want you to give me a verdict in respect of the offences under sections 147, 148, 304, 325 and 326 I. P. C. for each of the accused" and the jury returned an incomplete verdict, i.e., they gave a verdict only as regards sections 147 and 148 and expressed no opinion as regards the other charges; and the Sessions Judge had to question the jury again on the other charges. The High Court held the procedure to be faulty, and directed that in such a case the officer of the Court should at first put the question to the jury: "What is your verdict with regard to each of accused as regards the charge under section 147 I. P. C.?" He would then get a clear answer upon this charge. Then he would ask: "What is your verdict with regard to each of the accused as regards the charge under section 148?" He would then get a definite answer to that question. Then he would proceed on the same way and ask: "What is your verdict with regard to each of the accused as regards the charge under section 304?" and so on. If this procedure is adopted, there would be no difficulty in getting a complete verdict from the jury—Eran Khan v. Emp. 50 Cal 658 (663), 24 Cr L J 838, A I R 1924 Cal. 47.

If a Judge charges the jury and takes verdict as regards some only of the accused, and afterwards hears arguments and takes verdict as regards the remaining accused, he acts irregularly and contrary to the provisions of this Code—Pub Pro v. Abdul Hamid, 36 Mad. 585

930. Questioning the jury :—This section provides a suitable procedure where the verdict of the jury is so vague and uncertain that in order to ascertain whether the jury intended to bring in a verdict of guilty or not guilty, it is necessary to ask supplementary questions—K E. v. Deraftulla, 34 C.W.N 283 (284). The Judge is entitled to

There can be no valid verdict if the jury have not rightly understood the nature of the offence in question—Q v. Sustiram, 21 W.R. 1.

302. If the jury are not unanimous, the Judge may require them to retire for further consideration. After such a period as the Judge considers reasonable, the jury may deliver their verdict, although they are not unanimous.

927. Application of section—Under this section the Sessions Judge can ask the jury, if they are not unanimous, to retire for further consideration, before the delivery of verdict, but cannot do so after its actual delivery—Kya Nyun v. K. E., 7 L.B.R. 140, 15 Cr.L.J. 678, Pub. Pro v. Abdul Hamid, 36 Mad. 585.

But if the verdict is not clear, the Judge may require them, after delivery of verdict, to consider it even though they be unanimous, since a verdict which is ambiguous or not clear cannot be received—Q v. Ukoor, 1 W.R. 50.

928. If the jury are not unanimous:—A jury may be required to retire for further consideration, only when their verdict is not unanimous. An unanimous verdict of the jury, unless it is contrary to law, must be received by the Judge—Govt. v. Mahaddi, 5 Cal. 871; Q. v. Joykisto, 7 W.R. 22, Hia Gyi v. K. E., 3 L.B.R. 75. (2) Such questions and the answers to them shall be recorded.

929. Verdict on all the charges—The Judge ought to call upon the jury to return a verdict on each one of the heads of the charges. If the trial is for murder of two persons, and the jury return a verdict of guilty, the Sessions Judge should ascertain, whether the verdict relates to the killing of one or the other or both—Q E v. Berkia, Ratanlal 746; Krishna Dhan v K E. 22 Cal 377.

Where there are more than one accused as well as several charges, it would be a convenient course if the officer of the Court were to take a verdict of the jury upon each charge separately. Thus, in a case the accused were charged under sections 147, 148, 304, 325 and 326 I P C., and the Sessions Judge asked the jury the comprehensive question: "I shall want you to give me a verdict in respect of the offences under sections 147, 148, 304, 325 and 326 I P. The High Court held the procedure to be faulty, and directed that in such a case the officer of the Court should at first put the question to the jury: "What is your verdict with regard to each of accused as regards the charge under section 147 I P C?" He would then get a clear answer upon this charge. Then he would ask "What is your verdict with regard to each of the accused as regards the charge under section 148?" He would then get a definite answer to that question. Then he would proceed on the same way and ask "What is your verdict with regard to each of the accused as regards the charge under section 304?" and so on. If this procedure is adopted, there would be no difficulty in getting a complete verdict from the jury—Eran Khan v Emp., 50 Cal 658 (663), 24 Cr L J 838, A I R 1924 Cal 47.

If a Judge charges the jury and takes verdict as regards some only of the accused, and afterwards hears arguments and takes verdict as regards the remaining accused, he acts irregularly and contrary to the provisions of this Code—Pub Pro v Abdul Hamid, 36 Mad 585

930. Questioning the jury.—This section provides a suitable procedure where the verdict of the jury is so vague and uncertain that in order to ascertain whether the jury intended to bring in a verdict of guilty or not guilty, it is necessary to ask supplementary questions—K E. v. Derajtulla, 34 C.W.N. 283 (284). The Judge is entitled question the jury as to their verdict, only where it is ambiguous or incomplete so that it is necessary to ascertain what the verdict really is—Abdul Hamid, 36 Mad. 585; Emp. v. Abdul Hamid, 32 Cal 759; Q. E. v. Dada, 15 Bom 452; Wafadar v. Q. E., 21 Cal. 955; Q. E., v. Devji, 20 Bom. 215, Q v Sustiram, 21 W.R. 1. If the verdict of the jury is incomplete or is not free from ambiguity, the Judge is wrong in accepting such verdict without questioning the jury as to what their verdict really is. Thus, where the jury returned a verdict of 'guilty but not voluntarily' under a charge of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, and the Judge accepted the verdict to be one of guilty, and convicted the accused, it was held that the verdict was really one of not guilty, and the Judge was wrong, without further questioning the jury, in treating it as a verdict of 'guilty'—Emp. v. Khudiram, 12 C.W.N. 530; see also K. E. v. Chidghan, 7 C.W.N. 135. So also, where in a case there were several accused, and several charges under sections 147, 148, 304, 325 and 326 I. P. C., and the jury returned a verdict of guilty under sec. 147 against some of the accused and under section 148 against the rest, but gave no verdict on the other charges, held that the verdict of the jury was incomplete and it was necessary for the Sessions Judge to put further questions to the jury to ascertain what their verdict was as regards the charges under sections 304, 325 and 326 I. P. C.—Eran Khan v. Emp., 50 Cal. 658; Ram Prasad v. Emp. 26 Cr L.J. 1090 (Nag) If the verdict of the jury is confused and unintelligible, it is the duty of the Judge to obtain from them a proper and correct verdict before accepting the verdict given—Wilson, 30 C W N 693, 27 Cr L.J. 926 Thus, at the conclusion of a trial, the jury returned a verdict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The Judge questioned them as to which part of sec. 304 I. P. C. their verdict came under Their answers revealed the fact that they did not at all understand the law, whereupon the Judge again explained the law. The jury again retired, considered their verdict and brought in a unanimous verdict of murder Held that the first verdict being incomplete and the result of a misunderstanding of the law, the Judge was right in explaining the law to them; the second verdict was the legal verdict and one acceptable by the Judge—Emp v. Nga Tin Gyi, 4 Rang. 488, 28 Cr. L.J. 213 (214). In a case of rioting, if the verdict of the jury leaves it uncertain what the common object of the assembly is, the Judge ought to ask the jury questions under this section to ascertain the common object. If he does not do so, the verdict is bad in law—Wafadar v. Q. E., 21 Cal. 955 (973). Where in a case under sec 408 I.P.C. the jury returned a verdict of guilty but were not definite as to the amount embezzled, but gave some approximate amount which was a fraction of the amount charged, and where the Judge was inclined to think that a much larger amount than that mentioned by the jury had been misappropriated, held that in a case like this, the Judge was entitled to ask the jury such questions as were necessary to ascertain what their verdict was—Khirode v. K. E., 29 C.W.N. 54, 40 C.L.J. 555, 26 Cr.L.J. 532. Where the verdict is general and complete and free from ambiguity, the Judge is not competent to put questions to the jury, but must accept it without question—

Emp. v. Dhunum, 9 Cal. 53; Q. E. v. Desai, Ratanlal 442; Q. E. v. Dada, 15 Bom. 452; Emp. v. Kondiba, 28 Bom. 412; Emp. v. Chirkua, 2 A.L.J. 475, In re Ram Naicker, 22 M.L.J. 355; Edon v. Emp., 21 Cr.L.J. 829 (Cal.); Bilas Chandra v. K. E., 27 C.W.N. 626 (628). Where the verdict was clear and precise, but for some reason or other the Judge took upon himself to examine the jurors to ascertain whether their verdict was based upon the evidence of one or other of two important witnesses called for the Crown, held that Judge was not permitted by law to ask such questions—K. E. v. Derastulla, 34 C W N 283 (284).

When the jury have delivered a verdict, the Judge cannot ask them to reconsider their verdict. The Judge is only entitled to question the jury to ascertain what their verdict really is—Abdul Hamid, 36 Mad. 585; Lyme v. Crown, 4 Lah. 382; Kya Nyun v. K. E., 7 L.B.R. 140, 15 Cr.L.J. 678. If he disagrees with their verdict, he should proceed under section 307, but he cannot ask them to reconsider their verdict—Kya Nyun, supra. But the Judge is not obliged to accept an absurd verdict either as a verdict of guilty or as a verdict of not guilty. In such a case he is quite entitled to tell the jury to consider the matter over again. He is not bound to accept and interpret for himself a verdict of an unintelligible character, but he can, if he likes, ask questions of the jury, or recharge the jury on certain specific points and ask them to go and get their heads clear on the subject and give a proper verdict. But it is not a proper procedure for the Judge to cross-examine the jury—Hamid Ali v. Emp., 57 Cal. 61, 1930 Cr. C. 401.

Object of questions:—This section never contemplates that on ascertaining that the jury are not unanimous, the Judge should make minute inquiries to learn the nature of the majority and its opinion, so that he would have the opportunity of accepting or refusing that opinion as a verdict according as it coincides with his own opinion or not. Whatever may have been the individual opinion of the Judge, if he went so far as to ask the jury what was the exact majority, and what was the opinion of the majority, the Judge ought to receive that verdict without hesitation Hurry Churn v. Emp., 10 Cal. 140.

Asking reasons for verdict:—This section enables the Judge to ask only such questions as are necessary to ascertain what the verdict is. Questions put to the jury, demanding their reasons for the verdict (i.e., reasons for convicting or acquitting the accused), specially, if the verdict is unanimous, exceed the limits of questioning which the law contemplates in this section—Emp. v. Bhadma, 6 Bom. L.R. 258, Emp. v. Dhunum, 9 Cal. 53; K. E. v. Derastulla, 34 C W N. 283 (284), In re Subia Thevan, 43 Mad. 744, In re Ram Naicker, 22 M.L.J. 355, Arunachella v. Emp., 13 Cr.L.J. 586 (Mad.); Emp. v. Ali Hyder, 4 P.L.T. 425, 26 Cr.L.J. 856, Ram Jag v. Emp., 7 Pat. 55, 29 Cr.L.J. 466 (468).

But a reference under section 307 does not become invalid by reason of the Sessions Judge having asked the jury questions as to the reason of their verdict—In re Subbia Thevan, 43 Mad. 744, 39 M.L.J. 65, 21 Cr.L.J. 406. On the other hand he should ask reasons under certain circumstances. See Note 937 under section 307.

Questions and answers to be recorded :—The questions put to and the answers given by the jury must be recorded in their exact words, it is not enough if their substance only is recorded—Emp. v. Jhubboo, 8 Cal. 739.

304. When by accident or mistake a wrong verdict is delivered, the jury may, before or immediately after it is recorded, amend the verdict, and it shall stand as ultimately amended.

931. "By accident or mistake" :—This section contemplates cases where the verdict delivered is not in accordance with what was intended to be delivered by the jury, such mistake being the result of an accident only. But where the jury commits a mistake in understanding the law, and such mistake results in an erroneous verdict, it cannot be amended by the jury under this section but can be corrected only by the Judge disagreeing with the jury and referring the case under sec 307 to the High Court—Emp. v. Kondiba, 28 Bom. 412. So also, where the jurors being misled by the notes of the foreman as to some of the evidence, delivered an erroneous verdict, such a verdict could not be said to have been delivered by accident or mistake and could not be amended by the jury under this section—In re Ram Naicker, 22 M.L.J. 355, 13 Cr.L.J. 285.

After the witnesses for the prosecution and certain witnesses for the defence were examined, the Judge addressed the jury and asked them to give their verdict. The jury gave a verdict of guilty; thereupon the Judge proceeded with the examination of the remaining witnesses for the defence, and after it was done, he again summed up the case to the jury and asked them to reconsider their verdict in the light of additional evidence. The jury again returned a verdict of guilty and the Judge passed sentence on the accused. Held that the first verdict was illegal because the Judge had charged the jury before the examination of the defence witnesses was finished (sec. 297); and the second verdict was illegal, because section 304 empowers the jury only to amend a wrong verdict delivered by accident or mistake but does not empower them to reconsider a verdict in the light of additional evidence. As soon as the first verdict was delivered (even though it was illegal) the jury became functus officio and they had no power to deliver a fresh verdict on further evidence taken. The procedure was wholly illegal, the conviction and sentence must be set aside and a new trial held—Lyme v. Crown, 4 Lah 382. Where the jury at first brought in an unanimous verdict of guilty, but the Sessions Judge who apparently was of a contrary opinion proceeded to charge the jury again with the result that the jury altered their verdict into one of not guilty, held that the procedure was entirely illegal, and the case must be retried—Leg. Rem. v. Jahey, 32 C.W.N. 144 (145), 29 Cr.L.J. 228.

Where the verdict of the jury is clear and there is no accident or mistake in delivering it, it is a proper verdict and cannot be amended under this section; and a second verdict delivered by the jury after being questioned by the Judge cannot be allowed to stand as an amendment—Q. E. v. Chunilal, Ratanlal 932; Q. E. v. Madhavrao, 19 Bom. 735.

"Before or immediately after it is recorded"—The power of amending a verdict provided by this section must be exercised before or immediately after it is recorded, and cannot be exercised after the jurors have dispersed. In a trial by jury the foreman announced the verdict of 'not guilty' as the unanimous verdict of the jury, and the verdict was recorded and the prisoner acquitted. From information received some days afterwards the Judge was led to believe that the jurors were not agreed as regards the verdict; the Judge summoned the foreman and examined him on oath, he deposed that the verdict given as the unanimous verdict was really the verdict of a majority, and was given as the unanimous verdict owing to a misunderstanding that the opinion of the majority was binding upon all jurors. It was held that the Court had no jurisdiction, in consequence of the foreman's subsequent statement, to set aside the verdict and the order of acquittal—Emp v Brian Carter, 1913 P R. 6 (F B), 13 Cr L J 815.

the jury are unanimous in their opinion, or when as many as six are of one opinion and the Judge agrees with them, the Judge shall give judgment in accordance with such opinion.

(2) When in any such case the jury are satisfied that they will not be unanimous, but six of them are of one opinion, the foreman shall so inform the Judge.

(3) If the Judge disagrees with the majority, he shall at once discharge the jury.

Discharge of jury in other cases.

(4) If there are not so many as six who agree in opinion, the Judge shall, after the lapse of such time as he thinks reasonable, discharge the jury.

931A. Under this section, if the jury is unanimous, their verdict is bound to be accepted by the Judge, and it is only when the jury are not unanimous that it lies with the Judge to take one of the courses specified in the section—S. P. Ghosh v Emp, 8 Bur L T 724, 16 Cr L J 676.

Under sub-section (3), if the jury are divided in the proportion of six to three, the Judge should ascertain the verdict of the majority before discharging the jury. Where six of the jury agreed to a verdict, and the presiding Judge, without ascertaining what their verdict was, discharged the jury and ordered a retrial, and the retrial came before another Judge and another jury; it was held that the previous Judge having improperly discharged the jury without ascertaining what their verdict was and whether he agreed or disagreed with the verdict of the majority, the previous Judge had still the legal seisin of the case and no other Judge could try it—Emp. v. Jatindra, 8 C.W.N. xlviii.

For the purposes of this section, the Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court sitting in Session is a High Court (see sec. 266) and not a Court of Session; consequently, he has no power to disagree with the unanimous verdict of the jury and to refer the case to the High Court under sec. 307—K. E. v. Mithoo, 25 Cr.L.J. 428, A.L.R. 1925 Sind 34.

306. (1) When in a case tried before the Court of Session the Judge does not think it necessary to express disagreement with the verdict of the jurors or of a majority of the jurors, he shall give judgment accordingly.

(2) If the accused is acquitted, the Judge shall record judgment of acquittal. If the accused is convicted, the Judge shall, unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of Section 562, pass sentence on him according to law.

The italicised words have been added by section 80 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The amendment is merely verbal, and is the same as that made in sections 245 (2) and 258 (2).

932. When the verdict of the jury has been delivered, the Sessions Judge is bound to say and record whether he agrees with the verdict or not—Q. v. Chand Bagdee, 7 W.R. 6; Q. v. Bahar Ali, 15 W.R. 46. It is not competent to a Sessions Judge, after the jury has returned their verdict and gone away, and in the absence of the accused, to examine some witnesses and then to act on the evidence in determining whether or not he should differ from the jury—Emp. v. Ningappa, 7 Bom L.R. 979, 3 Cr L.J. 42. If he agrees with and accepts the verdict of the jury (or of the majority) he is bound to deliver judgment according to the verdict; once he agrees with the verdict, he cannot afterwards reconsider it or disagree with it and refer the matter to the High Court—Q. E. v. Mojahur, 4 C.W.N. 683. Where the Sessions Judge wrote in his judgment: "There is room for doubt as to whether the accused is guilty; however, I see no reason to differ from the unanimous verdict of the jury on what are questions of fact. Not agreeing with but accepting the verdict of the jury I convict the accused." Held, that this method of expression was not desirable. A Sessions Judge is under no obligation whatsoever to have or express his individual opinion upon really disputable questions of fact which are for the jury. If a Judge agrees or disagrees, it is a matter prima facie for himself, but if he disagrees with the verdict and is of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court, he is bound to do so (sec. 307). If he is not clearly of opinion that the conviction is wrong so as to make it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court, then it may be said that "the Judge does not think it necessary to express disagreement" (sec. 306), and his opinion being on that view irrelevant, he will be well advised to keep it to himself—Ebrahim Molla v Emp., 56 Cal. 473, 33 C.W.N. 371 (373), 30 Cr.L.J. 1030, 1929 Cr.C. 28

Acquittal—As soon as the judgment of acquittal is pronounced, the prisoner is entitled to be discharged from custody (if there is no other charge pending against him), and his further detention is illegal. It is for the jail authorities, in whose custody the prisoner was, to satisfy themselves of the result of the trial, and no formal warrant of release by the Court to the jail authorities is necessary—Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 2

Sentence—If the verdict of the jury is one of guilty, it is the duty of the Judge to pass an adequate sentence for the offence for which the jury have convicted the prisoner, and the fact that the Judge has differed from the jury cannot be a ground for passing a light sentence—Nabber, 3 W.R. (Cr. Let.) 16. If the Judge agrees with the verdict of the jury and convicts the accused, he should not, in passing sentence, give any weight to the doubts he may entertain as to the propriety of the verdict—Ramdas v Emp., 8 Pat. 344, 30 Cr.L.J. 721 (724)

307. (1) If in any such case the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jurors, or of a majority of the jurors, on all or any of the charges on which any accused person has been tried, and is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case in respect of such accused person to the High Court, he shall submit the case accordingly, recording the grounds of his opinion, and, when the verdict is one of acquittal, stating the offence which he considers to have been committed, and in such case, if the accused is further charged under the provisions of Section 310, shall proceed to try him on such charge, as if such verdict had been one of conviction.

(2) Whenever the Judge submits a case under this section, he shall not record judgment of acquittal or of conviction on any of the charges on which such accused has been tried, but he may either remand such accused to custody or admit him to bail.

(3) In dealing with the case so submitted the High Court may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal, and subject thereto it shall, after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, acquit or convict such accused of any offence of which the jury could have convicted him upon the charge framed and placed before it; and if it convicts him, may pass such sentence as might have been passed by the Court of Session.

Change.—This section has been amended by sec 81 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The main changes are the following—first, in subsection (1) the words "any accused person" have been substituted for the words "the accused," and the words "in respect of such accused person" have been added, in subsection (2) and (3) the words "such accused" have been substituted for the words "the accused." The reasons are thus stated: "This amendment prescribes that when a Judge accepts the verdict of the jury in respect of some of the accused, but not of others, he need only refer the case of the latter to the High Court"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

Secondly, the italicised words at the end of sub-section (1) have also been newly added "We think, however, that a further amendment is required in section 307, to provide for the case of a person who is also charged with a previous conviction under section 310. It seems obvious that if the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jury on the principal charge, and submits the case to the High Court, it is desirable that the record should be complete. We propose therefore to insert at the end of section 307 (1) a provision for the trial of the further charge under section 307"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916. Under the old law, it was held that if a case was referred to the High Court under sec. 307, there was no conviction or acquittal in the Court of Session. It was the High Court which could convict or acquit the accused, and it was only after such conviction by the High Court that the accused could be asked under sec 310 to plead to a previous conviction—Emp. v. Kandaswamy, 30 Mad. 134. Under the present amendment, provision is made for the trial of the charge of previous conviction, in the Sessions Court itself.

933. Scope of section.—Assessor-case tried with jury.—Where the Sessions Judge tried the accused with jury for an offence triable by jury, and with the jurors as assessors for an offence triable with assessors, and differing from them in their verdict and opinion referred both matters to the High Court, it was held that as to the matter triable with assessors, the Judge should not have included it in the reference but should have disposed of it according to law—Emp. v. Kalidas, 8 Bom.L.R. 599; Emp. v. Vyankatsing, 9 Bom.L.R. 1057; Q. E. v. Devu, Ratanlal 600; In re Kambala Narayana, 36 M.L.J. 452. But if the Judge tries the assessor-case with the aid of the jurors as jurors and not as assessors, and disagrees with their verdict (not opinion), he can refer the case to the High Court—Q. E. v. Jeyram, 23 Bom. 696; Surya v. Q. E., 25 Cal. 555.

Who can refer:—The reference under this section must be made by the Judge who held the trial and heard the evidence and not by the officer who succeeds him as Judge—Emp v Dil Mahomed, 2 C.L.J. 48 But see section 539

High Court—Since the 'High Court' in this section does not include a Judicial Commissioner's Court (see sec 266), a Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind sitting in Sessions has no power to refer a case under this section to the J. C. Court in its High Court jurisdiction—K E v Mithoo, 23 Cr L J. 428. A.I.R 1925 Sind 34. Emp. v Jhand, 22 S L R 319 (F B), 29 Cr L J. 945

934. Disagreement:—The Judge can refer the case to the High Court if he disagrees with the verdict of the jury. If he once accepts the verdict he cannot subsequently reconsider it, and disagreeing with the verdict refer the case to the High Court—Q E v Mojahur, 4 C W N 683 The disagreement may be on questions of law as well as of fact That is, the Sessions Judge may submit to the High Court a case in which he disagrees with the jury on their finding of facts as well as a case in which he considers that the jury have not followed his directions as to the law—Q v Koonjo, 20 W R 1.

The mere fact that the Judge entertains some doubts about the correctness of the verdict of the jury does not make it obligatory on him to refer the case under sec. 307, see Saroda Charan, 41 C L J 320, 26 Cr.L J 1006, Bajid Alian v Emp., 6 Pat. 817, 29 Cr L J 81 (82) It is not in every case of doubt nor in every case in which the Judge entertains a view different from that of the jury, that a reference can be made under this section, but the verdict of the jury must be manifestly wrong before such reference can be made—Emp v Swarnamoyee, 41 Cal. 621, Ramdas v. Emp., 8 Pat. 344, 30 Cr L.J. 721 (722) And in this regard there is no difference between a case where the jury acquits the accused and the case where the jury convicts, and the Judge disagrees with the verdict—Ramdas v. Emp, supra Where the jury misunderstands the law as explained by the Judge and delivers a wrong verdict, the Judge should refer the case to the High Court under this section, and not ask the jury to reconsider their verdict Emp v Kondiba, 28 Bom 412.

Where the Judge in his direction to the jury himself expressed the opinion that the prosecution evidence was open to hostile criticism, and the jury regarding the evidence with suspicion delivered a verdict of not guilty, the Judge was not justified in referring the case to the High Court, because there could not be said to have been a disagreement between the Judge and the jury, but rather agreement—K E. v. Chidghan 7 C W N 135

A reference should not be made where the disagreement between the Judge and the jury is merely on a technical point of law. Thus, where the Judge considered the offence to be under sec. 366 I. P. C. but left to the jury to decide whether the offence was under sec. 363 or sec. 366 I P C., and the jury found that the offence was under sec. 363 I. P. C., held that there was only a technical difference between the two sections, and the Judge should, in view of his own summing up, have accepted the verdict of the jury, and should not have made a reference to the High Court—Emp v Ali Raza, 28 O.C. 69, 26 Cr.L.J. 310. A Sessions Judge wrote in his judgment "There is room for doubt as to whether the accused is really guilty. Not agreeing with but accepting the unanimous verdict of the jury, I convict the accused." Held that this method of expression was improper. If the Judge really disagrees with the verdict, i.e. has a settled and considered opinion that the crime has not been proved against the accused, it seems to be clear that it is necessary for the ends of justice to refer the case. If he does not think this necessary, his "disagreement" cannot be a reality at all, and the less his inconclusive state of mind is exposed, the better—Ebrahim Molla v. Emp, 56 Cal. 473, 33 C.W.N. 371 (373), 30 Cr.L.J. 1030. See this case cited under sec. 306.

A reference can be made to the High Court only on the ground of disagreement between the Judge and the jury and on no other grounds. Where the jury returned a verdict of not guilty, the mere fact that in a similar case upon similar evidence the High Court had convicted some other persons, is no ground for referring the case to the High Court—Emp v Irya Doddappa, 6 Bom L.R. 599.

935. "Necessary for the ends of justice"—This section requires as an essential condition of the reference that the Judge must disagree with the verdict of the jurors or a majority of them, on all or any of the charges, and that the Judge should be clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court—Emp. v. Irya Doddappa, 6 Bom L.R. 599, 1 Cr.L.J. 743. This seems to indicate that something more must be in the Judge's mind than a mere disagreement with the jury or a mere feeling that he would himself have come to a different conclusion. That is, he must be of opinion that the verdict was one which reasonable men could not have arrived at on the evidence before them—In re Veerappa, 51 Mad. 956 (F.B.), 30 Cr.L.J. 317 (321). This section leaves the referring of a case to the High Court entirely to the discretion of the Judge, for it is only where he disagrees with the verdict of the jury so completely that he considers it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court, that he should do so. This discretion should however always be exercised when the Judge thinks that the verdict is not supported by evidence. It is the only way in which the miscarriage of justice by a perverse verdict of a jury can be remedied by the High Court—Q. E. v. Guravadu, 13 Mad. 343; Saroda Charan v. Emp., 41 C.L.J. 320, 26 Cr.L.J. 1006, Ravidas v. Emp., 8 Pat. 344, 30 Cr.L.J. 721 (722). When the Judge points out to the jury the weak links in the prosecution and they do not consider them, it is proper for the Judge to refer the case to the High Court, because such a reference is really necessary for the ends of justice—Emp. v. Abdul Rahaman, 9 C.L.J. 432, 2 I.C. 593, 10 Cr.L.J. 57.

When the disagreement between the Judge and the jury is such a complete dissent that the Judge is obviously unable to do justice to the accused by accepting the verdict, there is no option left to him but to refer the case to the High Court, for it is clearly necessary for the ends of justice—Saroda Charan, supra; Imp. v. Bhawan, 2 Bom. 525, Q. E. v. Devji, 20 Bom. 215. The mere fact that the Sessions Judge does not agree with the unanimous verdict of the jury does not make it obligatory on him to make a reference. Section 307 clearly gives him a discretion in the matter, and it is only when he is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court that he shall so submit it. If he is not clearly of that opinion, his failure to submit the case is not a subject for interference by the High Court—Eran Khan v. Emp., 50 Cal 658, 24 Cr.L.J. 838, Ramdas v. Emp., supra. It depends entirely upon the opinion of the Sessions Judge whether he considers it necessary for the ends of justice to refer the case to the High Court, and his opinion is final on this point. The High Court cannot direct the Sessions Judge to be of opinion that such reference is necessary for the ends of justice, and to refer the case accordingly—Bepin Chandra v. Emp., 32 C.W.N. 673 (676), 29 Cr.L.J. 819.

It is no longer the law that before making a reference the Judge must be satisfied that the verdict is perverse. It is sufficient that he should be clearly of opinion that a reference is necessary for the ends of justice—Ismail v. Emp., 23 C.W.N. 747, 19 Cr.L.J. 830; Saroda Charan v. Emp., 41 C.L.J. 320, 26 Cr.L.J. 1006.

936. Submit the case :—*Whether whole case should be referred :—*It is not intended that when the Sessions Judge is not prepared to accept the verdict of the jury in its entirety, but is prepared to accept it as regards some of the accused, the whole case is to be referred to the High Court. Where the Judge agrees with the jury in respect of a particular accused, the Judge ought to convict or acquit him as the case may be; and it is only with reference to those accused in respect of whom he declines to accept the verdict of the jury that he should make the reference—Emp. v. Babur Ali, 42 Cal 789, 19 C.W.N. 584, 16 Cr.L.J. 321. This is now expressly made clear by the present amendment. But where the disagreement between the Judge and the jury is as to some of the charges, it is necessary that the whole case should be referred. When the accused was tried on several charges, and the Sessions Judge accepted the verdict of the jury as to some and disagreed as to the other charges, and referred the case to the High Court only as to these latter, it was held that by this limited form of reference the High Court was precluded from considering the entire evidence on record, and that the Sessions Judge should have referred the whole case leaving it to the High Court to consider the whole of the evidence that was placed before the jury—K. E. v. Ananda Charan, 21 C.W.N. 435, 18 Cr.L.J. 551.

'Recording the grounds of his opinion':—In referring the case under this section, the Sessions Judge should state what material portions of the evidence he believes to be true, and his reasons for arriving at his conclusions so as to enable the High Court to appreciate them and to give due weight to them—K. E. v. Panit, 3 P.L.T. 413, 23 Cr.L.J. 421, A.I.R. 1922 Pat 348; Emp. v. Dyamanark, 6 Bom.L.R. 519. Where the Judge merely said that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, and expressed no other opinion in his reference, it was held that he ought to have set out on what portions of the evidence or on what facts the accused should have been convicted—K. E. v. Bhut Nath, 7 C.W.N. 345. So also, where the Sessions Judge merely stated in his reference that the verdict of the jury was erroneous and inconsistent and could not be accepted and that if the evidence had been believed all the accused should have been found guilty, held that the reference was not a proper reference, as it did not state the grounds of his opinion. The reference should be so complete and self-contained that it ought not to be necessary to refer to the order sheet—K. E. v. Taribulla, 25 C.W.N. 682, 23 Cr.L.J. 244. The order of reference under sec. 307 must be in the nature of a judgment giving a proper summary of the evidence and the reasons for the opinion of the Judge. In making the reference he should in effect show the reasons for his opinion in as clear a manner as he would have done if the case had not been a jury case and he had had to write a judgment—Emp. v. Shoo Din 50 All. 540, 29 Cr.L.J. 342, 26 A.L.J. 296. He should state with some fulness his view of the evidence and the credibility of the more important witnesses, because the High Court has to attach more or less weight to the opinion of the Judge who saw and heard the witnesses—Emp. v. Chander Krishna, 10 Bom. L.R. 173.

Reflections on jurors:—The reference of the Sessions Judge should not contain any extra-judicial observations, e.g. any reflections on the conduct of the jurors which are not supported by any material on the record. The 'opinion' of the Sessions Judge is his opinion on the merits of the case and does not include his speculations as to the conduct of jurors. Such an imputation is not fair to the jurors—Emp. v. Dhananjoy, 51 Cal. 317 (350, 351), 38 C.L.J. 384; Mamfru v. Emp., 51 Cal. 418 (430), 38 C.L.J. 397. It would be most unfortunate if persons of respectability called upon to discharge the responsible duty of jurors were exposed to the risk of aspersions upon their conduct. If the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jury, it is open to him to do so and to refer the case to the High Court if he is clearly of opinion that such a course is necessary for the ends of justice, but this does not require that he should make reflections upon the conduct of the jurors which are not supported by evidence on the record. Such an imputation is unfair to the jurors, unfair to the Judge himself, unfair to the accused and unfair to the High Court also—Mamfru v. Emp., 51 Cal. 418 (429, 431), 38 C.L.J. 397.

Recording evidence:—The Judge should state in his reference evidence for the prosecution and for the defence, the facts which in his opinion are proved upon the evidence recorded in the case, and the conclusions to which these facts led him—Emp. v. Irya, 6 Bom.L.R. 509, 1 Cr.L.J. 743.

'Stating the offence':—In case of an acquittal by the jury the Sessions Judge should state in his reference what offence the accused has in his opinion committed, and on what grounds he differs from the jury—Emp. v. Chander Krishna, 10 Bom.L.R. 173, Emp. v. Sahal Roy, 3 Cal 623; K. E. v. Taribulla, 25 C.W.N. 682, 23 Cr.L.J. 244

If Judge refuses to refer—Where a jury convicted the accused against the opinion and advice of the Sessions Judge, and the latter declined to refer the case to the High Court under this section, it was held on appeal by the accused that the High Court had no power to interfere, however wrong or absurd the verdict might have been, in as much as there was no misdirection by the Sessions Judge, and as there was evidence against the accused which was open to the jury to believe—Q. E. v. Chinna, 14 Mad 36, In re Kaiyan, 4 M.L.T. 483, 9 Cr.L.J. 93

Notice to accused—Where the Judge differed from the verdict of the jury and made a reference under this section, the High Court, before proceeding with the case, gave notice to the accused, as in appeal, to bring forward any objections to the Sessions Judge's recommendations—Q. v. Ottum, 19 W.R. 38

937. "Opinion of the jury"—The 'opinion of the jury' in sub-sec. (3) means nothing more than the verdict of the jury, it does not mean the reasons on which the verdict is founded—Emp. v. Annada, 36 Cal 629, Emp. v. Tarapada, 18 C.W.N. 615, Emp. v. Dhananjay, 51 Cal. 347 (352), 38 Cr.L.J. 384, Emp. v. Ali Hyder, 4 P.L.T. 425, 26 Cr.L.J. 856 (859), Ramjag v. Emp., 7 Pat 55, 29 Cr.L.J. 466 (468), K. E. v. Punit, 3 P.L.T. 413, 23 Cr.L.J. 421, A.I.R. 1922 Pat 348, Emp. v. Chellan, 29 Mad 91. What the Judge has to record in his reference is the conclusion (i.e. verdict) of the jury and not the reasons on which that conclusion is based. And the circumstance that no such reason has been ascertained does not warrant the High Court to decline to go into the evidence and arrive at its own judgment as to the guilt or innocence of the accused—Emp. v. Chellan, 29 Mad 91. But the Judge should do well to take the reasons of the jury for the view taken by them, and to record the reasons, especially when there is some inconsistency in their verdict—Emp. v. Annada, 36 Cal. 629, Emp. v. Bhulotan, 6 P.L.J. 264, 23 Cr.L.J. 11. The absence of the reasons of the jury for their verdict only enhances the High Court's responsibility in the matter, and requires it to go into the evidence more carefully—Emp. v. Bhulotan supra. Even where the jury are unanimous in their verdict, the Judge should ask for specific findings on the particular facts on which he himself relies. This would enable the High Court to understand the particular grounds on which the jury proceeded, and it will then only be necessary to consider the propriety of those grounds—Pamanna, 2 Weir 388 (389); Emp. v. Kankaya, 22 N.L.R. 42, 27 Cr.L.J. 773. Where in a trial by jury the unanimous verdict of the jury. If the verdict is not unanimous, the weight to be attached to it is necessarily diminished; but if the verdict is unanimous, the High Court should not interfere with it unless it is clearly wrong or perverse or unreasonable—Emp. v. Dhananjoy, 51 Cal. 347 (353); Emp. v. Jamaldi, 51 Cal. 160 (165), 28 C.W.N. 536, 25 Cr.L.J. 1000, Emp. v. Kankonja, 22 N.L.R. 42, 27 Cr.L.J. 733; Emp. v. Madan Mandal, 41 Cal. 662. If the verdict of the jury is unanimous and is neither perverse nor clearly and manifestly wrong, the High Court should not re-open the matter ab initio and proceed to try it de novo. For, if the case is re-opened ab initio, it is difficult to see what useful function is performed by a jury—Emp. v. Panna Lal, 46 All. 265 (267), 22 A.L.J. 162, 25 Cr.L.J. 931, Emp. v. Nagar Ali, 56 Cal. 132, 30 Cr.L.J. 584 (585), 32 C.W.N. 952. The High Court will not interfere on a reference under this section unless that Court is of opinion that the verdict of the jury could not be supported by the evidence on the record—Emp. v. Gohind Singh 5 Pat. 573, 27 Cr.L.J. 1308. The High Court will not interfere upon any mere preponderance of evidence, unless it is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the verdict is so distinctly against the evidence that it may be termed a perverse verdict—Pamianna, 2 Weir 398 (389), Asgar v. K. E., 22 C.W.N. 811, 20 Cr.L.J. 20, Emp. v. Afrozul, 29 C.W.N. 842, 26 Cr.L.J. 1298, Emp. v. Chanoo, 22 C.W.N. 1028, 20 Cr.L.J. 223. It is not the practice of the High Court to interfere in case of acquittal by jury, unless the acquittal stands out as patently bad. If the verdict is patently bad and amazingly perverse, in as much as the jury have overlooked the overwhelming evidence for the prosecution and accepted the slight evidence added by the defence, the High Court will interfere—Emp. v. Alaharaj Behari 3 Luck. 456, 20 Cr.L.J. 452 (453), Emp. v. Jukhan, 27 A.L.J. 509, 30 Cr.L.J. 1078 (1079). The High Court will not disturb the unanimous verdict of acquittal in a case where there is a substantial gap in the chain of evidence—K. E. v. Sukku Bewa, 38 C.L.J. 155, 25 Cr.L.J. 165. On a reference to the High Court to set aside an unanimous verdict of conviction, the High Court will interfere where the prosecution has not adequately proved its case and where the facts are suspicious, and will give the benefit of doubt to the accused—Emp. v. Yakub, 30 C.W.N. 859, 27 Cr.L.J. 1341. In dealing with an unanimous verdict of acquittal, the High Court will have to consider whether the jury were entirely unreasonable in giving the benefit of doubt to the accused, and whether it was impossible for the jury to arrive at any other reasonable conclusion than that the guilt of the accused had not been brought home to them—Emp. v. Golam Kadir, 28 C.W.N. 876, 25 Cr.L.J. 1284.

939. Power of High Court—In case of a reference under this section the High Court is to give weight not only to the opinion of the jury but to that of the Judge as well—Emp. v. Neamatulla, 17 C.W.N. 1077; Emp. v. Bhullolan, 23 Cr.L.J. 11, 6 P.L.J. 264; K. E. v. Punil, 3 P.L.T. 413, 23 Cr.L.J. 421; Manindra v. K. E., 41 Cal. 754; Emp. v. Ljall, 29 Cal. 128; Q. E. v. Iswari, 15 Cal. 269. But although the High Court is bound in dealing with a reference under this section to give due weight to the opinions of the Judge and the jury, still it is not bound in any way by these opinions, and the question whether the decision in the case is to be for acquittal or for conviction is entirely open to the High Court and left open to it to decide after consideration of the evidence and the opinions of the Judge and the jury—In re Nanni Kudumban, 45 M L J. 406, 25 Cr L J. 145, Emp. v. Sri Narain, 11 C W.N. 715, Q. E. v. Dada, 15 Bom. 452; Emp. v. Annada, 36 Cal. 629; Emp. v. Abdul Rahaman, 9 C L J. 432, 2 I.C. 593, 10 Cr L J. 57. When once a reference is made to the High Court, the language of the Code does not justify any undue preference being given to the opinion of the jury over that of the Judge. The High Court has to weigh both the opinions and consider the entire evidence on the record just as it would consider in any criminal matter coming before it for decision—K. E. v. Ramcharan, 27 O C 29, 11 O.L.J. 210, 25 Cr L J. 785; Emp. v. Ramchandra, 55 Cal. 879, 29 Cr L J. 823 (825).

The Bombay High Court has held that the whole case is open to the High Court when hearing a reference, and in dealing with the reference the High Court exercises all the powers which it exercises on appeal—Emp. v. Shankar Balkrishna, 47 Bom 31 (32). But a Full Bench of the Madras High Court has recently laid down that on a reference under sec. 307, the whole matter is not re-opened and the High Court cannot try the case as if there had been no trial; but the High Court should only confine itself to the question whether the Judge's view of the verdict is justified by the evidence, and if it is not, to confirm the verdict—In re Veerappa, 51 Mad 956 (F.B.), 30 Cr L J. 317 (321), overruling In re Nanni Kadumban, 45 M L J. 406, 25 Cr L J. 145.

The words "subject thereto" in subsection (3) do not mean that the powers of the High Court are subject to the limitations and provisions contained in sec. 423 (2). Therefore it is open to the High Court, on a reference under sec. 307, to reverse the verdict of the jury, even though there has not been any misdirection by the Judge or any misunderstanding by the jury of the law as laid down by the Judge. This section gives the High Court a power to reconsider the entire evidence, and to arrive at an independent conclusion of its own on the question of fact as well as of law in the interests of justice. The High Court, when acting under sec. 307, is clothed with the powers, as regards procedure, of a Court of appeal, if for good reasons it desires to exercise any of them, e.g. a power to release the accused on bail under sec. 426, or to take additional evidence or direct it to be taken under sec. 428—Emp. v. Shera, 50 All. 625 (F B), 26 A L J. 321, 29 Cr L J. 353 (356, 357).

The High Court cannot consider any question on which the Judge and the jury are agreed—K. E. v. Madan Mandal 41 Cal 662, 15 Cr L J. 155. So also, the High Court cannot consider any question on which the Judge had accepted the verdict of the jury, although he did not agree with them—Emp. v. Profulla, 51 Cal 41. Although the High Court can consider the entire evidence, still it should not ignore the verdict of the jury on a question of fact. Unless there is an astounding reason for it, the verdict of the jury on a question of fact will not be set aside. The mere fact that another view of the evidence might be taken is not enough—K. E. v. Panit Chain, 3 P.L.T. 413, 23 Cr.L.J. 421, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 348.

Power to convict for offence not charged—Ordinarily the High Court cannot convict the accused for any offence with which he was not charged—K. E. v. Madan Mandal, 41 Cal. 682. But the combined effect of this section read with sec. 238 is that the High Court may, in dealing with a case coming before it under this section, convict an accused for a minor offence, although he was not charged with such offence—K. E. v. Sitanath, 22 Cal. 1006. And a Sessions Judge accepting the jury's finding on the graver charges can make a reference to the High Court with the object of having some of the accused convicted on minor charges—Emp v. Hari, 37 C.L.J. 34, 24 Cr.L.J. 674, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 108. But where in a case of offence under sec. 147 I.P.C. the common object assigned in the charge as framed to support the case has not been sustained, the High Court on a reference under sec. 307 of this Code cannot invent another common object in order to support the conviction—Emp v. Akbar, 51 Cal. 271 (275), 25 Cr.L.J. 773, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 449.

939A. No appeal from High Court :—A High Court in dealing with a reference under this section is not acting in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction but only as a Court of reference in a criminal matter—In re Horace Lyall, 29 Cal. 286; and therefore no appeal lies from its own judgment passed under this section—Q. E. v. Adveppa, Rataniai 691.

Trial when ends—When a case is referred to under this section, the trial cannot be deemed to be concluded, until the High Court either convicts or acquits the prisoner—Q. E. v. McCarthy, 9 All. 420.

G.—Re-trial of Accused after Discharge of Jury.

308. Whenever the jury is discharged, the accused shall be detained in custody or on bail (as the case may be), and shall be tried by another jury, unless the

after discharge of jury.

Judge considers that he should not be re-tried, in which case the Judge shall make an entry to that effect on the charge, and such entry shall operate as an acquittal.

940. If a jury is discharged in the course of a trial for misconduct, the Judge should hold a fresh trial before another jury newly empanelled—Rahim Sheikh v. Emp., 50 Cal. 872 (cited under sec. 282).

Where a jury has returned a verdict of not guilty and the Judge disagrees with the jury and discharges them, and then passes an order under sec. 308 making an entry to the effect that no retrial is necessary and that the accused be acquitted, it is not open to the Judge, in making the order under sec. 308, to pass remarks, implying the guilt of the accused (who is a police officer) and suggesting for the consideration of the Police Department that severe departmental action should be taken against him. The accused, being acquitted, is entitled to the benefit of the order of acquittal and all the consequences which it implies—Ahmad Shah v. Emp., 23 S.L.R. 397, 30 Cr.L.J. 877 (878).

This section does not affect the construction of sec. 403. An accused who is re-tried under this section is not 'tried again' within the meaning of sec. 403 but is being tried on the original indictment and on his original plea of not guilty. Sec. 403 therefore does not bar the retrial held under this section—Emp v Nirmal, 41 Cal 1072.

H.—Conclusion of Trial in Cases tried with Assessors.

309. (1) When in a case tried with the aid of assessors, the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply (if any) are concluded, the Court may sum up the evidence for the prosecution and defence and shall then require each of the assessors to state his opinion orally on all the charges on which the accused has been tried, and shall record such opinion, and for that purpose may ask the assessors such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their opinions are. All such questions and the answers to them shall be recorded.

(2) The Judge shall then give judgment, but in doing so shall not be bound to conform to the opinions of the assessors.

(3) If the accused is convicted, the Judge shall, unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of Section 562, pass sentence on him according to law.

Change :—This section has been amended by sec. 82 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The following changes have been made—(a) The italicised words have been newly added in sub-section (1). "This amendment assimilates the procedure by which assessors give their opinion to that adopted for ascertaining the verdict of the jury, namely by question and answer"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). (b) The italicised words have been added in sub-section (3). This amendment is merely verbal, and is the same as that made in sec. 306 (2).

941. Summing up.—The object of summing up the evidence is to enable the Sessions Judge, in long and intricate cases, to place the evidence in an intelligible form, so as to assist the assessors in arriving at a reasonable conclusion, and not to give the Judge an opportunity of expressing his opinion in emphatic terms on every single matter put in evidence—Sadulla Hanlalar v. Emp., 9 Cal. 875. In summing up the evidence to the assessors, the Judge should not, as he may do in charging the jury, express any opinion upon any question of facts arising in the case—K. E. v. Tirumal, 24 Mad. 523, Dewan Singh v. Q. E., 22 Cal. 895. He should not obtrude on the assessors his own opinion on the worthlessness or otherwise of the evidence, because the assessors might become embarrassed in coming to an independent opinion of their own in the face of the very decided opinion expressed by him—Sadulla v. Emp., 9 Cal. 875. But a discussion and statement of points by a Judge with the assessors with the object of getting the best assistance for the proper adjudication of the case are not improper as the real object of appointing assessors is to assist the Court—Q. v. Amruteshwar, 13 W.R. 25. In a case of rioting, where the dispute arises over the possession of a piece of land and the Crown admits the possession of the accused, and the accused themselves urge the plea of private defence, it is the duty of the Sessions Judge to explain to the assessors the legal aspect of the plea put forward by the accused, and to direct their attention to it by putting specific questions to them on the point—Sunder Balsh v. Emp. 3 P.L.J. 653, 19 Cr.L.J. 993.

Record of summing up—The Sessions Judge should not ask the pleader for the prosecution to record his summing up to the assessors. If the Judge himself is incapable of recording the heads of the summing up, he should avail himself of the services of some Court Officer or direct it to be done by some independent person—Sadulla v. Emp. 9 Cal. 875.

942. Opinions of assessors:—A trial is altogether bad if the assessors are not asked and are apparently not allowed to give their opinions in the case—Nazimuddi v. Emp., 40 Cal. 163, 13 Cr.L.J. 497. If a Sessions Judge decides a case without inviting the opinions of the assessors, he virtually holds the trial without the aid of assessors, and his finding or sentence will be without jurisdiction—Q. v. Matarn Mal, 22 W.R. 34; K. E. v. Tirumal, 24 Mad. 523 (535). Even if he considers the evidence untrustworthy or unsatisfactory or inconsistent he is bound to consult the opinions of the assessors, otherwise he acts without jurisdiction—Kassu Mal v. Munna Lal, 10 All. 414. Where in a Sessions trial the accused first pleaded not guilty, but in the course of her examination after the completion of the prosecution evidence, she pleaded guilty, and thereupon the Judge without taking the opinion of the assessors found her guilty and sentenced her, held that it was the duty of the Judge to proceed with the trial as provided by this section and hear the defence and then take the opinions of the assessors—Emp. v. Bai Nani, 7 Bom.L.R. 731, 2 Cr.L.J. 609. Where a trial was held for two offences, one with jury and the other with the jurors as assessors, and with regard to the latter offence the Judge convicted the accused without taking the opinions of the jurors as assessors, the conviction was held to be bad—Sivaga, 2 Weir 334.

"The opinions of the assessors should be recorded separately. It is not, in the Court's opinion, sufficient that this record should contain a mere verdict of guilty or not guilty, or proven or not proven; what the Court requires is not only the result arrived at by each assessor sitting on a Sessions trial, but if possible, the reasons by which each assessor arrived at the result—that is, the grounds of his opinion. While avoiding prolixity, a Sessions Judge should be careful to be intelligible and precise in recording such opinions"—Cal. G. R. & C. O., p. 26

The opinions of all the assessors should be taken Where the Judge took the opinions of two only of the assessors, the trial was illegal and not merely irregular—Rama Krishna v Emp., 26 Mad 598 The opinion of each assessor is to be recorded in his own words—Fatu Santal v K. E., 6 P.L.J. 147, 22 Cr.L.J. 417 Each assessor should be required to state his opinion individually The Judge should not receive the joint opinion of all the assessors, delivered through one of them—Sadulla v Emp., 9 Cal 875, Hassan Khan v Emp., 1887 P R 41

Where the accused is being tried on several charges, the assessors should be required to give their opinions on each of the charges—Q v. Matam, 22 W.R. 34 This is now made clear by the present amendment.

The assessors are to give their opinions orally, and not in writing, or in the form of a judgment—Lalit v Emp., 39 Cal 119, 13 Cr L.J. 433.

Consultation between assessors.—Their is no provision in this Code authorizing a Judge to allow or forbidding him to allow consultation between the assessors aiding him in trying a case. Though a Judge may allow one assessor to consult his co-assessors before giving his opinion, yet a refusal to allow such a course does not amount to any irregularity, and the Judge is entitled to have before him each assessor's individual and independent opinion—In re Sennimalai, 2 L.W. 933, 16 Cr.L.J. 717

Grounds of opinion.—It is very desirable that the assessors should be invited and encouraged by Judges to state briefly the grounds of their opinions as well as the result—Q. E. v. Mahadu, 2 Bom.L.R. 322; Q. E. v. Fakira, 2 Bom L R 323 Assessors are appointed to aid the Judge in the trial and to give their opinions When the opinion formed by the Judge differs from the opinions formed by the assessors, he should always ascertain the grounds of the assessors opinions—Q v Minnat, 3 W R. 6; Q. v Bushmo, 3 W R. 21, Guranditta v Crown, 1905 P R. 48, 3 Cr L J 132

When opinion may be dispensed with.—When there is absolutely no evidence to show that the offence has been committed by the accused, the Judge can abstain from taking the opinions of the assessors—Anonymous, 2 Weir 388, 391 See sec 289 But the Judge cannot do so, simply because he considers the evidence unsatisfactory or untrustworthy—Kassa Mal v. Munna Lal, 10 All. 414. When the case is withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor with the consent of the Court, an acquittal should be recorded without taking the opinions of the assessors, or whatever may be their opinions—Q. E. v. Chenbasapa, Ratanlal 307.

Reconsidering opinion:—After once summing up the case to the assessors and after taking their opinions, the Judge has no power to reopen the matter and press upon the attention of the assessors a part of the accused's confession, in order to induce them to change their opinions—Emp v Tika Ram, 1886 A.W.N 22.

Taking fresh evidence after opinion:—When the opinions of the assessors have been taken, the trial is at an end, except for the purpose of giving judgment. The Judge has no legal authority to reopen a trial or recall witnesses, and cause fresh evidence to be summoned, and take a second and third opinion from the assessors—Hasari v. Emp., 1888 P.R. 29; Q. E. v. Ram Lal, 15 All. 136. Where, after the assessors had given their opinions and had been discharged, the Judge sitting alone took some further evidence in the case before writing judgment, the trial was held to be illegal and was set aside—Jaisukh v. Emp., 43 All. 25, 22 Cr.L.J. 127. It is the Judge together with the assessors that constitutes the Court, and not the Judge sitting alone; and all evidence must be recorded by the Judge in the presence of the assessors—Ibid In a trial for murder in which the soundness of the accused's mind was at issue, the Judge, after taking the opinions of the assessors, reserved judgment and had a private interview with the Civil Surgeon as to the state of mind of the accused. It was held that the procedure was extremely illegal. Instead of discussing with the Civil Surgeon out of Court, the Judge ought to have examined him as a witness in the presence of the assessors, and the accused ought to have been given an opportunity of cross-examining him—Q. E. v. Jai Lal, 1889 A.W.N. 181.

943. Questions to assessors.—Prior to the present amendment, the section did not expressly authorise the Judge to put any question to the assessors, but if was laid down in some cases that if there was anything obscure in their opinions it was open to the Judge to put to them such questions as were necessary to elucidate or supplement their opinions—Nazimuddi v. Emp., 40 Cal. 163; Ramesh Chandra v. Emp., 41 Cal. 350. This is now expressly provided by the present section as amended. But the questions can be asked only after the delivery of the opinion and not before, and for no other purpose except to clear up any obscurity in the verdict. The Judge cannot put questions to the assessors by way of cross-examination—Nazimuddi, 40 Cal. 163, 13 Cr.L.J. 497; Ramesh Chandra, 41 Cal. 350, 18 C.W.N. 496, 15 Cr.L.J. 395.

944. Judgment:—In passing judgment the Judge is not bound to conform to the opinions of the assessors. Although the assessors no doubt assist the Judge and regard must be paid to their opinions, K. E. v. Tirumal, 24 Mad. 523, still it is the Judge who has to decide the case on the facts as well as the law, and he is not bound by the assessors' opinions—Emp. v. Shanker, 14 Bom.L.R. 710, 13 Cr.L.J. 677. But the Judge cannot convict the accused for an offence in respect of which the opinions of the assessors were not taken. Thus, the accused was charged with and tried for abetment of murder. The opinion of the assessors was that he was not guilty of the offence charged. The Sessions Judge accepted the opinion, but convicted the accused of causing evidence of murder to disappear under sec. 201 I.P.C. Held that it was imperative on the Judge to have taken the opinions of the assessors on the charge relating to sec. 201 I.P.C. The conviction and sentence must be set aside—Emp. v. Appaya, 25 Bom.L.R. 1318 (1320), 26 Cr.L.J. 394. But in the recent case of Emp. v. Ismail, 52 Bom 385, 29 Cr.L.J. 403 (405), Fawcett J. has expressed the opinion that the case of Emp. v. Appaya, (supra) must be regarded as overruled by the Privy Council decision in Begu v. Emp., 6 Lah 226 (P.C.), 26 Cr.L.J. 1059, where their Lordships upheld the action of the Sessions Judge in convicting the accused of an offence under section 201 I.P. Code although he was charged with murder.

The Judge should form his opinion on the evidence at the trial, and not merely upon the views of the committing Magistrate—Dewan Singh v. Q. E., 22 Cal 805

The judgment must be recorded. But failure to record judgment does not invalidate the trial, but is only an irregularity curable by sec. 537—Savu Pasunbadi, 2 Weir 392

The judgment must contain all the particulars specified in sec. 367, even though the trial is held with the aid of jurors as assessors. A reference to the heads of the charges to the jury is not sufficient—Q. E. v. Dattu, Ratanlal 426

It is neither convenient nor commendable for the Sessions Judge to embody his summing up to the assessors, in his judgment. But his doing so does not make the judgment illegal or vitiate it so as to render it invalid—Khudiram v. Emp., 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625

The judgment must be recorded by the Judge who held the trial. Whether after the assessors had given their opinions, the Judge left the district without recording his judgment, and his successor, after considering the evidence recorded at the trial, convicted and sentenced the accused, the conviction was set aside and a retrial ordered—Q. v. Ramdoyal, 21 W.R. 47

Cancellation of trial—The accused were committed to the Sessions on a certain charge. At the commencement of the trial, two more charges were added. The trial then proceeded up to the point where the assessors' opinions were taken. The Judge reserved judgment but in writing it, he was of opinion that one of the charges was improperly added, and he therefore cancelled the trial and held a fresh trial. It was held that the second trial was invalid, because the trial Judge had no authority to cancel or set aside the trial which had been originally held; and the assessors' opinions having been recorded, he worthy—Kassa Mal v. Manna Lal, 10 All. 414. When the case is withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor with the consent of the Court, an acquittal should be recorded without taking the opinions of the assessors, or whatever may be their opinions—Q. E. v. Chenbasapa, Ratanlal 307.

Reconsidering opinion:—After once summing up the case to the assessors and after taking their opinions, the Judge has no power to reopen the matter and press upon the attention of the assessors a part of the accused's confession, in order to induce them to change their opinions—Emp. v. Tika Ram, 1886 A.W.N. 22.

Taking fresh evidence after opinion:—When the opinions of the assessors have been taken, the trial is at an end, except for the purpose of giving judgment. The Judge has no legal authority to reopen a trial or recall witnesses, and cause fresh evidence to be summoned, and take a second and third opinion from the assessors—Hasari v. Emp., 1888 P.R. 29; Q. E. v. Ram Lal, 15 All. 136. Where, after the assessors had given their opinions and had been discharged, the Judge sitting alone took some further evidence in the case before writing judgment, the trial was held to be illegal and was set aside—Jaisukh v. Emp., 43 All. 25, 22 Cr.L.J. 127. It is the Judge together with the assessors that constitutes the Court, and not the Judge sitting alone, and all evidence must be recorded by the Judge in the presence of the assessors—Ibid. In a trial for murder in which the soundness of the accused's mind was at issue, the Judge, after taking the opinions of the assessors, reserved judgment and had a private interview with the Civil Surgeon as to the state of mind of the accused. It was held that the procedure was extremely illegal. Instead of discussing with the Civil Surgeon out of Court, the Judge ought to have examined him as a witness in the presence of the assessors, and the accused ought to have been given an opportunity of cross-examining him—Q. E. v. Jai Lal, 1889 A.W.N. 181.

943. Questions to assessors.—Prior to the present amendment, the section did not expressly authorise the Judge to put any question to the assessors, but it was laid down in some cases that if there was anything obscure in their opinions it was open to the Judge to put to them such questions as were necessary to elucidate or supplement their opinions—Nazimuddi v. Emp., 40 Cal. 163, Ramesh Chandra v. Emp., 41 Cal. 350. This is now expressly provided by the present section as amended. But the questions can be asked only after the delivery of the opinion and not before, and for no other purpose except to clear up any obscurity in the verdict. The Judge cannot put questions to the assessors by way of cross-examination—Nazimuddi, 40 Cal. 163, 13 Cr.L.J. 497; Ramesh Chandra, 41 Cal. 350, 18 C.W.N. 496, 15 Cr.L.J. 395.

944. Judgment.—In passing judgment the Judge is not bound to conform to the opinions of the assessors. Although the assessors no doubt assist the Judge and regard must be paid to their opinions, K. E. v. Tirumal, 24 Mad. 523, still it is the Judge who has to decide the case

(c) If he answers that he has been so previously convicted, the Judge may proceed to pass sentence on him accordingly; but, if he denies that he has been so previously convicted, or refuses to or does not, answer such question, the jury or the Court and the assessors (as the case may be) shall then hear evidence concerning such previous conviction, and in such case (where the trial is by jury), it shall not be necessary to swear the jurors again."

It should be noted that clause (b) of the present section is entirely new. This clause has been added in order to avoid the inconvenience which may at present arise in cases tried by assessors whose opinion is not binding on the Judge. Under the amendment, in any trial held with the aid of assessors, the Court is given a discretion to proceed or refrain from proceeding with the trial of the accused on the charge of the previous conviction—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

945. Scope and object of section—This section applies to trials before a Court of Session and not to trials before a Magistrate—Dehri Sonar v Emp, 50 Cal 367. The law as to the taking of evidence of previous conviction in a trial before a Magistrate has been enacted in the new section 255A

The object of this section in prohibiting the proof of previous conviction to be put in until the accused is convicted, is to prevent the accused from being prejudiced at the trial—Maung E Gyi v. Emp., 1 Rang. 520. Therefore, where in the course of a trial a witness was allowed to say that he had heard that the accused was an old offender, the verdict was set aside, because the improper statement of the witness might have influenced the verdict of the jury—Q E v Jhinguri, 1890 A.W.N. 12. The provisions of this section are imperative and must be strictly complied with. Where an accused is undergoing a trial, only the charge relating to his previous conviction shall not be read until he has been convicted or the opinions of the assessors have been recorded on the charge of the present offence. Where both charges were read out to the assessors at the commencement of the trial, held that the trial was vitiated, and the conviction and sentence must be set aside—Raju v. Emp, 28 Cr.L.J. 667 (668) (Lah). Where the charge in regard to the previous convictions and the portion of the statement of the accused before the committing Magistrate admitting such previous convictions were read to the assessors before the conclusion of the trial for the substantive offence, the trial was vitiated—Teka Ahir v K E, 22 Cr. L.J. 719, 5 P.L.J. 706. The jury ought to be informed that the accused is charged with previous conviction, only after their verdict is taken and never before—Chundi Perugadu, 2 Weir 393. And the record should invariably show that no reference to previous conviction has been made until the subsequent offence has been found proved against the accused—Krishto Behari v Emp., 12 C.L.R. 555. A Judge's direction to the jury to consider proof of previous conviction as evidence regarding the character of the prisoner amounts to a misdirection—Roshun v Emp, 5 Cal 769. But where no failure of justice was caused i.e. where the accused was not prejudiced (e.g. in a prima facie case of theft), the High Court refused to interfere in a case in which the accused was called upon to plead simultaneously to a charge of theft and previous conviction—Bepin Behari v. Emp., 13 C.L.R. 110.

946. Previous conviction :—The previous conviction referred to in this section must be a conviction within British India. A conviction outside British India (e.g. in Berar) does not fall within the purview of this section, and cannot be taken into account for the purpose of affecting the punishment on a second conviction in British India. But it is not absolutely improper, however, to take such conviction into consideration—Emp. v. Lalsingh, 7 C.P.L.R. 24.

The charge alleging the previous conviction need not show the amount of the former punishment—Anonymous, 4 M.H.C.R. App 11.

How to prove :—If the accused admits that he had been previously convicted, the Judge is justified under this section in passing sentence upon such admission—Yasin v. K. E., 28 Cal. 689; In re Subramanian, 1916 M.W.N. 327, 17 Cr.L.J. 288, especially when the Magistrate passes a sentence which is legal even without proof of the previous conviction—In re Subramanian, supra. But if he does not plead to the charge of previous conviction, it cannot be proved by an extract from the record of previous conviction without proof of identity—Chundi Perugadu, 2 Weir 393; Tuki Mahomed v. Kisto Nath, 15 W.R. 53. See also notes under section 511

311. Notwithstanding anything in the last foregoing section, evidence of the previous conviction may be given at the trial for the subsequent offence, if the fact of the previous conviction is relevant under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

In a trial of offences under secs 395 and 402 I. P. C., the evidence of previous conviction is not permissible under sec. 54 of the Evidence Act, no evidence having been previously offered of the accused's good character. Nor does sec. 6 or 14 of the Evidence Act justify the admission of such evidence—Teka Ahir v. K. E., 5 P.L.J. 706, 22 Cr.L.J. 719.

The reason of this amendment is thus stated: "The High Court special jury list should in our opinion be revised and it should no longer be limited to 200 Europeans and 200 non-Europeans. It should include all who are qualified, to whatever nationality they may belong. This revision will probably increase the proportion of non-Europeans in the list. 313. (1) The Clerk of the Crown shall, before the first day of April in each year, and subject to such rules as the High Court from time to time prescribes, prepare—

Lists of common and special jurors

(a) a list of all persons liable to serve as common jurors; and

(b) a list of persons liable to serve as special jurors only.

(2) Regard shall be had, in the preparation of the latter list, to the property, character and education of the persons whose names are entered therein.

(3) No person shall be entitled to have his name entered in the special jurors' list merely because he may have been entered in the special jurors' list for a previous year.

(4) The Governor-General in Council or the Local Government in the case of the High Court at Fort William in Bengal, and in the case of other High Courts the Local Government, may exempt any salaried officer of Government from serving as a juror.

(5) The Clerk of the Crown shall, subject to such rules as aforesaid, have full discretion to prepare the said list as seems to him to be proper, and there shall be no appeal from or review of his decision.

Discretion of officer preparing lists.

The drawing up of the list of special jurors is entirely in the discretion of the Clerk of the Crown and the High Court will not interfere—In re Sham Chand, 1 Ind. Jur. (N. S.) 106.

314. (1) Preliminary lists of persons liable to serve as common jurors and as special jurors, respectively, signed by the Clerk of the Crown, shall be published once in the local official Gazette before the fifteenth day of April next after their preparation.

(2) Revised lists of persons liable to serve as common jurors and special jurors, respectively, signed as aforesaid, shall be published once in the local official Gazette before the first day of May next after their preparation.

(3) Copies of the said lists shall be affixed to some conspicuous part of the Court-house.

315. (1) Out of the persons named in the revised lists aforesaid, there shall be summoned for each session in the town which is the usual place of sitting of each High Court, as many of those who are liable to serve on special or common juries, respectively, as the Clerk of the Crown considers necessary.

(2) No person shall be so summoned more than once in six months unless the number cannot be made up without him.

(3) If, during the continuance of any sessions, it appears that the number of persons so summoned is not sufficient, such number as may be necessary of other persons liable to serve as aforesaid shall be summoned for such sessions.

The words "in the town.High Court" have been substituted for the words "in each Presidency town." A similar amendment has been made in sec. 316 and in the third proviso of section 270

The words "as many of ...necessary" have been substituted for the words "at least twenty-seven of those who are liable to serve on special juries, and fifty four of those who are liable to serve on common juries" by section 84 of the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923.

316. Whenever a High Court has given notice of its intention to hold sittings at any place outside the town which is the usual place of sitting of such High Court for the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction, the Court of Session at such place shall, subject to any direction which may be given by the High Court, summon a sufficient number of jurors from its own list, in the manner hereinafter prescribed for summoning jurors to the Court of Session.

The italicised words have been substituted for the words "Presidency towns" by sec. 83 of the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. Similar amendment occurs in secs. 276 and 315.

317. (1) In addition to the persons so summoned as jurors, the said Court of Session shall, if it thinks needful, after communication with the commanding officer, cause to be summoned such number of commissioned and non-commissioned officers in Her Majesty's Army or Air Force resident within ten miles of its place of sitting as the Court considers to be necessary to make up the juries required for the trial of persons charged with offences before the High Court as aforesaid.

(2) All officers so summoned shall be liable to serve on such juries notwithstanding anything contained in this Code; but no such officer shall be summoned whom his Commanding Officer desires to have excused on the ground of urgent official duty, or for any other special official reason.

In sub-section (1) the words 'or Air Force' have been added, and in sub-section (2) the word 'official' has been substituted for 'military,' by the Repealing and Amending Act (X of 1927).

318. Any person summoned under Section 315, Section 316, or Section 317, who, without lawful excuse, fails to attend as required by the summons, or who, having attended, departs without having obtained the permission of the Judge, or fails to attend after an adjournment of the Court after being ordered to attend, shall be deemed guilty of a contempt and be liable, by order of the Judge, to such fine as he thinks fit; and in default of payment of such fine, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months in the civil jail until the fine is paid:

Provided that the Court may in its discretion remit any fine or imprisonment so imposed.

319. All male persons between the ages of twenty-one and sixty shall, except as next hereinafter mentioned, be liable to serve as jurors or assessors at any trial, held within the district in which they reside, or, if the Local Government, on consideration of local circumstances, has fixed any smaller area in this behalf, within the area so fixed.

Where the Sessions Judge of Kanara asked the High Court for special permission to hold his Court at Sirsi instead of at Karwar, the High Court declined to permit it, as no assessors could be called upon to attend at Sirsi, which was outside the area fixed—In re Karwar Sessions Judge's Letter, Ratanlal 304

Exemptions.

- (a) officers in civil employ superior in rank to a District Magistrate;
- (aa) members of either Chamber of the Indian Legislature and members of a Legislative Council constituted under the Government of India Act;
- (b) salaried Judges;
- (c) Commissioners and Collectors of Revenue or Customs;
- (d) police-officers and persons engaged in the Preventive Service in the Customs Department;
- (e) persons engaged in the collection of the revenue whom the Collector thinks fit to exempt on the ground of official duty;

- (f) persons actually officiating as priests or ministers of their respective religions;
- (g) persons in Her Majesty's Army or Air Force, except when, by any law in force for the time being, they are specially made liable to serve as jurors or assessors;
- (h) surgeons and others who openly and constantly practise the medical profession;
- (i) legal practitioners (as defined by the Legal Practitioners' Act, 1879), in actual practice;
- (j) persons employed in the Post Office and Telegraph Departments;
- (k) persons exempted from personal appearance in Court under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, Sections 640 and 641;
- (l) other persons exempted by the Local Government from liability to serve as jurors or assessors.

Change :—Clause (aa) has been added by the Legislative Members Exemption Act XXIII of 1925, on the recommendation of the Reforms Inquiry Committee (contained in Para. 91 of their Report) that members of the legislatures in India should be exempt from sitting as jurors or assessors in criminal trials—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India, 1925, Part V, p 180).

321. (1) The Sessions Judge, and the Collector of the district or such other officer as the Local Government appoints in this behalf, shall prepare and make out in alphabetical order a list of persons liable to serve as jurors or assessors and qualified in the judgment of the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid to serve as such, and not likely to be successfully objected to under Section 278, clauses (b) to (h), both inclusive.

(2) The list shall contain the name, place of abode and quality of business of every such person; and, if the person is an European or an American, the list shall mention the race to which he belongs.

- (d) police-officers and persons engaged in the Preventive Service in the Customs Department;
- (e) persons engaged in the collection of the revenue whom the Collector thinks fit to exempt on the ground of official duty;

(2) In the event of a difference of opinion between the Sessions Judge and the Collector or other officer as aforesaid, the name of the proposed juror or assessor shall be omitted from the list.

(3) A copy of the revised list shall be signed by the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid and sent to the Court of Session.

(4) Any order of the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid in preparing and revising the list shall be final.

(5) Any exemption not claimed under this section shall be deemed to be waived until the list is next revised.

(6) The list so prepared and revised shall be again revised once in every year.

Annual revision of list.

(7) The list so revised shall be deemed a new list and shall be subject to all the rules hereinbefore contained as to the list originally prepared.

All Collectors should exercise great care in the revision of the jurors' list so as to include all qualified persons of intelligence who are liable to serve and to exclude unfit persons—Mad. G. O. No. 474, dated 16th March 1889. The list should show against each person the language or languages understood by him—C. P. Cr. Cir, Pt. II, No. 33.

325. In the case of any district for which the Local Government has declared that the trial of certain offences shall, if the Judge so direct, be by special jury, the Sessions Judge and the Collector of such district or other officer as aforesaid shall prepare, in addition to the revised list hereinbefore prescribed, a special list containing the names of such jurors as are borne on the revised list and are, in the opinion of such Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid, by reason of their possessing superior qualifications in respect of property, character or education, fit persons to serve as special jurors: Provided always that the inclusion of the name of any person in such special list shall not involve the removal of his name from the revised list nor relieve him of his liability to serve as an ordinary juror in cases not tried by special jury.

326. (1) The Sessions Judge shall ordinarily, seven days at least before the day which he may from time to time fix for holding the sessions, send a letter to the District Magistrate requesting him to summon as many persons named in the said revised list or the said special list as seem to the Sessions Judge to be needed for trials by jury and trials with the aid of assessors at the said sessions, the number to be summoned not being less than double the number required for any such trial, and including, where any accused person is an European or an American, as many Europeans or Americans as may be required for the purpose of choosing jurors or assessors for the trial.

(2) The names of the persons to be summoned shall be drawn by lot in open Court, excluding those who have served within six months, unless the number cannot be made up without them; and the names so drawn shall be specified in the said letter.

(3) Where the accused requires and is entitled to be tried under the provisions of section 275, there shall be chosen by lot, in the manner prescribed by or under section 276, from the whole number of persons returned the jurors who are to constitute the jury until a jury containing the proper number of Europeans or Europeans and Americans or of Indians as the case may be, has been obtained:

Provided that, in any case in which the proper number of Europeans or Americans cannot otherwise be obtained, the Court may, in its discretion for the purpose of constituting the jury, summon any person excluded from the list on the ground of his being exempted under section 320.

(4) Where under the proviso to subsection (3), the Court proposes to summon as a juror any person in His Majesty's Army, the provisions of section 317 shall apply in like manner as they apply for the purpose of the summoning of military jurors for a trial under section 316.

The italicised words have been added by sec. 19 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923.

947. Sections 326 and 327 contemplate as the ordinary or normal procedure that all assessors should be summoned on the first day on which a criminal Session commences, however many trials it may be proposed to hold in the course of that Session—Chutta v. Emp., 17 Cr.L.J. 17 (All.).

The duty of issuing a precept to the District Magistrate to summon jurors and assessors is imposed upon the Sessions Judge himself, it cannot be performed by a Subordinate Judge in temporary charge of the current duties of the Court of Session—Anonymous, Ratanlal 148.

Where owing to the fact that only three jurors attended the Court, the Judge summoned jurors from among the residents of the town on the day fixed for the trial, held that the jury as constituted was not a proper jury; the Judge ought to have summoned the jurors after drawing their names by lot from the list of persons liable to serve on the jury, in accordance with sub-section (2), but instead of doing so, he chose persons specially selected (a thing which the Legislature has taken special pains to render impossible), this was a serious irregularity which could not be cured by sec. 537—Brojendra v K E., 7 C W N 188

'Double the number required' —See 55 Cal 794, 33 C W.N. 1053 and other cases cited under sec. 274

327. The Court of Session may direct jurors or assessors to be summoned at other periods than the period specified in section 326, when the number of trials before the Court renders the attendance of one set of jurors or assessors for a whole session oppressive or whenever for other reasons such direction is found to be necessary.

328. Every summons to a juror or assessor shall be in writing, and shall require his attendance as a juror or assessor as the case may be, at a time and place to be therein specified.

329. When any person summoned to serve as a juror or assessor is in the service of Government or of a Railway Company, the Court to serve in which he is so summoned may excuse his attendance if it appears on the representation of the head of the office in which he is employed that he cannot serve as a juror or assessor, as the case may be, without inconvenience to the public.

Court may excuse attendance of juror or assessor.

330. (1) The Court of Session may for reasonable cause excuse any juror or assessor from attendance at any particular session.

Court may relieve special jurors from liability to serve again as jurors for twelve months.

(2) The Court of Session may, if it shall think fit, at the conclusion of any trial by special jury, direct that the jurors who have served on such jury shall not be summoned to serve again as jurors for a period of twelve months.

List of jurors and assessors attending.

331. (1) At each session the said Court shall cause to be made a list of the names of those who have attended as jurors and assessors at such session.

(2) Such list shall be kept with the list of the jurors and assessors as revised under section 324.

(3) A reference shall be made in the margin of the said revised list to each of the names which are mentioned in the list prepared under this section.

Penalty for non-attendance of juror or assessor.

332. (1) Any person summoned to attend as a juror or as an assessor who, without lawful excuse, fails to attend as required by the summons, or who, having attended, departs without having obtained the permission of the Court, or fails to attend after an adjournment of the Court, after being ordered to attend, shall be liable by order of the Court of Session to a fine not exceeding one hundred rupees.

(2) Such fine shall be levied by the District Magistrate by attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to such juror or assessor within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court making the order.

(3) For good cause shown, the Court may remit or reduce any fine so imposed.

(4) In default of recovery of the fine by attachment and sale, such juror or assessor may, by order of the Court of Session, be imprisoned in the civil jail for the term of fifteen days, unless such fine is paid before the end of the said term.

948. Gentlemen on the jury list are under no obligation to notify their change of address to the Court before leaving their usual place of residence, or to make any arrangement for the acceptance of notice and for the giving of information to the Court that he would be unable to attend. Therefore, where summons was served by affixing the duplicate on the door of the dwelling house of a juror, who at the time was living away from home, and had no knowledge of such service, held that he was not liable to fine for non-attendance—Moni Lal v Emp, 6 C.W.N. 887.

The summons to a juror or assessor must be served in the manner provided by sec 69. The issue of summons to a juror or assessor by a registered letter is illegal, and no fine can be imposed for the non-attendance of the juror or assessor in such a case—In re Sarat Chandra, 1 C.W.N. cxvi.

L.—Special Provisions for High Courts.

333. At any stage of any trial before a High Court under this Code, before the return of the verdict, the Advocate General may, if he thinks fit, inform the Court on behalf of Her Majesty that he will not further prosecute the defendant upon the charge; and thereupon all proceedings on such charge against the defendant shall be stayed, and he shall be discharged of and from the same. But such discharge shall not amount to an acquittal unless the presiding Judge otherwise directs.

949. Nolle prosequi :—After the trial had commenced and the evidence partly gone into, the Judge retired from the case under sec. 556 as he was a share-holder of the prosecuting Bank, and the case was adjourned without the jury being discharged. The Chief Justice purporting to act under Cl. 13 of the Charter Act appointed another Judge to preside at the trial of the accused. In answer to a question by the Judge, the Standing Counsel intimated that he intended proceeding with the trial from the point where it had been left, whereupon it was contended on behalf of the accused that the presiding Judge could not proceed with the trial as the previous Judge and the jury empanelled before him had still the seisin of the case. The Advocate General thereupon, in order to get rid of the many difficulties arising out of the case, entered a nolle prosequi, and the accused was discharged—Emp v. Khagendra, 2 C.W.N. 481. In a trial before the High Court Sessions, the jury were divided in the proportion of six to three. But the Judge, without ascertaining what the verdict of the majority was, discharged the jury and ordered a retrial. The retrial came before another Judge and another jury, and it was contended on behalf of the accused that as the previous Judge had discharged the jury without ascertaining what their verdict was and whether he agreed or disagreed with the verdict of the majority, the discharge of the jury was illegal and the previous Judge had still the seisin of the case, and no other Judge could try it. As the question was of some difficulty, the Advocate General entered a nolle prosequi, and the Judge discharged the accused—Emp. v. Jatindra, 8 C.W.N. xlviii. In another Calcutta case the jury in the first trial returned a unanimous verdict of not guilty on the main charge of murder, and were divided in the proportion of 5 to 4 on other counts. In the second trial on the remaining counts (ordered under sec. 308 Cr P C) the jury returned a verdict of not guilty by a majority of seven to two. The Judge disagreed with the verdict. The accused was brought up again before the learned Judge "to be dealt with according to law." The Advocate General thereupon appeared and entered a nolle prosequi—Emp v Nirmal Kanla Roy, 41 Cal 1072. After the close of the case for the prosecution and just as the counsel for the defence was going to call his witnesses, the foreman of the jury suddenly informed the Court that they had come to a unanimous verdict as to the guilt of the accused and did not desire to hear anything more. Upon this, the Counsel for accused said that it was a misbehaviour on the part of the jury to give a verdict without hearing the evidence for the defence; he therefore asked the Court to discharge the jury and to empanel a fresh jury. But the Advocate General entered a nolle prosequi—Emp v. Olu Muhammad, 7 C.W.N. xxxi.

Discharge—Acquittal—In Emp v. Jatindra, 8 C.W.N. xlviii, the Judge ordered that the discharge amounted to an acquittal, but in Emp v. Nirmal, 41 Cal 1072 and Emp v Olu Md, 7 C.W.N. xxxi, the Judge simply discharged the accused but did not acquit him.

An order of discharge under this section is no bar to fresh proceedings being taken before a competent Magistrate upon complaint or upon a Police report or under section 190 (c). In spite of an order of discharge passed under sec. 333, the accused may be sent up for trial upon the same charges, and the order of discharge does not require to be set aside for initiation of fresh proceedings on the same charges—Emp. v. Sheikh Idoo, 40 Cal 71. But in a recent case the same High Court has been of opinion that an order of discharge passed on a nolle prosequi entered under this section puts an end to the indictment on which the prisoner is brought before the Court, and he cannot be subsequently proceeded against on the same charge—Emp v. Jitendra Nath, 52 Cal. 590, 26 Cr.L.J. 1397. It is curious that no reference was made in this case to the earlier case of 40 Cal. 71.

334. For the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction every High Court shall hold sittings on such days and at such convenient intervals as the Chief Justice of such Court from time to time appoints.

Time of holding sittings.

335. (1) The High Court shall hold its sittings at the place at which it now holds them, or at such other place (if any) as the Governor-General in Council in the case of the High Court at Fort William, or the Local Government in the case of the other High Courts, may direct.

(2) But it may, from time to time, in the case of the High Court at Fort William with the consent of the Governor-General in Council, and in all other cases with the consent of the Local Government, hold sittings at such other places within the local limits of its appellate jurisdiction as the High Court appoints.

(3) Such officer as the Chief Justice directs shall give notice beforehand in the local official Gazette of all sittings intended to be held for the exercise of the original criminal jurisdiction of the High Court.

336. (Repealed.)

This section which dealt with the place of trial of European British subjects has been repealed by sec. 20 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923

CHAPTER XXIV.

GENERAL PROVISIONS AS TO INQUIRIES AND TRIALS.

other Magistrate, may with the view of obtaining the evidence of any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in, or privy to, the offence under inquiry, tender a pardon to such person on condition of his making a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to such offence, and to every other person concerned, whether as principal or abettor, in the commission thereof.

prisonment which may extend to seven years, or any offence under any of the following sections of the Indian Penal Code, namely sections 216A, 369, 401, 435, and 477A, the District Magistrate, a Presidency Magistrate, a Sub-divisional Magistrate or any Magistrate of the first class may, at any stage of the investigation or inquiry into, or the trial of, the offence, with a view to obtaining the evidence of any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to the offence, tender a pardon to such person on condition of his making a full and true disclosure of the whole circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence, and to every other person concerned, whether as principal or abettor, in the commission thereof :

Provided that, where the offence is under inquiry or trial, no Magistrate of the first class other than the District Magistrate shall exercise the power hereby conferred unless he is the Magistrate making the inquiry or holding the trial, and, where the offence is under investigation, no such Magistrate shall exercise the said power unless he is a Magistrate having jurisdiction in a place where the offence might be inquired into or tried and the sanction of the District Magistrate has been obtained to the exercise thereof.

(4) Every Magistrate other than a Presidency Magistrate, who tenders a pardon under this section, shall record his reasons for so doing; and when any Magistrate has made such tender and examined the person to whom it has been made he shall not try the case himself, although the offence which the accused appears to have committed may be triable by such Magistrate.

(2) Every person accepting a tender under this section shall be examined as a witness in the case.

(1A) Every Magistrate  who tenders a pardon under subsection (1) shall record his reasons for so doing, and shall, on application made by the accused, furnish him with a copy of such record;

Provided that the accused shall pay for the same unless the Magistrate for some special reason thinks fit to furnish it free of cost.

(2) Every person accepting a tender under this section shall be examined as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and in the subsequent trial, if any.

(2A) In every case where a person has accepted a tender of pardon and has been examined under subsection (2), the Magistrate before whom proceed- ings are pending shall, if he is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is guilty of an offence, commit him for trial to the Court of Session or High Court as the case may be.

(3) Such person, if not on bail, shall be detained in custody until the termination of the trial by the Court of Session or High Court, as the case may be.

(3) Such person unless he is already on bail shall be detained in custody until the termination of the trial.

Change—This section has been amended by sec. 86 of the Cr.P.C. Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923) The principal changes are:—

(a) The old section was restricted to offences triable by the High Court or the Court of Session. the new section includes several other offences

(b) A change has been made as regards the Magistrates who can tender pardon. "The Magistrates who should be allowed to tender a pardon should, in our opinion, be Magistrates of the first class who are inquiring into the offence and any District Magistrate, Presidency Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate, or, with the sanction of the District Magistrate, a Magistrate of the first class, having jurisdiction in any place where the offence might be inquired into or tried"—Report of the Joint Committee (192)

(c) The power to tender a pardon should be exercisable during an investigation as well as after a magistrial inquiry has begun—Ibid.

(d) Subsection (4) of the section has been omitted. The first part of that sub-section has now been re-enacted as sub-section (1A); and the latter part has been omitted as unnecessary in view of the new sub-section (2A). See the Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

950. Scope—offences—The old section applied only to offences triable exclusively by the Court of Session—Asghar Ali, 2 All 260; Subramaniya Aiyar, 25 Mad. 61 (66), Q. E. v Dala, 10 Bom. 190; Mahandu v. Emp., 1 Lah. 102; Shcobhajan v. Emp., 2 P.L.T. 125, Sardara v. Emp., 22 Cr.L.J. 676 (Lah.). These cases are now rendered obsolete by reason of the change made in this section

But where several offences are being inquired together, the fact that some of the offences do not fall under this section will not debar the Magistrate from granting pardon in respect of the offences which fall under it All that this Section requires is that the offence in respect of which pardon is tendered must be an offence described herein—Harumal

v. Crown, 16 Cr.L.J. 632, 9 S.L.R. 43, Balmokund v. Crown, 1915 P.R. 17, 16 Cr.L.J. 354; Ismail v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 1045 (Nag)

The words "triable exclusively by the Court of Session" mean an offence shown in the second schedule as so triable. A charge under sec 395, I. P. C. does not cease to be an offence triable exclusively by a Court of Session, merely because the charge is triable by, and in fact has been tried by, a District Magistrate under sec 30 of this Code—Bhallu v. Emp., 1897 P.R. 3. So also, a valid pardon, once having been validly given, is not affected by the fact that after the pardon, the Sessions Judge at the trial altered the charges from those framed by the Magistrate to some other offences—Kouromal v. Crown, 25 Cr.L.J. 1057, 19 S.L.R. 183.

950A. Secs. 347 and 494 :—Sec. 337 does not suggest the idea that the only method of obtaining the evidence of a co-accused against another is by tendering him a pardon, another way of obtaining his evidence is to withdraw the prosecution against him under sec 494. Secs 337 does not govern sec 494 nor abridges in any way the wide words of sec 494. Sec 337 appears in another connection and deals only with granting pardon to an under-trial prisoner in some serious cases. If he satisfies the conditions of pardon, he gets acquitted, if not, he may be tried for the offence. But if a case is withdrawn under sec. 491, he may, if he is discharged, be tried for the offence which he admits in his examination as a witness to have committed, and if he is acquitted, he cannot be retried, even though he refuses to give his evidence for the prosecution—G. V. Raman v. Emp., 56 Cal. 1023, 33 C.W.N. 468 (47.1).

951. Pardon :—*When can be tendered :—*Under the old section, a pardon could be tendered only in an inquiry (see the words 'offence under inquiry') but not during an investigation—Emp v. Motilal Hiralal, 46 Bom 81, 22 Cr.L.J. 728. But the Lahore High Court held that the word 'inquiry' in the section included everything done by the Magistrate whether the case was challan'd or not, and therefore pardon could be tendered where the offence was only under investigation by the police—Sher Muhammad v. Crown, 3 Lah 431, Bhallu v. Emp. 1897 P.R. 3. This was also the view in Sind—Crown v. Andal, 5 S.L.R. 174, 13 Cr.L.J. 33. This conflict of opinion has now been removed by the present amendment and under the present section it can be tendered at any stage of the investigation as well.

All that this section requires is that there should be an investigation in progress regarding the offence. If at the date of the pardon, inquiries were going on against the accused for an offence mentioned in section, the pardon is perfectly legal, and the approver is a witness against the accused—Ismail Panju v. Emp., 21 Cr.L.J. 1045 (Nag). A pardon may be tendered to a person even after a charge has been framed against him—Mangu v. Emp., 22 Cr.L.J. 1045. A pardon can be tendered to an approver during the trial of the offence even though the principal offender has absconded and the court may therefore proceed. In such a case the approver's statement is admissible.

under sec. 512—In re Dagdu, 46 Bom. 120, 22 Cr L.J. 620 This section does not require that a trial or an inquiry should be in progress at the time the pardon is tendered. Therefore, a pardon is not illegal by reason of the fact that at the time when the Magistrate had granted pardon he had adjourned the case under sec. 526(8). Although the Magistrate had postponed the investigation or inquiry, he did not become functus officio, he had not ceased to be the Magistrate who would be or was investigating or inquiring into the offence. The Magistrate was the only Magistrate who at that time had jurisdiction to inquire into the case—Bal Chand v. Emp., 49 All 181, 27 Cr L.J. 1369, 24 A.L.J. 1050.

Who can grant pardon—See notes under "Change" above. Where the offence is under investigation, the Magistrate (other than the District Magistrate) tendering pardon must have jurisdiction over the offence. A Magistrate of one district cannot tender pardon to a person implicated in an offence committed in another district and inquired into in the latter district. The pardon so tendered is illegal and cannot be validated by the operation of sec 529—Q E v. Chidda, 20 All. 40

Where the offence is under investigation, the Magistrate can grant pardon only with the sanction of the District Magistrate. This sanction should be a written sanction: but an oral sanction, though irregular, would be valid—Sultan Khan v K. E., 5 A.L.J. 691, 8 Cr.L.J. 445 (450)

A Deputy Commissioner trying a case triable exclusively by the Sessions Court, under the powers conferred by sec. 30, can offer a conditional pardon to an accused under this section—Paban Singh v. Emp., 10 C.W.N. 847

Power of Local Government—The Local Government has no power to offer a conditional pardon to an accused for the purpose of giving evidence against the other accused, under this section—Paban Singh, 10 C.W.N. 847, Banu Singh v Emp., 33 Cal. 1353. (A new provision regarding conditional pardon has been inserted in sec. 401, sub-sec. 5A) But the Local Government as an executive authority, has power to refrain from prosecution independently of this section—Emp. v Har Prosad, 45 All. 226 (229), 21 A.L.J. 42. This section is addressed to certain Courts of justice, and has nothing to do with the powers of the Local Government in the matter of instituting or refraining from instituting any prosecution. The Local Government can grant pardon even though the case is not triable exclusively by the Court of Session or High Court. It can examine an accomplice as a witness even though no formal tender of pardon has been granted to him. Thus, where the Government of C P., having before it the case of a Subordinate Judge who was suspected of receiving bribes, issued a notification to the effect that no prosecution would be instituted by the Government against any person who would come forward with evidence that he had paid or offered bribe to the accused (Sub-Judge), and in consequence of the notification two men came forward and gave evidence against the Sub-Judge, held that their evidence was admissible on the principle of sub-section (2) of this section, although no pardon was formally tendered to them under sec. 337 and although the offence (sec. 161 I. P. C.) was not triable exclusively by a Court of Session or High Court—Emp. v Har Prosad, supra

To whom pardon can be tendered.—Pardon can be tendered to any person who is supposed to be directly or indirectly concerned in, or privy to, the offence. The word "supposed" must be taken as intended to exclude merely the case of a man who has actually been convicted of the crime, and not the case of a man who though admitted to be a party to the crime is unconvicted; therefore where pardon was tendered to a person who pleaded guilty but was not convicted, it was held that the pardon was properly granted and that his evidence was admissible—Q. E. v. Kallu, 7 All. 160; Q. E. v. Bhagya, Ratanlal 750 (752)

It is not necessary that the person to whom a pardon is tendered should himself be charged with an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session; it is not even necessary that he should be an accused in the case; all that is required by this section is that he should be supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to such offence, with which another person is charged—Kashim v Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 566, 6 N.L.J. 144.

Pardon cannot be tendered to a person whose complicity in the crime is not admitted by himself, such a person cannot be considered to be an approver, and his evidence cannot be taken as that of an approver—Sant Ram v Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 799

Condition of pardon:—The only condition on which pardon can be tendered to an accomplice is the one specified in this section. A tender of pardon on condition that the approver should profess to have been present at the scene of the offence and to have personal knowledge of the circumstances under which the offence was committed (which was not true) is illegal. The accomplice should not be bound over to any particular narration, and in a tender of pardon there should be no temptation offered to strain the truth—Q. E. v Yakub, Ratanlal 612 (614), following Winsor v Q., L.R. 1 Q.B. 312

Disclosure:—This section requires that the disclosure shall be reduced into writing. If it is made orally, the verbal testimony of the Magistrate to whom it has been made will be sufficient to prove the statement. But as a rule of caution the approver's statement should be always reduced to writing, so that no dispute may subsequently arise as to what the exact terms of the statement were—Ram Nath v Emp., 29 P.L.R. 165, 20 Cr.L.J. 413 (415).

952. Effect of pardon.—A person who has been granted pardon under this section and who has fulfilled the conditions of pardon must be released, and cannot be re-arrested in respect of the same offence or for any offence inseparably connected with it. Thus, in a dacoity case, an accused was tendered pardon under this section. He made a full statement implicating himself and others, pointed out the place where he had a carbine and ammunition concealed, gave them up to the Police and in all respects complied with the conditions of the pardon. At the close of the case he was released. He was then re-arrested and tried under section 20 of the Arms Act in respect of the possession of the carbine and ammunition which he had given up to the Police. Held that the possession of carbine and ammunition being an offence in connection with the matter of the dacoity, and inseparable from his guilt as a dacoit, his prosecution for such an offence, after he had fulfilled his condition of pardon in the dacoity case, was improper and must be set aside—Shiam Sundar v. Emp., 19 A L J 717, 22 Cr L J 699, 63 LC 827.

A pardon tendered to person in respect of one offence is no bar to his trial and conviction for an entirely different offence—Emp. v Sardara, 46 All 236 (240), 22 A L J 85, 25 Cr.L.J. 956 But it will bar his trial and conviction in respect of offences which are so closely connected with the offence in respect of which the pardon was tendered that they may be said to be covered by the terms of the pardon—Q. E. v. Ganga Charan, 11 All 79 Thus, where the approver who was granted pardon in connection with a case of forgery, made a full and true disclosure of the circumstances of the crime, and in so doing he also related the details of some other earlier offences (e.g. money order fraud) committed by himself and the other accused, which were not relevant to the inquiry, but he made those disclosures under the belief that those earlier offences also fell within the scope of the inquiry, and he was not warned by the Magistrate against making those irrelevant statements, held that the approver should be given the benefit of doubt there might be as to his understanding of the pardon, and that the pardon granted in the forgery case should excuse him from prosecution for the earlier offences (e.g. money order fraud)—Nilmadhab v Emp., 5 Pat 171, 27 Cr L J 957 (961) "If the prisoner having been admitted as an accomplice to one felony, be thereby induced to suppose that he has freed himself from the consequences of another felony, the Judge will recommend the indictment for such other felony to be abandoned"—Russell on Crimes (4th Edn.), Vol. 3, p. 597.

953. Sub-section (1A)—Recording reasons :—Although sub-section (1A) requires the Magistrate, who tenders pardon, to record his reasons for so doing, still the recording of the reasons is not a condition precedent to the tender of pardon and its acceptance by the approver, and the pardon cannot be set aside merely because the reasons are not recorded. Such irregularity does not prejudice the approver—Emp. v Shama Charan, 13 Cr L.J. 588 (590) (All.); Sultan Khan v. Emp., 5 A L J 691, 8 Cr.L.J. 445 (451). When the facts which led up to the tender of pardon appear on the record, the omission to state the reasons is not an illegality which vitiates the proceedings, but a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537, unless it has occasioned a failure of justice—Dukhu, 27 A.L J 227, 30 Cr L.J. 1157 (1158), Emp v. Annada, 36 Cal. 629; Crown v Waryam, 5 Lah. L.J 408; nor even can it be a ground for excluding the approver's evidence as inadmissible—Dy. Leg Rem v. Banu Singh, 5 C.L.J. 224.

954. Sub-section (2) :—Approver as witness :—According to clause (2) the approver shall be examined as a witness in the case. The expression "in the case" (see the old section) includes the preliminary inquiry, and does not refer to the trial alone—Q. E. v. Ramasawami, 24

Mad. 321; Local Govt. v. Mullu, 11 N.L.R. 59, 16 Cr L.J. 417. This is now made clear by the present amendment of this sub-section.

The amendment of this clause also makes it clear that the approver must be examined both in the Court of the committing Magistrate and in the subsequent trial, and not in the former Court alone. But if the approver when examined before the committing Magistrate resiles from his previous disclosures and says that they were made under police pressure, he need not be examined at the subsequent trial; and the fact that he was not examined before the Sessions Judge does not bar his trial for the offence in respect of which the pardon had been granted—Ram Nath v Emp, 29 P L R 165, 29 Cr.L.J. 413 (416). If the approver when examined as a witness in the committing Magistrate's Court did not comply with the conditions of pardon, it was not necessary that he should be examined as a witness before the Court of Session—Crown v. Andal, 5 S.L.R 174, 13 Cr L J 33. It is not compulsory to examine the approver in the Sessions Court if he has shown by his evidence in the Magistrate's Court that he is an untrustworthy witness—Sashi v. Emp, 42 Cal 856, 19 C W N 295, 16 Cr.L.J. 65. Where an approver when examined in the preliminary inquiry keeps back material evidence within his knowledge, the Magistrate can withdraw the pardon, and the prosecution is not bound to put him forward as a witness in the sessions trial—Q E v Ramasawmi, 24 Mad 321. A person who has not satisfied the conditions of pardon at the commitment, need not be examined at the trial in the Sessions Court; the evidence given by him before the committing Magistrate can be used as evidence in proceedings taken against him—Nga Po v. K. E, 7 Cr.L.J. 245 (Bur.), Suba v. K E, 1905 P.R. 41.

An approver cannot be examined as a witness unless and until he has been discharged by a written order; a mere promise of immunity from prosecution given by the Local Government does not amount to an order of discharge. Unless he is formally discharged, he does not cease to be an accused person and cannot be examined as a witness, and he does not cease to be an accused person by reason of the mere fact that the police did not send him up for trial—Mahandu v. Crown, 1 Lah. 102 (dissenting from Sardar v. Emp, 1904 P R 21).

A pardon was tendered to and accepted by an accused in the committing Magistrate's Court, but by some mistake his name was still in the category of the accused when the case came before the Sessions Court, and he was placed on the dock along with other accused. The mistake was soon found out, and the Sessions Judge then removed him from the dock, and he gave evidence in the trial. Held that the approver's evidence was admissible—Ayub Mandal v Emp, 54 Cal 539, 28 Cr L J 689.

955. Accused illegally pardoned.—It is illegal for a Magistrate to convert an accused into a witness (approver) except when a pardon has been lawfully granted under sec 337. Reg v Hanmant 1 Bom 610. Therefore, where a Magistrate tenders pardon to one of the accused persons in a case not exclusively triable by the Court of Session, and examines him as a witness, the statement made by that accused is, irrelevant and inadmissible even as confession of a co-accused—Emp. v. Ashgar, 2 All. 260. Contra—Subramania Ayyar v. K. E., 25 Mad. 61 (68), in which it was held that although the tender of pardon was illegal, he was competent to give evidence as a witness.

It has been pointed out in this Madras case (25 Mad. 61, at pp 68-69) that the question as to whether an approver, who has been illegally pardoned, can be a competent witness, depends upon the further question whether the approver had pleaded guilty or not. If he had not pleaded guilty, and had neither been acquitted nor discharged nor convicted, he cannot be examined as a witness against the other accused. This was the ratio decidendi of the decision in 1 Bom. 610 and 2 All. 260. But when the approver had pleaded guilty (as in 25 Mad. 61), no issue remained to be tried as between him and the Crown; he could not be said to be tried jointly with the other accused; he was not in charge of the jury, his incompetency to give evidence had been removed, and an oath could be lawfully administered to him.

956. Conviction based on approver's evidence :— Though a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds on the uncorroborated testimony of an approver (sec. 133, Evidence Act), Q. E. v. Kallu, 7 All 160, Raj v. Ramasami, 1 Mad. 394; yet it has now become the universal practice not to convict on the testimony of an accomplice, unless it is corroborated in material particulars—Q. E. v. Kallu, 7 All 160; Ramaswami v. Emp., 27 Mad. 271; Q. E. v. Krishnabhat, 10 Bom 319, Emp. v. Shrinivas, 7 Bom. L.R. 969, 3 Cr.L.J. 33, Q. E. v. Maganlal, 14 Bom 115; Yasin v. K. E., 28 Cal 689, Shabrah v. Crown, 1919 P.R. 20, 20 Cr.L.J. 191, 49 I.C. 607, Madan v. Emp., 4 P.L.T. 381, 24 Cr.L.J. 723. The evidence of an approver should not be believed without material corroboration, and in order to see whether there is such a corroboration, it is the duty of the Court to scrutinize and marshall out very carefully the proof relating thereto. Where this duty has not been properly performed by the lower Court, the High Court will interfere in revision and set aside the conviction—Manna v. Emp., 1911 P.W.R. 3, 12 Cr.L.J. 35. The Judge in his charge to the jury should take care to point out that although a conviction based on the uncorroborated testimony of the approver is not illegal, yet it is not the practice of the Court so to convict, and should state also that the evidence of the approver was given on conditional pardon—Q. v. Bykant, 10 W.R. 17; Jamiruddi v. Emp., 29 Cal. 782, Surya Kanta v. K. E., 24 C.W.N. 119 (F.B.), 31 C.L.J. 20. But when the Judge had warned the jury of the danger of convicting the accused on the uncorroborated testimony of the approver, and the jury, notwithstanding the Judge's remarks, convicted the accused, it was held that the conviction was valid in law, and could not be questioned by the High Court—Q. v. Mohima, 13 W.R. 37. See also Emp. v. Jamaldi, 51 Cal. 160, cited in Note 915 (5) under sec. 297.

As to the amount of corroboration necessary, no hard and fast rule can be laid down; it depends upon the nature of the crime, on the extent of the complicity of the accused, and the nature of the corroborative facts—Kamala v. Sital, 28 Cal. 339; Deo Nandan v. Emp., 33 Cal. 649, K. E. v. Maihar, 26 Bom. 193, Ramaswami v. Emp., 27 Mad. 271. The evidence of the approver should be corroborated not only as to the circumstances of the case, but also as to the identity of the prisoner—Reg v. Imam, 3 B.H.C.R. 57, Reg v. Buddha, 1 Bom. 475, Q. E. v. Krishnabhat, 10 Bom. 319; and also in material particulars in respect to that person having committed the offence—Q v. Sadhu, 21 W.R. 69, Siar Nania v. K. E., 18 C.W.N. 550, 15 Cr.L.J. 438, Kashiram v. Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 566 (Nag.). The corroboration should be such as to support that portion of the approver's testimony which makes out that the prisoner was present at the scene of the offence and participated in the acts of commission—Q v. Mohesh, 19 W.R. 16 See sec. 133, and Ill. (b) to sec. 114, Evidence Act.

957. Sub-section (2A)—Magistrate cannot try the case.—Sub-section (2A) lays down that the Magistrate tendering the pardon must commit the case to the Sessions; this means that he is not competent to proceed with the trial himself—Emp. v. Peru, 2 O.W.N. 464, 26 Cr.L.J. 1216. Thus, where in a case of robbery, the Magistrate grants a conditional pardon to an approver and is satisfied that there is a prima facie case, he has no jurisdiction to dispose of the case himself but is bound under the provisions of this clause to commit the case to the sessions—Nga Kin v. Emp., 4 Bur. L.J. 11, 26 Cr.L.J. 829. The Magistrate before whom the suspected person is brought face to face, and who attempts to induce him by promise of pardon to make a full and true disclosure, assumes to a certain extent the function of a police-officer and identifies himself with the prosecution, and it is doubtless on that reason that it is considered proper to disqualify him from trying the case—Q. E. v. Batera, 1898 P.R. 3. A Deputy Commissioner trying a case under the special powers conferred by sec. 30, does so as a Magistrate, and if he tenders pardon to one of the accused, he cannot try the case himself—Pabon Singh v. Emp., 10 C.W.N. 847; Kishar v. Emp., 25 Cr.L.J. 1341 (Nag.).

This sub-section debars only the Magistrate rendering the pardon from trying the case, but a District Magistrate sanctioning the tender of pardon to an approver is not precluded from trying the case—Akbar v. Crown, 1919 P.R. 30, 21 Cr.L.J. 306, 55 I.C. 466.

'Examined'—In Q. E. v. Batera, 1898 P.R. 3 it was held that the examination referred to in the old sub-section (4) referred to an examination made by the pardon-tendering Magistrate on the tender of the pardon and directly resulting from it, and not the examination made by any other Magistrate in the course of the trial. But the examination referred to in the new sub-section (2A) is the examination made under sub-section (2) which speaks of an examination made in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence as well as the examination in the subsequent trial, if any.

Approver cannot be committed—Under sub-section (2A) it is clear that when pardon has been granted to an accused, the case of the other accused alone should be committed to the sessions. The approver cannot be committed to the sessions, for since he has been granted a pardon he cannot be tried. If the Magistrate commits the approver along with the other accused (which Magistrates frequently do under a mistaken view of the law), the sessions Judge ought to make a reference to the High Court for getting the commitment of the approver quashed. If, however, the sessions Judge does not make any such reference, treating the commitment of the approver as if there had been no commitment, the procedure is not illegal but a mere irregularity—Bhagwandin v. Emp., 6 O.W.N. 218, 30 Cr L J 567 (569). The approver cannot be committed to the sessions, but must be detained in custody until the termination of the trial. If he is committed, the commitment will be quashed by the High Court—Emp. v. Peru, 2 O.W.N. 464, 12 O.L.J. 542, 26 Cr.L.J. 1216.

958. Sub-section (3) :—The approver shall be, unless he is on bail, detained until the termination of the trial—Mg. Po v. K. E., 8 L.B.R. 357, 17 Cr L J 391, and nothing can be done against an approver who has not complied with the conditions on which the tender of pardon was made to him, until after the case in the Court of Session has been finished, then his trial should be commenced de novo—Q. E. v. Bhan, 23 Bom 493. See Note 962 under sec. 339.

The meaning of this sub-section is that the approver shall not be set at large until the judicial proceedings pending against the accused person are finished. It is immaterial for the purpose of this sub-section whether the proceedings are finished by a Magisterial order of discharge (under sec. 209) before trial, or by a Judge's order of acquittal after trial. In the case of the Magisterial discharge, the sub-section will be satisfied if the approver is detained in custody or is on bail until the order of discharge is made—Emp. v. Intya 37 Bom. 146, 13 Cr L J 842.

338. At any time after commitment, but before judgment is passed, the Court to which the commitment is made may, with the view of obtaining on the trial the evidence of any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in, or privy to, any such offence, tender, or order the committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender, a pardon on the same condition to such person.

Power to direct tender of pardon.

959. Who can tender pardon :—After the commitment of the case to the Sessions, either the Court of Session can itself tender pardon, or it can direct the Committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender pardon. The Local Government cannot tender a pardon under this or the previous section, but it can withdraw the prosecution under sec. 494—Banu Singh v. Emp., 33 Cal. 1353; Pabon v. Emp. 10 C.W.N. 847.

The Sessions Court can direct only the committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender pardon, but it cannot direct a Police Officer to do so—In re Fakir Mahomed, 6 W.R. (Cr. Let) 5.

To whom pardon can be tendered:—Pardon can be tendered under this section to an accused. There is no ground for the suggestion that the words 'any person' in this section do not include a person accused before the Sessions Judge—Harumal v. Crown, 9 S.L.R. 43, 16 Cr.L.J. 632. A pardon can be tendered to an accused person provided he is unconvicted. The words "supposed . . . offence" in this section exclude those who have been actually convicted; but a tender of pardon to a person who has pleaded guilty but has not been convicted is not prohibited by this section; and the evidence of such person examined as a witness is admissible—Q. E. v. Kallu, 7 All. 160, Q. E. v. Bhagya, Ratanlal 750 (752).

When pardon may be tendered —Pardon can be tendered at any time 'after commitment and before judgment is pronounced'; but it is extremely improper, though not illegal, to grant pardon at a late stage of the trial after the close of the prosecution and the defence, and after the opinion of the assessors has been given, though judgment has not yet been pronounced—Emp. v. Hulia, 1884 A.W.N. 147.

339. (1) Where a pardon has been tendered under section 337 or section 338, and the Public Prosecutor certifies that in his opinion any person who has accepted such tender has, either by wilfully concealing anything essential or by giving false evidence, not complied with the condition on which the tender was made, such person may be tried for the offence in respect of which the pardon was so tendered, or for any other offence of which he appears to have been guilty in connection with the same matter:

Commitment of person to whom pardon has been tendered.

Provided that such person shall not be tried jointly with any of the other accused, and that he shall be entitled to plead at such trial that he has complied with the conditions upon which such tender was made; in which case it shall be for the prosecution to prove that such conditions have not been complied with.

(2) The statement made by a person who has accepted a tender of pardon may be given in evidence against him at such trial.

(3) No prosecution for the offence of giving false evidence in respect of such statement shall be entertained without the sanction of the High Court.

Change:—The italicised words and the proviso have been added by sec. 87 of the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923).

960. Certificate of Public Prosecutor :—"We would make a certificate by the Public Prosecutor as the basis of the prosecution of a person who has accepted a tender of pardon"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922). Under the old law, it was the trying Court which had the authority to determine whether the pardon had been forfeited so as to necessitate the trial of the approver—Emp. v. Mariama, 1889 P.R. 6; K. E. v. Kadu, 1904 P.R. 31; Sashi v. Emp., 42 Cal. 856, Emp. v. Kachri, 7 N.L.R. 65, 10 I.C. 622, 12 Cr.L.J. 326. Under the present law, no such determination by the trying Court is necessary, but the certificate of the Public Prosecutor is sufficient.

The certificate of the Public Prosecutor is an essential requisite under this section, and the absence of the certificate vitiates the trial of the approver—Ali v. Crown, 5 Lah. 379 (381), 26 Cr.L.J. 237. The certificate of the Public Prosecutor is the sole basis of the prosecution of an approver, and therefore an approver cannot be prosecuted merely at the instance of a suggestion by the presiding Judge that he should be so dealt with—Emp. v. Maria Basappa, 26 Bom. L.R. 1240, 26 Cr.L.J. 469. Where there was no certificate of the Public Prosecutor at the time of the commitment of the approver to the Sessions, but the certificate was subsequently filed in the Court of the Sessions Judge after he noticed the absence of the certificate and before the trial proceeded, held that the proceedings before the committing Magistrate were merely irregular and not invalid, and the trial was in order, as the provisions of sec. 339 as regards the requirement of the certificate were complied with before the trial began, and especially as no objection had been taken either before the committing Magistrate or before the Sessions Court even after the point was brought prominently to notice—Nga Wa Gyi v. Emp., 3 Rang 55, 4 Bur.L.J. 23, 27 Cr.L.J. 254.

961. Forfeiture of pardon—The approver will be said to have broken the conditions of pardon, if he wilfully conceals anything essential or gives false evidence—Maung Po v. K. E., 8 L.B.R. 357, 17 Cr.L.J. 391, Emp. v. Kothia, 30 Bom. 611. The approver must be considered to have failed to comply with the conditions of pardon as soon as it is established that his disclosure is not a full and true one, and this fact becomes apparent as soon as he is shown to have made a statement entirely inconsistent with the one upon the strength of which the pardon was granted. Thus, if after having made a disclosure, he subsequently says before the committing Magistrate that his disclosure was false and made under police pressure and that he knows nothing about the occurrence of the crime, he forfeits his pardon—Ram Nath v. Emp., 29 P.L.R. 165, 29 Cr.L.J. 413 (416). If after accepting the tender of pardon the approver refuses to make any statement, saying that he knows nothing, his pardon will be revoked and he will be committed for trial—Emp. v. Budhan, 29 All. 24. The prosecution may proceed against the approver if he breaks the condition of his pardon by giving a false evidence under section 512 of this Code, in a case where the principal offender has absconded—In re Dagdu, 46 Bom. 120, 22 Cr.L.J. 620. But the absconding of the approver before the conclusion of cross-examination does not amount to a wilful concealment of facts—Maung Po v. K. E., supra

It is a matter of great importance that strictest faith should be kept with the approver and his mere failure to secure the conviction of his accomplices does not justify the withdrawal of pardon—Q. E. v. Habibulla, 1895 P.R. 15. But the approver will forfeit his pardon if he screens one of the offenders, although he helps to secure the conviction of the other offenders—Suraj Bhan v. Crown, 1918 P.R. 24, 19 Cr.L.J. 926. Where an approver made a fair, full and true disclosure of all the circumstances relative to the crime, and the whole of the evidence showed that the crimes were in all probability exactly as he said they were, and that he had not concealed the name of any person concerned in the crime nor concealed the part which he himself took in the crime, it was held that he had complied with the conditions of the pardon, and the fact that there were slight inconsistencies upon immaterial points with a previous statement made by him would not justify a forfeiture of pardon—Srinop v. Emp., 12 C.L.R. 226. An approver who makes a full and true disclosure of facts both before the committing Magistrate and the Sessions Court, but in the cross-examination resiles from the statement made by him in his examination-in-chief, sufficiently fulfils the conditions of his pardon, and the pardon cannot be forfeited—Emp. v. Kothia, 30 Bom. 611. Where a person of low intellect who has accepted a tender of pardon complies with the terms of his pardon in his examination-in-chief, but makes damaging admissions in his cross-examination though he does not actually resile from his previous statement, and in re-examination returns more towards his previous statement, held that it cannot be said that he had not complied with the conditions of his pardon—Emp. v. Jagannath, 3 O.W.N. 474, 27 Cr.L.J. 763. Any trifling discrepancies elicited in cross-examination do not justify the forfeiture of pardon—Kanwar Singh v. Emp., 1902 P.R. 34. But where the approver gave true evidence regarding the offence before the committing Magistrate but resiled from that evidence before the Sessions Judge, held that he must be deemed to have forfeited his pardon—Local Government v. Mullu, 11 N.L.R. 59, 16 Cr.L.J. 417.

No 'withdrawal' of pardon necessary:—The word 'forfeited' has been substituted in the 1898 Code for the word 'withdrawn' occurring in the 1882 Code. Under the present Code no formal withdrawal of a pardon and no formal declaration that the pardon has been forfeited are necessary—Sashi v. K. E., 42 Cal. 856; Emp. v. Saber, 42 Cal. 756; Khial v. Emp., 39 All. 305; Kullan v. Emp., 32 Mad. 173; Emp. v. Kothia, 30 Bom. 611; Suraj Bhan v. Crown, 1918 P.R. 24, 19 Cr.L.J. 926; To Gale v. K. E., 7 L.B.R. 1, 14 Cr.L.J. 401; Emp. v. Kachri, 7 N.L.R. 65, 10 I.C. 622; the forfeiture is incurred ipso facto by the act of the approver—Emp. v. Abani Bhashan, 37 Cal. 845. The substitution of the word 'forfeited' for 'withdrawn' indicates that a pardon cannot be withdrawn but can only be forfeited on the ground of the breach of the conditions. Under the present law, the question is whether the accused has forfeited his pardon by some act of his own, and not whether the Magistrate has validly withdrawn it—K. E. v. Bala, 25 Bom. 675. And no question can arise at all as to its validity, if the pardon has been withdrawn by an unauthorised Magistrate—Suraj Bhan v. Crown, 1918 P.R. 24, 19 Cr.L.J. 926. Under the old law, the pardon remained in force until it was formally withdrawn; under the present law, the result of a failure to observe the conditions is that the approver may be put on his trial without any formal order of withdrawal or cancellation. The act terminating the pardon was, under the old law, the withdrawal of pardon by the authority who granted it; under the present Act, it is the forfeiture by the approver—Sashi v. K. E., 42 Cal. 856.

Therefore, where an approver was tendered pardon by the District Magistrate, but in the Court of Session he did not fulfil the condition of pardon, whereupon the Sessions Judge directed the commitment of the approver, held that the order of the Sessions Judge was not illegal. It was not necessary that the pardon granted by the District Magistrate must be withdrawn by the Magistrate before the approver could be committed to the Sessions. The Sessions Judge was competent to order the approver to be committed to the Court of Session when he was of opinion that the approver had forfeited the pardon—Crown v. Kadu, 1904 P.R. 31; Chanan v. Crown, 1 Lah. 218, 21 Cr.L.J. 518.

962. Trial of the approver :—Commitment or trial along with other accused, illegal—Sub-section (3) of section 337 lays down that the approver shall be detained in custody until the termination of the trial of the other accused persons by the Court of Session. The effect of that section read with this section is that action can be taken against an approver, who has forfeited his pardon, after the trial of the other accused in the Court of Session is finished, and then his trial should be commenced de novo. If he has forfeited his pardon during the preliminary inquiry, he cannot be committed to the Sessions along with the other accused—Q. E. v. Bhan, 23 Bom. 493, Emp. v. Revappa, 4 Bom.L.R. 826; Q. E. v. Ramaswami, 24 Mad 321, Aruna Chellum v. Emp., 31 Mad 272; Emp. v. Mohan, 5 N.L.R. 134, 3 I.C. 922. (Contra—Sashi v. K. E., 42 Cal. 856, Q. E. v. Brij Narain 20 All. 529; Emp. v. Budhan, 29 All. 24, K. E. v. Bala, 25 Bom. 675; in these cases it is held that the commitment of the approver along with the other accused is not illegal).

If the accused has forfeited his pardon during the trial, he cannot be tried at once along with the other accused, since he has not been regularly committed to the Sessions but has been sent up as a witness—Q. E. v. Sudra, 14 All. 336; Q. E. v. Mulaa, 14 All. 502, Sashi v. K. E., 42 Cal. 856; Q. E. v. Kushya, Ratanlal 119; Chanan v. Crown, 1 Lah. 218, 21 Cr.L.J. 518. This is now expressly provided for by the proviso newly added. The contrary view taken in Sultan v. Emp., 5 A.L.J. 691, 8 Cr.L.J. 445 (450) that the trial of the approver along with the other accused is not illegal, is no longer correct. Before the approver can be tried by a Sessions Judge, the Sessions Judge should send him to a competent Magistrate for a regular commitment—Q. E. v. Rama Tewari.

15 Mad 352; Q. E. v. Sadra, 14 All. 336; Q. E. v. Jagat Chandra, 22 Cal 50. The approver should not be deprived of the benefit of a preliminary inquiry where he should have an opportunity of making his defence—Rama Varma v. Q., 3 Mad. 351.

Where one of the accused at first promised to make a clean breast of all the circumstances and was tendered a pardon conditional on his doing so, but before he was treated as an approver and put into the box he made a statement to the Court that he did not want the pardon and that he wished to be tried and that the pardon might be cancelled, whereupon he was tried along with the other accused, held that as the pardon though accepted for a time was rejected by the accused himself (and not forfeited) before it actually took effect, the case did not fall under this section and the so-called pardon was not a bar to the trial of the accused along with the others. The pardon referred to in this section is an accepted pardon the acceptance must continue in force till the person pardoned actually gives evidence and it is only then that any question would arise as to whether he has forfeited the pardon by not giving true evidence in the case—In re Basireddi Narappa, 45 M.L.J. 613.

Where the Judge sends up the approver to a Magistrate for commitment, the committing Magistrate must in his commitment-order give reasons for holding that the approver has forfeited his pardon—K. E. v. Po Ket, 10 Bur L T 46, 8 L.B.R. 447, 17 Cr.L.J. 337.

Detention in custody:—The Sessions Court is not justified, as soon as the trial has closed of the offence with respect to which pardon has been tendered to an approver, in sending the approver in custody to the Magistrate with a view to taking action against him for breach of the conditions of pardon. The approver is entitled to be discharged as soon as the trial closes, and action can be taken against him only by way of re-arrest—Emp v. Kothia, 30 Bom 611; K. E. v. Po Ket, 10 Bur L.T. 46, 17 Cr.L.J. 337. It is improper to keep the accused in further custody after the termination of the original trial—Local Govt. v. Mulla, 11 N L.R. 59, 16 Cr.L.J. 417; Emp. v. Abani Bhushan, 37 Cal. 845.

963. Plea of pardon:—See the proviso The approver is entitled to plead, both before the committing Magistrate and before the Sessions Judge, in bar to his trial, that he had fulfilled the conditions on which pardon was tendered to him—Emp v. Kothia, 30 Bom. 611; Gangua, 37 All 331; Chanan v. Crown, 1 Lah. 218, 21 Cr.L.J. 518; K E v Po Ket, 10 Bur L.T. 46, 17 Cr.L.J. 337. The plea should be taken at the commencement of the proceedings before the Magistrate, and it would then be necessary for the Magistrate to consider whether the pardon has been forfeited—Sashi v. K. E., 42 Cal. 856. But the approver is entitled to plead the bar of pardon before the Sessions Judge although he had not done so before the committing Magistrate—Gangua v. Emp, 37 All 331, Sashi v. K. E., 42 Cal. 856. Even though the committing Magistrate has decided against the approver, it is open to him to plead his pardon again at the trial before the Sessions Judge—

Sashi, 42 Cal 856; Khial v Emp, 39 All. 305; K E v. Po Ket, 8 L B R 447, 17 Cr.L.J 337.

Before an approver can be put on his trial on account of forfeiture of pardon, he must be given an opportunity of meeting with the allegation of the prosecution that he has failed to make a full and true disclosure of the facts within his knowledge, as required by sec. 337. The mere expression of opinion by the Sessions Court that the person has not complied with the conditions of the pardon is not sufficient—Emp v Mariama, 1889 P.R. 6, To Gale v K. E, 7 L.B.R. 1, 14 Cr.L.J. 401. The proper course is to draw up an order setting forth specifically the alleged breach of the condition of pardon, and to call upon the approver to shew cause on a future date why he should not be tried for the offence in respect of which pardon was tendered. On the date fixed for the hearing, unless the approver admits the alleged breach of the condition, the Magistrate or Judge should hear the evidence relied upon as establishing the breach and any rebutting evidence which the approver may offer, and should then record a definite finding as to whether there was a breach or not. A definite finding arrived at in this manner is essential before the approver can be placed on his trial for the original offence—To Gale v. K E., 7 L.B.R. 1, 14 Cr L J 401. See the new Section 339A.

The onus is on the prosecution to prove that the approver has forfeited his pardon—Sashi v. K E, 42 Cal. 856; K. E. v. Bala, 25 Bom 675. Emp. v Kothia, 30 Bom. 611, Kullen v. Emp., 32 Mad. 173, Khial v Emp, 39 All 305. See the proviso 963A. Sub-section (2).—This sub-section lays down that the statement (i.e. the disclosure made by the approver upon which the pardon was granted) is admissible in evidence against him. This statement is not excluded from evidence by the provisions of sec. 24, Evidence Act. In fact, this clause is an exception to the rule of evidence enacted in sec. 24, Evidence Act so far as that section excludes a confession made as the result of inducement or promise; because an approver's disclosure is in its very nature always the result of an inducement or promise, viz. the inducement to confess upon a promise of pardon. But a disclosure extorted by threat or violence or pressure would be ruled out of evidence—Ram Nath v. Emp., 29 P L R 165, 29 Cr.L.J, 413 (415), following Sultan Khan v Emp, 5 A L.J. 1, 8 Cr.L.J 445 (451).

—When a par-
the condition
trial, proper sanction is necessary for the prosecution on each branch of the alternative charge—Q. E. v Dala, 10 Bom. 190. Want of sanction is not a mere irregularity but is an illegality which vitiates the proceedings—Sharina v. Emp., 1884 P.R. 42; Q. E. v Nala, 27 Cal. 137.

Sanction to prosecute should not be given merely on the ground that the approver contradicted himself before the committing Magistrate. A witness who is in any way induced to make a false statement in connection with a capital charge should be allowed every possible locus penitentiae—K. E. v. Bodha, 11 A.L.J. 964, 15 Cr.L.J. 70. But the granting of locus penitentiae is a matter for judicial discretion, according to the circumstances of each particular case—Dukhu 27 A.L.J. 227, 30 Cr.L.J. 1157 (1158).

It is not necessary that an approver should be punished for perjury if he can be punished sufficiently for that and the original crime, on a conviction for that original crime. Sanction, therefore, ought to be refused, unless it appears that a conviction for the original crime is unlikely or a prosecution for it is undesirable for any other reason, or that on a conviction for the original crime the sentence that could be passed would be too light to cover both offences. Before sanction can be granted, therefore, it must be shown that there is no intention of prosecuting the approver for the original crime, or that he has already been prosecuted for it and has either been acquitted or has received or is likely to receive such a light sentence that it is not sufficient to cover his further crime of perjury—Local Govt. v Gambhir, 23 N.L.R. 35, 28 Cr.L.J. 645 (646).

An approver was granted conditional pardon under sec 337, and then instead of being examined under sub-section (2) of sec 337, he was sent by the D.S.P. to the committing Magistrate to have his statement recorded. The Magistrate recorded his statement on oath in a miscellaneous proceeding, and the approver then made a statement implicating himself and others in a dacoity. He was then examined as a witness in the committal proceedings, and there he denied all knowledge of the dacoity. The District Magistrate thereupon applied to the High Court for sanction to prosecute him for perjury. Held that the preliminary examination on oath was an unjustifiable and unnecessary procedure not authorised by law and it cannot provide the material for a prosecution for perjury, in case the approver should subsequently renege from his statement. No sanction can be granted on such material. The proper course would have been to proceed with the trial of the approver for dacoity after obtaining the certificate of the Public Prosecutor—K. E. v. Nga Bo Gye, 3 Rang 224, 26 Cr.L.J. 1396, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 286.

The sanction must be given by the High Court. The object is that the propriety of the prosecution of the approver should be considered and determined independently; such an independent consideration cannot be expected from the Sessions Judge—Sharina v Emp., 1884 P.R. 42.

An application to the High Court for sanction for prosecution of approver should be made by motion in open Court and not by a letter reference—Q. E v Manik Chandra, 24 Cal. 492; In re Madiga Nallavadu, 32 Mad. 47, Crown v. Bulaka, 1904 P R. 10, 1 Cr L J. 793; Crown v. Raja, 1912 P L R. 175, 13 Cr. L. J. 451. An action can be taken by the High Court under this subsection against an approver in respect of a statement made by him which is prima facie false, even though the approver has not been examined as a witness in the case in connection with which he made his statement—Emp. v. Raja, 1913 P L R 227, 14 Cr L J 64.

339A. (1) The Court trying under section 339 a person who has accepted a tender of pardon shall—

(a) if the Court is a High Court or Court of Session, before the charge is read out and explained to the accused under section 271, sub-section (1), and
 (b) if the Court is the Court of a Magistrate, before the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution is taken, ask the accused whether he pleads that he has complied with the conditions on which the tender of the pardon was made.

(2) If the accused does so plead, the Court shall record the plea and proceed with the trial, and the jury, or the Court with the aid of the assessors, or the Magistrate, as the case may be, shall, before judgment is passed in the case, find whether or not the accused has complied with the conditions of the pardon, and if it is found that he has so complied, the Court shall, notwithstanding anything contained in this Code, pass judgment of acquittal.

965. This section has been newly added by sec 88 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

"We consider that it is desirable to lay down some procedure with regard to the plea contemplated by the proviso to sub-section (1) of section 339. The Bill contains no indication as to when this plea is to be raised and what is to be the effect of it, and difficulties of procedure may obviously arise with reference to sections 225, 271 (2) and 272. We, therefore, propose a new section to be added after section 339, which lays down that when a person to whom a pardon is tendered is being tried under that section, he shall, at the commencement of the proceedings, be asked whether he raises the plea that he has complied with the conditions on which the pardon was granted, and, if he does so plead, the Court shall record a finding on the point and, if it finds that the conditions have been complied with, shall acquit the accused."—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

When the approver is put on his trial, it is the duty of the trying Court to decide first of all, whether the approver has forfeited his pardon, before his original offence can be tried—Emp v. Kothia, 30 Bom 611, Kullan v. Emp, 32 Mad 173, Sashi v K E, 42 Cal 856; Kannar v. Emp, 1902 P R. 34; Local Govt. v. Mullu, 11 N L R 59, 16 Cr L J. 417; To Gale v K E, 7 L B R. 1, 14 Cr L J 401. K E v Po Ket, 10 Bur. L T 46, 17 Cr L J. 337.

It is duty of the Sessions Judge to ask the approver whether he pleads that he has complied with the conditions of the pardon. Where the committing Magistrate asked him whether he pleaded that he had complied with the conditions on which the tender of pardon had been made, but this question was not repeated in the Sessions Court, and no plea was recorded, held that there was a contravention of the imperative provisions of this section, and the trial of the approver must be set aside and a retrial held—Itwari v Emp, 6 O W N 372, 30 Cr L J 559.

If the approver pleads that he has complied with the conditions of pardon, the Court should come to a clear finding as to whether the accused has or has not complied with the conditions of the pardon, and this finding should be recorded, before he can be properly tried and convicted—Itwari v. Emp, supra, Emp. v. Jagannath, 3 O W N. 474, 27 Cr L J. 789. The approver should be asked not simply whether he has complied with the conditions on which the pardon was granted, but he should be asked whether he pleads that he has complied with the conditions on which the tender of pardon was made, and the record should show that he was so asked. The terms of this section should be clearly explained to him, and it should be made clear to him that he can plead the pardon as a bar to his trial—Ali v. Crown, 5 Lah 379 (381), 26 Cr L J 237.

The question as to whether the approver has forfeited his pardon should be left to the jury and should not be decided by the Judge himself. Where the Judge decided the question himself and convicted the accused, the conviction was set aside as illegal—In re Alagirisami 33 Mad 514.

340. Every person ac-

Right of accused to be defended.
Every person accused before any Criminal Court may of right be defended by a pleader.

340. (1) Any person accused of an offence before a Criminal Court, or against whom proceedings are institute under this Code in any s

Right of person against whom proceedings are instituted to be defended, and his competency to be a witness.

Court, may of right be defended by a pleader.

(2) Any person against whom proceedings are instituted in any such Court under section 107, or under Chapter X, Chapter XI, Chapter XII or Chapter XXXVI or under section 552, may offer himself as a witness in such proceedings.

Change :—This section has been re-drafted by sec. 89 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

"The expression person accused in section 340 may be read as referring only to persons accused of any offence, it is proposed to make it clear that any person against whom proceedings are instituted under this Code is entitled to be defended by a pleader. It is also laid down that persons against whom proceedings under Chapters X, XI, XII, XXXVI, or under Section 552 of the Code are pending do not labour under the ordinary disability of an accused person to be sworn, and that they may be examined as witnesses in such proceedings."—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

966. Scope :—It has been laid down in some cases that persons against whom proceedings are instituted under Chapters VIII and X are in the position of 'accused' persons within the meaning of this section and are entitled to be defended by a pleader—Jhoja Singh v Q. E., 23 Cal 493, Crown v Ida, 1900 P.R. 15, Emp v Girand, 25 All 375, Abinash v Emp, 4 C.W.N. 797; Nakhi Lal v Q. E., 27 Cal 656 (658). The Legislature has now added the words "person against whom proceedings are instituted" which would expressly include persons proceeded against under Chapters VIII and X, and it will no longer be necessary to enter into the much vexed question as to whether such persons are in the position of accused persons. Under the amended section, a person against whom proceedings have been instituted under sec 110 is entitled as a matter of right to have a reasonable opportunity afforded him of defending himself—Jatoi v Emp, 20 S.L.R. 122, 27 Cr.L.J. 935.

Where an inquiry under sec. 476 is started against any person, the Court should hear the pleader appearing on behalf of such person—Ram Nihore v K. E., 8 A.L.J. 237, 10 I.C. 740, 12 Cr.L.J. 231.

But a person against whom no process has been issued is neither an 'accused' person nor a 'person against whom any proceedings have been instituted', such a person has no right to attend, much less to be represented by a pleader, during a preliminary inquiry held under section 202 before issue of process. If he chooses to attend, he may do so like any other member of the public; but he has no locus standi as a party—Shaikh Chand v. Mahomed Hanif, 4 N.L.R. 81, 8 Cr.L.J. 20, Golap Jan v. Bholanath 38 Cal. 880.

Sec 340 gives the accused person a right to be defended by a pleader, and this right begins from the moment that "any person is accused of an offence before a Criminal Court or proceedings are instituted under this Code in any such Court." An application by the Police for remand under sec. 167 can be held to be a "proceeding" instituted under this Code in a Criminal Court. He is an accused, and appears as such before the Magistrate. Therefore, at least from the moment after the 24 hours of arrest that he appears before the Court, this right begins. His legal advisers can appear, oppose the remand, offer bail, or make any other legal application on his behalf—In re Llewellyn Evans, 50 Bom 741, 28 Bom. L.R. 1043, 27 Cr L J 1169

967. Right of accused to be defended by pleader :

The accused has a right to choose his own pleader, and the Court is not entitled to tell him to appoint another pleader, because the pleader already engaged does not know how to behave in Court—In re James Fitzgerald Ratanlal 861. The Court has no power to forbid a duly qualified pleader to appear for the accused—Reg v Dajee, Ratanlal 25. The accused has a right that the pleader engaged by him must be heard. It is not a question of indulgence but of right. It is an elementary principle of law that no order ought to be made to a man's prejudice without hearing him, and his counsel must be heard before a final opinion is formed by the Court. The Court has no discretion to refuse to hear the counsel—Emp v Iboo, 1 Cr L J 760, 6 Bom. L.R. 665. If the Court refuses to hear the pleader for the accused, it is not a mere irregularity but an illegality vitiating the trial, so that the conviction must set aside and a retrial held—In re Muthukaruppa, 55 M.L.J. 626, 29 Cr L J 1082. The Court cannot ask the pleader to sit down in the middle of the cross-examination, though it has power to disallow improper questions put by him—Reg. v Dajee, Ratanlal 25. It is the duty of the Magistrate to afford the accused and his friends every opportunity of making his defence and he should not personally interpose in any way between them. It is therefore improper for a Magistrate to refuse to allow the pleader engaged by the wife of an accused for his defence to have an interview with him or to appear and sit in Court—Q E v Uksudev, 1 Bom L.R. 856. An accused should be given a reasonable opportunity of defending himself. When after the commencement of the trial, an application is made asking time to engage a pleader, the reasonable course for the Magistrate to adopt would be to proceed with the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses and then to allow a reasonable time to the accused to appoint a pleader—Pila v K E, 47 All 147, 26 Cr L.J. 575. If the accused's pleader is not heard, the conviction will be set aside—In re Munirama, 5 M.L.T. 290, 9 Cr.L.J. 305.

But a pleader not otherwise authorised to practise in a Court (e.g. a second grade Advocate) has no right to be heard by the Court. But the Magistrate has a discretion to permit him to appear for an accused person. This permission should be given sparingly and only in those cases in which the Magistrate considers that it is for the interests of the accused that it should be given—In re W Calogredy, 10 Bur.L.T. 117, 18 Cr L J 345.

Pleader appointed by Court:—The position of a pleader appointed by the Court to defend a prisoner is not the same as that of a pleader whom the accused has authorised to act for him. Any admission made by the former are not binding on the accused—Q. E. v. Sangaya, 2 Bom L.R. 751 (cited under sec. 271)

Private Pleader.—Under sec. 4 (r), an accused person cannot claim as of right to be represented by a private person, but he may be represented by such person with the permission of the Court. But in permitting or disallowing the appearance of private persons as pleaders, a Magistrate should exercise a discretion in each case—Anonymous, 2 Weir 400, and a general order that no person will be allowed to practise as a private pleader is illegal—Krishnamachariar, 12 M.L.J. 354, 2 Weir 401; In re Nagasami, 31 M.L.T. 458, 1922 M.W.N. 809. An order excluding any particular individual in any particular case would be within the discretion of the Magistrate and therefore legal—Krishnamachariar (supra).

968. Mukhtars.—Under the Code of 1872 the accused had a right to appear and be heard by a Mukhtar—Imp. v. Shivram, 6 Bom. 14. But under sec. 4 (r) of the Code of 1898 (before it was amended in 1923), a Mukhtar could appear only with the permission of the Court—In re Anant Ram, 30 All. 66. But still it was held to be improper for a Magistrate to shut up the defence of the accused merely because he was represented by a Mukhtar, and a general order prohibiting Mukhtars to appear in Sessions Courts was held to be illegal—Ishan Chandra v. Emp., 38 Cal. 488. "Magistrates should not, by the indiscriminate exclusion of person who are invested by law a distinct professional status in criminal trials, deprive parties of legal aid which they can frequently obtain at a moderate cost"—Cal. G. R. & Co. O., p. 29, Ishan Chandra v. Emp., 38 Cal. 488

Under section 4, clause (r) as now amended by Act XXXV of 1923, Mukhtars have now been placed on the same footing as pleaders, and are entitled as of right to appear in all criminal Courts without requiring any special permission

969. Sub-section (2):—A person against whom proceedings are instituted under sec. 488 may give evidence on his own behalf, as such person is not an 'accused' person and the proceedings are not criminal proceedings—Nur Mahomed v. Bismella, 16 Cal. 781, Bachai v. Jamuna, 25 Cr.L.J. 1091 (Cal.). A person against whom proceedings are started under Chapter X may be examined on oath as a witness—Hirananda v. Emp., 9 C.W.N. 983

341. If the accused, though not insane, cannot be made to understand the proceedings, the Court may proceed with the inquiry or trial; and, in the case of a Court other than a High Court, if such inquiry results in a commitment or if such trial results in a conviction, the proceedings shall be forwarded to the High Court with a report of the circumstances of the case, and the High Court shall pass thereon such order as it thinks fit.

970. Scope of section.—This section is intended to provide for cases where the accused is unable to understand the proceedings through deafness, or dumbness, or through ignorance of the language of the country and the want of an interpreter. In such cases the High Court will order the detention of the prisoner during His Majesty's pleasure—Emp v. Husen 5 Bom 262, Q E v Hussein, Ratanlal 151

This section is inapplicable where the inability to understand the proceedings arises from unsoundness of mind. In such cases the procedure prescribed by Chapter XXXIV should be followed—Emp v Husen 5 Bom. 262, Q E v Kasima, Ratanlal 832. But if after inquiry under that Chapter, it appears that the prisoner is not a lunatic, the Magistrate should proceed under this section—In re Adala 11 M L T 24, 13 Cr L J 24

A reference can be made under this section if the accused cannot be made to understand the proceedings. If, however, the deaf mute is intelligent and able to understand the proceedings, e g by means of signs, the provisions of this section do not apply and the case should be dealt with as in the ordinary way—Emp v. Gunga, 28 Cr L J 656 (Lah.); Alla Dia, 10 Lah 566, 29 Cr.L.J. 1104, Dubi Halwai, 19 W.R. 37; K. E v. Dada Mahadu, 3 Bom L.R. 371, K. E v. Nga San, 4 Bur. L.T. 150, 11 I.C. 250, 12 Cr L J 386. In modern practice, want of speech and hearing does not imply want of capacity either in the understanding or in memory, but only a difficulty in the means of communicating knowledge. The law in India certainly does not expressly provide for a sane deaf mute being exempted from punishment. If his mind is sound his inability to hear and speak will not excuse him—K. E v Nga San, supra. If it be shown that the deaf and dumb person had sufficient intelligence to understand the character of his criminal act, he is liable to punishment—Deaf and Dumb Accused 40 Bom 598, 18 Cr L J. 143. Russell on Crimes, Vol 1, p 62

971. Duty of Magistrate—Where the accused is deaf and dumb, some means of communication with him should be adopted. The Magistrate should try and get into communication with him with the assistance of his relations, the Magistrate should make enquiry as to whether he has any friends or relatives who are accustomed to communicate with him and the manner in which he is communicated with in the ordinary affairs of his life—Deaf and Dumb Man, 8 Bom L R 849, 4 Cr.L J 444, K E v Nga San, 4 Bur L.T. 150, 12 Cr L J 386, Q E. v. Samuel, Ratanlal 696, Anonymous, 2 Weir 402. Where the Magistrate omitted to attempt to communicate with the deaf-and-dumb accused, the conviction was set aside as the accused was certainly prejudiced by such omission—Anonymous, 2 Weir 403

In making a reference under this section the Magistrate should state his view of the conduct of the accused and must take some evidence regarding the previous history and habits of the accused—Q. E v Samuel, Ratanlal 696 The Magistrate should, when making a reference, record a finding as to whether the accused is capable of realising the criminal character of the act done by him, or can understand the purpose or nature of the judicial proceedings that have been taken against him—Emp v. Gunga, 30 P.L.R. 597, 30 Cr.L.J. 948

Magistrate cannot pass sentence.—The Magistrate can convict the accused, and upon conviction can refer the case to the High Court, but cannot pass sentence—Anonymous, 2 Weir 403, Emp v Gahna, 1889 P.R. 37 If the Magistrate passes sentence upon the accused, the High Court will set aside the sentence and pass such order as it thinks proper—Emp v Gahna, 1889 P.R. 37.

Summary Trial.—Where the accused is a deaf-mute, it is highly inconvenient to conduct the trial summarily even though the offence is summarily triable—Deaf and Dumb Man, 8 Bom.L.R. 849, 4 Cr.L.J. 444

972. Reference to High Court.—Reference can be made under this section to the High Court, if the inquiry or trial results in a committal or conviction—Q. E v Trikam, Ratanlal 180 The Judge should proceed to the end of the trial and then refer the case if a conviction follows—Anonymous, 2 Weir 403, and should not refer the case in the midst of the trial before any conviction or committal takes place—Deaf and Dumb Man, 4 Bom.L.R. 825 Where, during the course of a trial, it appeared that the accused was a deaf and dumb person, and the Magistrate therefore referred the case to the High Court, expressing his opinion that the prisoner was guilty, it was held that the Magistrate ought to have proceeded to the end of the trial by convicting the accused, and the mere expression of opinion that the accused was guilty did not amount to a conviction. The High Court returned the case to the Magistrate and directed him to proceed with the trial, and if the same resulted in a conviction, to forward the proceedings again to the High Court—In re Dumb Man, Ratanlal 879, In re Dumb Man, Ratanlal 836

Orders which High Court may pass.—The High Court may treat the proceedings before the Lower Court as amounting to a sufficient trial and pass sentence upon the accused according to the facts established in the case—Q. v Bowka, 22 W.R. 35; or may give him a further opportunity of being heard in the matter of the charge—Q. v. Bowka, 22 W.R. 35, Q. v. Bowka, 22 W.R. 72, or may direct a re-trial if the Magistrate's trial was defective—Deaf and Dumb Man, 8 Bom.L.R. 849, 4 Cr.L.J. 444, or may, upon a consideration of the tender age of the accused, direct him to be made over to his father to be looked after by him—Q. v. Ganga, 7 N.W.P. 131; or may, in a proper case, discharge the accused with an admonition—Q. v. Bowka, 22 W.R. 35, K. E. v Monya, 4 Bom.L.R. 296

The High Court may, if it is of opinion that the accused was by reason of unsoundness of mind incapable of knowing that what he did was contrary to law, and that no benefit will be likely to result to the accused by his being tried by the Court of Session, direct him to be kept in jail pending the order of the Local Government—Q. E. v. Somir, 27 Cal. 368. In two Punjab cases it has been held that if a deaf and dumb person who is unable to understand the proceedings of the trial, is found guilty, the proper course to be taken is to treat him as a lunatic and to report the case under sec. 471 for the orders of the Local Government—Emp. v. Gahna, 1889 P.R. 37, followed in Crown v. Dost Muhammad, 1911 P.R. 13, 12 Cr L J. 613, 12 I C 989.

In serious cases, it is the practice of the High Court to refer the matter to the Local Government. In the case of a minor offence the High Court itself can pass an appropriate sentence or discharge the accused—Emp. v. Rahman, 1 Lah. 260, 21 Cr L J 621. Where a deaf and dumb accused was found guilty of attempt to commit suicide, and at the trial he made certain signs indicating his guilt, the High Court affirmed his conviction and sentenced the accused to one day's simple imprisonment—Emp. v. Khashaba, 25 Bom LR 43, A I R 1923 Bom. 194.

342. (1) For the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, the Court may, at any stage of any inquiry or trial, without previously warning the accused, put such questions to him as the Court considers necessary, and shall, for the purpose aforesaid, question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence.

(2) The accused shall not render himself liable to punishment by refusing to answer such questions, or by giving false answers to them; but the Court and the jury (if any) may draw such inference from such refusal or answers as it thinks just.

(3) The answers given by the accused may be taken into consideration in such inquiry or trial, and put in evidence for or against him in any other inquiry into, or trial for, any other offence which such answers may tend to show he has committed.

(4) No oath shall be administered to the accused.

This section makes a departure from the English law, under which it is not permissible for the Court to ask the accused any questions except Questions incidental to the conduct of the trial, e.g. whether the accused wishes to cross-examine a witness or to give evidence, etc. It is a principle of English law that the whole burden of proving the offence is on the prosecution, the accused can stand by and do nothing; and he is protected from all judicial questioning at the trial. Indian law, however, allows the Court to put questions to the accused, and the answers thereto may be "taken into consideration," whatever that phrase may mean. It was for this reason that Sir James FitzJames Stephen characterised this section as embarrassing, illogical and hypocritical.

973. Scope —There is a conflict of opinion as to whether this section applies to trials of summons cases. According to the Bombay, Calcutta, Allahabad, Patna and Lahore High Courts, and the Sind and Nagpur J C Courts, the Magistrate is bound in a summons case to examine the accused under this section—Emp v Fernandez, 45 Bom 672, 22 Bom.L.R. 1040, 22 Cr.L.J. 17, Emp v Gulabjan, 46 Bom 411 (445), 23 Bom.L.R. 1203, 23 Cr.L.J. 45, Bechu Lal v Emp, 54 Cal 286, 28 Cr.L.J. 297, Gulzari v. Emp, 49 Cal 1075; Khacho Mal v. Emp, 27 Cr.L.J. 405 (All), Gulam Rasul v K E, 6 P.L.J. 174, 2 P.L.T. 390, 22 Cr.L.J. 427, Raghu v. Emp, 1 P.L.T. 241, 21 Cr.L.J. 705, Parameswar v. Emp, 3 P.L.T. 347, 23 Cr.L.J. 440, Muhammadi Baksh v. Emp, 4 Lah.L.J. 230, 23 Cr.L.J. 154, Emp v. Nabu, 20 S.L.R. 34, 26 Cr.L.J. 1554, Bhagwan v. Emp, 22 N.L.R. 65, Emp v Paris, 19 S.L.R. 121. But according to the Madras High Court, this section does not apply to trials in summons cases. The use of the expression "before the accused is called on for his defence" in section 342 itself as well as in section 256 relating to trials in warrant cases and in section 289 relating to trials in sessions cases, and the absence of such an expression in the sections relating to trials in summons cases under chapter XX of the Code, show that the provisions of section 342 are not intended to apply to summons cases—Ponnusamy v. Ramasamy, 46 Mad 758 (F.B.), 45 M.L.J. 224, 24 Cr.L.J. 833.

This section applies to summary trials of warrant cases and the accused must be examined in such trials—Mahomed Husain v. Emp., 41 Cal. 743; Parsotim v. K. E., 6 Pat. 504, 28 Cr.L.J. 1037, Balkeshwar v. Emp., 3 P.L.T. 322, 23 Cr.L.J. 114; Parameswar Lal v. Emp, 3 P.L.T. 347, 23 Cr.L.J. 440. According to the Calcutta High Court and the Nagpur and Sind Courts, this section applies to summary trials of summons cases also, and the examination of the accused in such a trial is imperative—Moyzuddin v K. E., 33 C.W.N. 947, Bhagwan v Emp., 22 N.L.R. 65, 27 Cr.L.J. 632; Emp. v. Nabu, 20 S.L.R. 34, 26 Cr.L.J. 1554. See Note 867 under sec 263. But according to the Madras High Court, this section does not apply to summary trials of summons cases, as there is no distinction between a summary trial of summons cases and an ordinary trial of summons cases—Dharma Singh v. K. E., 46 Mad 766 (F.B.).

This section does not apply to an inquiry under section 117, because the person called upon to give security is not in the position of an accused person within the meaning of section 342. Therefore the omission to examine the person called upon to give security is a mere irregularity curable under section 537, and not an illegality vitiating the proceedings—Benode Behari v. Emp., 50 Cal 995. So also, a person proceeded against under sec. 488 is not looked upon as an accused person, and omission to examine him does not vitiate the proceedings. The words "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence" are inappropriate to a proceeding under sec. 488—In re Vithaldas, 52 Bom 769, 29 Cr.L.J. 1051 (1052), Bachal v. Jamuna, 25 Cr.L.J. 1091 (Cal); Mehr Khan, 10 Lah 406, 29 Cr.L.J. 1002 (1003, 1004).

Where an accused is examined by the Court before any evidence for the prosecution has been taken and before the commencement of the preliminary inquiry, his examination cannot be said to be under sec. 342, because at that stage there was no evidence for the prosecution recorded against him and no circumstances which he could be called upon to explain. The statement must be taken to have been recorded under sec. 164—Bahawal v. Crown, 6 Lah 183, 26 P.L.R. 331, 26 Cr.L.J. 1238.

This section applies only to a case of an original trial, and does not apply where additional evidence is taken by the Magistrate under the direction of an Appellate Court under sec. 428. In such a proceeding it is not necessary to examine the accused about the additional evidence. There might be cases where the accused could properly be questioned by the Magistrate in regard to the additional evidence so taken, but the omission to do so is not an illegality—Narayan v. Emp., 52 Bom 699, 30 Bom L.R. 651, 29 Cr.L.J. 972 (973), Mohiuddin v. Emp., 4 Pat. 488, 26 Cr.L.J. 811 (813).

974. Object and mode of examination:—The real object of the examination is to enable a Judge to ascertain from time to time from a prisoner, particularly if he is undefended, what explanation he may desire to offer regarding any fact stated by a witness, or after the close of the case, how he can meet what the Judge may consider to be damning evidence against him—Husein v. Emp., 6 Cal 96, Mazahar Ali v. K. E., 50 Cal 223, 36 C.L.J. 417, Tani v. Emp., 48 I.C. 487, 20 Cr.L.J. 12 (Nag). And in order that the accused may explain all the facts appearing in evidence against him, it is necessary that his attention should be directed to all the vital parts of the evidence against him, specially if he is an ignorant person who cannot be expected to know or understand what particular parts of the evidence are or are likely to be considered by the Court to be against him—Tani v. Emp., supra. The Court should not only point out to the accused the circumstances appearing in the evidence which requires explanation, but it must, out of fairness to the accused, exercise that power in such a way that the accused may know what points in the opinion of the Court require explanation, and failure or refusal on the part of the accused to give the explanation will entitle the Court to draw an inference against him—K. E. v. Alimuddi, 52 Cal 522, 29 C.W.N. 231, 26 Cr.L.J. 631.

done by such a general question as "what have you to say?" or "What is your defence?" The specific point or points which weigh against the accused must be mentioned; for if this is not done, he cannot be reasonably expected to be able to explain those points—Mang Hman v. K. E., 1 Rang 689, K. E. v. Alimuddi, 52 Cal. 522, 41 C.L.J. 101, 26 Cr L.J. 631. The word "generally" does not limit the nature of the questioning to one or more questions of a general nature relating to the case, but it means that the questions should relate to the whole case generally and should not be limited to any particular part or parts of it. The word "generally" does not mean that the accused cannot be subjected to a detailed examination by the Court. The law intends that the salient points appearing in the evidence against the accused must be pointed out to him in a succinct form and that he should be asked to explain them if he wished to do so—K. E. v. Alimuddi, 52 Cal. 522 (per M. N. Mukerjee J., Newbould J. contra). The question must be framed in such a way as to enable the accused to know what he is to explain, what are the circumstances which are against him and for which an explanation is needed. A general question as to whether the accused has anything further to say is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section—Bhokari v. Emp., 5 P.L.T. 445, 25 Cr.L.J. 711, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 791; Udhao v. Emp., 25 Cr.L.J. 417 (Nag); Durga Ram v. Emp., 6 P.L.T. 33, 26 Cr L.J. 716. But another Patna case lays down that where the facts of the case are simple, a general question such as "Have you any statement to make?" may be sufficient—Banamali v. K. E., 6 P.L.T. 39, 26 Cr.L.J. 682.

There is a difference in the wording of the first and the second portions of sub-section (1) of sec. 342, the former being discretionary ('may put questions') and the latter mandatory ('shall question him'). If the Court has put questions to the accused under the first part of sub-section (1), it would be a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the second portion if the Court gives to the accused an opportunity, by putting to him one general question (e.g., "Have you got to say anything else?"), to explain the circumstances appearing in the case against him, and in this connection the examination of the accused under the first portion of this sub-section may be usefully looked into—Md Nasiruddin v. Emp., 4 Pat 459, 6 P.L.T. 588, 26 Cr L.J. 954.

The examination of the accused under this section is intended to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing against him and not to elicit answers calculated to supplement the case for the prosecution and to show that he is guilty—Q. E. v. Rangil, 10 Mad 295 (315); Bhola Nath, 51 All 313, 30 Cr.L.J. 101 (105). The object of the examination is not to make the accused confess his guilt or assist the prosecution by admitting facts which may go to criminate him—Q. E. v. Bhairab, 2 C.W.N. 702, Tufani v. K. E., 15 C.L.J. 323, 13 Cr.L.J. 283; Q. E. v. Veeran, 9 Mad. 224. The Court cannot put questions to the accused as to what took place on the occasion, in order to convict him out of his own mouth—Q. E. v. Kamandu, 10 Mad. 121 (123). Nor is it competent for the Court to examine the accused for the purpose of filling up gaps in the evidence for the prosecution—Mohideen Abdul Qadir v. Emp., 27 Mad. 238 (240); Jeremiah v. Vas., 36 Mad. 457; Mohan Singh, 42 All. 522, Devi Dayal v. Crown, 4 Lah. 55; Annavi v. Emp., 39 Mad. 449; Basanta Kumar v. Q. E., 26 Cal. 49, Yasin v. K. E., 28 Cal. 689; Gaung Gyi v. K. E., 4 L.B.R. 214, 8 Cr.L.J. 62, Mahadeo v. Emp., 22 N.L.R. 1, 27 Cr.L.J. 66. Thus, where in a charge of defamation the prosecution is unable to prove that the accused made and published the defamatory matter, it is illegal for the Magistrate to examine the accused for the purpose of supplying this defect in the prosecution evidence—Mohideen v. Emp., 27 Mad. 238; Devi Dayal v. Crown, 4 Lah. 55, 24 Cr.L.J. 693. So also, it is improper to put questions to the accused for the purpose of proving his identity, when such identity was not established by the prosecution evidence—Abbas Ali v. K. E., 3 L.B.R. 208. The object of the examination is to enable the accused to explain the evidence standing against him; but where the prosecution has not let in evidence implicating the accused in the offence with which he is charged, the Magistrate is not entitled to put questions to him under this section, and the answers to such questions are inadmissible in evidence against him—Re Abibulla Ravuthan 39 Mad. 770, Devi Dayal v. Crown, 4 Lah. 55, 24 Cr.L.J. 693, Q. E. v. Vceran 9 Mad. 224.

When a Magistrate is examining a prisoner, he should refrain from assuming that the prisoner is guilty of the crime with which he is charged. The proper mode is to tell the prisoner that he is charged with a certain offence and to ask him if he has any explanation to give of the charge, and whether he wishes to make any statement—Murthi, 2 Weir 438.

In permitting the Court to examine the accused person from time to time, the law does not contemplate that the examination of an accused person is to be conducted in the manner of cross-examination of an adverse witness by a counsel—Hussein v. Emp., 6 Cal. 96, Emp. v. Alimuddi, 52 Cal. 522 (per Newbould J.), Niru Bhagal v. K. E., 1 Pat. 630, 24 Cr.L.J. 91, Faqir Singh v. Emp., 10 Lah. 223, 29 Cr.L.J. 769 (770), Umar Din v. Emp., 2 Lah. 129, 23 Cr.L.J. 388; Panchu v. Emp., 3 P.L.T. 649, 23 Cr.L.J. 233, Emp. v. Yakub, 5 All. 253; Hurry Churn v. Emp., 10 Cal. 140; Mahadeo v. Emp., 22 N.L.R. 1, 27 Cr.L.J. 66. The Judge or Magistrate is not to establish a Court of Inquisition, and to force a prisoner to convict himself by making some incriminating admissions after a series of searching questions, the exact effect of which he may not comprehend—Hussein v. Emp., 6 Cal. 96, Umar v. Emp., 2 Lah. 129, 23 Cr.L.J. 388, Mohiuddin v. Emp., 4 Pat. 488, 6 P.L.T. 154, 26 Cr.L.J. 811 (814). It is not necessary, nor is it desirable, to examine the accused in great detail or to force him to disclose his defence so as to enable the prosecution to take advantage of it when the witnesses for the accused are examined—Md. Nasiruddin v. Emp., 4 Pat. 459, 6 P.L.T. 588. It is highly improper to subject the accused to a very embarrassing and cruel series of questions intended rather to puzzle the accused than to elucidate the case or to enable him to furnish an explanation as to the circumstances appearing in evidence against him—Emp. v. Anant, 6 Bom. L.R. 94, 1 Cr.L.J. 105. Where an accused is undefended, the Magistrate should simply point out to him the elements of the evidence adduced against him, which seems in his own interest to demand his explanation; where the accused is defended by a lawyer, the tribunal should not enter upon a lengthy examination of the accused person, which might easily develop into a recounting of the history of the whole case or into what would be far worse, some sort of cross-examination—Panchu v. Emp., 3 P.L.T. 649, 23 Cr.L.J. 233. But the mere fact that a large number of questions (viz., 55) were asked does not make the examination inquisitorial, where it appeared that the questions were asked not to elicit statements from the accused for the purpose of supplementing the case for the prosecution, but the object of the greater part of the questions was to ascertain whether the accused (who attempted no defence) admitted the facts stated by the witnesses or wished to offer any explanation, and the examination was not made in the nature of cross-examination—Khudiram v. Emp., 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625.

It is a sufficient compliance with this section if the Court asks the accused generally whether he wishes to offer an explanation of any of the evidence which has been given against him. And although this section also gives the Court power to put specific questions to the accused with regard to any of the evidence adduced for the prosecution, still it is entirely in the discretion of the Judge whether he should, after having put the general question, ask such specific questions on particular points in the evidence—Emp. v. Narayana, 26 Bom L.R. 109, 25 Cr.L.J. 1127.

If there are several accused, the Magistrate must examine each accused separately if he records the statements of all the accused collectively, the trial is vitiated and must be set aside—Ghasiti v. K. E., 6 Lah. 554, 27 Cr.L.J. 403. Where the Magistrate recorded the statements of the several accused separately before the charge, but after the close of the prosecution evidence questioned the accused jointly, and recorded a joint statement, the procedure was illegal—Girdhari v. Emp., 29 P.L.R. 436, 29 Cr.L.J. 469.

When, of two accused persons tried together one has made a statement on a particular point in the case against them, it is not improper for the Magistrate to take another statement from the co-accused under this section—Satya Narayan, 55 Cal. 858, 32 C.W.N. 319 (323), 29 Cr.L.J. 1022.

Under this section it is the accused himself who should be asked as to whether he would make any statement. Where at the close of the prosecution case the pleader of the accused persons (and not the accused themselves) was asked if they wished to make any statement, and the pleader stated that they would not do so, held that this was not a compliance with sec. 342, since one of the essential points for which this section provides is that the accused themselves should have an opportunity of making their statements directly to the Court and not through the intervention of a pleader—Messer Bepari v. K. E., 29 C.W.N. 939, 26 Cr.L.J. 1332.

975. Examination imperative—The first portion of this section as to putting questions to the accused is an enabling provision, but the second portion as to the examination of the accused is imperative. The word 'shall' shows that the provisions of the latter part of this section as to the examination of the accused after the close of the prosecution evidence are mandatory and not discretionary only—Rameshar v. Emp., 6 P.L.T. 493, 26 Cr L.J. 927; Emp. v. Savalya, 9 Bom. L.R. 356; Varisal v. K. E., 46 Mad. 449 (455) (F.B.), Emp. v. Harishchandra, 10 Bom. L.R. 201, Ah Foong v. K. E., 22 C.W.N. 834, 20 Cr L.J. 21, Gulla v. Crown, 1918 P.R. 1, Raghu v. K. E. 5 P.L.J. 430, 21 Cr L.J. 705, Suraj Pandey v. K. E. 1 P.L.T. 641, 21 Cr L.J. 793, Tani v. Emp. 20 Cr.L.J. 12 (Nag.). The Sessions Judge is bound to examine the accused even though he has been examined before the committing Magistrate—Nainamalai, 14 L.W. 418, 23 Cr L.J. 697, Emp. v. Raja, 9 Bom. L.R. 730; Emp. v. Nga Po, 4 Rang. 361, 27 Cr L.J. 1364, Emp. v. Mid Shaft, 26 Cr L.J. 1576 (Oudh). Omission to examine the accused is not merely an error in form but goes deeper into the case and vitiates the whole trial—Emp. v. Basappa 17 Bom. L.R. 692, 16 Cr L.J. 765, Gulabjan, 46 Bom. 441 (444); Fernandez v. Emp. 45 Bom. 672, Gangadhar v. Reid, 25 C.W.N. 609, 23 Cr L.J. 41, Haro Nath v. Ala Bux, 28 C.W.N. 119, Ramnath v. Emp. 2 P.L.T. 549, 22 Cr L.J. 460, Fatu Santal v. K. E. 6 P.L.J. 147, 22 Cr L.J. 417, Parameshwar v. Emp. 3 P.L.T. 317, 23 Cr L.J. 440; Baij Nath v. K. E. 4 P.L.T. 231, 24 Cr L.J. 311, Rameshar v. K. E. 6 P.L.T. 493, 26 Cr L.J. 927, Varisal Rowther v. K. E. 46 Mad. 449 (456) (F.B.), Pramatha v. Emp. 50 Cal. 518, Mazahar v. K. E. 50 Cal. 223, Legal Remembrancer v. Satish Chandra, 51 Cal. 924 (929), Emp. v. Gamadia, 27 Bom.L.R. 1405, 50 Bom. 34. The defect is not cured by sec. 537, that is, the non-compliance vitiates the trial even though the accused has not been prejudiced thereby—Pramatha Nath v. Emp. 50 Cal. 518, Mozahar v. K. E., 50 Cal. 223, Ram Charan v. Emp., 7 P.L.T. 259, 26 Cr L.J. 1289, Ghulla v. Crown, 1918 P.R. 1, Mid Baksh v. Crown, 4 Lah. L.J. 230, Raghu v. K. E., 5 P.L.J. 430, 21 Cr L.J. 705, Suraj Pandey v. K. E., 1 P.L.T. 641, 21 Cr L.J. 793, Durga Ram v. Emp. 6 P.L.T. 33, 26 Cr.L.J. 716, K. E. v. Nga Po, 11 Bur. L.T. 134, 18 Cr L.J. 944. The illegality cannot be waived even by the consent of the accused or their pleaders—Emp. v. Gamadia, 27 Bom. L.R. 1405, 50 Bom. 34, 27 Cr L.J. 165 (166).

Failure to comply with the mandatory provisions of this section vitiates the whole trial, and the accused is to be retried—Sailendra v. Emp. 38 C.L.J. 175, Gangadhar v. Bhangi, 25 Cr L.J. 1152 (Nag.); Emp. v. Sheopal, 1 O.W.N. 833, 26 Cr L.J. 655, and the retrial should take place from the stage at which the trying Magistrate omitted to examine the accused—Gamadia 50 Bom. 34, 27 Cr L.J. 165 (169), Motankhan, 21 S.L.R. 331, 28 Cr L.J. 417 (418). But where there are many serious defects in the prosecution case, and the chance of conviction seems to be remote, no useful purpose will be served by sending the case back for retrial—Leg. Rem. v. Satish Chandra, 51 Cal. 924 (927), 39 C.L.J. 411.

It is not a sufficient compliance with this section if the Sessions Judge merely reads over to the accused a statement made by the latter before the committing Magistrate and recorded by that Magistrate under section 364—Fatu Santal v. Emp., 6 P.L.J. 147, 22 Cr.L.J. 417.

But an insufficient examination of the accused person does not necessarily invalidate the trial if the statements made by the accused indicate that they were not altogether ignorant of some of the salient points appearing in the evidence against them, and endeavoured to explain some of the points—K. E. v. Alimuddi, 52 Cal. 522, 29 C.W.N. 231, 26 Cr.L.J. 631

976. When examination may be dispensed with :—(1) The examination of the accused is obligatory only in cases where the accused is called on for his defence. If a Magistrate discharges an accused without framing a charge, the non-examination of the accused does not vitiate the proceeding—Varisat Rowther v. K. E., 46 Mad. 449 (461) (F.B.).

(2) When the accused has left the case entirely in the hands of his legal adviser, the Judge need not ask the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in evidence against him—Gandi Tatarya, 2 Weir 405

(3) Where the accused has been exempted from personal appearance under sec. 205, the Court may also dispense with his examination, and may examine the pleader instead—Crown v. Jamal, 6 S.L.R. 206, 14 Cr.L.J. 272, Maung Po v. Haka Singh, 4 Rang. 508, 28 Cr.L.J. 226

(4) Since the object of the examination is to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, it follows that where the accused has admitted his guilt, and had been examined by the committing Magistrate, it is not necessary for the Sessions Judge to examine the accused again—Khudiram v. Emp., 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625

(5) The examination of the accused may be dispensed with in those cases in which owing to the admission or plea of the accused (sec. 243) or owing to the weakness of the evidence called in support of the prosecution (secs. 245, 253) the accused can either be convicted on his own plea without the taking of evidence or acquitted on the evidence—Emp. v. Nabu, 26 Cr.L.J. 1554, 20 S.L.R. 34

977. Time for examination :—The accused is to be examined after the evidence for the prosecution has been recorded. He cannot be examined before any prosecution evidence has been heard or recorded, because there is nothing which he can be asked to explain at that stage—Q. E. v. Veeran, 9 Mad. 224; Emp. v. Kura, 1882 A.W.N. 166; In re Sadayan, 5 M.L.T. 216; Emp. v. Raju, 1883 A.W.N. 238.

The accused is to be examined after the evidence for the prosecution has been closed and before he is asked to enter upon his defence—Q. E. v. Bava, Ratanlal 227, Raghu Bhumij v. K. E., 5 P.L.J. 430, 21 Cr.L.J. 705; Mazahar Ali v. Emp., 50 Cal. 223. It is unfair to the accused and contrary to law to examine the accused before the examination of all the prosecution witnesses is completed—Ram Harakh v. Emp., 1 O.L.J. 238, 15 Cr.L.J. 436; Rameshwar v. Emp., 2 P.L.T. 741, 22 Cr.L.J. 259; Tilak v. Bhaya Ram, 22 Cr.L.J. 598 (Pat.) Therefore, where the accused was examined after two prosecution witnesses had given evidence, and then another prosecution witness was examined, held that the procedure offended against this section and the conviction must be set aside, and retrial ordered—Ramesnar v. Emp., supra; Balkeshwar v. Emp., 3 P.L.T. 322, 23 Cr L J 114; Gulzari Lal v. Emp., 49 Cal. 1075; Ghaza Ali v. Crown, 6 Lah L J. 618, 27 Cr L J. 87, Lachhman v. Emp., 7 Lah. 564, 27 P.L.R. 427, 27 Cr L J 1007, Emp v Bhau Dharma, 30 Bom L.R. 385, 29 Cr L J 535 (536). But the Allahabad High Court is of opinion that although all the witnesses for the prosecution ought to be examined before the examination of the accused, under the imperative provisions of section 342, still if the evidence of the witnesses who are examined after the examination of the accused introduces no new matter, the irregularity in procedure does not prejudice the accused, and is curable by section 537—Emp v Bechu Chaube, 45 All 124, 20 A L J 874, 21 Cr.L J. 67, Khacho Mal v Emp. 27 Cr L J 405 (406) (All.), Rammu v. Emp., 27 Cr L J. 719 (All.), Emp v Jhabbar 26 A L J 100, 30 Cr L J. 531 (536). The Patna High Court has also laid down that if the accused is defended, any violation of any rule as to the stage at which he is to be examined, does not make much difference. If he has not been prejudiced, the error ought not to vitiate the trial—Mohiuddin v Emp., 4 Pat. 488, 26 Cr L J 811 (815).

The accused should be examined before the evidence for the defence is taken. The examination of the accused after all the prosecution witnesses as well as the witnesses for the defence are examined, vitiates the conviction and sentence, and the trial must be taken up again from the close of the prosecution case, and the accused must be examined before he has entered upon his defence—Surendra v. Isamuddi, 51 Cal. 933 (934), 26 Cr.L J 261; Ram Charan v Emp., 7 P L T 259, 26 Cr.L J. 1289. But in a very recent Calcutta case it has been laid down that an examination of the accused after the conclusion of the defence evidence is a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537—Tamez Khan v Rajabali, 31 C W.N. 337 (338), 28 Cr.L.J. 347 (dissenting from 51 Cal 933).

Although the Magistrate may under the first part of sub-section (1) examine an accused person before the case for the prosecution is concluded, still this would not absolve the Magistrate from the obligation imposed upon him by the latter part of sub-section (1) to examine the accused after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence—Ramnath v Emp., 2 P L T 549, 22 Cr.L.J. 460; Moinuddin v Emp., 2 P L T 455, 22 Cr L J. 422, Bhokari v. Emp., 5 P.L.T 445, 25 Cr L J 711, Hamid Ali v Sri Kissen, 28 C.W N 118, 24 Cr.L J 943.

The accused must be examined after the examination, cross-examination and re-examination of all the prosecution witnesses are over. It is not enough that the accused has been examined after the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses and before their cross-examination and re-examination. Until the prosecution witnesses have been cross-examined and re-examined, it cannot be said what the exact case that the accuse will have to meet is, and if he is forced to disclose his defence before cross-examination, it might very well be that the prosecution witnesses would be on their guard and the value of the cross-examination destroyed. The provision in sec. 342 is for the benefit of the accused; and to enable him to obtain the full benefit of the section it is clear that he must be examined after the cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses are over—Mitarjit Singh v. K. E., 6 P.L.J. 644 (649), 2 P.L.T. 520, 22 Cr.L.J. 697; Kashi Pramanik v. Dasu Paramanik, 27 C.W.N. 28; Jummon v. Emp., 50 Cal. 308; Mazahar v. K. E., 50 Cal. 223, Gulzar Lal v. Emp., 49 Cal. 1075; Fernandez v. Emp., 45 Bom. 672, Emp. v. Nathu Kasturchand, 50 Bom. 42, 27 Bom. L.R. 103, 26 Cr.L.J. 690. Pramatha Nath Mukerjee v. Emp., 50 Cal. 518 (523) ('Servant' Defamation Case), Dibakanta v. Gour Gopal, 50 Cal. 939 (947); Local Govt. v. Maria, 20 N.L.R. 174, 26 Cr.L.J. 971 (F.B.), Motan Khan v. Emp., 21 S.L.R. 331, 28 Cr.L.J. 417. Therefore where after some of the prosecution witnesses were examined-in-chief, the Magistrate examined the accused, and then some more prosecution witnesses were examined, and all the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined, but the accused was not examined again, held that there was no substantial compliance with the provisions of this section—Sailendra v. K. E., 33 C.L.J. 175; Krishnappa v. Emp., 25 Cr.L.J. 713 (Nag); Mad Sadiq v. Emp., 26 P.L.R. 533, 26 Cr.L.J. 1370. Where the prosecution witnesses are first examined-in-chief, then the accused are examined under this section, and afterwards the prosecution witnesses are cross-examined, the procedure is illegal and the trial is vitiated—Haronath v. Ala Bux, 28 C.W.N. 119, 38 C.L.J. 281. Such non-compliance with the provisions of this section is not an irregularity curable by sec. 537—Ibid., Mazahar v. K. E., 50 Cal. 223. But the Madras High Court holds that the words "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined" mean 'when the prosecution has finished calling evidence' and do not include the cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses. Therefore, where in a warrant case the accused does not cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after their examination-in-chief, and then the Magistrate examines the accused and frames a charge, and afterwards at a later stage the accused cross-examines the prosecution witnesses and then the prosecution re-examines them, held that the omission to further examine the accused after the cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses does not vitiate the trial—Varisai Rowther v. K. E., 46 Mad. 449 (F.B.), 24 Cr.L.J. 547 (overruling Maruda Mathu Vannian, In re, 45 Mad. 820). This view of the Madras Full Bench has been followed by the Rangoon High Court—Nga Hla v. Emp., 3 Rang. 139, 26 Cr.L.J. 1336; Subbaya Naidu, 7 Rang. 470, 1929 Cr. C. 507 (509); and by the Allahabad High Court—Sudaman v. Emp., 49 All. 551, 28 Cr.L.J. 399 (400). See also Emp. v. Bechu Chaudh, 45 All. 124, where the witnesses for the prosecution were examined-in-chief and on the same day the accused were questioned under sec. 342, and afterwards the witnesses for the prosecution were cross-examined; the High Court made no objection to this procedure. The Oudh Chief Court also holds that if the accused has been examined before the framing of the charge, the omission to re-examine him after the frame of charge and the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses does not vitiate the trial, if the cross-examination adds nothing on which it is necessary to further examine the accused—Emp. v. Brij Behari, 28 O.C. 130, 12 O.L.J. 182, 2 O.W.N. 327, 26 Cr.L.J. 1301; Khuman v. Emp., 2 O.W.N. 378, 26 Cr.L.J. 1374.

Where the accused has been examined after the prosecution has finished its evidence under sec. 252, but a new and material matter in support of the prosecution case is elicited in cross-examination or re-examination of the prosecution witnesses under sec. 256, it is desirable that the accused should again be questioned on the case under sec. 342 and asked generally to explain the circumstances. So also, if the accused has already been examined before the framing of the charge, and the prosecution calls fresh evidence after the formulation of the charge, the accused must again be examined under sec. 342 on the termination of that evidence—Varisai Routhar v. K. E. 46 Mad. 449 (1871) (F.B.), 24 Cr.L.J. 547. The accused was examined by the Magistrate before the charge was framed and after all the prosecution witnesses had been examined and cross-examined at considerable length. After the charge was framed, most of the witnesses were recalled by the accused (under sec. 256) for a further lengthy cross-examination, after which the Magistrate proceeded to record the defence evidence without questioning the accused again. Held that, as the prosecution witnesses had been once cross-examined at great length, it would be unnecessary for the Court to examine the accused again after the further cross-examination, when no fresh circumstances were discovered after the recall and re-cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses—Byrne v. Crown, 4 Lah. 61, 25 Cr.L.J. 801, In re Thachroth, 45 M.L.J. 279, 25 Cr.L.J. 7, Fazl Karim v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 1418 (Lah.). The accused was examined after the examination and cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, and then the Magistrate called upon him to enter upon his defence (sec. 256). Thereupon the accused applied to the Court for recall of some of the prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination (sec. 257) and the Magistrate granted the application. Held that it was not incumbent upon the Magistrate to further examine the accused after the latter had re-cross-examined the prosecution witnesses under sec. 257. After the accused had entered upon his defence, the stage at which he must be examined under sec. 342 had passed—Obedar Rahaman, 56 Cal. 1157, 1930 Cr. C. 219 (220), 31 Cr.L.J. 406.

Where an accused person has been examined under this section after the close of the prosecution case, and the Court examines a person under sec. 540 (whether such person be a prosecution witness or another person), it is not necessary to examine the accused again, especially where the deposition of such person does not disclose any fresh facts, and the accused is in no way prejudiced in not having been examined again—Prayag Gope v. K. E., 3 Pat. 1015 (1917), 5 P.L.T. 571, 25 Cr.L.J. 2; Fazl Karim v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 1418 (1419) (Lah.); Emp. v. K.

This section does not make it obligatory to again examine the accused after a charge has been added to or altered, when he has already been examined prior to the addition or alteration of the charge—Shamlal v. K. E., 1 Pat. 54, 23 Cr.L.J. 146.

Retrial:—Where a trial was vitiated on the ground that the accused was not examined at the proper stage, a retrial would be ordered, and the retrial should take place not de novo but from the stage at which the Magistrate ought to have examined the accused—Mitarjit v. K. E., 6 P.L.J. 644 (649), 22 Cr.L.J. 697; Pramatha Nath v Emp, 50 Cal 518 (525), 24 Cr.L.J. 248, 27 C.W.N. 389, Diba Kanta v Gour Gopal, 50 Cal. 939 (948); Motankhan v. Emp., 21 S.L.R. 331, 28 Cr.L.J. 417 (418); Surendra v. Isamuddi, 51 Cal 933 (934); Ram Charan, 7 P.L.T. 259, 26 Cr.L.J. 1289; Md. Hayat Khan, 29 Cr.L.J. 475 (477) (Nag).

978. Who can examine:—The Court conducting the trial or inquiry is alone authorised to examine the accused person and the counsel or other person conducting the prosecution should not be allowed to take any part in the examination—C. P. Cr. Cir, Part II, no. 24. Sec. 342 allows the Court, but not the complainant to put questions to the accused—Q. E. v. Kamandu, 10 Mad. 121 (123).

A Special Bench constituted under the Criminal Law Amendment Act (XVI of 1908) can examine the accused under this section—Nagendra Nath, 19 C.W.N. 923, 21 C.L.J. 396 (Mussalmanpara Bomb case).

Where the Magistrate who has partly tried the case and examined the accused is transferred, and the accused demands a de novo trial, the succeeding Magistrate is bound to examine the accused again, and failure on his part to do so vitiates the trial. It is the Magistrate who tries the case and decides it who must examine the accused, and it is not sufficient for his predecessor-in-office to have done so—Akhbar Mohd. v. Emp, 29 Cr.L.J. 125 (126) (Lah.).

979. Improper questions:—It is highly objectionable to put questions to the accused in regard to the matter which he had previously mentioned in his confession and which he had repudiated as untrue—K. E. v. Bhut Nath, 7 C.W.N. 345. The Magistrate cannot put him any question with the object of trapping him into some sort of admission after he has resiled from his confession—Umar Din v. Emp., 2 Lah. 129. It is improper to examine an accused about a confession which is inadmissible, and if he is examined about such a confession, the questions and the answers to them are not admissible in evidence against the accused—Gaung Gy v. K. E., 4 L.B.R. 244, 8 Cr.L.J. 62. It is improper to put questions to the accused to ascertain what witnesses the accused intends to call at the trial or what evidence they will give, or what his defence is—Q. E. v. Hargobind, 14 All. 242; Q. E. v. Hawthorne, 13 All. 345, Mohideen Abdul v. Emp., 27 Mad. 238.

It is improper for a Magistrate to put questions to the accused, before his conviction in the present trial, about his previous convictions, either with a view to take them into consideration for the purpose of conviction or with a view to dispense with formal evidence as to the alleged previous convictions and as to the identity of the accused in the event of conviction—Emp. v. Allomayah, 24 Bom 129, Yasin v. K E, 24 Cal. 680. But see Emp. v. Kissan, 4 N.L.R. 163.

980. Written statements—Though written statements can be put in and accepted by the Court, still they can not be allowed to take the place of the examination of the accused as required by this section—Arvinda Lal v. Emp., 42 Cal. 957, Harnama v. Emp., 22 Cr.L.J. 270 (Lah.); Raghu Bhuray v. K E, 5 P.L.J. 430, Bhagwat v. Emp., 4 Pat. 231, 26 Cr.L.J. 932 (937), Mohiuddin v. Emp. 2 P.L.T. 455; Balkeshwar v. Emp. 23 Cr.L.J. 114, 3 P.L.T. 322, In re Nainamalai, 14 L.W. 418, 23 Cr.L.J. 697, Udhao v. Emp. 25 Cr.L.J. 417 (Nag). The accused is not entitled as a matter of right to put in a written statement in lieu of any answers he may give to questions put to him under sec. 342—Emp. v. Ring, 53 Bom 470, 1929 Cr. C. 114 (119), 31 Cr.L.J. 65. The object of this section is to elicit answers from the accused, in regard to certain matters, and since written statements are generally drawn up by the legal advisers or friends of the accused and not by the accused themselves, the practice of making such written statements will defeat the object of this section K E v. Dujendra 19 C.W.N. 1043, Pramatha v. Emp. 50 Cal. 518 (524), 27 C.W.N. 389, 21 Cr.L.J. 218. The promise to file written statements made at the time of the plea does not exempt the Court from its duty of examining the accused under this section—Pramatha v. Emp., supra; Mitarjit, 6 P.L.J. 644 (649), 22 Cr.L.J. 607. But where the written statement filed was full and elaborate, and covered all the points raised by the prosecution, and no further purpose would have been served by any further questions to the accused, and it was not shown that the irregularity had caused him any prejudice, the conviction need not be set aside nor retrial ordered—Ramnath v. Emp., 2 P.L.T. 549, Bhagwat v. Emp., 4 Pat. 231, 6 P.L.T. 73, 26 Cr.L.J. 932 (937). Where the accused has refused to answer questions and puts forward a written statement, it would be useless for the Magistrate to go on questioning him, and the Magistrate should accept the written statement, especially where such statement meets all the points of the prosecution—Bhagwat v. Emp., supra. Where the accused, upon being examined by the Magistrate and asked whether he had anything to say, replied in the negative, and filed a long written statement explaining the circumstances against him, the written statement should be accepted as a substitute for oral examination—Mohiuddin v. Emp., 4 Pat. 488, 26 Cr.L.J. 811 (813). Sec. 256 directs the Court to accept a written statement and it is intended that the Court should read it, and if an accused states that he will file a written statement, the writing is to be accepted in lieu of an oral statement—Mohiuddin, supra. Where the accused persons were not examined under this section after the examination of the prosecution witnesses, but they filed written statements at that stage and also after the examination of the defence witnesses, held that the accused not having been prejudiced and there having been no miscarriage being brought before a Magistrate is not an accused person, and he can give evidence on oath in a trial of his accomplices—Q. E. v. Mona Puna, 16 Bom. 661; Aung Min v. K. E., 4 L.B.R. 362.

The term "accused" means a person under trial; a person called upon to show cause under Section 133 is not an accused person within the meaning of this section, and oath can be administered to him—Hiranda v. Emp., 2 C.L.J. 149. The parties to a proceeding under sec. 145 are not accused persons and they can be examined on oath—Mad Ayub v. Sarfaraz, 26 Cr L J 70 (Oudh). A person proceeded against under sec. 488 is not an accused person, and he is permitted to give evidence on oath on his own behalf, under sec. 340 (2)—In re Vithaldas, 52 Bom. 768, 29 Cr L J 1051 (1052). So also, a person against whom the Public Prosecutor has withdrawn the case can be administered oath and examined as a witness—Emp v Govind, 18 Bom.L.R. 256, 17 Cr.L.J. 256. An Informer is not an accused person and this section does not prevent oath being administered to him—Mal Singh v. Emp., 1887 P.R. 38. A party to a proceeding under sec. 363 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, for the erection of an unauthorised structure, is not an accused person, and is not exempt from the administration of oath under sec. 342. The erection of the unauthorised structure is not an offence; it is only when an order for demolition of the structure is disobeyed that the person is said to commit an offence and becomes an accused—Krishen Doyal v Corporation of Calcutta, 54 Cal 532, 31 C.W.N. 506 (508), 28 Cr.L.J. 407.

343. Except as provided in sections 337 and 338,

No influence to be used to induce disclosures, no influence, by means of any promise or threat or otherwise, shall be used to an accused person to induce him to disclose or withhold any matter within his knowledge.

985. See Sec. 24 of the Evidence Act, and compare section 163 ante. Where the case against an accused is withdrawn and he is examined as a witness, any inducement offered to such person should be deemed as offered to him as a witness and not as an accused and does not make his evidence inadmissible, though the credit to be attached to such witness is diminished—Emp v. Govind, 18 Bom L.R. 266, 17 Cr.L.J. 256. For instances of inducement, threat and promise, see notes under section 163.

344. (1) If, from the absence of a witness, or any other reasonable cause, it becomes necessary or advisable to postpone the commencement of, or adjourn any inquiry or trial, the Court may, if it thinks fit, by order in writing, stating the reasons therefor, from time to time postpone or adjourn it, on such terms as

Power to postpone or adjourn proceedings

it thinks fit, for such time as it considers reasonable, and may by a warrant remand the accused if in custody :

Provided that no Magistrate shall remand an accused person to custody under this section for a term exceeding fifteen days at a time.

Remand.

(2) Every order made under this section by a Court other than a High Court shall be in writing signed by the presiding Judge or Magistrate.

Explanation.—If sufficient evidence has been obtained to raise a suspicion that the accused may have committed an offence, and it appears likely that further evidence may be obtained by a remand, this is a reasonable cause for a remand.

Reasonable cause for remand.

986. Scope of section —This section relates to proceedings in inquiries or trials, and has nothing to do with Police investigations; and it contemplates a remand to jail, not to Police custody—In re Krishnaji, 23 Bom 32 The custody mentioned in this section is quite different from the custody under section 167 The power of remand under sec. 167 is given to detain prisoners in custody while the police make the investigation, and in a proper case, to commence the inquiry. But the custody under sec. 344 is intended for undertrial prisoners—In re Nagendra Nath, 51 Cal. 402 (412).

This section is applicable to cases even before the issue of process under sec 204, and the Magistrate is entitled under sec 344, if there be a reasonable cause for doing so, to postpone any inquiry or trial and to postpone the issue of process, even if the case be a warrant case—Ram Saran v Nikhad Narain, 6 P L T 477, 26 Cr L J 1179 (1180)

This section enables a Magistrate to postpone or adjourn the inquiry or trial, but does not entitle him to stay further proceedings in a case on his file—Murugan v Gutha Ramu, 53 M L J 455, 28 Cr L J 849

987. Adjournment —Although it is the policy of the law that a Court should proceed to inquiry into and try a case as soon as it takes cognizance of a complaint, still he can postpone the inquiry or trial if in his opinion there are sufficient and reasonable grounds for so doing —Ram Saran v Nikhad Narain, 6 P L T 477, 26 Cr L J 1179 (1180) But adjournments should not be made except upon strong and reasonable grounds It is most inexpedient for a sessions trial to be adjourned The trial before a Court of Session should proceed and be dealt with continuously from its inception to its finish Occasions may arise when it is necessary to grant adjournments, but such adjournments should be granted only on the strongest possible ground and for the shortest possible period—Badri Prasad v. K. E., 10 A.L.J. 473, 13 Cr L.J. 861 “The evidence of witnesses should invariably be recorded as soon as possible after their attendance. If from unavoidable causes an adjournment is indispensable, there should be no unnecessary delay. Witnesses remaining over from day-to-day should, as a rule, be examined at the first sitting of the Court on the following day, and every effort should be made to minimise the inconvenience to which they may be put. After the examination of witnesses has commenced, the trial or preliminary inquiry should be proceeded with until all the witnesses in attendance have been examined, those for the prosecution being first examined, and if any witness be detained for a longer period than two days, the Magistrate should be careful to record the reason for each detention in the ordersheet of the case.”—Cal G.R. & C.O. p. 30. Where a trial is adjourned to a particular date, it is not competent for the Magistrate to accelerate the date of hearing against the wishes of the accused or his pleader. The trial should not be concluded nor judgment pronounced without waiting till that date—Karam Din v. Emp., 1898 P R 14

It is discretionary with the Court to adjourn the inquiry or trial. But this discretion is to be exercised only if there is reasonable cause for the adjournment. If the Magistrate does not exercise his discretion judicially in postponing a case, the High Court will interfere and set aside the order, but if the discretion is exercised in a sound and judicial manner, it will not be interfered with—Ram Saran v. Nikhad, 6 P L T 477, 26 Cr L.J. 1179 (1181). On the other hand, if the Magistrate has exercised proper judicial discretion in refusing to adjourn a case, the High Court will not interfere—Ramiah v. Ramiah, 50 Mad. 839, 28 Cr L.J. 812 (813). When a Magistrate is of opinion that a party before him is unnecessarily wasting time and protracting the case, he has a discretion to refuse an adjournment for bringing fresh witnesses—Ali Sher v. Mir Md, 26 Cr.L.J. 658 (Sind).

- The Magistrate should take some evidence before granting adjournment. On an application for adjournment by the prosecution on the ground that it would not be advisable to proceed with the case in the absence of an accused whose appearance had up to the date of the application not been secured, the Magistrate should, before granting the application, require the production of some evidence. But the omission to do this, in a case in which the Magistrate had recorded some evidence before the issue of warrant, would not by itself entitle the accused to claim to be discharged—Billinghurst v. Meek, 49 Cal 182, 22 Cr L.J. 465

The Court which adjourns the inquiry or trial and remands the accused is bound to record clearly the ground of adjournment and remand—Manikam v. Q. 6 Mad 63

988. Grounds of adjournment :—The Magistrate may adjourn a trial for the purpose of allowing the accused to secure the attendance of his witnesses—In re Dinoo Roy, 16 W.R. 21, Q. v. Totaram, 11 W R. 15. The fact that the accused's advocate has gone to another place where he is detained in a lengthy criminal case is a reasonable ground for adjournment—Esteves v. Emp., 4 Bur.L.T. 213, 12 Cr.L.J. 474 If the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the prosecution has not laid a basis for the reception of the depositions taken before the committing Magistrate in the absence of the accused, he should adjourn the trial under this section, and under section 540 summon such witnesses as he may deem material—Emp v Sāgambar, 12 C.L.R. 120 A Magistrate is justified in adjourning a case till the disposal of a counter case, where a point of law raised in the former case can be conveniently decided after the disposal of the latter case—Ram Saran v. Nikhad, 6 P.L.T. 477, 26 Cr.L.J. 1170 Where the counsel for the accused in a capital case applied for permission to cross-examine the witnesses on the day following as he was not prepared to cross-examine them that day, the Court should grant the application—Sadasiv v Emp., 41 Cal 299 According to the provisions of secs. 250 and 257, the accused is entitled as a matter of right to ask for an adjournment, after a charge has been framed against him, to enable him to adduce evidence in support of his defence—Emiaz Ali v Jagat 1 C.W.N. 313 If a witness not examined before the committing Magistrate is tendered at the trial as a witness for the prosecution, and the accused objects on the ground that the examination of that witness will be a surprise to him, this may be a good ground for adjournment or postponement—Q E v Khan Mahamad, 1889 P.R. 1 Where a Magistrate has once issued process for the attendance of a defence witness, he is bound to enforce his attendance and cannot refuse an adjournment which is asked for by the accused in order that the witness's attendance may be secured—Mishir Lal v Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 370 (Cal). Where it is notified to the Court that an application is intended to be made to the High Court for transfer of the case, the Court is bound to give the party making the application a reasonable time for obtaining the order of the High Court, and, if necessary, to postpone the hearing—Q E v Virasami, 19 Mad. 375 The pendency of an appeal against the conviction of the accused in a case is a good ground for adjourning the trial of the same accused in a subsequent case—In re Mantra Kamaraju, 6 M.L.T. 90, 9 Cr.L.J. 495 The accused is entitled to have an adjournment of his case so as to enable him to secure the services of a pleader whom he wants to engage for the purpose of cross-examining the prosecution-witnesses—Paras Ram v Jalal Din 1916 P.W.R. 14, 17 Cr.L.J. 7

What are not good grounds for adjournment The Magistrate cannot postpone an inquiry for a reason not contemplated by this section, for instance, his being busy with executive work—Muthoora v Heera, 17 W.R. 55 The fact that the accused wants time to engage an advocate and prepare his defence is not a sufficient cause for adjourning a trial in ordinary cases, though in complicated and difficult cases an adjournment may be granted on that ground—Taung Do v Crown, 1 L.B.R. 270. But see 1916 P.W.R. 14 cited above Where a number of persons are accused of having committed an offence, the absence of some of them is not a reasonable cause for adjourning the inquiry into the guilt of the rest who have appeared before the Magistrate—Emp v Nga Tun.

L.B.R. 60. The absence of a co-accused and the desirability of a joint trial are not sufficient reasons for the further postponement of proceedings—Billinghurst v. Meek, 49 Cal 182.

Where two counter cases are filed, one on a complaint and the other on a police-challan, and the complainant in one case is the accused in the other, there is no rule of law that the complaint-case should be postponed till the disposal of the police-challan case. The Court should adopt the procedure which will meet the ends of justice. In a Calcutta case the High Court ordered that the two cases must be tried simultaneously but must be dealt with separately from each other, each on its own merits, and the judgments in both the cases should be pronounced after both the trials are finished—Sk Bahatar v. Nobadali, 28 C.W.N. 487, 26 Cr.L.J. 65 (66, 67). In a Patna case where it was found that the main question for decision in one case could be conveniently decided after the disposal of the counter-case, it was held that the Magistrate had acted rightly in postponing the one case till the disposal of the other—Ram Saran v. Nikhad Narain, 6 P.L.T. 477, 26 Cr.L.J. 1179 (1181).

989. Stay of criminal proceedings pending civil suit :

—This section empowers the criminal Court to adjourn an inquiry or trial for 'any reasonable cause' and the institution of a civil suit between the same parties and in respect of the same property is certainly a reasonable cause for which criminal proceedings should be stayed—Pars Ram v. Jalal Din, 1916 P.W.R. 4, 17 Cr.L.J. 7. See also Ankamma v. Adribhotlu, 18 L.W. 236, 24 Cr.L.J. 640; and In re Periasami, 20 L.W. 544, 35 M.L.T. 99. But there is no hard and fast rule that a criminal case should be stayed pending the disposal of a civil suit in relation to the same subject matter. Each case must be decided upon its own facts—Gopal Chandra, 33 C.W.N. 969 (972); Raj Kumari v. Bama Sundari, 23 Cal 610 (620); Subramanian Chettu, 2 Weir 415; and the institution of a civil suit is not always a valid ground for adjourning a criminal prosecution, although the issues and evidence in the two cases are practically the same—Mathura v. Durga, 2 Cr.L.J. 798, 2 A.L.J. 747; Gopal Chandra supra; Ramiah v. Ramiah, 50 Mad. 839, 28 Cr.L.J. 812; Brojobashi, 13 C.W.N. 398. But it is highly undesirable that the same dispute should be allowed to be fought out simultaneously in the civil and criminal Courts; and so the criminal proceedings should be stayed pending the decision of the civil suit—Kanhaiyalal v. Bhagwan, 48 All. 60, 23 A.L.J. 956, 26 Cr.L.J. 1485 (1488); Raj Kumari v. Bama Sundari, supra; Shri Nana Maharaj, 16 Bom. 729. Although a decision of the Civil Court is not technically binding upon the Criminal Court, still if the Civil Court decision is in favour of the accused, it creates such a doubt in his guilt that it would almost become impossible for the latter Court not to give him its benefit. Therefore it is proper for a Criminal Court to adjourn the proceedings till the decision of the civil suit—Pars Ram v. Jalal Din, 17 Cr.L.J. 7, 1916 P.W.R. 4. Where the decision of the civil suit, which has been instituted several months before the criminal case, is likely to throw considerable light upon the dispute in the criminal case, the proceedings of the Criminal Court should be stayed pending the decision of the civil suit—Linton v. Emp., 28 P.L.R. 103, 28 Cr.L.J. 326 (327). The test in every case would be whether the accused is likely to be seriously prejudiced by the continuance of the criminal proceedings against him, during the pendency of the civil proceedings—Jehangir v. Framji, 30 Bom.L.R. 962, 29 Cr.L.J. 1053 (1056). If the object of prosecuting the criminal proceedings, while a civil suit in relation to the same matter is pending, be in reality to prejudice the trial of the civil suit or to coerce the accused into a compromise of the civil suit on terms to be practically dictated by the complainant, the Magistrate should as a general rule postpone the criminal proceedings till the disposal of the civil suit—Subramanian Chetti, 2 Weir 415 (416), Jehangir Pestonji v. Framji, 30 Bom.L.R. 962, 29 Cr.L.J. 1053 (1056). If the criminal proceedings might in a material way affect the plaintiff's civil rights, it would be undesirable in the interests of the fair administration of justice that the criminal proceeding should continue during the pendency of the civil suit—Khobhari v. Bhagwat, 1 P.L.W. 793, 18 Cr.L.J. 771 (772). Indirect motive or coercion by way of pressure on the defendants in the civil suit may lead a Court to stay the criminal proceedings—Gopal Chandra, 33 C.W.N. 969 (974). One important test to determine whether the criminal proceedings should be stayed pending the civil suit is whether the criminal prosecution is public or private. If it is public, the Court will not as a rule stay the criminal proceeding, if it is private, there will not be the same reluctance on the part of the Court to interfere with the criminal proceeding—Jehangir v. Framji, supra, Gopal Chandra, 33 C.W.N. 969 (972), Raj Kumari v. Bama Sundari, 23 Cal. 610 (619).

An order staying a criminal trial, on a complaint of rioting and mischief in which questions of possession will have to be gone into, until a civil suit on a question of title has been disposed of, is not a proper order—Nambia v. Sudalai Muthu, 44 M.L.J. 642, 25 Cr.L.J. 280, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 595. But in cases arising out of a disputed title in which it is difficult to draw the line between bona fide claim and criminal trespass, if the title is already the subject-matter of a civil suit before the institution of criminal proceedings, it may be advisable for the criminal court to abide the civil trial—Ramiah v. Ramiah, supra.

The Magistrate has a discretion in such cases to adjourn or continue the criminal proceedings. If, on a consideration of all the circumstances, he exercises his discretion and either stays the criminal proceedings pending the disposal of the suit, or declines to do so, the High Court will not, as a general rule, interfere—Subramania Chetti, 2 Weir 415 (416), Varadarajulu Naidu, 1 M.H.C.R. 66.

990. Costs of adjournment.—The words "on such terms as it thinks fit" empower the Criminal Courts to allow the costs of an adjournment—Crown v. Shuldhama, 1904 P.R. 20, Sannasi v. Sivasubramania, 33 M.L.J. 366, Raghunandan v. Ramadin, 2 P.L.W. 218, 19 Cr.L.J. 6. This section clearly entitles a Court to award costs of adjournment to a party who has been put to unnecessary expenses by an adjournment on the application of the other party. A judicious exercise of t power would have the effect of preventing many useless adjournments—Mathura Prosad v. Basant, 28 All 207. Where the accused asks for an adjournment to which he is not entitled, the Court may make an order of adjournment conditionally on his paying the costs of the other side—Sew Prasad v. Corporation of Calcutta, 9 C.W.N 18. But it is improper to direct the accused to pay the costs of adjournment when he applies under section 526 for a transfer—Fatta v. Crown, 1911 P.W.R. 8.

An order for costs will be made only in those cases where the circumstances are exceptional and where for some reason or other the ordinary everyday method of conducting criminal cases must be departed from—In re Abdul Rahiman, 42 Bom. 254, 20 Bom L.R 124, 19 Cr L J. 326. No order for costs should be made where the adjournment is inevitable and there is no other alternative. Thus, where the accused person being absent, the Court cannot proceed with the case, and is bound to adjourn the hearing, it would be entirely opposed to the spirit of this section if the Magistrate under such circumstances passes orders awarding the costs of adjournment against the accused—Browne v Chandra Singh, 1906 P.R. 6, Beedha v. Emp. 20 A.L.J. 280, 23 Cr.L.J 243.

This Section does not apply to proceedings in appeal, and therefore an order requiring the appellant to pay the costs of adjournment is improper and ultra vires—Suraj Bhan v. Crown, 1919 P.R. 29.

Against whom costs may be awarded:—The costs are to be paid by the party applying for the adjournment; where a criminal case is taken up on a Police charge-sheet filed on information given by a private person and such person engages a Vakil and moves the Court for an adjournment owing to the absence of the Vakil, held that an order for costs can be validly made against that person on granting the adjournment prayed for, even though he may not be a complainant under sec 200, since an Informant is a person recognised in the Code as initiating criminal proceedings as much as a complainant acting under section 190—Sannasi Kudumban v. Sivasubramania, 40 Mad. 1130, 33 M.L.J 366. But where the prosecution is wholly conducted by the Police and the adjournment is asked for only for the convenience of the Police, the complainant cannot be ordered to bear the costs of the adjournment—Emp v. Laxman, 24 Bom L.R, 380. If an adjournment takes place for which the complainant is solely to blame, then of course an order can be made that the complainant should pay any costs which may have been incurred by the accused for the adjournment—Ibid.

991. Remand:—Remands to custody should not ordinarily be ordered under this section without first recording some evidence to show that good grounds exist for believing that the accused has committed a non-bailable offence—Ahmed Ali v. Emp., 11 N.L.R. 162; if the offence is bailable, the accused should be admitted to bail and not remanded to custody—Raghunandan v. Emp. 8 C.W.N 779.

When the accused is at first brought before a Magistrate and remand is desired, it is not necessary to go fully into the charge; it is ordinarily sufficient to show by the evidence of a Police officer that they believe that the accused is concerned in the commission of an offence; and on such proof the accused will be remanded to custody. If the accused is again brought up after a remand, and further remand is asked for, some direct evidence of the guilt of the accused should be required to justify the Magistrate in ordering for further remand; and with each remand the necessity for the production of evidence of guilt becomes more strong—Ponnusami v. Q, 6 Mad. 69. Jamini v Emp, 36 Cal 174, Ahmad Ali v. Emp., 11 N L.R. 162, 16 Cr L J 705

An order of remand cannot be passed in the absence of the accused. To remand is to re-commit to custody. The commitment requires the presence of the accused, the re-commitment also requires his presence—Anonymous, 2 Weir 409

Grounds of remand—The Magistrate can remand the accused, if sufficient evidence has been obtained to raise a suspicion that the accused may have committed an offence, and it appears likely that further evidence may be obtained by such remand—Narendra v Emp 36 Cal 166 Where evidence was available, but it appeared necessary to the Magistrate to defer the examination of witnesses in order that further evidence might be produced, so that the inquiry when commenced might be continuous, held that the remand of the accused in such a case was justified—Manikam v Q, 6 Mad 63 But a Magistrate is not justified in postponing an inquiry and remanding the accused, when there is no evidence at all which could be the foundation of a charge, and merely on the expectation that after some time on some inquiry being made some evidence might be obtained—Muthoora v Heera, 17 W R. 55 Where the accused person had already made a confession and had produced an article stolen from a person, and there was ample evidence before the Magistrate, it was held that the remand of the accused in order to get from him a confessional statement is most improper—Anonymous, 2 Weir 414

Remand to police custody—This section does not empower the Magistrate to remand an accused person, who is in the custody of the Magistrate, to Police custody for the purpose of obtaining information with regard to the offences which the accused may be alleged to have committed—In re Rama, 4 Bom L R 878, In re Krishnaji, 23 Bom 32

Period of detention—Fifteen days is the longest period for which an accused person may be remanded at a time by an order of the Magistrate—Reg v Surkya, 5 B H C R 31 An accused person has the right to have the evidence against him recorded at as early a period as possible, and the fact that there is or may be a great deal of evidence forthcoming is not a sufficient ground for detention for an inordinate period—Manikam v Q, 6 Mad 63

345. (1) The offences punishable under the sections of the Indian Penal Code specified in the first two columns of the table

next following may be compounded by the persons mentioned in the third column of that table:—

Offence	Sections of Indian Penal Code applicable	Persons by whom offence may be compounded.
Uttering words, etc. with deliberate intent to wound the religious feelings of any person	298	The person whose religious feelings are intended to be wounded
Causing hurt ...	323, 334	The person to whom the hurt is caused
Wrongfully restraining or confining any person	341, 342	The person restrained or confined
Assault or use of criminal force ..	352, 355, 358	The person assaulted or to whom criminal force is used
Unlawful compulsory labour ..	374	The person compelled to labour
Mischief, when the only loss or damage caused is loss or damage to a private person	426, 427	The person to whom the loss or damage is caused
Criminal trespass ..	447	The person in possession of the property trespassed upon.
House trespass ..	448
Criminal breach of contract of service	490, 491, 492	The person with whom the offender has contracted.
Adultery ..	497	The husband of the married woman
Enticing or taking away or detaining with criminal intent a married woman	498
Defamation ..	500	The person defamed.
Printing or engraving matter, knowing it to be defamatory.	501
Sale of printed or engraved substance containing defamatory matter knowing it to contain such matter.	502
Insult intended to provoke a breach of the peace.	504	The person insulted
Criminal intimidation, except when the offence is punishable with imprisonment for seven years.	506	The person intimidated
Act caused by making a person believe that he will be an object of divine displeasure	508	The person against whom the offence was committed.

(2) The offences punishable under the sections of the Indian Penal Code specified in the first two columns of the table next following may, with the permission of the Court before which any prosecution for such offence is pending, be compounded by the persons mentioned in the third column of that table :—

Offence	Sections of Indian Penal Code applicable	Persons by whom offence may be compounded.
Voluntarily causing hurt by dangerous weapons or means	324	The person to whom hurt is caused.
Voluntarily causing grievous hurt	325	Ditto
Voluntarily causing grievous hurt on grave and sudden provocation	335	Ditto
Causing hurt by doing an act so rashly and negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others	337	Ditto
Causing grievous hurt by doing an act so rashly and negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others	338	Ditto
Wrongfully confining a person for three days or more	343	The person confined
Wrongfully confining a person in secret	346	Ditto.
Assault or criminal force in attempting wrongfully to confine a person	357	The person assaulted or to whom the force was used
Dishonest misappropriation of property	403	The owner of the property misappropriated
Cheating	417	The person cheated
Cheating a person whose interest the offender was bound, by law or by legal contract, to protect	418	Ditto
Cheating by personation	419	Ditto
Cheating and dishonestly inducing delivery of property or the making, alteration or destruction of a valuable security	420	Ditto
Mischief by injury to work of irrigation by wrongfully diverting water when the only loss or damage caused is loss or damage to a private person	430	The person to whom the loss or damage is caused
House-trespass to commit an offence (other than theft) punishable with imprisonment	451	The person in possession of the house trespassed upon
Using a false trade or property mark	482	The person to whom loss or injury is caused by such use
Counterfeiting a trade or property mark used by another	483	The person whose trade or property mark is counterfeited
Knowing, selling, or exposing or possessing for sale or for trade or manufacturing purpose, goods marked with a counterfeit trade or property mark	486	Ditto

Offence	Sections of Indian Penal Code applicable	Persons by whom offence may be compounded
Marrying again during the lifetime of a husband or wife	494	The husband or wife of the person so marrying
Uttering words or sounds or making gestures or exhibiting any object intending to insult the modesty of a woman or intruding upon the privacy of a woman	509	The woman whom it is intended to insult or whose privacy is intruded upon.

(3) When any offence is compoundable under this section, the abetment of such offence or an attempt to commit such offence (when such attempt is itself an offence) may be compounded in like manner.

(4) When the person who would otherwise be competent to compound an offence under this section is under the age of eighteen years or is an idiot or lunatic, any person competent to contract on his behalf may, with the permission of the Court, compound such offence.

(5) When the accused has been committed for trial or when he has been convicted and an appeal is pending, no composition for the offence shall be allowed without the leave of the Court to which he is committed, or, as the case may be, before which the appeal is to be heard.

(5A) A High Court acting in the exercise of its powers of revision under section 439 may allow any person to compound any offence which he is competent to compound under this section.

(6) The composition of an offence under this section shall have the effect of an acquittal of the accused with whom the offence has been compounded.

(7) No offence shall be compounded except as provided by this section.

Change :—This section has been amended by sec. 90 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act xviii of 1923. The changes are of minor character and no reasons have been particularly stated in the Bill.

992. Withdrawal and composition :—A withdrawal (Sec 248) must be by intimation to the Magistrate holding the trial, whereas in many cases composition can be effected without the permission of the Court. A withdrawal is permissible in a summons case, whereas most of the compoundable cases are warrant cases. A withdrawal is the result of act of one party only, namely the complainant, without the consent of the accused, whereas a composition presupposes an arrangement between both parties and implies a consent of the accused—Murray v. Q. E., 21 Cal. 103; Bayan Ali v. K. E., 20 C.W.N. 1209. Permission to withdraw can be given only to the complainant, whereas the right to compound an offence does not always belong to the complainant—Chellum v. Ramasawmi, 14 Mad 379. On the withdrawal of the complaint the Magistrate can award compensation to the accused (Himmat v. Bakhtawar, 1883 P R. 24), but compensation cannot be awarded when a case is compounded—Emp v Khushali, 1883 P R 19.

A Magistrate has the option to permit the complainant to withdraw or not, but if the offence is compoundable without the leave of the Court, and a petition of compromise is put in, the Magistrate is bound to give effect to it. Whether a petition (e.g. a petition praying that the case be struck off the file) is one for withdrawal or compromise is to be judged from the fact whether the accused consented to it or not. Where it appeared that the accused had never consented to the compromise of the case, the petition was not a petition of compromise under this section, but one of withdrawal, and the Magistrate's refusal to permit withdrawal, and the subsequent proceeding resulting in the trial and conviction of the accused were not illegal—Bayan Ali v K E 20 C W N 1209, 18 Cr L J 107.

A Railway guard abused and assaulted a passenger, whereupon the latter made a complaint to the police, who instituted a case against the accused. A few days later, the accused offered an apology to the complainant, who thereupon gave a letter to the accused in which he wrote. "Mr John (the accused) came to me and offered an unconditional apology. I beg to withdraw the case against him." This letter was produced by the accused in Court. The Magistrate treated the letter as a withdrawal and not as a compromise, and as withdrawal could only be made in Court by intimation to the Magistrate, he treated the withdrawal as invalid and proceeded with the trial and convicted the accused. Held that the Magistrate was misled by the word 'withdraw' used in the letter, that the case was one of compromise and not of withdrawal, because a withdrawal could be made only by the prosecuting authority (police) in this case, and that the offence having been compounded, the accused must be acquitted—Emp v John, 45 All 145 (146, 148).

993. Requisites of composition—In order to amount to a composition, the arrangement must be one by which the parties have settled their differences and not a mere arrangement to settle the disputes in future as the result of some action either by themselves or by third parties. Therefore where the parties signed a muchilika referring their dispute to arbitrators but no arbitration took place and no award was passed, held that the mere signing of the muchilika did not amount to a composition of the offence—Ramalinga v. Varadarajulu, 49 M L J 44, 22 L W. 390, 26 Cr.L J 1591. A mere agreement between the parties to refer the case to arbitration is not a final settlement of the dispute a does not amount to a composition. Where the parties filed a petition of compromise agreeing to be bound by the decision of arbitrators named therein and asked for an adjournment for settlement of their disputes, but after the arbitrators made the award, the complainant refused to abide by that award, held that there was no composition and the Magistrate could proceed with the trial—Srish Chandra v. Abani Nath, 42 C L J 139, 26 Cr L J 1584.

Although a composition also signifies that the person against whom the offence has been committed has received some gratification (whether of a pecuniary character or otherwise) as an inducement for his desiring to abstain from a prosecution (Murray v Q. E., 21 Cal 103), still the passing of such consideration or gratification is not absolutely necessary to effect a valid composition—Hudayat v. Q. E., 1896 P.R. 9 And it is not necessary that the consideration should be of a monetary character—Mahomed Kanu v. Pattani, 39 Mad 946 An apology is a sufficient consideration in cases of defamation or abuse—Emp. v John, 45 All 145 (146). If the matter is settled by respectable persons and a compromise entered into, the Court is not concerned to inquire into the nature or value of the consideration, and if the complainant considers that his grievance is redressed by the fact of respectable persons intervening, even though he may not have received any money payment or even a direct apology from the accused, the complainant is at full liberty to compound the prosecution—Crown v Lilaram, 2 S L R 16, 10 Cr L J 228

To constitute a valid composition, it must appear that the parties were free from influence of any kind, and were fully aware of their respective rights—Murray v Q. E., 21 Cal 103 If the consent of a party is obtained by threat and coercion, there is no valid composition—Hanmant, 31 Bom L R. 789, 1929 Cr.C 322 (323).

The offence must be compoundable.—Before allowing a composition, it is the duty of the Magistrate to find upon the evidence that a compoundable offence has been committed. If the evidence discloses a non-compoundable offence, the Magistrate, upon a petition of compromise, cannot treat the case as a compoundable one, and allow composition and acquit the accused—Emp v. Ranchhod, 37 Bom 369, Q E v Naran, Ratanlal 699, Emp. v Asmal, 4 Bom.L R. 718; Guru Prosad v. Ajodhyanath, 20 Cr.L.J 552 (Pat). It is contrary to public policy to compound a non-compoundable offence (e.g criminal breach of trust) and any agreement to that effect is wholly void in law—Majubar v Mukhtashed, 40 Cal. 113 (118) The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to allow composition of a non-compoundable offence on the ground that it would be better for the complainant to compromise and that the accused also desires to compromise, and that it is probable that the case might in the end turn out to be a compoundable offence—K E. v Hira Singh, 1907 P R. 11.

994. When offence can be compounded :—A case may be compounded at any time before the sentence is pronounced, therefore a petition of compromise filed by the parties when the judgment was actually being written should be accepted—Aslam v. K. E., 45 Cal. 816, 22 C.W.N. 744

An offence falling under sub-section (1), i.e. an offence for the composition of which no permission of the Court is necessary, can be compounded even before a charge of the offence is laid in Court by the person injured. An offence is complete when the acts constituting it have been committed, apart from the question whether a charge or complaint has been laid before the Court or not, and there is nothing in this section to suggest that a composition of an offence to be valid must be effected only after the accused is brought before the Court. A composition made to prevent a case coming into Court is just as much a lawful composition under this section as one made after the case has come into Court—Kumarasami v. Kuppusami 41 Mad 685 (687), 19 Cr L J 359, Mrs Torpey v. Emp. 49 All. 494, 28 Cr.L J 495 (496)

A Magistrate cannot allow composition after the records of the case have been called for by the High Court under sec. 435 with a view to transfer the case. When the records of the case were called for by the High Court, the case was no longer on the file of the Magistrate and his jurisdiction was suspended. But the parties may compound the offence before the Magistrate to whom the case may be transferred by the High Court—In re Maruti, 49 Bom 533, 27 Bom L R 350, 26 Cr L J 996

995. Proof—Although the provisions of the Contract Act may not apply, the proof of the arrangement must be similar to that which the Court requires for the proof of any agreement which is in issue—Murray v. Q. E., 21 Cal 103. The burden of providing that the offence has been validly compounded lies upon the accused—Ibid

Proof as to factum of composition—In case of an offence falling under sub-section (1), i.e. an offence compoundable without the permission of Court, if one party alleges that the case has been compromised (outside the Court), and the other resiles from the compromise and denies the same, it is competent to the Court, before which the case is pending, to take evidence concerning the factum of the alleged compromise, and to decide whether a compromise has in fact been arrived at or not; and if it finds that there has been a valid composition, it should pass an order of acquittal—Mahomed v. Pattani 39 Mad 946, Kumarasami v. Kuppusami, 41 Mad 685 (686). But in cases of offences covered by sub-section (2) which can be compounded only with the permission of the Court, any compromise arrived at by the parties outside the Court is of no legal effect and cannot be recognized by any Court dealing with the offence. Consequently the Court is not bound (nor competent) to order any inquiry into the factum of a compromise alleged by one of the parties and denied by the other—Naurang v. Kidar Nath, 9 Lah 400, 29 Cr.L.J. 585 (587)

996. Magistrate when bound to allow composition :— If the offence falls under sub-section (1), it is compoundable irrespective of the permission of the Court, and so if a petition of compromise is put in, the Court is bound to allow composition and cannot refuse to do so—

Emp. v. Ram Gopal, 1886 A.W.N. 167. In a case of such offence, if the composition is proved, the Magistrate must give effect to it and cannot proceed with the trial—Emp v Mulo, 6 S L R 284, 14 Cr.L J. 292. As soon as the parties have arrived at a compromise of an offence falling under sub-section (1), the Magistrate has nothing more to do except to record a judgment of acquittal—Naurang v. Kidar, 9 Lah. 400, 29 Cr L J 585 (587). He is not at liberty to call upon the parties to adduce further evidence that the case has been compounded—Emp. v Ganakrishna, 16 Bom.L.R. 939, 16 Cr L J. 88, 26 I C. 1000. It is his duty to accept the compromise and to dismiss the case and acquit the accused. He is wrong in ordering the petition to be put up on the record—Kusum v. Bechu, 3 C W.N. 322, Mahomed Ismail v Faisuddi, 3 C.W N 548. Where the complainant and the accused are willing to compromise, a composition cannot be refused on the ground that the master in whose quarrel the servant (complainant) was injured refuses to give his permission—Lalla v K. E., 17 O.C. 92, 15 Cr.L.J. 567.

If a charge is framed in respect of a compoundable offence, and the proper person files a petition of compromise, the Magistrate cannot alter the charge into one of a non-compoundable offence, to prevent composition. He must give effect to the petition and acquit the accused—Hastu v. Crown, 1914 P.R 29, 16 Cr.L J 81 (F.B). If the offence in respect of which the complaint was made be an offence compoundable without the leave of the Court, and a petition of compromise is made, the Magistrate is bound to give effect to the petition and acquit the accused, even though by mistake he had mentioned a non-compoundable offence in the summons served upon the accused—Kadir Akram v. Emp., 2 P.L T. 602, 62 I C 189, 22 Cr.L J. 493. Where a person is prosecuted for offences under secs 323 (compoundable) and 353 (non-compoundable), I P Code, and the complainant applies to have the case under sec 323 struck off, the Magistrate should allow the composition and proceed only in respect of the other offence—Emp. v. Corrie, 1884 A.W.N. 256.

If the offence is compoundable, it may be compromised, even though the case has been sent up by the Police—Q. E. v. Nawab Jan, 10 Cal 551. See also Emp. v. John, 45 All. 145.

997. Who can compound.—An offence can be compounded only by the person specified in this section, although the complaint might have been made by some other person. Thus, where A made a complaint for cheating her husband B, it is the person cheated (i.e. B) who can compound the offence, and not A, although the complaint was filed by A. The composition by A will not have the effect of acquitting the accused. This shows that it is not competent for the complainant in every case to compound an offence—Dajiba v. Emp., 51 Bom. 512, 29 Bom L R 718, 28 Cr.L J. 581 (582). See also Emp. v. John, 45 All 145, where the case was started by the police, but the composition was made by the injured person. The offence of hurt can be compounded only by the person to whom the hurt is caused—Emp v. Lala, 15 A L J. 467, 18 Cr.L J 729. The widow or other relations of such person (that person dying in consequence of the hurt) cannot compound—Gangamma 2 Weir 418; Emp v. Rahmat, 37 All. 419, 16 Cr.L.J. 586; Crown v. Ramzan, 7 S.L.R. 200. Where hurt was caused to three persons, and one of them died subsequently, the remaining two cannot compromise the offence as regards the deceased—Emp v. Sultan Singh, 31 All. 606, 10 Cr.L.J. 473. In other words, where there are several complainants, one complainant can compound the offence committed against himself but not the offence committed against others. Shib Chandra v. Rabbani, 27 C.W.N. 169.

The offence of defamation can be compounded only by the person defamed, and not by another person aggrieved by the defamation. Thus, where a charge of defamation for imputing unchastity to a woman is instituted on the complaint of the husband, the husband cannot compound the offence—Chhotulal v. Nathabhai 25 Bom. 151. In such a case the wife is the only person who can compound the offence; and she can do so without the consent or even against the will of her husband. But if the defamatory matter was published with the intention of injuring the reputation of both husband and wife, and the husband instituted the complaint, then no one except the husband could compound—Chellum v. Ramaswami, 14 Mad. 379. An offence under section 499 I.P.C. can be compounded only by the husband of the woman. Though a complaint of that offence may be made by any person having the care of the woman during her husband's absence (section 199), still such person cannot compound the offence, and an acquittal based upon such composition is illegal—Mahabul Ali v. Emp., 4 Lah. L.J. 489, Harnam v. Sain Das, 24 Cr.L.J. 120 (Lah.); Afur Alam v. Emp., 5 Lah. L.J. 183. A charge of criminal trespass can be compounded by the person who is in actual possession of the property trespassed upon, and he (and not the juridical possessor) is the person who can bring the complaint in respect of the offence. "Otherwise, we might have the juridical possessor (e.g. a trustee) prosecuting for criminal trespass, and the actual possessor compounding the offence, a result which could never have been contemplated by the Legislature"—Tok Gyl v. K. E., 8 L.B.R. 428.

A minor cannot compound an offence—Shib Singh v. Q. E., 1901 P.R. 17; but under sub-section (1) it can be compounded with the permission of the Court by the person competent to contract on behalf of the minor.

Court, the so called compromise arrived at between the parties out of Court is of no legal effect and cannot be taken cognizance of by any Court dealing with the offence—Naurang v. Kidar Nath, 9 Lah 400, 29 Cr.L.J. 585 (587) Such permission can be granted only by the Court, and not by a police officer, because the granting of permission to withdraw is a judicial act—Anonymous, Ratanlal 91. The duty of granting the permission is cast upon the Magistrate trying the case, and that duty cannot be assigned either to the District Magistrate or to the police—Partap Singh, 31 P L R 121, 1930 Cr.C. 304.

In case of offences falling under sub-section (2), it is the duty of the Magistrate to decide whether he will or will not allow a compromise and the responsibility rests entirely with him. If the compromise is made at an early stage, and the offence is not so serious that punishment is absolutely necessary, the Magistrate should exercise his discretion in allowing the composition. Where the Magistrate refused to allow composition without sufficient reason, the High Court in revision allowed it—Sewa Singh v. Crown, 1922 P.W.R. 7, A.L.R. 1922 Lah. 138, 23 Cr. L.J. 85. Before allowing composition of an offence, the Magistrate should take into consideration all the circumstances of the case and should bear in mind that such offence is punishable not only for the satisfaction of the injured person but also to protect society by deterring others from committing similar offences. The degree of prevalence of such offences at any particular place or time may fitly be considered in determining whether composition should or should not be allowed—Crown v. Konoo Meah, 1 L B R. 349. The Magistrate may refuse to allow composition, if it is arrived at at a late stage, and some of the offences are non-compoundable—Hanmant, 31 Bom L R 789, 1929 Cr C 322 (323). In cases falling under subsection (2), if the parties are nearly related to one another and are willing to patch up their quarrels, the Magistrate should not refuse to allow composition—Aminulla v. Emp., 26 C.W.N. 536. Where the accused was charged with two offences, of which one was compoundable with the permission of the Court, and the other a non-compoundable offence, and the Magistrate after examining the complainant issued summons in respect of the compoundable offence only, it was not illegal for him to grant permission for compounding the case—Md. Ismail v. Samad, 20 C.W.N. 946 (947).

Under sub-section (5), when an appeal is pending in respect of the offence, it is the Appellate Court alone which can allow the composition; and the permission of the Appellate Court is necessary even in respect of offences which are ordinarily compoundable without the sanction of the Court.

Where it is found that the accused were acquitted by the trial Court of one of the two offences charged against them, the Appellate Court ought not to withhold its permission to allow composition, even though the occurrence bore more or less a serious aspect—Tulan v. Chintan, 55 Cal 1190, 30 Cr.L.J. 484 (485).

Permission by High Court in revision—The High Court as a Court of Revision can exercise all the powers of an Appellate Court and can grant permission to compound an offence—Emp v. Ram Piyari, 32 All. 153; Emp. v. Shiban, 45 All. 17, Nidhan v. K. E., 1904 P.L.R. 252, Lalla v. K. E. 17 O.C. 92; Chotal v. Emp., 21 Cr L.J. 590 (Oudh); In the following cases it was laid down that an offence could not be allowed to be compounded when the case came before the High Court in Revision, when the High Court was sitting neither as a Court of Original Jurisdiction nor as a Court of Appeal—Emp v Lala, 15 A.L.J. 467; Ram Chandra v. Emp., 37 All. 127, Naqi v. K. E., 11 A.L.J. 13; Rambharan v. Emp., 42 All. 474, Crown v Harnam, 1918 P.R. 35; Alhoy v. Rameshnar, 43 Cal 1143, Audhi v Emp. 3 P.L.T. 458, Adhar v. Subodh, 18 C.W.N. 1212, Sankar Rangayya v Sankar Ramayya, 39 Mad. 604. This latter view has now been rendered obsolete by the new sub-section (5A) of this section which expressly gives the High Court the power to allow composition in revision. The High Court may in revision grant permission to compound an offence and acquit the accused, where such permission has been wrongly withheld by the Appellate Court—Titan v. Chintan, 55 Cal 1190, 30 Cr L.J. 484 (485).

Composition on Retrial—When the accused was charged with and convicted of an offence compoundable without the leave of Court, but on appeal the conviction was set aside and a retrial ordered, and the complainant then offered to compound the case, it was held that it was open to the parties to compound the case in the same manner in which it could be compounded before conviction by the Magistrate, and that no permission of the Court was necessary for the composition—Umrat v. Makbulan, 3 A.L.J. 523.

Recording reason—When allowing composition under sub-section (2), the Magistrate should briefly record his reason for granting sanction, so that, if an appeal is preferred, the Appellate Court may be in a position to judge whether the discretion has been properly exercised—Crown v. Konoo Meah, 1 L.B.R. 349.

999. Compromise cannot be withdrawn:—When the parties have filed a petition of compromise, they cannot afterwards be allowed to withdraw the petition and to insist upon the case being tried—Mahomed Kan v Pattani, 39 Mad. 946, Kumarasami v Kuppasami, 41 Mad. 685 (686); Kusam v Bechu, 3 C.W.N. 322, Hem Chandra v Girindra, 33 C.L.J. 226; Ram Richpal v Mala Din, 25 Cr L.J. 810 (Lah.) A composition arrived at between the parties is complete as soon as it is made, and the accused is entitled to be acquitted, even though one of the parties later on resiles from the compromise—Hem Chandra v. Girindra, 33 C.L.J. 226, 22 Cr L.J. 301.

1000. Subsection (6)—Acquittal—When the petition of composition is put in, the Magistrate's sole remaining duty is to record a formal order of acquittal and to set the accused person at liberty—Hasta v Crown, 1914 P.R. 29. The Magistrate is bound to acquit the accused; he acts illegally if he proceeds with the trial and convicts the accused—Kora Raman v Kandan, 2 Weir 418, Emp. v. John, 45 All. 145. Any sentence that he may pass subsequently is illegal, for the composition of an offence has the effect of an acquittal—Emp. v. Corrie, 1884 A.W.N. 256.

The High Court in revision can set aside an order of acquittal passed on a petition of compromise, if there has been any material irregularity—Crown v. Ramzan, 7 S.L.R. 200, 15 Cr.L.J. 553.

Compensation can be awarded under Section 250 only when the Magistrate himself acquits the accused after trial. But a composition of an offence has in itself the effect of acquittal and no trial is held; and therefore no compensation can be awarded where the offence is compounded under this section—Emp. v. Khushali, 1888 P.R. 19; Q. E. v. Sangappa, Ratanlal 957. Proceedings under Section 250 are inapplicable to a case where the accused person himself has, by an agreement with the prosecutor, arrived at a settlement and been a party to the compounding of the offence—In re Harkishandas, 10 Bom.L.R. 1086.

When an offence is compounded, the accused must be acquitted. The conviction of the accused after composition is illegal and must be set aside—Emp. v. John, 45 All. 145 (148). A composition has the effect of an acquittal and not a discharge, and is therefore a complete bar to the prosecution of the accused for the same offence—Imp. v. Mulo, 6 S.L.R. 284, 14 Cr.L.J. 292; Crown v. Harnam, 1910 P.L.R. 22, 11 Cr.L.J. 366. The Magistrate cannot after composition institute proceedings against the accused under Section 437 (now 436)—Emp. v. Unkar, 1884 A.W.N. 13. A composition has the effect of barring not only a prosecution for the same offence, but also for a cognate offence based on the same facts—Q. E. v. Asmal, Ratanlal 519, or for an offence involved in the former offence which has been compounded—Shaikh Basiruddin v. Shaikh Khairat Ali, 17 C.W.N. 948. But the compounding of an original charge is not a conclusive answer to a charge made against the complainant under Section 211 L.P.C.—Q. E. v. Atar Ali, 11 Cal. 79.

Where there are several accused persons, the composition of an offence with one of them has not the effect of acquittal of all the accused persons but only of the particular accused with whom the composition took place—Muthia Naek v. K. E., 41 Mad. 323; Emp. v. Alibhai, 45 Bom. 346. Anantia v. Crown, 5 Lah. 239, 25 Cr.L.J. 629; Ram Kishen v. Emp., 1 Lah. 169; Chandan v. Emp., 19 A.L.J. 314; Emp. v. Mohna, 7 Lah. 344, 27 Cr.L.J. 576. This is now made clear by the words "with whom the offence has been compounded" newly added in subsection (6). In Calcutta and Patna cases, it was held that if a compoundable offence was committed by a number of persons, and the complainant compounded the offence with only one of them, the effect of such compromise was to compound the complaint not only in respect of the persons with whom it was actually compounded, but also in respect of the other persons, and the composition operated as an acquittal of all the accused—Chander Kumar v. Emp., 7 C.W.N. 176; Shyam Behari v. Sagar, 20 Cr.L.J. 824, 53 I.C. 824, 1 P.L.T. 32; Amar Ali v. Emp., 2 P.L.T. 584; Sural Kumar v. Emp., 4 P.L.T. 107. This view is no longer correct.

Where an accused is charged with two offences, and one offence is compounded, the charge for the other offence does not ipso facto lapse.

and the accused is not necessarily acquitted in respect of that offence—Emp. v. Jarnali, 26 Cr.L.J. 686 (Lah.).

The composition effected under this section would be a complete bar to a civil suit for damages—Imp. v. Mulo, 6 S.L.R. 284, 14 Cr.L.J. 292.

346. (1) If, in the course of an inquiry or a trial before a Magistrate in any district outside the presidency towns, the evidence appears to him to warrant a presumption that the case is one which should be tried or committed for trial by some other Magistrate in such district, he shall stay proceedings and submit the case, with a brief report explaining its nature, to any Magistrate to whom he is subordinate or to such other Magistrate, having jurisdiction, as the District Magistrate directs.

Procedure of Provincial Magistrate in cases which he cannot dispose of.

(2) The Magistrate to whom the case is submitted may, if so empowered, either try the case himself, or refer it to any Magistrate subordinate to him having jurisdiction, or commit the accused for trial.

1001. When Magistrate should proceed under this section :—(1) The application of this section would be necessary if in the course of proceedings before a Magistrate, it should transpire that the offence committed is apparently one which the particular Magistrate is not competent to try, or one in which it appears that he is in some way personally interested (sec. 556) or which he is declared to be otherwise incompetent to deal with (sec. 482, 487)—Prinsep

(2) Proof of previous conviction against a person accused before a Magistrate will justify his taking action under this section—Q E v Chandra Dallal, 1894 A.W N 200

(3) When a Magistrate finds that he has no jurisdiction to try a case, he should not discharge the accused but should proceed under this section—Munisami, 2 Weir 323 If the offence is within his jurisdiction, he should proceed in the ordinary way, and if it is a Sessions case, commit it to the Sessions, he need not submit the case under this section to a superior Magistrate—Amir Khan v K E, 7 C W N 457

(4) When the evidence discloses circumstances of aggravation, which make the offence one cognizable by a superior tribunal, it becomes the duty of the trying Magistrate to use the proper procedure for sending the case to the higher Court—Q E v Gundaya, 13 Bom 502 No tribunal can properly clutch jurisdiction by intentionally ignoring the facts which make the offence really cognizable by a higher tribunal—Anonymous, 2 Weir 21 and 2 Weir 421; K. E. v Ayyan, 24 Mad 675 Thus, where a theft is accompanied with violence, it becomes a case of robbery, which is beyond the jurisdiction of a second-class Magistrate, and such Magistrate cannot ignore the fact of violence and try the case as one of theft only—Anonymous, 2 Weir 420 (421).

Similarly, no Magistrate is entitled to cut down an offence from that which is established by the evidence in order to give himself summary jurisdiction—In re Chunder Seekor, 1 C.L.R. 434; Bishu Shaik v. Salur, 29 Cal. 409; Ramanand v. Koylash, 11 Cal. 236; Sheo Bhajan v. Mosawi, 27 Cal. 983; Emp. v. Abdool, 4 Cal. 18.

Framing of charge neither necessary nor illegal:—It is not illegal for a Magistrate of the 2nd or 3rd class to frame a charge, even though at the time of framing the charge he intended to submit the case to a superior Magistrate or to the District Magistrate—K. E. v. Nga Po, 1905 U.B.R. (Cr.P.C.) 33. On the other hand, if the inferior Magistrate sends the case to the superior Magistrate, without framing a charge, the superior Magistrate cannot send back the case to the inferior Magistrate, with direction to prepare a charge under a particular section—Q. E. v. Fakira, Ratanlal 499.

1002. Power of the superior Magistrate:—The superior Magistrate to whom the case is submitted may either try the case himself or refer it to any subordinate or commit the accused for trial. But he has no power to send the case back to the Subordinate Magistrate for an order of committal, because the Sub-Magistrate's jurisdiction ceases when he submits the case to the superior Magistrate, and he cannot therefore re-assume jurisdiction and commit the accused—Hampanna, 45 Mad 846, 23 Cr L.J. 710. If the superior Magistrate tries the case himself, he must try it de novo; he cannot convict the accused on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate who submitted the case; he must hear the evidence afresh. Failure to do so vitiates the whole trial; and the fact that the accused did not want the witnesses to be recalled and consented to rely upon the evidence recorded by the submitting Magistrate does not cure the illegality. The special provisions of sec. 350 do not apply where a case is submitted under this section by a subordinate Magistrate to a superior Magistrate—Muhammad v. K. E., 1905 P.L.R. 91; Ambica v. Emp., 19 Cr.L.J. 625 (Pat.), Inayat Husain v. Emp., 1905 P.L.R. 106; In re Paravada China Venku Naidu, 17 L.W. 247, 24 Cr.L.J. 413. The law requires that the Judge by whom the case is to be tried should himself hear all the evidence of the witnesses and form an opinion of their credibility. Where a case partly heard by an inferior Magistrate was brought by a superior Magistrate to his own file, who then recorded the rest of the evidence, and then passed a decision on the whole evidence, the conviction was held to be illegal—Q v. Kullian, 2 N.W.P. 468. If however, the accused is not prejudiced by the evidence not being taken afresh, the High Court will refuse to set aside the conviction—Q E v. Chandra Ballab, 1894 A.W.N. 200.

But if the superior Magistrate, to whom the case is submitted, commits the case to the Sessions, instead of trying it, he need not take the evidence afresh, but can commit the case upon the evidence recorded by the inferior Magistrate—Kamani v. Fakir, 12 C.W.N. 136; Q. E. v. Shesha, Ratanlal 472; Emp. v. Ram Prosad, 12 N.L.R. 146, 18 Cr.L.J. 57.

347. (1) If, in any inquiry before a Magistrate or in any trial before a Magistrate before signing judgment, it appears to him at any stage of the proceedings that the case is one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session or High Court, and if he is empowered to commit for trial, he shall * * * commit the accused under the provisions hereinbefore contained.

(2) If such Magistrate is not empowered to commit for trial, he shall proceed under section 346.

1003. Change:—The words "stop further proceedings and" occurring in the old section between the words "shall" and "commit" have been omitted by sec 91 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923 "This amendment is designed to bring section 347 into line with section 208"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

Under the old law, there was a conflict of opinion as to the meaning of the words "stop further proceedings" In In re Durant, Ratanlal 975, In re Sessions Judge, 17 M L T 83, 15 Cr.L.J. 704 and Phanindra v. Emp., 36 Cal. 49, 12 C.W.N. 1014, a very restricted meaning was assigned to these words, viz., that as soon as the Magistrate considered that the case was one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session, he should at once stop all proceedings and then and there pass an order of commitment to the Sessions, even though neither the witnesses for the prosecution had been cross-examined nor the defence witnesses examined In other words, the power of a Magistrate to make commitment under this section was not subject to the provisions of Chapter XVIII, and the Magistrate was not bound to follow the procedure of that Chapter but could commit even though all the evidence on either side had not been taken

But a more reasonable construction has been given to the words in some other cases Thus, in another Madras case and other cases, the words 'stop further proceedings' have been interpreted to mean that the Magistrate should stop proceeding with the case as a trial and should commit the case to the Sessions, and in thus committing he should adopt the procedure laid down in Chapter XVIII These words do not enable the Magistrate to shorten the proceedings and then and there pass an order of commitment—Kangayya, 36 Mad 321, Emp v Channing Arnold, 6 L B R. 129 (F.B.), 13 Cr L J 877; Uth Bai v Crown, 17 S L.R 188, 26 Cr L.J 148 The words "under the provisions hereinbefore contained" show that the Magistrate must make his proceedings conform to the provisions of Chapter XVIII, that sec. 347 does not override or dispense with the obligation of following Chapter 18, and that before he writes and signs a committal order, the provisions of that Chapter must be followed and he must not conform to the mere passing of the committal order under section 213—Emp. v. Channing Arnold, supra. It was not intended by this section to enable the Magistrate to deprive the accused of any of the rights conferred on him by Chapter XVIII—In re Chinnavan, 15 Cr L.J. 366 (Mad.), and an order of commitment made without taking all such evidence as the accused was prepared to produce before the Magistrate is invalid—Emp. v. Muhammed Hadi, 26 All 177; Q. E. v. Ahmadi, 20 All. 264. In a recent case the Calcutta High Court has also laid down that though the Magistrate decides to commit the case to the Sessions under sec 347, he should still follow the procedure of Chapter XVIII and allow the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses (sec. 208) where the application to cross-examine was made before the charge was framed and before the Magistrate decided to commit the case to the Court of Session—Jyotsna Nath v. Emp., 51 Cal. 442 (445), 26 Cr L.J. 63, A.I.R. 1924 Cal 780.

This latter view will now prevail as a result of the present amendment which has deleted the above ambiguous words. Thus, it has been held in a very recent case that the phrase "under the provisions hereinbefore contained" relates to those provisions in Ch. 18 which define the procedure to be adopted in the inquiries into cases triable by the Court of Session. So, where the evidence recorded is not read over to each witness in the presence of the accused in accordance with the provisions of sec. 360 read with secs. 207 and 208 of Ch. 18, no commitment can be made under sec 347—Damodaran, 52 Mad 995, 57 M L J. 555, 31 Cr.L.J. 273, 1929 Cr. C. 602. If the Magistrate omits to follow the provisions of Ch. 18, and the case comes up to the High Court in revision before the order of commitment is made, the High Court will direct the Magistrate to reopen the inquiry de novo, irrespective of the question whether the accused has been prejudiced by the omission or not—Damodaran, supra. But if the case comes up to the High Court in revision after a committal order has been made, the High Court will not quash the commitment on the ground of omission to follow the procedure of Ch. 18, if the omission has not caused any prejudice to the accused—In re Chinnavan, 15 Cr.L.J. 366.

1004. Procedure :—It is not intended by this section that if the Magistrate finds that an order of commitment is to be made, proceedings under Chapter XVIII are to be commenced de novo—In re Chinnavan, 15 Cr.L.J. 366 (Mad.); Emp. v. Ilahi Balsh, 2 All. 910; therefore, if the Magistrate has already completed the evidence of the complainant and his witnesses, it is not necessary for him to take that evidence afresh. Only in respect of the remaining proceedings the provisions of Chapter XVIII should be followed—Emp. v. Ilahi, supra.

'Ought to be tried' :—See notes under section 207 for the meaning of these words. This section is couched in general terms, and gives the Magistrate very wide powers to commit if he is of opinion that the case is one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session. The discretion vested in the Magistrate under this section cannot be limited by the provisions of sec. 254, that is, there is no suggestion in this section that the only possible reason for a competent Magistrate to commit a case is that he will not be able to pass a sufficiently severe sentence—K. E. v. Ishahat, 3 Rang. 42, 26 Cr.L.J. 1349; Crown Prosecutor v. Bhagavathi, 42 Mad 83 (85), 19 Cr.L.J. 997. The Magistrate's power of committal to the Sessions are not confined to cases where he considers that he cannot give adequate punishment. Other circumstances may be taken into consideration in deciding the question whether a case should be committed to the Sessions, viz., the gravity of the offence, the punishment prescribed for the offence, the section under which the accused is charged, the special difficulties of the case, its public importance, and the wishes of the parties—Krishnaji v Emp 53 Bom 611, 1929 Cr. G. 124, 30 Cr.L.J. 1090 (1095), Emp v Bhimaji 42 Bom 172 (178), 19 Cr.L.J. 342, 20 Bom L.R. 69. If the Magistrate considers, for instance that a complicated question of law arises or that some connected matter is already before the Court of Session or that the facts are such that a trial with the aid of a jury or with the aid of assessors (who may be chosen from experts in the particular matters involved in the case) would be a satisfactory procedure, the Magistrate should commit the case to the Court of Session under sec. 347—Crown Prosecutor v Bhagavathi, supra. Where the editor of a widely circulated newspaper was charged with the offence of sedition, before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, and he applied for commitment of the case to the High Court Sessions, held that the case should be committed under sec. 347, the fact that there was a congestion of work in the High Court Sessions was not a sufficient ground for the Magistrate's refusal to commit—Krishnaji, supra.

If in a case some of the accused persons are charged with an offence which ought to be tried by the Court of Session, and the case against the other accused is a summons case which the Magistrate can try and adequately punish, it is not illegal for the Magistrate to commit all the accused to the Sessions—Ghanu Yakub v Crown, 14 S.L.R. 85, 21 Cr.L.J. 791.

'Before signing judgment'.—The commitment can be made if the judgment has not been given or signed. After signing judgment, no Court can alter or review the same. See sec. 369.

Commitment may be made after framing a charge—Emp v Kudrut-ollah, 3 Cal 495.

348. (1) Whoever, having been convicted of an offence punishable under Chapter

Trial of persons previously convicted of offences against coinage, stamp-law or property.

XII or Chapter XVII of the Indian Penal Code with imprisonment for a term of three years or upwards, is again accused of any offence punishable under either of those Chapters with imprisonment for a term of three years or upwards, shall, if the Magistrate before whom the case is pending is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused, be committed to the Court of Session or High Court, as the case may be, unless the Magistrate is competent to try the case and is of opinion that he can himself pass an adequate sentence if the accused is convicted:

Provided that, if any Magistrate in the district has been invested with powers under section 30, the case may be transferred to him instead of being committed to the Court of Session.

(2) When any person is committed to the Court of Session or High Court under sub-section (1), any other person accused jointly with him in the same inquiry or trial shall be similarly committed, unless the Magistrate discharges such other person under section 209.

Change .—The italicised words have been added by sec 92 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

"If the Magistrate . . . committing the accused" —"This amendment has been made on the lines of section 209 (1) "—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

"Is competent to try the case" —"We have introduced this amendment to make it clear that the section does not empower the Magistrate to pass sentence in a case which he is not competent to try"—Report of the Joint Committee of 1922

In the proviso, the words "any Magistrate in the district" have been substituted for the words "the District Magistrate" occurring in the old section. This amendment is merely verbal.

Sub-section (2) :—"This clause provides that when any person is committed to the Court of Session under sec 348, any other person accused jointly, whom the Magistrate believes to be guilty, shall be similarly committed. Identical treatment will thus be accorded to all the accused"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

Sections 348 and 349 —If the accused is an old offender, the Magistrate should act under this section, and not refer the case to a superior Magistrate under section 349—Dasari Ramudu, 2 Weir 423. That section (sec. 349) does not apply to a case where the accused is an old offender—K. E. v. Po Thue, 4 L.B.R. 282. If a Magistrate instead of proceeding under this section erroneously sends up the case under section 349, it is open to the District Magistrate to take the case on his own file or to transfer it to some other first class Magistrate—Mari Naicken, 2 Weir 422.

1005. Procedure :—The Magistrate must first of all determine, either as a preliminary matter or at any rate before framing a charge, whether there has been a previous conviction. If a previous conviction is proved, the Magistrate will then have to consider whether in the circumstances of the case his powers enable him to try and pass adequate sentence. If he thinks they do not permit, he should not try but commit the case to the Sessions (but he should not discharge the accused); if they do permit, he may try the case himself. If he commits the case to the Sessions, he ought not to find the accused guilty, but should merely frame a charge under section 210, and commit the case for trial under Chapter XVIII—In re Kora Sellandhi 38 Mad 552

Commitment not imperative.—The words "unless convicted" did not exist in the Code of 1892 or in the earlier Codes, and therefore it was imperative on the Magistrate to commit if a previous conviction was proved, and he could not try the case himself—Gaudasing, Ratanlal 704. But the 1893 Code gives a discretion to the Magistrate to try the case himself if he is competent to pass adequate sentence.

1006. Powers of District Magistrate—Under the proviso to this section, if the District Magistrate is invested with powers under sec 30, the case may be transferred to him instead of being committed to the Sessions. In such a case the District Magistrate need not try the case de novo. He can, under section 350, act on the evidence already recorded by the Magistrate who transferred the case. See notes under sub-section (3) of section 350.

If the District Magistrate considers that the case should be committed to the Sessions, he should himself commit, and not send back the case to the Subordinate Magistrate with a direction to commit—Q E v Veeranna, 9 Mad 377. If the District Magistrate commits the case, instead of trying it, he can, it seems, act upon the evidence recorded by the subordinate Magistrate, and need not commence the inquiry de novo. See Q E v Shesha, Ratanlal 472 and Kamani v Fakira, 12 C W N. 136 cited in Note 1002 under sec 346.

349. (1) Whenever a Magistrate of the second or third class, having jurisdiction, is of opinion, after hearing the evidence for the prosecution and the accused, that the accused is guilty, and that he ought to receive a punishment different in kind from, or more severe than, that which such Magistrate is empowered to inflict, or that he ought to be required to execute a bond under section 106, he may record the opinion and submit his proceedings, and forward the accused, to the District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate to whom he is subordinate.

Procedure when Magistrate cannot pass sentence sufficiently severe.

(1A) When more accused than one are being tried together and the Magistrate considers it necessary to proceed under sub-section (1) in regard to any of such accused, he shall forward all the accused who are in his opinion guilty to the District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate.

(2) The Magistrate to whom the proceedings are submitted may, if he thinks fit, examine the parties and recall and examine any witness who has already given evidence in the case, and may call for and take any further evidence, and shall pass such judgment, sentence or order in the case as he thinks fit, and as is according to law :

Provided that he shall not inflict a punishment more severe than he is empowered to inflict under sections 32 and 33.

Change :—Sub-section (1A) has been added by sec. 93 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. This is similar to sub-section (2) of section 348.

1007. Application of section.—The provisions of this section are subject to the express provision of sec 348. Therefore, where the accused is an old offender, a second-class Magistrate should commit him to the Sessions under sec. 348, and not submit the case to the superior Magistrate under this section—Dasari Ramudu, 2 Weir 423, K. E. v. Po Thwe, 4 L B R. 282.

The procedure prescribed by this section is unsuited to cases tried summarily—K. E. v. Jalal Khan, 4 L B R. 277.

1008. Reference to Superior Magistrate :—Who can refer—Only the second or third class Magistrate can refer. A first class Magistrate is not competent to submit the case under this section—Q. E. v. Pershad, 7 All 414

This section does not authorise any Bench of Magistrates to refer a case for higher punishment—K. E. v. Jalal, 4 L B R 277.

Reference discretionary :—Whether a case ought to be referred to the superior Magistrate or not is within the discretion of the subordinate Magistrate, and the District Magistrate cannot direct the subordinate Magistrate to send up the case under this section. If he so directs, his order is ultra vires—Anonymous, 2 Weir 427.

To whom case can be referred :—The case can be referred to the District Magistrate or the Magistrate to whom the referring Magistrate is subordinate, and to no other Magistrate—Emp v. Vinayak, 38 Bom 719. 16 Cr L J 273

When reference can be made :—This section authorises a reference to the superior Magistrate when the subordinate Magistrate considers that the accused should receive a severer sentence than he himself is competent to inflict. If the punishment which the subordinate Magistrate proposed was one which he himself could inflict, the reference was improper and the Magistrate should himself try the case—In re Phulla, 1891 A.W.N. 99. When a case was sent to the District Magistrate not because the referring Magistrate was not competent to pass a severe sentence but on the ground that it was advisable that the matter should be dealt with by the District Magistrate, it was held that the transfer was neither under sec. 349 nor under sec. 192, and therefore the conviction made by the District Magistrate was illegal and must be set aside—Q. E. v. Radhe, 12 All 66.

Under this section the Magistrate can make a reference to a superior Magistrate if he considers that the accused should receive a severer punishment than he can inflict, it does not apply where the Magistrate thinks that the accused should be dealt with under section 562, because an order under sec. 562 directing release upon probation of good conduct is not a punishment—Baba v. Emp., 24 Cr L J 738 (Nag).

1009. Powers and duties of referring Magistrate :—

If the subordinate Magistrate submits the case to the higher Magistrate for severer punishment, he cannot convict the accused, the conviction and sentence are reserved for the higher Magistrate. The referring Magistrate is only required to state his opinion that the accused is guilty, but he cannot convict—Q. E. v. Mahadu, Ratnalal 387; Prayag Gope v. K. L., 3 Pat 1015 (1017), 5 P L T 571, 25 Cr L J. 1276. If the subordinate Magistrate not only records his opinion that the accused is guilty (as he is required to do) but also convicts the accused, the conviction will be treated as a mere surplusage or as a legal nullity, and the Magistrate to whom the case is sent can proceed with it without a reference to the High Court for the purpose of having the conviction formally quashed—Emp. v. Narayan, 52 Bom. 456, 30 Bom. L.R. 620, 29 Cr L J. 901 (905). The referring Magistrate can frame a charge if he likes, and the framing of charge is not illegal—Emp. v. Po Yin, 17 Cr L J 201 (Bur.), K. L. v. Hla Gyi, 2 L.B.R. 285; Q. E. v. Konda, Ratnalal 948.

If the subordinate Magistrate sends the case for the purpose of binding down the accused under sec. 106, the Magistrate should neither convict nor pass sentence himself. The conviction, sentence and the orders for security are all to be passed by the superior Magistrate—Mysore v. Sheikh v. Ali Sheikh, 21 Cal 622. Rohmuddi v. Emp., 35 Cal. 153.

'Forward the accused'—The reason of forwarding the accused is that the accused has a right to be present at the proceedings held before the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred, such proceedings are a continuation of the proceedings before the referring Magistrate—J. Gunesh, 7 W R 38. The right exists even though the referring Magistrate does not examine the parties or recall and re-examine them and the accused will be at liberty to contend before the superior Magistrate.

there is no sufficient case made out against him, and the Magistrate if he thinks so, may discharge or acquit him—Reg. v. Raghya, 7 B H C.R. 31.

Sub-section (1A) :—It was held under the old section that where several accused were charged before the subordinate Magistrate, he could convict some of them and send up the others to the superior Magistrate, such a procedure was not improper nor the conviction illegal, but in such a case it was more advisable to forward all the accused to the superior Magistrate instead of convicting some of the accused—Raghava, 2 Weir 428, Nachian, 2 Weir 429. The new sub-section (1A) now makes it imperative on the Magistrate, under such circumstances, to forward all the accused to the superior Magistrate. See K. E. v. Dodo, 18 S.L.R. 216, 26 Cr.L.J. 1363.

But if there are several accused, and the Magistrate finds only one of them to be guilty, he should not send all the accused to the superior Magistrate, but should acquit the accused whom he finds not guilty and send that accused alone whom he considers guilty—Sultan Md. v. Emp., 24 A.L.J. 60, 26 Cr.L.J. 1630.

1010. Sub-section (2) :—Powers and duties of the Superior Magistrate :—When a case is referred to a superior Magistrate, the whole case is opened up for him to deal with it according to his own discretion—Q. E. v. Bapuda, Ratanlal 350. In dealing with the case, he should not confine himself to considering whether the decision of the subordinate Magistrate was plainly and manifestly opposed to the evidence, but he should find on the evidence the facts which he considers proved and pass judgment accordingly—Q. E. v. Appaji, Ratanlal 636, Anonymous, 5 M H C.R. App. 43. If the superior Magistrate convicts the accused for an aggravated form of the offence, he must commence the trial afresh for such offence and cannot act on the evidence already recorded—Anonymous, 2 Weir 21 (22) and 2 Weir 428. So also, if the offence is one which is beyond the jurisdiction of the subordinate Magistrate to try, the superior Magistrate cannot act upon the evidence already recorded by the subordinate Magistrate—Q. E. v. Sitaram, 1 Bom. L.R. 27. The Magistrate to whom a case is transferred is competent to pass 'such judgment, sentence or order as he thinks fit'. He is free to deal with the case according to his own discretion, and he can, if he thinks fit, order a commitment to the Court of Session—Q. E. v. Chinnappa, Ratanlal 945; In re Chinnimangodu, 1 Mad. 289, Q. E. v. Viranna 9 Mad 377; Abdul Wahab v. Chaudia, 13 Cal 395, Emp. v. Abdulla, 4 Bom. 240. He has to make up his mind whether the accused are guilty or not and exercise his own independent judgment in the case, and to write a judgment conformable to the requirements of section 367. He cannot simply pass sentence on the accused without writing any judgment—Kerupia v. Emp., 1920 M.W.N. 120, 54 I.C. 404, 21 Cr.L.J. 52.

The superior Magistrate to whom the case is referred has no power to send back the case to the subordinate Magistrate upon any ground whatsoever. He must dispose of it himself by acquitting or convicting the accused or by committing him for trial—Emp. v. Thakur Dajal, 26

All. 314, Q. E. v. Chinnappa, Ratnahl 945; Dula v. Bhagirat, 6 C.L.R. 276; and even if the case is sent back to the subordinate Magistrate, the latter cannot take up the case; after he has referred the case his jurisdiction over it ceases, and any order passed by him would be illegal—Dula v. Bhagirat, supra; Q. E. v. Hara, 10 Bom 196. If the superior Magistrate thinks that a commitment to the Sessions is necessary, he himself should make the commitment he cannot send back the case to the referring Magistrate with direction to commit the case to the Sessions—Q. E. v. Varanna, 9 Mad 377. If however, the reference is defective, e.g. if the referring Magistrate has omitted to record in writing the statement of the accused, as required by section 364, the superior Magistrate can return the case with a direction to supply the defect, and the subordinate Magistrate in such a case is also competent to come to a fresh and different conclusion as to the guilt of the accused and acquit some of them—Anonymous 2 Weir 426.

Moreover, the Magistrate to whom a case is referred cannot refer the case to another Magistrate for inquiry—Anonymous 6 M H C R App 2, Anonymous, 4 Mad 23, Ponnusamy v Emp. 36 Mad 470. K E v Nga Po, 1905 U B R (Cr P C) 33. A case once referred under this section cannot be referred to another Magistrate for inquiry or trial—Emp. v Vinayak 38 Bom 719. Even if the superior Magistrate thinks that the reference by the inferior Magistrate was incorrect or illegal, he can report it for orders under section 438, but himself cannot quash the reference and order retrial by another Magistrate—Jawind Singh v Emp. 1900 P R 14.

The superior Magistrate can act upon the evidence already recorded by the subordinate Magistrate and is not bound to hold a de novo trial under sec 350—Raghava, 2 Weir 428 (429). This is now made clear by the amendment made in sub-section (2) of sec 350 which lays down that that section does not apply to a transfer of proceedings under section 349. See K. E v Dodo, 18 S.L.R 216, 26 Cr L.J 1363.

350. (1) Whenever any Magistrate, after having heard and recorded the whole or any part of the evidence in an inquiry or a trial, ceases to exercise jurisdiction therein, and is succeeded by another Magistrate who has

and who exercises such jurisdiction, the Magistrate so succeeding may act on the evidence so recorded by his predecessor, or partly recorded by his predecessor and partly recorded by himself; or he may re-summon the witnesses and recommence the inquiry or trial:

Provided as follows:—

(a) in any trial the accused may, when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings, demand that the witnesses or any of them be re-summoned and re-heard;

- (b) the High Court, or in cases tried by Magistrates subordinate to the District Magistrate, the District Magistrate may, whether there be an appeal or not, set aside any conviction passed on evidence not wholly recorded by the Magistrate before whom the conviction was held, if such Court or District Magistrate is of opinion that the accused has been materially prejudiced thereby, and may order a new inquiry or trial.

(2) Nothing in this section applies to cases in which proceedings have been stayed under section 346 or in which proceedings have been submitted to a superior Magistrate under section 349.

(3) When a case is transferred under the provisions of this Code from one Magistrate to another, the former shall be deemed to cease to exercise jurisdiction therein and to be succeeded by the latter within the meaning of sub-section (1).

Change :—The italicised words have been added by section 94 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below in their proper places.

1011. Object and scope of section :—The general principle is that a case must be decided by the Magistrate who heard the evidence. But if this principle has to be strictly observed, it will follow that in every case of transfer, the succeeding Magistrate will have to try from the beginning all cases which have been partly heard by his predecessor-in-office, and there will be endless delay in trials. And this section is obviously intended to meet such cases—Hardwar v. Khago, 20 Cal. 870; Janglal v. Emp, 19 Cr L.J. 657 (Nag). In view of the frequent changes in the office of Magistrates, the Code provides specially that a Magistrate may pronounce judgment on evidence recorded by his predecessor or on evidence partly recorded by his predecessor and partly by himself—Tarada v. Q, 3 Mad. 112.

This section applies not only where one Magistrate is succeeded by another but also where the second Magistrate is in his turn succeeded by another Magistrate. The third Magistrate can act on evidence recorded by his two predecessors. This section is not confined to a case where there is only a single occurrence of one Magistrate succeeding another—Gourdan v. Krishnam, 45 M L J. 404

This section gives the succeeding Magistrate jurisdiction to decide the case on evidence recorded by his predecessor, but it cannot give him jurisdiction to deliver a judgment written by his predecessor. Where the Magistrate who heard the evidence and tried the case was transferred to another district, and from that place he sent a written judgment which was pronounced by his successor at the place where the case was tried, held that there was no jurisdiction to do so and the conviction and sentence so passed were illegal and that the accused must be retried—Baisnab Charan v. Arun Ali, 50 Cal 661, 38 C L J 202, 21 Cr L J. 489; Mad. Rafique v K E., 43 C L J 100, 27 Cr L J 406. But the Madras High Court and the Oudh Chief Court hold that the succeeding Magistrate can sign and pronounce the judgment written by his predecessor and thus adopt it as his own—In re Savarimuthu 40 Mad 108, 32 M L J. 81, Chandika v Emp., 28 O C 109, 11 O L J 725, In re Sankara Pillai, 18 M L J. 197, 7 Cr L J 459

1012. Application of section (1) This section applies to an inquiry under Chap VIII therefore where a Magistrate holding an inquiry under section 107 is transferred after the examination of some prosecution witnesses and is succeeded by another, the person called upon to shew cause why he should not give security may under proviso (a) insist upon the re-summoning and re-examination of those witnesses—Buroda v Karimuddi, 4 C L R 452 Venkatachinnayya, 43 Mad 551 (F B)

(2) This section is applicable to proceedings under section 145. Where in the course of such proceedings one Magistrate is transferred, the succeeding Magistrate can act upon the evidence already recorded—Ali Mahomed v Tarak 13 C W N 420, Anu v Jitu, 37 Cal 812, Sondi Singh v Govind Singh, 5 P L T 237, 25 Cr L J 89, Syed Sadek v Sachindra, 37 C L J 128, 24 Cr L J 569

(3) This section applies to inquiries preliminary to commitments. The succeeding Magistrate can commit the case to the Sessions on evidence recorded by his predecessor-in-office—Sessions Judge v Malunga, 31 Mad 40, K. E. v Nanhua, 36 All 315, 15 Cr L J 354, Ghulam Jannat v. Emp., 7 Lah 70, 27 Cr L J 627

(4) This section would enable a Magistrate to try a case in which his predecessor has issued a process and granted adjournment, but has recorded no evidence—Q. E. v. Govinda, Ratanlal 652

(5) This section does not apply to cases tried by Benches of Magistrates—Damri v. Bhowani, 23 Cal 194, Q E. v Basappa, 18 Mad. 394, Hardwar v Khega, 20 Cal 870; Girdhari v Crown, 2 Lah 237, Abdul Ghani v. Emp., 1922 P.L.R. 1, 22 Cr.L.J. 511, Itala v K E., 9 Bur L T. 203, 18 Cr.L.J 96. Even the new section 350A does not apply where one Magistrate of a Bench is replaced by another; that section contemplates cases wherein all the Magistrates constituting the Bench have heard the proceedings throughout. See Note 1019 under that section.

(6) This section applies only to Magistrates but not to Sessions Judges. A Sessions Judge is not competent to pronounce judgment on evidence recorded by his predecessor, or on evidence partly recorded by his predecessor and partly by himself—Q. v. Ramdoyal, 21 W R. 47; Durga Charan v. Emp., 8 C L J. 59; Tarada v. Q., 3 Mad. 112; Badri Prasad v. Emp., 35 All 63, 13 Cr L.J. 861. Even the consent of the accused would not enable the Sessions Judge to do so and validate such procedure—K E v. Sakharam, 26 Bom. 50; Bhuta Singh v. Emp., 1890 P R. 1, Q. v. Salamat, 23 W R. 59

(7) This section refers to cases where one Magistrate is succeeded by another Magistrate, and does not apply where the Magistrate remains the same and his official designation is merely changed. Thus, where a Head Assistant Magistrate, having almost completed the trial of a criminal case, was appointed to the office of a Deputy Magistrate in another place in the same District, and the case was brought on to his file to the latter place by order of the District Magistrate, he could proceed to try the case from the point at which he had arrived as Head Assistant Magistrate prior to his transfer to the post of Deputy Magistrate, and the accused cannot demand under proviso (a) that the trial must be commenced de novo—Karuppana v. Ahobalamalam, 22 Mad. 47.

(8) This section does not apply where the District Magistrate holds further inquiry into a case under section 437 (now 436). In such a case, he must hold the inquiry de novo and cannot rely on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate who previously tried the case—Q. E. v. Hasnu, 6 All 367

1013. "Succeeded" :—A liberal construction should be put upon the provisions of section 350. Where on the death of a Magistrate empowered under section 30, the District Magistrate, being the only remaining Magistrate in the district having powers under that section, took upon his file a case which was being tried by the deceased, it was held that the District Magistrate must be regarded as having succeeded the deceased Magistrate within the meaning of this section—Gorelal v. Emp., 19 Cr. L J 705 (Nag). When a case is transferred from one Magistrate to another, the former Magistrate is said to be 'succeeded' by the latter. See sub-section (3) and notes thereunder.

1014. 'Recommence the inquiry or trial' :—If the succeeding Magistrate chooses to recommence the trial, he must recommence by resummoning and re-examining the witnesses. But he cannot go to any stage previous to that. He cannot dismiss the complaint under section 203—Balram v. Baldeo, 7 C.P.L.R. 36, or refer the case to the Police under section 202 for inquiry and report—Sadappachariar v. Ragunadachariar, 9 Mad. 282.

If a charge has already been framed by the preceding Magistrate, the succeeding Magistrate cannot cancel the charge—Sriramulu v. Krishna Row, 39 Mad. 585; Crown v. Nathu, 1903 P.R. 14; Sirhadri v. Sitaram, 2 L.W. 1244, 17 Cr L J. 1. The principle is, that if the proceedings before the preceding Magistrate have developed into the stage of a trial by the frame of a charge, the succeeding Magistrate cannot go beyond the stage of trial and transform the trial proceedings into an inquiry by cancellation of the charge—Sriramulu v. Krishna Row, 38 Mad. 585. And since the succeeding Magistrate cannot cancel the charge, an order subsequently passed letting off the accused is one of acquittal and not one of discharge—Simhadri v. Sitarama, supra; Sriramulu v. Krishna, 38 Mad. 585.

If a trial is commenced de novo by the succeeding Magistrate, he must observe all the procedure of the trial and cannot omit any part of the procedure. Where in a de novo trial the Magistrate omitted to examine the prosecution witnesses (who had already been examined by the preceding Magistrate) but allowed them to be cross-examined by the defence, it was held that the trial was not in due compliance with this section and ought to be set aside—Sobh Nath v. Emp., 12 C.W.N. 138; Sidik v. Emp., 20 S.L.R. 50, 27 Cr.L.J. 332. A de novo trial means a trial from the beginning of the case. The object of granting a de novo trial is to enable the Magistrate who hears the case to see the way in which the witnesses give evidence before him, to mark their demeanour and thereby to be in a position to judge of their credibility. This object is lost if the witnesses are not examined again but are only allowed to be cross-examined by the accused. Such a procedure is not a de novo trial, and the conviction of the accused must be set aside—Narayana v. Bojanna, 49 M.L.J. 423, 26 Cr.L.J. 1596. Similarly, where the Magistrate holding the de novo trial merely read over to the accused the deposition of the prosecution witnesses (recorded by the preceding Magistrate) though he allowed them to be cross-examined, the procedure was held to be illegal—Hnin v. Than Pe, 19 Cr.L.J. 321, 9 L.B.R. 92, 44 I.C. 337, Mangal Singh v. Crown, 1919 P.W.R. 16; Mangal Singh v. Emp., 22 Cr.L.J. 119 (Lah). A Magistrate proceeding to recommence the inquiry or trial cannot rely upon the previously recorded evidence—Kartar v. Emp., 28 Cr.L.J. 302 (Lah). Cf. In re Rangaswami, 52 Mad. 73, 30 Cr.L.J. 183 (184).

Transfer of Magistrate to his original place—Before the conclusion of the trial the trying Magistrate was transferred. Thereupon the case was transferred to the file of a superior Magistrate who began to try it de novo. Afterwards the original Magistrate was re-transferred to his original place, and the superior Magistrate transferred the case to him with a direction to proceed from where he had originally left it. It was held that the inferior Magistrate must try the case de novo, and could not proceed from where he had originally left the case, because all that had taken place before the inferior Magistrate originally had been superseded—Daroga Choudhury v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 638 (Pat.), Jago Singh v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 820 (Pat.), Emp. v. Anand Sarup, 3 All 563.

Transfer of case to the original Magistrate—A Magistrate was transferred after he had finished the major portion of the trial of a case. The succeeding Magistrate granted a de novo trial. But the District Magistrate was of opinion that as only a small amount of work remained to be done in the case, it could be best done by the Magistrate who had commenced the case, and so he (Dt. Magistrate) transferred the case to the original Magistrate. Held that even the original Magistrate to whom the case was thus transferred could not take up the case from the point at which he had left it, but that he must start the case de novo, because as soon as he was transferred all the proceedings which had previously taken place before him were wiped out—Sardar Khan Saheb v. Aithanulla, 47 M.L.J. 926, 26 Cr.L.J. 510. In another case it has been held that the District Magistrate cannot transfer the case to the original Magistrate (who has no more jurisdiction to proceed with the case), but that the new Magistrate who has taken up the case de novo must proceed with the trial—Sriranga v. Subramania, 24 L.W. 640, 28 Cr.L.J. 23 (24).

1015. Proviso (a) -Right of Accused:—Under the proviso (a), the accused has a right to demand that the witnesses or any of them shall be resummoned or reheard. The policy of the law is that an accused should be able to claim a right not to be convicted by a Magistrate who has not himself heard the whole evidence—Sahib Din v. Crown, 3 Lah. 115, 23 Cr.L.J. 330. The accused can exercise his right under the proviso (a) in case of a trial only; where a preliminary inquiry before commitment is transferred before frame of charge, the accused is not as of right entitled to an inquiry de novo—Palanlandy, 32 Mad. 218, Crown v. Nathu, 1903 P.R. 14. Proceedings in a warrant case before a charge is framed are merely an inquiry and not a trial, and if a case is transferred at that stage, the accused cannot demand a fresh examination of witnesses to be made by the succeeding Magistrate—Ramanathan v. K. E., 46 Mad. 719. But the accused is not altogether without a remedy, because as soon as the charge is framed by the succeeding Magistrate, he can under sec. 256 recall all the prosecution witnesses whose evidence has been taken, and thus he has a right equivalent to that of demanding a de novo trial—Palanlandy v. Emp., 32 Mad. 218 (219). But according to the Calcutta High Court a trial commences as soon as the case is called on with the Magistrate on the Bench, the accused on the dock, and the representatives of the prosecution and for the defence are present in Court for the hearing of the case. The proper time for the accused to ask for resummoning and rehearing of the witnesses is as soon as the trial commences before the second Magistrate—Gomar Sirdar v. Q. E., 25 Cal. 863. In trials of summons cases and in summary trials, the time when the accused is to demand that the witnesses shall be resummoned and reheard is when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings—Sahib Din v. Crown, 3 Lah. 115, 23 Cr.L.J. 330.

According to the Calcutta High Court, this proviso applies only to a trial and does not apply to an inquiry under section 145, consequently, a Magistrate has power to proceed with the inquiry of a case under sec. 145, where a portion of the evidence has been recorded by his predecessor, and he is not bound to start the proceeding de novo on the application of the accused—Syed Sadek v. Sachindra, 37 C.L.J. 128; Sondi Singh v. Govind, 5 P.L.T. 237, 25 Cr.L.J. 89. But a Full Bench of the Madras High Court has laid down that the proviso (a) applies to an inquiry under sec. 117, because such inquiry, according to sub-section (2) of sec. 117, is made in the manner prescribed for conducting "trials" in summons or warrant cases and in fact has all the features of a trial—Venkata Chinnaya v. K. E., 43 Mad 511 (F B). This is also the view of the Oudh Court—Baij Nath, v Emp., 27 O C. 323, 25 Cr L J 1380.

The accused person must himself claim or waive the right. Where a case was transferred from one Magistrate to another, and during the arguments on the transfer application the pleader for the accused stated his intention not to have a de novo trial in the Court to which the case was transferred, and subsequently the accused demanded a trial de novo, It was held that there was no waiver of the right under this section, and that there must be a de novo trial—Jangi Lal, 19 Cr L J 657 (Nag).

The Magistrate is not bound to ascertain from the accused whether he wishes to exercise the right conferred by this proviso. This section confers the right on the accused to demand, and does not prescribe that the Magistrate shall ask the accused whether he will exercise the right or not—Nga Po v. K. E., U.B.R. (1912) 151. The Magistrate is not bound to have the accused brought before him to ascertain whether he wishes to exercise this right—Kesram v. Emp., 1884 P R. 6. An omission on the part of the Magistrate to ask the accused whether he wants evidence to be reheard is a mere irregularity, curable by sec. 537. In Barachi v. K. E., 10 Bur. L.T. 73, 17 Cr.L.J. 401, however, it has been held that it is necessary for the Magistrate to acquaint the accused with the fact that he is entitled to have the witnesses re-called and re-examined. There are many cases in which it is desirable that the Magistrate who passes judgment should have the opportunity of seeing the witnesses.

But there is no doubt that if the accused wants the evidence to be reheard, the Magistrate must recommence the trial—Hnyin v. Than Pe, 9 L.B.R. 92, 19 Cr.L.J. 321, and the refusal by the Magistrate to do so would be an illegality not curable by sec. 537—Amir Khan v. Emp., 1903 P.R. 3; Gomer Sirdar v. Q. E., 25 Cal. 863.

An accused can demand a de novo trial on the ground of transfer of the trying Magistrate, but not on the ground that that Magistrate had not heard his counsel—Chandika Prosad v. K. E., 28 O C. 109, 25 Cr.L.J. 1075.

Where the accused claims under this section to have the witnesses re-examined by the succeeding Magistrate, the witnesses should be re-summoned without the payment of any fees—Elias v. Ezakiel, 8 Bur. L.T. 43.

Under this clause, when a trial is held de novo, it is the duty of the Magistrate, on the desire of the accused, to re-summon the witnesses. But the Magistrate can resummon only those witnesses who are available. If any witness dies in the meantime, and the evidence which he gave before the previous Magistrate is proved and relied upon, and the other witnesses are resummoned, the procedure is quite in accordance with law—Lekal v. Emp., 8 Lah 570, 28 Cr.L.J. 451.

1016. Proviso (b) :—A District Magistrate can under proviso (b) set aside a conviction passed by a first class Magistrate in the district though no appeal lies from his order to the District Magistrate—Q. E. v. Pitya Gopal, 9 Bom 100; Opendra v. Dukhini, 12 Cal 473, Q. E. v. Laskari, 7 All. 853; In re Padmanabha, 8 Mad 18.

1017. Sub-section (2) :—The procedure laid down in this section does not apply to proceedings stayed under sec. 346—Muhammad v. K. E., 1905 P.R. 25. Thus, where a Magistrate trying a case was of opinion that the accused deserved a severer punishment than he could inflict, and stayed the proceedings and submitted the case to the District Magistrate under sec. 346, it was held that the District Magistrate could not convict the accused on the evidence recorded by the referring Magistrate even though the accused did not want the evidence to be reheard—Muhammed v. K. E., 1905 P.R. 25, Ambika v. Emp., 19 Cr.L.J. 625 (Pat). In such a case the accused has no power to waive his right to a trial de novo; and the failure to hold a trial de novo is an illegality which vitiates the whole trial and is not merely an irregularity covered by sec. 537—Ambika v. Emp., 19 Cr.L.J. 625 (Pat).

This subsection as now amended further lays down that the procedure of this section does not apply to sec. 349. Even prior to this amendment it was held that the superior Magistrate to whom a case had been transferred under section 349 could act upon the evidence already recorded by the subordinate Magistrate and was not bound to hold a de novo trial—Raghava, 2 Weir 428. This is now made clear by the present amendment. See K. E. v. Dodo, 18 S.L.R. 216, 26 Cr.L.J. 1363.

1018. Sub-section (3) —Transfer of proceedings :—Subsection (1) applies where the Magistrate is transferred from one place to another, the case remaining in the same Court. But does that subsection apply where a case is transferred from one Magistrate to another, under section 528, the Magistrate remaining in the same post? In other words, does that subsection apply to transfer of cases as well, or is it confined only to transfer of Magistrates only? There was some difference of opinion under the old section as to this question. In the following cases, it has been held that this section covers cases where proceedings are transferred by section 528 from the Court of one Magistrate to that of another: because as soon as a case is transferred from one Magistrate to another the former 'ceases to exercise jurisdiction' in the case within the meaning of this section—Mahesh v. Emp., 35 Cal. 457, Kadrutulla v. Emp., 39 Cal. 781; Palaniandy v. Emp., 32 Mad. 218, Barachi v. Emp., 10 Bur. L.T. 73, 17 Cr.L.J. 401; Chandra Kishore v. K. E., 21 C.W.N. 755; Ramdas v. Emp., 40 All. 307, Nanhua, 36 All. 315, Albar Ali v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 41 (Nag); Ganga Chetty v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 496; Rupa Singh v. Emp., 22 Cr.L.J. 82, 1 P.L.T. 679. But the contrary view was taken in the following cases—Q. E. v. Angnu, 1889 A.W.N. 130; Dy. Leg. Rem. v. Upendra, 12 C.W.N. 140; Crown v. La Tok, 1 L.B.R. 301; Q. E. v. Radhe, 12 All. 66, Q. E. v. Bashir, 14 All. 346; Lavya v. Emp., 1 N.L.R. 187.

To remove this conflict of opinion, subsection (3) has been added, adopting the former view. "There has been some difference of opinion as to the position when cases are transferred from one Magistrate to another otherwise than from a predecessor to a successor in office. The Amendment provides that the Magistrate from whom the case is transferred shall be deemed to cease to have jurisdiction within the meaning of this section"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

350A. No order or judgment of a Bench of Magistrates shall be invalid by reason only of a change having occurred in the constitution of the Bench in any case in which the Bench by which such order or judgment is passed is duly constituted under sections 15 and 16, and the Magistrates constituting the same have been present on the Bench throughout the proceedings.

Changes in constitution of Benches.

This section has been added by sec. 95 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

In the Bill of 1921, it was intended to add the following sub-section to section 350 :—

"(4) The provisions of this section shall apply, so far as may be, to proceedings before any Bench of Magistrates constituted under section 15 wherever the Magistrates sitting together in any proceeding are not the same as those who were sitting together at the last hearing thereof "

In other words, it was intended to lay down that if during the hearing of a trial, any Magistrate of a Bench was absent and was replaced by another, such a change would not affect the proceeding and the trial need not be commenced de novo; the new Magistrate would be able to act on the evidence already recorded. But this clause did not meet with the approval of the Joint Committee who observed, "We think, however, that the new sub-section (4) which has been introduced in the Bill to deal with the case of Benches goes somewhat too far, and we have substituted for it a new section after section 350 which in our opinion gives effect to the law as laid down by the High Courts. Briefly, it provides that a judgment of a Bench shall be valid when the Bench is duly constituted at the time of passing the judgment and the judgment is passed by Magistrates all of whom have heard the proceedings throughout"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

1019. All Magistrates must be present throughout :—This section lays down that all the Magistrates who take part in the judgment must have been present throughout the proceedings. If one of them has been absent during the trial or during a portion of the trial and has not heard all the evidence, he cannot take part in the judgment. Thus, where the evidence for the prosecution was taken before two Honorary Magistrates A and B and on a subsequent day the evidence for the defence was taken and judgment delivered by B and C, held that as C was not present throughout the proceeding, the trial was bad. The High Court set aside the decision and ordered a new trial—Hardwar v

Khaga, 20 Cal. 870 (873); Q. E. v. Basappa, 18 Mad. 394. Where the evidence for the prosecution was heard by three Magistrates A, B and C, and on a subsequent day four different Magistrates, D, E, F and G, none of whom had previously attended, recorded the evidence for the defence and acquitted the accused, held that the trial must be set aside—Ram Sundar v. Rajab, 12 Cal. 558 (559); Itala v. Emp., 8 L.B.R. 463, 18 Cr. L.J. 96. Where the trial of the accused was commenced before a Bench of four Magistrates who heard part of the evidence, and continued before the same four Magistrates and another who joined as the fifth, and all the five Magistrates delivered judgment, held that the trial was vitiated and there must be a retrial—Re Subramania, 38 Mad. 304 (305); Damri v. Bhowani, 23 Cal. 194 (195). Only those persons who have heard the whole of the evidence can decide the case. If the trial is commenced by two Magistrates A and B, and then a third member C joins and takes part in the decision, the trial is vitiated. Although the two Magistrates A and B have heard the evidence throughout, it is impossible to say to what extent their opinion may not have been influenced by the third Magistrate who has only heard a portion of the evidence—Damri v. Bhowani, supra. Four Magistrates A, B, C and D, commenced the trial. But A was absent during a part of the trial, but eventually he, with the three other Magistrates who had been sitting throughout the trial, signed the order convicting the accused. Held that the trial was vitiated, as A was absent during a part of the proceedings, even though the three Magistrates sat throughout the proceeding and formed the quorum according to rules. It is wrong that a Magistrate who has been absent during a part of the trial should express an opinion on evidence which he has not heard and very possibly influence his fellow Magistrates, although they are in a better position than he is to decide the case—Emp. v. Gangappa, 23 Bom.L.R. 833, 22 Cr.L.J. 615, 63 I.C. 151 (152). Where in a trial before a Bench consisting of three Magistrates, one of them was absent after the commencement of the trial, and important evidence was recorded in his absence, but on the following day he joined with the other Magistrates in signing the order of conviction of the accused, the conviction was held to be bad—Shumbhu v. Ram Komul, 13 C.L.R. 212. This section practically lays down that sec. 350 does not apply to trials before Benches of Magistrates; that in such trials the case should be decided by the Magistrates who have heard the whole of the evidence—Damri v. Bhowani, supra, Hardwar v. Khaga, supra, Itala v. Emp., 8 L.B.R. 463, 18 Cr.L.J. 96; Girdhari v. Crown, 2 Lah. 237 (238); Abdul Ghani, 1922 P.L.R. 1, 22 Cr.L.J. 511, 62 I.C. 335. In an Allahabad case a trial was partly held before J and N who heard the prosecution evidence, and the case was adjourned and on the next day was heard by J and P, before whom the prosecution witness was cross-examined and defence evidence was taken; the case was again adjourned and on the third day J and N proceeded to deliver judgment. Held that the judgment ought to have been delivered by J and P who had heard the major portion of the evidence—Emp. v. Mathura, 41 All. 116 (125). This case was decided with reference to certain rules framed by the U. P. Government as to the constitution of Benches, and also with reference to the circumstances of the case. But it is no longer good law in view of the present section 350A, because the Magistrate P was not present throughout the proceedings.

Where out of three Magistrates constituting a Bench, only one is present on all hearings throughout the trial, sitting sometimes with one, sometimes with the other, and sometimes with both, the trial is bad as contravening the provisions of this section, even though the quorum consisted of two—Banwari v. Emp., 7 Lah. 122, 27 Cr.L.J. 463. Thus, a Bench of Magistrates consisted of A, B and C. A and B began the trial and recorded a portion of the evidence. B and C sat at the next two hearings, and all the three sat at the subsequent hearings and signed the judgment. Held that the trial was bad as it contravened the provisions of this section, even though the quorum required was only two—Suraj Bali v. Emp., 4 O.W.N. 1240, 29 Cr.L.J. 310 (311), Brij Bhukhan v. Ram Kirat, 10 O.L.J. 614, 25 Cr.L.J. 198, A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 163 (165). In order that the conviction should be legal, it must be by a quorum of Magistrates required under the rules, each of whom has heard the whole evidence—Emp. v. Nihchal, 13 S.L.R. 166, 53 I.C. 609, 20 Cr.L.J. 760.

1020. Absence of unnecessary Magistrates :—Where a trial was begun before a Bench of seven Magistrates, and when the judgment was pronounced, only five out of the seven were present, and these five members constituted a legal Bench, it was held that the mere circumstance that two out of the seven Magistrates were absent on the day on which the accused was convicted did not affect the legality of the conviction, as the other five Magistrates who legally constituted the Bench attended the trial from beginning to end—Karuppana v. Chairman, 21 Mad. 246. Where two Magistrates who decided a case sat throughout the trial and constituted as quorum of the Bench, the trial would not be vitiated by the mere fact that two other Magistrates who were not necessary to the quorum and who were present at the time of the commencement of the inquiry were not on the Bench at the time of the decision of the case—Venkatrama v. Swaminatha, 38 Mad. 797, 15 Cr.L.J. 549, Balbhadri v. Tibhuban, 6 Cr.L.J. 43, 3 N.L.R. 67, Khuda Bakhsh v. Emp., 15 A.L.J. 463, 18 Cr.L.J. 749. But if by reason of the absence of a member, the remaining members did not legally constitute the Bench, the trial could not proceed. Thus, where a Bench consisted of A, B and C, but A was absent on the first day of trial when the witness was examined and also on the day of judgment, it was held that the conviction of the accused by B and C alone was bad and that there must be a retrial—In re Tantraval, Bapiraju, 36 M.L.J. 362, 20 Cr.L.J. 823, 51 I.C. 824.

Want of quorum .—Where a Bench of Magistrates constituted by the Local Government is, under the notification, required to consist of not less than two members, one member of the Bench alone adjudicate upon a case—K. E. v. Lado 1902 A.Y. 12. Where a case was tried by a Bench of Magistrates, one of whom was absent during the evidence while the other was sitting close by and present, the trial was bad.

case, held that as the hearing took place practically before only one of the Honorary Magistrates, the order must be set aside and the case tried de novo—Sultan v. Shamser, 25 O.C. 182, 23 Cr.L.J. 696, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 21. Where the rules relating to a Bench of Magistrates provide that two members shall constitute the quorum, the evidence recorded by a Magistrate sitting singly is not evidence recorded in a Court, and the mere reading over to the Bench, when properly constituted, of the statements so recorded would not render those statements admissible as evidence—Emp v. Gulu, 20 S.L.R. 134, 27 Cr.L.J. 542 (543). Similarly, a trial by two members of a Bench which according to rules must consist of not less than three members, is bad in law—Q. E. v. Muthia, 16 Mad. 410. Thus, where a Bench of three Magistrates constituted under the rules commenced a trial and heard the prosecution evidence but afterwards one member of the Bench was absent, and the remaining two Magistrates went on with the trial, heard the defence evidence and convicted the accused, held that the trial having been in contravention of the rules was void. The trial ought to have been adjourned till the absent member was present, or it should have been held afresh before a different set of Magistrates—Emp v. Mohideen, 44 Bom. 400, 21 Cr. L.J. 369. See also 36 M.L.J. 362 supra.

351. (1) Any person attending a Criminal Court, although not under arrest or upon a summons, may be detained by such Court for the purpose of inquiry into or trial of any offence of which such Court can take cognizance and which, from the evidence, may appear to have been committed, and may be proceeded against as though he had been arrested or summoned.

(2) When the detention takes place in the course of an inquiry under Chapter XVIII or after a trial has been begun, the proceedings in respect of such person shall be commenced afresh, and the witnesses reheard.

1021. This section applies even though a trial has actually been begun. In Q. v. Sutherland, 14 W.R. 20, it was held that this section could not be applied where the trial was actually being proceeded with, because such a course deprived the prisoner of the opportunity of preparing his defence and subjected him to be tried on evidence which was taken before he was put into the position of a prisoner. This ruling is no longer good law, because sub-section (2) provides for the difficulty presented in that ruling and requires the proceedings to be commenced afresh.

This is a self-contained section and the cognizance which a Magistrate takes under this section in respect of an offence is independent of the provisions of sec. 190 (c). Consequently the provisions of section 191 are inapplicable where a Magistrate takes cognizance under this section—

Emp v Sakha, 5 N L R 113 (114). As to taking cognisance against a witness in a case, see notes under section 190 (c)

352. The place in which any Criminal Court is held for the purpose of inquiring into or trying any offence shall be deemed an open Court to which the public generally may have access, so far as the same can conveniently contain them :

Provided that the presiding Judge or Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, order at any stage of any inquiry into, or trial of, any particular case, that the public generally, or any particular person, shall not have access to or be or remain in, the room or building used by the Court.

1022. Court to be open:—Jail trial—This section does not necessarily make a trial in a jail invalid where there is nothing to show that admittance was refused to any one who desired it or that the prisoners were unable to communicate with their friends or counsel. But it is undesirable to hold trials in a jail, because it is difficult to get counsel to appear in jail—Sahai Singh v Crown, 1917 P.W.R. 21.

The evidence of a Ghosha woman should be taken behind a purdah at a private place where she can come, in the presence of the accused only, the Judge taking such precaution as he can to secure her identity—Anonymous, 2 Weir 432.

Exclusion of police Officers:—A police officer who has investigated into a case should not be allowed to be present before a Magistrate when he records a confession made by the accused—Emp. v. Ramananda, 1885 A W.N. 221.

This section gives power to the Court of ordering that any particular person shall not remain in the room used by the Court. It makes no exception in the case of a Police-officer. When the accused person objects to the presence of a Police-officer or other person, the Magistrate has to decide whether the accused's fear of prejudice to his case is reasonable, considering the intelligence and susceptibilities of the class to which he belongs, and not merely whether the presence is convenient or helpful to the Court or the prosecution. It is not advisable that a Police officer interested in the case proceeding before the Magistrate should receive exceptional treatment, as a seat on a dais, as it is calculated to breed suspicion in the mind of the accused as to the independence of the Magistrate—Nathu Singh v Emp., 8 N.L.J. 95, 26 Cr.L.J. 1130.

case, held that as the hearing took place practically before only one of the Honorary Magistrates, the order must be set aside and the case tried de novo—Sultan v. Shamser, 25 O.C. 182, 23 Cr.L.J. 696, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 21. Where the rules relating to a Bench of Magistrates provide that two members shall constitute the quorum, the evidence recorded by a Magistrate sitting singly is not evidence recorded in a Court, and the mere reading over to the Bench, when properly constituted, of the statements so recorded would not render those statements admissible as evidence—Emp. v. Gulu, 20 S.L.R. 134, 27 Cr.L.J. 542 (543). Similarly, a trial by two members of a Bench which according to rules must consist of not less than three members, is bad in law—Q. E. v. Muthia, 16 Mad 410. Thus, where a Bench of three Magistrates constituted under the rules commenced a trial and heard the prosecution evidence but afterwards one member of the Bench was absent, and the remaining two Magistrates went on with the trial, heard the defence evidence and convicted the accused, held that the trial having been in contravention of the rules was void. The trial ought to have been adjourned till the absent member was present, or it should have been held afresh before a different set of Magistrates—Emp. v. Mohideen, 44 Bom 400, 21 Cr.L.J. 369. See also 36 M.L.J. 362 supra.

351. (1) Any person attending a Criminal Court,

Detention of offenders attending Court. although not under arrest or upon a summons, may be detained by such

Court for the purpose of inquiry into or trial of any offence of which such Court can take cognizance and which, from the evidence, may appear to have been committed, and may be proceeded against as though he had been arrested or summoned.

(2) When the detention takes place in the course of an inquiry under Chapter XVIII or after a trial has been begun, the proceedings in respect of such person shall be commenced afresh, and the witnesses reheard.

1021. This section applies even though a trial has actually been begun. In Q. v. Sutherland, 14 W.R. 20, it was held that this section could not be applied where the trial was actually being proceeded with, because such a course deprived the prisoner of the opportunity of preparing his defence and subjected him to be tried on evidence which was taken before he was put into the position of a prisoner. This ruling is no longer good law, because sub-section (2) provides for the difficulty presented in that ruling and requires the proceedings to be commenced afresh.

This is a self-contained section and the cognizance which a Magistrate takes under this section in respect of an offence is independent of the provisions of sec. 190 (c). Consequently the provisions of section 191 are inapplicable where a Magistrate takes cognizance under this section—taken in the absence of the prisoner at a former trial was read out to them and put in as evidence at the present trial, it was held that the proceeding was irregular and prejudicial to the prisoner, and that such witnesses should have been subjected to a fresh oral examination in the presence of the prisoner—Q. v. Bishonath, 12 W.R. 3. See also Q. E. v. Nund Ram, 9 All. 609, Reg v. Buldev, Ratanlal 24.

The Magistrate should not only take the evidence in the presence of the accused, but his record must show on the face of it that he had done so. The Magistrate should, by the use of a few apt words on the face of the deposition, make it apparent that he had taken the evidence in the presence of the accused—Q. E v Pohop Singh, 10 All. 174.

When his personal attendance is dispensed with—See sec. 205. The presence of an accused person may be dispensed with on ground of his illhealth—Emp v King, 14 Bom L.R. 236. A respectable pardanashin woman should not ordinarily be compelled to appear in person in the first instance unless and until there is a strong likelihood of the charge being proved—Habbo v. Crown, 1909 P.W.R. 5, 9 Cr.L.J. 158, In re Kandamani, 45 Mad 359, and where her presence is dispensed with, the evidence may be recorded in the presence of her pleader—Prem Kaur v Mai Sham, 1908 P.W.R. 20; In re Kandamani, 45 Mad. 359, 23 Cr.L.J. 260

354. In inquiries and trials (other than summary trials) under this Code by or before a Magistrate (other than a Presidency Magistrate) or Sessions Judge, the evidence of the witnesses shall be recorded in the following manner.

Manner of recording evidence outside presidency-towns.

355. (1) In summons cases tried before a Magistrate other than a Presidency Magistrate, and in cases of the offences mentioned in sub-section (1) of section 260, clauses (b) to (m) both inclusive, when tried by a Magistrate of the first or second class, and in all proceedings under section 514 (if not in the course of a trial), the Magistrate shall make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness as the examination of the witness proceeds.

Record in summons cases and in trials of certain offences by first and second class Magistrates

(2) Such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate with his own hand, and shall form part of the record.

(3) If the Magistrate is prevented from making memorandum as above required, he shall record reason of his inability to do so, and shall cause such memorandum to be made in writing from his dictation in open Court, and shall sign the same, and such memorandum shall form part of the record.

1024. Scope of section :—In summons cases, the deposition may be recorded in the form of a memorandum, but it is not necessary that the recorded deposition should be read over to the accused, and an omission to do so cannot be regarded as a fatal defect—Anonymous, 2 Weir 433.

In cases referred to in section 260, if they are tried summarily, only the substance of the evidence must be embodied in the judgment, as well as the particulars mentioned in section 264. If those cases are tried regularly, instead of summarily, the procedure of this section is to be followed—Kuchi v. K. E., 3 L.B.R. 3. The language of section 354 ("other than summary trials") shows that section 355 does not apply to a summary trial, and in such a trial, the Magistrate need not make any memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness. Even if he makes such a memorandum, the notes do not form part of the record and need not and should not be kept on the record, the Magistrate is at liberty to destroy the notes if he pleases—Mantoo v. Emp., 49 All. 261, 28 Cr.L.J. 97 (dissenting from Salish Chandra v. Emp., 48 Cal. 280); Ismail v. Emp., 25 A.L.J. 346, 28 Cr.L.J. 442. See Note 864 under sec. 263. This section applies to offences coming within clauses (b) to (m) of sec. 260, but not to offences falling under sec. 261. Therefore, in a trial of an offence specified in sec. 261, the Magistrate is not bound to make any memorandum of evidence. Even if he takes down rough notes of evidence in such a trial, they do not form part of the record and may be destroyed by him—Chimantal v. Emp., 29 Bom. L.R. 710, 28 Cr.L.J. 537 (538).

In proceedings under Chapter XXXVI (maintenance proceedings) the evidence ought not to be recorded as in summary trials, but in the manner provided by this section—Kalidas v. Durga Charan, 20 Cal. 351.

There is no provision as to the language in which the memorandum is to be recorded. But there is also no provision which renders it illegal for an Indian second class Magistrate to record the memorandum in English. Such a procedure is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate the trial, unless a failure of justice has been occasioned thereby—Q. E. v. Gopal, 19 Mad. 269.

Under Sub-section (2) the Magistrate must sign the record, if he omits to do so, the illegality vitiates the trial—Balleshwar v. Emp., 3 P.L.T. 322, 23 Cr.L.J. 114, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 5.

356. (1) In all other trials before Courts of Session and Magistrates (other than Presidency Magistrates), and in all inquiries under Chapters XII and

Record in other cases outside presidency-towns.

XVIII, the evidence of each witness shall be taken down in writing in the language of the Court by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge, or in his presence and hearing and under his personal direction and superintendence, and shall be signed by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge.

(2) When the evidence of such witness is given in English, the Magistrate or Sessions Judge may take it down in that language with his own hand, and, unless the accused is familiar with English, or the language of the Court is English, an authenticated translation of such evidence in the language of the Court shall form part of the record.

(2-A). When the evidence of such witness is given in any other language, not being English, than the language of the Court, the Magistrate or Sessions Judge may take it down in that language with his own hand, or cause it to be taken down in that language in his presence and hearing and under his personal direction and superintendence, and an authenticated translation of such evidence in the language of the Court or in English shall form part of the record.

(3) In cases in which the evidence is not taken down in writing by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge, he shall, as the examination of each witness proceeds, make a memorandum of the substance of what such witness deposes; and such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge with his own hand, and shall form part of the record.

(4) If the Magistrate or Sessions Judge is prevented from making a memorandum as above required, he shall record the reason of his inability to make it.

Change—Sub-section (2A) has been added by section 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The reason is thus stated: "Section 356 does not provide for evidence being taken down in any other language than that of the Court or, if the language of the Court is not English, in English. The result is a certain loss of accuracy whenever evidence is given in a third language, as it has to be translated into, and taken down in, the language of the Court or in English. The object of the amendment is to secure greater accuracy and to avoid waste of time in translation"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921).

The words "or cause it to be taken.... superintendence" in sub-section (2A) are intended "to meet the case of a Magistrate or Judge who does not know the language in which the evidence is given. In such cases it will be necessary for the Magistrate or Judge to have the statement recorded in the language in which the evidence is given"—Legislative Assembly Debates, 7th February 1923, page 2035 1025. Record of evidence :—The provisions of this section are imperative, and omission to record the evidence in the mode prescribed by this section is a material irregularity sufficient to set aside the proceedings—Janki Prosad v. Emp., 19 Cr.L.J. 235 (Pat.); Q. E. v. Barmajit, 1891 A W N 145. Where a Magistrate made no vernacular record of the evidence of the complainant and his witnesses, the procedure was held to be illegal—Malai v. Anant Ram, 1890 A W N 164; Udit Naran v. Emp., 17 A L J 1146, 21 Cr.L.J. 28.

The provisions of sub-section (1) are imperative, and the entire evidence must be recorded fully either by the Magistrate himself, or by somebody else under the direction of the Magistrate. In the latter case (i.e. where the evidence is recorded by any person other than a Magistrate), the Magistrate should under sub-section (3) make a memorandum of the evidence. But subsection (3) does not override the provisions of sub-section (1) but is merely supplementary to it. In other words, the fact that the Magistrate is making a memorandum of the evidence does not do away with the necessity of the evidence being fully recorded by some other officer of the Court. Where a Magistrate, in a proceeding under section 145, neither recorded the evidence fully in his own hand, nor caused it to be recorded fully by anybody else, but simply made a memorandum of the evidence, purporting to act under subsection (3), it was held that the provisions of subsection (1) not being complied with, the whole proceedings must be set aside—Sadananda v. Krishna Mandal, 42 Cal. 381.

If the Court consists of more than one Judge (e.g. a Tribunal of three Commissioners constituted under the Defence of India Act), it is not necessary that all the Judges should sign the deposition. It is sufficient if the Presiding officer alone signs it—Taj Mahmud v. Emp., 29 P.L.R. 14, 29 Cr L J 212 (214)

Where there is a discrepancy in a material part of the evidence of the principal prosecution witnesses between the record in the vernacular in which that witness gave evidence and the record in English, the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt created thereby. Generally speaking, the evidence so recorded in the vernacular in which the witness deposed is entitled to a greater weight and is more reliable than the record made in the English language, but where the Magistrate who made the English record was an experienced Magistrate fully conversant with the vernacular in which the witness gave his evidence, the English record is also reliable, but all the same, the accused is entitled to the benefit of any doubt caused by the discrepancy between the two records—Sadhu Singh v. Crown, 24 Cr.L.J. 624 (Lah)

Where the evidence was taken in the language of the Court by the Magistrate's recorder, the omission on the part of the Magistrate to make a memorandum of the evidence under subsection (3) did not vitiate the proceedings, where it appeared that the Magistrate carefully heard the evidence, clearly appreciated its gist, took considerable care in sifting the evidence and arrived at a correct conclusion. But still the Magistrate ought to follow the provisions of subsection (3) and ought not to ignore them—Sumran v. Emp., 4 O.W.N 1200, 29 Cr.L.J. 70

357. (1) The Local Government may direct that in any district or part of a district, or

Language of record of evidence, in proceedings before any Court of Session, or before any Magistrate or class of Magistrates, the evidence of each witness shall, in the cases referred to in section 356, be taken down by the Sessions Judge or Magistrate with his own hand and in his mother-tongue, unless he is prevented by any sufficient reason from taking down the evidence of any witness, in which case he shall record the reason of his inability to do so and shall cause the evidence to be taken down in writing from his dictation in open Court.

(2) The evidence so taken down shall be signed by the Sessions Judge or Magistrate, and shall form part of the record :

Provided that the Local Government may direct the Sessions Judge or Magistrate to take down the evidence in the English language, or in the language of the Court, although such language is not his mother-tongue.

1026. The authority conferred on an officer by this section is personal to that officer and remains in force only so long as he remains in the particular district in which it has been conferred Anon., 5 M H C R App 9 Therefore, where a Magistrate empowered to record the deposition in his own handwriting while in district B did the same when he was transferred to another district, under the belief that the authority previously given to him in district B was personal to him and still remained in force, and committed the accused for trial, it was held that the Magistrate's proceeding was irregular, but since the accused was not prejudiced thereby, his commitment was not set aside—Chathanadiyal Kalu Nair, 2 Weir 434 (435)

The plea of the accused need not be recorded in the words of the very language in which it is made; when it is a foreign language, the record must be in the language in which it is interpreted to the Court—Emp v Vaimbilee, 5 Cal 826.

358. In cases of the kind mentioned in section 355, the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, take down the evidence of any witness in the manner provided in section 356, or, if within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Magistrate the Local Government has made the order referred to in section 357, in the manner provided in the same section.

1027. The ordinary and proper and convenient way of recording evidence is to take it down in the first person exactly as spoken by the witness—Q v Zoolfikar, 16 W R 36 The Judge should in taking down evidence adhere as far as possible to the words actually used either in the question or in the answer given by the witness. The provisions of law will not be complied with by recording a more or less accurate paraphrase of the evidence given by a witness—Emp v Nga Saw, 11 Bur. L R. 8 The Judge is not bound to make a verbatim record of any particular questions and answers. It is left to the discretion of the Judge, if either side specially requests him to do so.—ibid

359. (1) Evidence taken under section 356 or section 357 shall not ordinarily be taken down in the form of question and answer, but in the form of a narrative.

(2) The Magistrate or Sessions Judge may, in his discretion, take down, or cause to be taken down, any particular question and answer.

360. (1) As the evidence of each witness taken under section 356 or section 357 is completed, it shall be read over to him in the presence of the accused, if in attendance, or of his pleader, if he appears by pleader, and shall, if necessary, be corrected.

(2) If the witness denies the correctness of any part of the evidence when the same is read over to him, the Magistrate or Sessions Judge may, instead of correcting the evidence, make a memorandum thereon of the objection made to it by the witness, and shall add such remarks as he thinks necessary.

(3) If the evidence is taken down in a language different from that in which it has been given and the witness does not understand the language in which it is taken down, the evidence so taken down shall be interpreted to him in the language in which it was given, or in a language which he understands.

1028. Object and Scope of Section :—The object of this section is to give an opportunity to the witnesses to explain or correct the statements made by them—Ramdhari v Emp, 4 P.L.W. 44, 19 Cr L.J. 169 This section is enacted for the protection of witnesses; it provides that a witness in order to satisfy himself that the evidence which has been taken down is correct may have it interpreted to him, if he desires it, in a language which he understands—In re Okhoy, 7 C.L.R. 393

This section applies to evidence recorded under section 356 or 357, but not to evidence recorded in summons cases under section 355. Where the evidence in a summons case is recorded in the form of a memorandum, under section 355, it is not incumbent on the Magistrate to read over the memorandum of the deposition to the witness—Ramdhari v. Emp., 4 P.L.W. 44, 19 Cr L.J. 169, and omission to do so is not fatal to the conviction—Anonymous, 2 Weir 433

In an enquiry under sec. 107, the evidence must be recorded as in a summons case (see sec. 117), i.e., it must be recorded in the manner prescribed in section 355, and not as laid down in sec. 356 or sec. 357. Sec. 360 does not apply to a case in which the evidence is recorded under sec. 355 and hence in an inquiry under sec. 107 it is not necessary that the deposition should be read over to the witness in the presence of the accused—Legal Remembrancer v Jafar, 52 Cal 668, 26 Cr L.J. 1456

But in an inquiry in a good behaviour case, the provisions of section 360 will apply, and failure to comply with those provisions would vitiate the inquiry or trial—Sanatan v. Emp, 52 Cal 632, 41 C.L.J. 352, 26 Cr L.J. 1240, Nawab Ali v. Emp, 52 Cal 470, 26 Cr L.J. 1233.

This section applies to the evidence of witnesses, and not to the examination of the accused—Q v Radhoo, 12 W.R. 44.

This section applies to proceedings under section 145, and the evidence of each witness must be read over to him in the presence of the accused, the term "accused" being applicable to persons proceeded against under Chapter XII. Even if the term accused does not apply to such persons, still this section would cover the proceedings under Chapter XII, because, section 356 (which is referred to in this section) expressly mentions Chapter XII—Ram Narain v. Dhonrai, 3 P.L.T. 291, 23 Cr L.J. 125, Aswini Kumar v. Pati, 52 Cal. 437, 29 C.W.N. 474, 26 Cr.L.J. 914 But a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court has laid down that the parties to the proceedings under section 145 are not 'accused' persons, and that therefore the provisions of sec. 360 apply to proceedings under sec. 145 only to this extent that the evidence of each witness must be read over to that witness; and the attendance of the parties at the reading over is not necessary—Narendra v. Sabarati, 52 Cal. 721 (F.B.), 29 C.W.N. 701, 41 G.L.J. 479, 26 Cr.L.J. 1194. This decision practically over-rules the case of Ishan Chandra v. Hriday, 29 C.W.N. 475, 26 Cr.L.J. 915, where it was held that the word 'accused' not being applicable to the parties in a proceeding under Ch. XII, section 360 had no application at all to such a proceeding, and it was not obligatory to read over the deposition to the witnesses. In a later Patna case, it has been held that even an omission to read over the evidence to the witness is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate an order under sec. 145—Sandhi Singh v. Sri Govind, 5 P.L.T. 237, 25 Cr.L.J. 89.

A Tribunal constituted under the Defence of India Act is bound to follow the provisions of this section. Even though the Commissioners forming the Tribunal are authorised to make only a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness, instead of recording the evidence fully, still the memorandum must be read over to the witness, under this section—Taj Mahmud v. Emp., 29 P.L.R. 14, 29 Cr.L.J. 212 (215).

1029. Deposition must be read over to witness :—The Calcutta High Court laid down that provisions of this section are obligatory and not merely directory. It is incumbent on the Judge to read over the deposition to each witness, even though such a procedure should occupy considerable time—Amrita Lal, 42 Cal. 957, Jyotish Chandra, 36 Cal. 955. And a departure from such a practice might lead to considerable embarrassment and place a serious impediment in the administration of justice—Jyotish Chandra v. Emp., 36 Cal. 955. The object of this section is to ensure the accuracy of the record, and omission to comply with the provisions of this section is an illegality which vitiates the trial, irrespective of whether the accused have been prejudiced or not, and is not a mere irregularity curable by section 537—Haronath v. Sonai Mia, 28 C.W.N. 119, 38 G.L.J. 281, 25 Cr.L.J. 289; Hiralal v. Emp., 28 C.W.N. 968, 52 Cal. 159. It is not a sufficient compliance with this section if the Magistrate merely hands over the recorded deposition to the witness to read it for himself and the witness reads it himself, because the section requires that the deposition must be read over in the presence, i.e., in the hearing of the accused, in order that the accused should have an opportunity of correcting any mistake in it—K. E. v. Jogendra, 42 Cal. 240; Saharati v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 951 (Cal.); Md Yasin v. Emp., 52 Cal. 431, 29 C.W.N. 650. It is not a sufficient compliance with this section if the deposition is read by a witness himself, and afterwards it is explained by the Judge to the accused in the absence of the witness—Jessarati v. Emp., 20 C.W.N. 526, 26 Cr.L.J. 1009. But the Patna High Court holds that even though a deposition is not read over to the witness, according to the provisions of this section, but is read by the witness himself, still the deposition is legal evidence. In other words, non-compliance with this provision of the section does not vitiate the trial if the accused has not been prejudiced—Jagwa Dhannuk v. K. E., 5 Pat. 63, 7 P.L.T. 396, 27 Cr.L.J. 484. See also Mohiuddin v. Emp., 4 Pat 488, 6 P.L.T. 154, 26 Cr.L.J. 811 (815), Abdul Rahman v. Emp., 27 Cr.L.J. 669, 4 Bur. L.J. 213, Mayeth v. Emp., 3 Rang. 612, 27 Cr.L.J. 857. And the same view has recently been taken in the Privy Council case of Abdul Rahman v. Emp., 5 Rang 53 (P.C.), 31 C.W.N. 271, 28 Cr.L.J. 259, in which Lord Phillimore observed. "Although it is regrettable that such an irregularity should creep in, and though it might be taken into account with other elements of objections to the satisfactory character of the trial, it would not by itself be a ground sufficient for quashing a conviction. The bare fact of such irregularity, unaccompanied by any probable suggestion of any failure of justice having been thereby occasioned, is not enough to warrant the quashing of a conviction, which may be supported by the curative provisions of sec 537." Their Lordships disapproved of the ruling in the Calcutta case of Hiralal v. Emp., 52 Cal 159 (cited supra). The Privy Council ruling has since been followed by the Calcutta High Court in Fahar v. Emp., 31 C.W.N. 691, 28 Cr.L.J. 751. The contrary view taken in the several Calcutta cases cited above must now be deemed as overruled.

Depositions of witnesses which have not been read over to the witnesses are nevertheless admissible under sec 145 Evidence Act to contradict the witnesses in a subsequent trial—Fazlur Rahman v. Emp., 6 Pat. 478, 28 Cr.L.J. 772.

This section lays down that the evidence of each witness shall be read over to him as it is completed, and this procedure should be strictly followed. It is not a sufficient compliance with this section to read out each sentence of the statement of a witness as it is being recorded—Wadhawa v. Emp., 22 Cr.L.J. 669 (Lah.). The evidence of a witness is 'completed' when he has been examined-in-chief, cross-examined, and, if necessary, re-examined. Therefore it is not improper, if the whole deposition is read over to the witness after his cross-examination is over. Thus, where a witness was examined on 18th November, and cross-examined on a subsequent day (on the 9th December) and then the Magistrate read over to him the whole of his deposition including his examination-in-chief on that day (9th December), the procedure was not illegal—Kamini Kumar, 33 C.W.N. 664, 1929 Cr. C. 26. But it is improper for the Magistrate to examine a number of witnesses and ask them to be in a room and then have the deposition read over to them at the end of the day's work. Such a procedure is not merely an irregularity but an illegality vitiating the trial—In re Kuppa Mudaliar, 49 Mad 71, 49 M.L.J. 421, 26 Cr.L.J. 1587, A.I.R. 1925 Mad 1206, Abdul Bari v. K. E., 42 C.L.J. 585, 27 Cr.L.J. 375, A.I.R. 1026 Cal 157, Shamserali v. Emp., 53 Cal 129, A.I.R. 1926 Cal 563, 27 Cr.L.J. 698.

There is nothing in the section to indicate the exact time when the deposition should be read over, and if the deposition is read over at the close of the cross-examination, it fulfils the requirements and objects of the section—Ramdhar v. Emp., 4 P.L.W. 44, 19 Cr.L.J. 169.

'In the presence of the accused':—The deposition must be read over to the witness, in the presence of the accused, so as to give the accused an opportunity to challenge the correctness of the record—Rameshwar v. Emp., 6 P.L.T. 493, 26 Cr.L.J. 927. A conviction based upon evidence not read over in the presence of the accused is illegal and must be set aside—Singiri Eradu, 2 Weir 435. It is improper to have the deposition of the witness read over to him by a clerk in the verandah of the Court-house, though both the witness and the clerk were in view of the accused. Such a deposition cannot be admitted in evidence—Nga San v. K. E., U.B.R. (1912) 1st Qr. 123. If the accused is in attendance, the deposition must be read over in the presence of the accused, and not in the presence of his pleader. It is only when the accused appears by a pleader (i.e., when his personal attendance has been dispensed with) that the reading over of the evidence in the presence of the pleader is sufficient—Kasim Ali v. Sarada Kripa, 30 C.W.N. 336, 27 Cr.L.J. 509. But in a recent Calcutta case it has been held that the words "if he appears by pleader" in this section are not restricted to cases where the personal attendance of the accused has been dispensed with, but that a deposition may be read over in the presence of the pleader during a temporary absence of the accused—Harī Narayan v. Emp., 46 C.L.J. 368, 29 Cr.L.J. 49 (83). Where the accused persons appear by pleaders, the deposition of a witness may be read over in the presence of a pleader of one of several accused—Rukhal Chandra v. K. E., 36 Cal 808, 13 C.W.N. 942.

The object of reading over a deposition to a witness is to obtain an accurate record from him of what he really means to say, and to give him an opportunity of correcting the words which the Magistrate or his clerk has taken down. It is not to enable the accused or his advocate to suggest corrections. No doubt, the evidence has to be read over in the presence of the accused or his pleader. He is entitled to be sure that it has been read over, and that the witness has had an opportunity of correcting the written word. But the accused is not entitled to convey any suggestion to a witness in the form of a correction which would make him alter his evidence, though the accused may call attention to obvious slips. The primary object of this section is to fix the witness and to enable him to protect himself against any inaccuracy in the words taken down from his lips—Abdul Rahman v. Emp., 5 Rang. 53, 31 C.W.N. 271, 25 A.L.J. 117, 28 Cr.L.J. 259 (262), 29 Bom.L.R. 813 (P.C.).

While the evidence of one witness is being read over to that witness, it is highly improper for the Court to proceed with the evidence of the next witness. Such a procedure is a violation of the provision of this section, and vitiates the inquiry or trial—Manik v. K. E., 41 C.L.J. 393, 26 Cr.L.J. 1267; Adilzadi v. K. E., 26 Cr.L.J. 1016 (Cal.); Singiri Eradu, 2 Weir 435; Darghai v. Emp., 52 C.L.J. 1, 26 Cr.L.J. 1213. The Rangoon High Court holds that such a procedure does not vitiate the trial but is a mere irregularity curable—Abdul Rahman v. K. E., 4 Bur. L.R. 1, 21 Cr.L.J. 1, 21 M.L.J. 1. This view has been taken in In re A, 21 M.L.J. 1.

view has since been affirmed by the Privy Council in Abdul Rahman v. Emp., 5 Rang 53 (P.C.).

When a deposition is not read over to a witness in the presence of the accused according to the provisions of sub-section (1), the witness cannot be prosecuted for perjury—Emp. v. Mayadeb, 6 Cal. 762; Jyotish v. Emp., 36 Cal. 955; Mahendra v. Emp., 12 C.W.N. 845, 8 Cr.L.J. 116; Ram Narain v. Dhanrai, 3 P.L.T. 291, 23 Cr.L.J. 125, Brahmadco v. Emp., 2 P.L.T. 380; Kartar Singh, 1917 P.R. 12, 18 Cr.L.J. 607 (608); Kadir v. Emp., 18 Cr.L.J. 966, 11 Bur.L.T. 202, Kamatchinathan v. Emp., 28 Mad. 308, Nelluri v. Emp., 42 Mad. 561, K E v. Jogendra, 42 Cal. 240, 18 C.W.N. 1242. Contra—Tunya v. Emp., 12 Bur.L.T. 167, 20 Cr.L.J. 506, 51 I.C. 666, where it is held that a witness can be prosecuted for perjury in spite of the fact that his deposition has not been read over to him in the presence of the accused, the deposition should not be treated as a nullity merely because of the irregularity, it can be proved by other evidence, e.g. by evidence that the witness admitted it to be correct when it was read over to him, and by the evidence of the Judge or Magistrate who recorded it. So also it has been held in In re Bogra, 8 M.L.T. 117, 11 Cr.L.J. 482, that evidence read over to the witness in the absence of the accused may not be used as evidence against the accused but may be the basis of a prosecution of the witness for perjury.

Under this section, the Magistrate is not required to record a memorandum at the end of each deposition that the deposition was read over in the presence of the accused, though it is much better to do so in order to prevent complaints as to his not having done so—Rameshwar v. Emp., 6 P.L.T. 493, 26 Cr.L.J. 927; Bhagwat Singh v. Emp., 4 Pat. 231, 6 P.L.T. 73, 26 Cr.L.J. 939. But the absence of such a memorandum does not prove that the deposition was not read over—Bhagwat v. Emp., supra; Arjun Kurmi v. Emp., 8 P.L.T. 166, 28 Cr.L.J. 77 (79).

An objection on the ground that the provisions of sec. 360 have not been observed should be taken at once. Where no such contention has been raised in the Courts below, it is not competent for the accused to put forward this objection for the first time in revision before the High Court—Arjun Kurmi, supra.

1030. Deposition may be corrected:—Before a deposition is closed, a witness should be given an opportunity of explaining and correcting any contradictions which it may contain, and the statement which the witness finally declares to be the true one must be taken to be that which he intended to make—Reg v. Balkrishna, Ratanlal 54. An honest witness who wishes to alter or correct a statement he has once made, should be allowed to do so, and should not be deterred from doing so by the fear of a criminal charge—Habibulla v. Q E, 10 Cal. 937.

If the Court instead of allowing the correction to be made, proceeds to make a memorandum according to sub-section (2), such memorandum must be appended to the deposition and care should be taken that the practice and the form prescribed by law are exactly adhered to—Q. v. Komurooddee, 13 W.R. 17.

1031. Language :—If the deposition is recorded in a language which the witness does not understand, it must be interpreted to the witness in the language which he understands. If the deposition is read over to the witness in a language which is neither understood by the accused nor by the witness, it is an illegality which materially prejudices the accused—Q. v. Issur Rant, 8 W.R. 63. But if the witnesses did not require their depositions to be interpreted to them in their own language, the reading over the depositions to them in a language which they did not understand, would not afford any ground for the accused to have his conviction set aside—In re Okhoy, 7 C.L.R. 393.

The distinction between section 360 and sec. 361 is very marked. Under the latter section if evidence is given in a language not understood by the accused or his pleader, it is to be interpreted in their language, while under sec. 360 when it is read over, it is to be interpreted to the witness in his own language, but there is no provision for its being interpreted to the accused. Thus, if the depositions are taken down in English, and the language of the accused is Hindee, and the language of the witness is Burmese, the depositions will have to be taken by getting the witness' answers in Burmese, having them interpreted to the Court so that they may be taken down in English, and further interpreted to the accused so that he may understand them in Hindee. When however, the deposition comes to be read over, as it will be in English, it will be interpreted to the witness in Burmese, but not to the accused in Hindee; and if the accused neither knew English nor Burmese, he will be none the wiser—Abdul Rahman v. Emp., 5 Rang 53 (P.C.), 31 C.W.N. 271, 52 M.L.J. 585.

Subsection (3) of this section does not mean that the deposition recorded in English should first be read over to the witness as recorded in English, and shall then be translated into the language in which the witness has deposed—Hari Narayan v. Emp., 46 C.L.J. 368, 29 Cr.L.J. 49 (52).

361. (1) Whenever any evidence is given in a language not understood by the accused, and he is present in person, it shall be interpreted to him in open Court in a language understood by him.

Interpretation of evidence to accused or his pleader.

(2) If he appears by pleader and the evidence is given in a language other than the language of the Court, and not understood by the pleader, it shall be interpreted to such pleader in that language.

(3) When documents are put in for the purpose of formal proof, it shall be in the discretion of the Court to interpret as much thereof as appears necessary.

1031A. If the accused appears by a pleader who understands the language in which the evidence is given by the witness, the omission to interpret the evidence to the accused is not a material defect—Q. v. Bhoobun, 24 W R. 50, Arjun Kurmi v. Emp., 8 P.L.T. 166, 28 Cr.L.J. 77 (79).

Under sub-section (3), it is not necessary to interpret formal documents such as Government Gazettes at length, that would be merely wasting time. It would be enough if the prisoner were made to understand what they were and for what purpose they were used—Q. v. Ameerooddeen, 15 W R. 25.

362. (1) In every case in which a Presidency Magistrate imposes a fine exceeding two hundred rupees or imprisonment for a term exceeding six months, he shall either take down the evidence of the witnesses with his own hand, or cause it to be taken down in writing from his dictation in open Court. All evidence so taken down shall be signed by the Magistrate and shall form part of the record.

362. (1) In every case tried by a Presidency Magistrate in which an appeal lies, such Magistrate shall either take down the evidence of the witnesses with his own hand, or cause it to be taken down in writing from his dictation in open Court. All evidence so taken down shall be signed by the Magistrate and shall form part of the record.

Magistrate's

(2) Evidence so taken down shall ordinarily be recorded in the form of a narrative, but the Magistrate may, in his discretion, take down, or cause to be taken down, any particular question or answer.

(2-A) In every case referred to in sub-section (1) the Magistrate shall make a memorandum of the substance of the examination of the accused. Such memorandum shall be signed by the Magistrate with his own hand, and shall form part of the record.

(3) Sentences passed under section 35 on the same occasion shall, for the purposes of this section, be considered as one sentence, unless they are sentences of imprisonment ordered to run concurrently.

(4) In cases other than those specified in sub-section (1), it shall not be necessary for a Presidency Magistrate to record the evidence or frame a charge.

Change :—Sub-section (1) has been amended as shown in parallel columns; the, italicised words in sub-section (3) have been inserted; and sub-sections (2-A) and (4) have been newly added, by sec. 99 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below.

1032. Scope :—Summary trials :—The provisions as to summary trials do not apply to trials before Presidency Magistrates. A warrant case must be tried by them in the manner laid down in Chapter XXI, subject to the provisions of this section as to the recording of evidence—Q. E. v Abdul, Ratanlal 539.

Reference under sec. 123 (2) :—In cases where the Presidency Magistrate makes a reference to the High Court under sec. 123 (2), he must duly record the evidence, but it is not necessary that he should record it as fully as a Mofussil Magistrate—Emp. v. Nepal, 13 C.W.N. 318.

Sub-section (1) :—“We think that the opening words of sub-section (1) of section 362 require amendment. As the section stands, it seems to imply that a Presidency Magistrate, before he commences his inquiry, must make up his mind as to the maximum limit of the sentence which he will impose. We think that the sub-section would read better as amended by us; compare the wording of section 264.”—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

But even this amendment does not improve the position, because in order to ascertain whether an appeal will lie from his sentence, the Presidency Magistrate will have to make up his mind whether he will pass a sentence of over six months' imprisonment or a fine exceeding two hundred rupees (sec. 411). The Joint Committee in confirming the above amendment has also admitted it :—

“We are inclined to agree with those critics who point out that the re-draft proposed in sub-section (1) of section 362 does not get rid of the difficulty that a Magistrate has to make up his mind as to the sentence he will impose before he begins trying the case. We do not see how this difficulty can be got rid of; but we think that the amendment proposed has the advantage of bringing the language of this section into conformity with the language of sections 263 and 264, and we would, therefore retain this sub-clause.

“In order to meet difficulties that have arisen, we have introduced a sub-section (2-A) laying down that Presidency Magistrates, in cases subject to appeal, shall make a memorandum of the substance of the examination of the accused, and we have introduced a new clause making a consequential amendment in sub-sec. (4) of sec. 364.

“The non-official members, who constituted a majority in the Committee, expressed their dissatisfaction with the distinctions drawn in the Code between Presidency Magistrates and other Magistrates, and in particular with regard to this clause would have liked to see Presidency Magistrates required, in warrant cases at all events, to keep as full a record as any other Magistrates. But the Committee as a whole held that there was some force in the contention put forward by numerous High Court Judges that no change should be made in the Code affecting to any extent the special powers of Presidency Magistrates until a much fuller inquiry had been made into the question of their status, powers and procedure. We desire to take this opportunity of placing on record our hope that it may be possible to appoint a small committee to undertake the investigation"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

Where a Presidency Magistrate sentences an accused person to imprisonment for more than 6 months, he is bound to record the evidence of witnesses, even though the sentence is imposed for the purpose of the detention of the accused in a reformatory—Emp v Md Roshan, 26 Bom L R. 1232, 26 Cr.L.J. 454

1033. Sub-section (2):—Mode of recording evidence —Evidence should be recorded in the form of direct narration. Where a Presidency Magistrate, in contravention of the provisions of this section, recorded the evidence of some more or less formal witnesses in the form of an indirect narration, it was held that such irregularities in the mode of recording evidence, where no failure of justice had been occasioned thereby, were cured by sec 537, and the trial was not on that account vitiated—In re Gulab Chand, 18 Cr.L.J. 336 (Mad).

It is the duty of the Magistrate, in recording evidence under this section, to take a note of all the material facts, whether they appear in the course of the examination-in-chief or in the course of the cross-examination—Ah Foong v. K. E., 46 Cal. 411, 22 C.W.N. 834, 20 Cr. L.J. 24.

Sub-sec. (2A)—Records of examination of accused in non-appealable cases:—Sub-sec. (2A) provides for a memorandum of the substance of the examination of an accused person being kept by the Presidency Magistrate, signed by the Magistrate with his own hand in appealable cases only. Sec. 364 does not apply to a record made by a Presidency Magistrate of an examination of an accused person in the course of a trial held by him (see sub-section 4 of sec 364). The result is, that the Legislature has made no provision for the record of examination of accused in non-appealable cases. But it may be inferred that, when the legislature has expressly taken away the necessity to record the evidence and to frame a charge in non-appealable cases, by enacting sub-section (4) of sec. 362, they have not certainly contemplated that the examination of an accused person in non-appealable cases should be recorded in full. It will be sufficient if the substance of the examination of the accused in non-appealable cases is recorded in the form provided under sec 370—Sadagar v. K. E., 56 Cal 1067, 33 C.W.N. 543 (545), 30 Cr.L.J. 528.

Sub-section (3) :—“Unless . . . concurrently” :—“It is provided that when sentences in excess of one are passed which are ordered to run concurrently, it is the heaviest sentence which determines the applicability of section 362”—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

1034. Sub-section (4) :—“It is intended by this sub-section to remove the uncertainty which at present exists regarding the duties of a Presidency Magistrate in recording evidence and framing a charge in petty cases”—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

Sub-section (1) provides that the evidence must be fully recorded in cases where the Presidency Magistrate passes appealable sentences; and there is no obligation on the Magistrate to record evidence in non-appealable cases—Emaman v. Emp., 31 Cal 983; Shalkh Babu v. Emp., 33 Cal. 1036 In a Bombay case it has been held that although the Magistrate has a discretion in cases not falling under this section to take down the evidence or not, still this discretion should be exercised judicially in a reasonable spirit and not arbitrarily, and there should be a record of the evidence, so that the High Court in Revision may judge of the propriety or legality of the order passed by him—Emp. v. Haris Chandra, 10 Bom. L.R. 201. The new sub-section (4) now totally dispenses with the necessity of recording evidence in non-appealable cases.

363. When a Sessions Judge or Magistrate has recorded the evidence of a witness, he shall also record such remarks (if any) as he thinks material respecting the demeanour of such witness whilst under examination.

Remarks respecting demeanour of witness.

1035. The object of this section is to give to the Appellate Court some aid in estimating the value of the evidence recorded by the Magistrate—Q. v. Rasoo Kullah, 12 W R. 51. But though in criminal cases the Appellate Court should be guided by the remarks made under this section as to the demeanour of witnesses, yet it is bound to independently consider the facts of the case—Moula Baksh v. Q. E., 1893 P.R. 6 But where a Sessions Judge of experience had in the most emphatic manner stated that the demeanour of the witnesses was evasive, that they inspired him with no confidence, and that no man could be convicted on their testimony, the Appellate Court before accepting their testimony must be assured in the most positive and convincing manner that there was no ground for the Sessions Judge's criticism. Where the evidence is all oral, and its credibility is a mere matter of opinion, the opinion of the Court which heard the witnesses and noticed their demeanour must be treated as almost conclusive—Emp v. Bishen Singh, 1914 P.L.R. 125.

It is always unsafe for a Judge or a Magistrate to pronounce an opinion as to the credibility of a witness, until the whole of the evidence has been taken. A Magistrate may note the demeanour of the witness, but except there is very clear proof afforded by his own statements that the witness is unworthy of credit, it is unsafe to assume that he is so.

till the evidence has been exhausted—Palani Nandan, 2 Weir 435 (436). It is one thing to record a remark about the demeanour of the witness, and it is quite a different thing to make or record any remark or opinion as to the substance of the deposition of that witness. The parties are entitled to claim that the Magistrate shall not prejudge their cases or form an opinion about the respective merits of their cases or about the depositions of their witnesses, until they have been fully and finally presented to the Magistrate by the counsel in their concluding arguments and after the entire evidence has been recorded. Any opinion formed and expressed by the Magistrate at an earlier stage of the case is bound to be prejudicial to the party concerned, and he may apply for a transfer of the case to some other Magistrate—Sikandar Lal, 10 Lah. 778, 30 Cr L.J. 129 (131)

364. (1) Whenever the accused is examined by any Magistrate, or by any Court other than a High Court established by Royal Charter or the Chief Court of Oudh, the whole of such examination, including every question put to him and every answer given by him, shall be recorded in full in the language in which he is examined, or if that is not practicable, in the language of the Court or in English; and such record shall be shown or read to him, or if he does not understand the language in which it is written, shall be interpreted to him in a language which he understands, and he shall be at liberty to explain or add to his answers.

(2) When the whole is made conformable to what he declares is the truth, the record shall be signed by the accused and the Magistrate or Judge of such Court, and such Magistrate or Judge shall certify under his own hand that the examination was taken in his presence and hearing and that the record contains a full and true account of the statement made by the accused.

(3) In cases in which the examination of the accused is not recorded by the Magistrate or Judge himself, he shall be bound * * * * * as the examination proceeds, to make a memorandum thereof in the language of the Court, or in English, if he is sufficiently acquainted with the latter language, and such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate or Judge with his own hand, and shall be annexed to the record. If the Magistrate or Judge is unable to make a memorandum as above required, he shall record the reason of such inability.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to apply to the examination of an accused person under section 263, or in the course of a trial held by a Presidency Magistrate.

Change :—The words "Chief Court of Oudh" have been added by the Oudh Courts Act XXXII of 1925. The italicised words at the end of sub-section (4) have been added and the words "unless he is a Presidency Magistrate" which occurred in sub-section (3) have been omitted, by the Crim. Pro. Code Second Amendment Act XXXVII of 1923. The object of this amendment is "to make it clear that in cases where an appeal lies, the Presidency Magistrate shall take down a memorandum of the examination of the accused person as already provided in the new sub-section (2A) of section 362, and that in non-appealable cases no record of the examination of the accused need be made"—Statement of Objects and Reasons, (Gazette of India, 1923, Part V, page 242). See also 56 Cal. 1067 cited in Note 1033 under sec. 362.

1036. Scope and application of section :—The rules laid down in this section are applicable to the examination of the accused under section 342—Emp. v. Nagar, 4 Bom. L.R. 461.

This section applies only to examination of the accused during inquiries and trials, and not during investigations, which are governed by sec. 164—Reg. v. Bai Ratan, 10 B.H.C.R. 166. But still the rules laid down in this section are equally applicable to confessions taken under sec. 164, in the course of an investigation—Reg. v. Shivya, 1 Bom. 219; Emp. v. Gajadhar, 1883 A.W.N. 243. See sec. 164 (2).

This section does not apply to a summary trial. See sub-section (4). See also sec. 354 ('other than summary trials'). If a case is tried summarily, the Magistrate need not record the full statement of the examination of the accused in the form under sec. 364; i.e. he need not record the questions and answers in detail. It is sufficient if he makes a brief note of the examination on the record—Bhawaní v. Emp., 3 O.W.N. 946, 28 Cr.L.J. 76; Parsotim v. K. E., 6 Pat. 504, 8 P.L.T. 757, 28 Cr.L.J. 1037.

This section applies to the record of statement made by an accused. A person against whom no process has been issued is not in the position of an accused person, and if such person is examined in an inquiry under sec. 202, his statement cannot be regarded as having been recorded under this section—Sat Narain v. Emp., 32 Cal. 1035.

This section does not apply where there has been no examination of the accused. The Magistrate only examines the accused when he thinks "necessary for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstance appearing in the evidence against him. The examination of an accused prior to commitment is in the discretion of the Magistrate. If the Magistrate does not examine the accused, or if the accused is unwilling to submit to an examination, it is sufficient for the Magistrate to make a note of the fact and record it as a reason for not examining the accused—Crown v. Dosu, 11 S.L.R. 52.

1037. Record of questions and answers :—Where the Judge asked the accused persons as to whether they would make any statement or not, and they replied in the negative, the Judge should record what the exact questions were that were put to the accused. Where in such a case there was no record made of the questions and answers and the only indication of it was to be found in the order sheet wherein the Judge made the following remark "The accused declined to make any statement in this Court and on being asked whether they would adduce evidence they replied in the negative;" held that the provisions of section 364 were violated, and the trial having been vitiated by such omission, the accused should be retried—Emp v Nani Mandal, 52 Cal 403, 41 C.L.J. 50, 26 Cr.L.J. 761; Sarat Chandra v. Emp, 52 Cal. 446, 26 Cr.L.J. 1244, A.I.R. 1925 Cal 821, Messer Bepar v K E, 29 C.W.N. 939, 26 Cr.L.J. 1032.

It is not necessary for the Magistrate to state in the body of the examination that the statement comprised every question put to the accused and every answer given by him, and that he had liberty to add to or explain his answers. Attestation at the foot of the examination is sufficient—Q v Goshto, 15 W.R. 68.

Where the confession of the accused was recorded in a simple narrative form instead of in the form of questions and answers as required by this section, and there was nothing to show that the accused was prejudiced thereby, it was held that the irregularity did not affect the admissibility of the statement in evidence and was cured by sec 533—Emp v Deo Dat, 45 All. 166; Emp v. Anta, 1892 A.W.N. 60, Emp. v. Munshi, 8 Cal 616; Fekoo v. Emp., 14 Cal 539, Khudiram v Emp, 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625. Although it is of great importance to record the questions put to the accused (because sometimes a statement made in answer to a question put may have a different meaning if considered without such question) still if the omission to record the questions does not affect the sense and meaning of the prisoner's statement, the omission will not make the statement inadmissible in evidence—Emp v Sagambar, 12 C.L.R. 120, Nawab v Emp, 28 Cr.L.J. 341 (342) (Lah.), Titu Miah v. Q, 8 Cal. 618 (Foot-note).

Record need not be in Magistrate's handwriting—There is nothing in this Code which necessitates a Magistrate to take down the examination of the accused in his own hand. It is enough if he appends a certificate that the examination was conducted in his presence and contains accurately all that was said by the accused—Q v. Lucky Narain, 20 W.R. 50.

1038. Language :—The law requires that ordinarily the statement of the accused must be recorded in the language in which it was made, the object being to represent the very words and expressions used so as to ensure accuracy and prevent misrepresentation and misconstruction of what was said—Q. E. v. Sagal, 21 Cal. 642; Emp. v. Nani Mandal, 52 Cal 403, 41 C.L.J. 50, 26 Cr.L.J. 761. This rule of law ought not to be deviated from unless it is shown that it was impracticable to write the statement in the language in which it was made. If the answers were not taken down in the language in which they were given, the irregularity cannot be cured by sec. 533—Q. E. v. Nilmadhab, 15 Cal 595, Jai Narain v. Q. E., 17 Cal. 862; Bawa v. K. E., 10 O.C. 112. Section 364 lays down that the confession is to be recorded in the language in which it was made, or if that is not practicable, in the language of the Court or in English. And it would be for the prosecution to establish the impracticability of recording the statement in the language in which it was made—Jai Narain v. Q. E., 17 Cal. 862, Q. E. v. Nilmadhab, 15 Cal. 595; Bawa v. K. E., 10 O.C. 112, 6 Cr.L.J. 94. Where the accused was examined by the Magistrate in Marathi and gave his answers in Marathi, the statements should be recorded in Marathi. It is illegal to record them in English—Q. E. v. Surmal, Ratanlal 633; Q. E. v. Visram Babajee, 21 Bom. 495. If however it is not practicable to record the statement in the language in which it is made, the law directs that the statement shall be recorded in the language of the Court or in English—Q. E. v. Sagal, 21 Cal. 642. Thus, where the confession of the accused person made in Bengali was recorded by the Magistrate in English, because he could not write Bengali well and there was no mohurrer with him at the time, it was held that there was no illegality—Q. E. v. Razai Mian, 22 Cal. 817. See also Khudiram v. Emp., 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625. Where the Magistrate recorded the confession of the accused on a holiday, and since he could not get the service of any one to write Hindustani, he recorded the confession in English, translated it in Urdu to the accused who admitted it to be correct, held that the confession was properly recorded in accordance with the provisions of this section—Emp. v. Bachanna, 1891 A.W.N. 55. Where a confession made in Hindustani was recorded by a Muhammadan Magistrate in Bengali, the language of the Court, the High Court held that it could not be presumed that the Magistrate must have had sufficient acquaintance with Urdu so as to be able to record the statement in that language, and that in the absence of any evidence it should be presumed that the Magistrate found it impracticable to record the statement in Urdu—Lal Chand v. Q. E., 18 Cal. 549. So also, in Emp. v. Deo Dat, 45 All 166, Emp. v. Anta, 1892 A.W.N. 60, Q. E. v. Visram Babaji, 21 Bom. 495, Rutti Ram v. Emp., 1899 P.R. 7, and Nanab v. Emp., 28 Cr.L.J. 341 (342) (Lah.), although it was practicable for the Magistrate to record the statement in the language in which it was made, still an English record was held to be good, if it was translated to the accused in his own language, and no prejudice was caused to him, the irregularity being cured by sec. 533. See also Emp. v. Fernandez, 4 Bom.L.R. 785. Where the Magistrate was a Bengalee, and the accused was a Bengalee, but the accused made his confession partly in Bengali and partly in English, and he understood English well and he read through his statement and corrected it, held that the Magistrate did not act illegally in recording the confession in English—Nilmadhab v. Emp., 5 Pat. 171, 27 Cr.L.J. 957.

When a Magistrate is unable to record a confession in the language in which it is made, he should not employ a police officer to write it down. The employment of a police-officer even as a scribe in recording a confession is objectionable—Khudiram Bose v. Emp., 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625.

Although the terms of sections 164 and 364 are imperative, still if the Magistrate, instead of recording the confession himself, employed a clerk to do so, it was held that the irregularity would be cured by sec. 533 by examining the Magistrate—Badan Singh v. K. E., 1909 P.R. 2.

If the confession of the accused is made in a foreign language, unknown to the Court or Magistrate, the Code does not require that it should be recorded in that language. In such a case, the record of the confession should be in the language in which it is conveyed to the Court by the interpreter—Emp. v. Vaimbilee, 5 Cal 826. Where a statement was made by the accused in Manipuri and communicated to the Magistrate by an interpreter in Bengali, and the Magistrate recorded it in English, and there was also a record in Manipuri, but the two records differed, it was held that the record in Manipuri should be regarded as the proper record and the only evidence in the case—Q. E v. Sagal, 21 Cal. 642.

1039. 'Shown or read over to accused' etc. :—Before a statement can be admitted in evidence, it is necessary to see that such statement has been deliberately made and recorded, and that after being recorded, it has been shown or read over to the accused so that he might be assured that his words have been correctly taken down—Q v. Narain, 7 W.R. 49. It is not sufficient for the Sessions Judge merely to read over to the accused the statement recorded by the committing Magistrate, but the Judge should record any explanation or statement the accused may make at the time. Merely recording in the judgment of the Sessions Judge that the statement or examination of the accused as recorded by the committing Magistrate was put in and read out to him is not enough—Fatu, 6 P.L.J. 147. Where there was nothing to show that the record of the confessional statement made by the accused before the committing Magistrate was shown or read over to the accused, such statement cannot be used as evidence against him—Emp. v. Dewan Kahar, 4 P.L.T. 186, 24 Cr.L.J. 497. This section requires that the record shall be shown or read over to the accused, and if he does not understand the language in which it is written, it must be interpreted in a language which he understands. Where a Magistrate showed or read a confession recorded in English to the accused who did not understand English, the provisions of this section were not complied with—Bheebecker 4 N.W.P. 16.

1040. Sub-section (2)—Record must be signed.—The record of confession must be signed by the accused. A record which does not bear the signature of the accused is not admissible in evidence until th defect is cured in the manner provided by sec. 533—Emp. v. Gajadhar, 1883 A.W.N. 243. Where the signature or mark of the accused was not taken to the record of the statement made by him to a Magistrate, the defect can be cured by examining the Magistrate as a witness to prove that the statement recorded was duly made—Q. E. v. Chedda, 1896 A.W.N. 161, Q. E. v. Raghu, 23 Bom. 221; Reg. v. Deva Dayal, 11 B.H.C.R. 237. Where the signature of the accused was not taken by the committing Magistrate, and no objection was raised before the Sessions Court by his pleader on the ground of absence of signature, and no prejudice was caused to the accused, it was held that, under the circumstances of the case, the irregularity was not a sufficient ground for reversing the judgment—Reg. v. Deva Dayal, 11 B.H.C.R. 237. The signature of the accused to his confession is taken as a voucher of the authenticity of the statement, and not as an admission of its correctness. Therefore, where the signature is not taken at the time the confession is made, but is taken the next day, and the Magistrate swears of the authenticity of the confessional statement, there is no such illegality or irregularity as would affect the admissibility of the statement in evidence—Khudiram v. Emp., 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625. Where, through an oversight, the Magistrate did not take the signature of the confessing accused, and the latter refused to affix his signature when he was subsequently asked to do so, but at the trial the Magistrate and his clerk were examined as to the confession having been duly made by the accused, held that the defect was cured by sec. 533, and the confession was admissible in evidence—Ba Yin v. Emp., 7 Rang. 759. The record must be signed by the accused himself in his own handwriting, it cannot be signed by another person for the accused. If so signed, it is inadmissible in evidence—Reg. v. Daya Anand, 11 B.H.C.R. 44, but now see section 533.

If the accused is unable to write, his mark or thumb impression (45 All. 166) is a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section. But if he can write, his thumb-impression is not sufficient—Sadananda v. Emp., 32 Cal. 550.

The signature of the accused must be taken in the presence of the Magistrate. To take it in an adjoining room in the presence of a clerk and not in the immediate presence of the Magistrate is not a proper compliance with the provisions of this section—Q. E. v. Bhika, Ratanlal 687.

Refusal to sign.—Sub-section (2) involves only the Magistrate offering the record for the accused's signature, but it does not empower the Magistrate to require the accused to sign. Therefore an accused who refuses to sign the record of statement does not commit an offence punishable under sec. 180 I. P. C. That section of the Penal Code applies only when the Magistrate is legally empowered to require the accused to sign the statement—K. E. v. Ba Tin, 3 L.B.R. 199; Imp. v. Sirsapa, 4 Bom. 15. But it has been laid down by the Allahabad High Court that the language of this section makes it compulsory upon the accused to sign the statement; the Magistrate is a public servant legally competent to require the accused to sign the statement, and if the accused refuses to do so, he commits an offence under sec. 180 I. P. C.—Emp. v. Umer Khan, 39 All. 399. So also, per Melville J. in Imp. v. Sirsapa, 4 Bom 15

Signature of Magistrate:—The affixing of an unreadable initial to the statement of the accused is not a proper compliance with this section—Q. v. Bhikaree, 15 W.R 63

1041. Certificate:—The absence of the certificate in the recorded examination of the accused is not necessarily fatal to its admissibility—Reg v. Vyankatray, 7 B H C R. 50 Though a Magistrate omitted to certify a confession as required by sec 364 and did not record the whole of the questions put to the accused, the High Court declined to interfere where no prejudice resulted to the accused—Kamalagadu, 2 Weir 436 A defect in the certificate to be attached by a Magistrate to the examination of the accused can be cured only by taking evidence that the accused duly made the statement recorded, either by examining the Magistrate or some other person who was present when the statement was recorded It cannot be cured by examining a witness to prove that it was taken down in the handwriting of the Magistrate himself—Emp v Balasur, 8 C.P.L.R. 6, Emp v. Lal Sheikh, 3 C.W.N 387; Reg v Peradi, 2 B H C R. 397, Q E v. Anga Valayan, 22 Mad 15, Q E v Raghu, 23 Bom 221, Badan v K. E., 1909 P R 2 It cannot be cured by the addition of the certificate at the direction of the District Magistrate after an appeal is disposed of—Reg. v Vyankatrao, 7 B H C R 50

This section does not prescribe any particular form of the certificate When a confession bore a certificate of the Magistrate containing the words "taken by me" but did not say that the confession was made in his hearing, it was held that the certificate substantially complied with the requirements of this section—Noshai v. Emp., 5 Cal 958

The certificate need not be in the handwriting of the Magistrate; it is sufficient if it is signed by the Magistrate—Q. v. Rezza Hosain, 8 W R 55

1042. Non-compliance with the section—The rule laid down in this section should be strictly followed—Emp v Gajadhar, 1883 A.W.N. 243 Magistrates should in all cases be careful to observe all the provisions of section 164 and this section, for although various defects can be cured, the value of the confession may be very much diminished by non-compliance with the strict letter of the law—Ratti Ram v Q E, 1899 P.R 7

Non-compliance with the formalities of this section may be remedied by sec. 533 by oral evidence (of the Magistrate who recorded it) that the accused duly made the statement recorded—Q E v Raghu, 23 Bom 221, Lal Chand v Q E., 18 Ca. 549, Reg v Vithoji, 2 B H C R 398 Where the confession though signed by the accused was not recorded in the manner prescribed by this section, and there was no certificate showing that the record contained in full the statement made by the accused, it was admitted in evidence in spite of these defects, and held to be proved by its production—Ahmed Din v. Emp., 1881 P R. 20 Sher Singh v. Emp., 1881 P.R 21.

But section 533 does not apply and cannot make a confession admissible, where no attempt has been made to conform to the provisions of this section. Thus, where the confessions were neither recorded in the language of the accused, nor were signed by the accused, nor certified by the Magistrate, held that there was a total non-compliance with the provisions of this section, and sec 533 would not cure such grave irregularities—Q. E. v. Viran, 9 Mad. 224. Where no record whatever has been made of a confession, such confession cannot be proved merely by oral evidence. Section 533 deals with errors in the record and does not apply where no record whatever has been made of such a confession—Emp. v. Gulaba, 33 All. 260, 14 Cr L.J. 211. See also Emp v Nani Mandal, 52 Cal 403 cited in Note 1037 ante

365. Every High Court established by Record of evidence in Royal Charter High Court. may from time to time, by general rule, prescribe the manner, in which evidence shall be taken down in cases coming before the Court, and the Judges of such Court shall take down the evidence or the substance thereof in accordance with the rule (if any) so prescribed.

365. Every High Court established by Record of evidence in Royal Charter, High Court, and the Chief Court of Oudh shall from time to time, by general rule, prescribe the manner in which evidence shall be taken down in cases coming before the Court, and the evidence shall be taken down in accordance with such rule.

Change :—This section has been amended by section 99 of the Criminal Pro Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "The word 'shall' would make it compulsory upon High Courts to prescribe by rules the manner in which evidence should be taken down. The section will not of course limit the discretion of the High Court as to what form the rules should take"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

"We do not think it necessary that the Judges of the Court should take down the evidence themselves. But we are of opinion that there should certainly be some record"—Report of the Joint Committee (1923)

The words "and the Chief Court of Oudh" have been added by the Oudh Courts Act XXXII of 1925.

CHAPTER XXVI.

OF THE JUDGMENT.

366. (1) The judgment in every trial in any Criminal Court of original jurisdiction shall be pronounced, or the substance of such judgment shall be explained,—

Mode of delivering judgment.

(a) in open Court either immediately after the termination of the trial or at some subsequent time of which notice shall be given to the parties or their pleaders, and

(b) in the language of the Court, or in some other language which the accused or his pleader understands :

Provided that the whole judgment shall be read out by the presiding Judge, if he is requested so to do either by the prosecution or the defence.

(2) The accused shall, if in custody, be brought up, or, if not in custody, be required by the Court to attend to hear judgment delivered, except where his personal attendance during the trial has been dispensed with and the sentence is one of fine only or he is acquitted, in either of which cases it may be delivered in the presence of his pleader.

(3) No judgment delivered by any Criminal Court shall be deemed to be invalid by reason only of the absence of any party or his pleader on the day or from the place notified for the delivery thereof, or of any omission to serve or defect in serving, on the parties or their pleaders or any of them, the notice of such day and place.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed to limit in any way the extent of the provisions of section 537.

The requirements of sections 366 and 367 are not mere matters of form. The provisions of these sections are based upon good and substantial grounds of public policy, and whether they are or not, the Sessions Judges must obey them and not be a law to themselves—Q E. v Hargobind, 14 All 242.

1043. Judgment :—Judgment means the expression of opinion of the Judge or Magistrate arrived at after due consideration of the evidence and of the arguments—Damu v. Sridhar, 21 Cal. 121. An order of dismissal of a complaint under section 203 is not a judgment—Emp. v. Chinna, 29 Mad 126. An order dismissing a case for default of appearance of the complainant is not a judgment—Ratanchand v. Emp., 5 N.L.R. 76, Bibhuti v. Dasimoni, 10 C.L.J. 80 Judgment means a judgment of conviction or acquittal, but not an order of discharge under section 209 or 253—Dwarka v. Benimadhab, 28 Cal. 652; Mir Ahmad v. Md. Askari, 29 Cal 726, Emp. v. Maheshwari, 31 Mad. 543; Emp. v. Nabi, 9 Bom. L R 250 On the other hand, if the Magistrate, after taking some evidence, however incomplete the evidence may be, enters into the merits of the complaint and makes an order of discharge, such an order is a judgment—Dwarka v. Benimadhab, 28 Cal. 652. The final order of acquittal on a petition of composition is not a judgment—Hasta v. Crown, 1914 P R 29, 10 Cr L.J. 81, because such an order is made without any consideration of the evidence.

The judgment referred to in this section is a judgment passed in a trial; the section does not therefore apply to final orders made in sanction proceedings under section 195—In re Nagappa, 6 Bom.L R. 897. (Sanction proceedings, however, are now abolished).

1044. Delivery of judgment :—The delivery of judgment and the passing of sentence is an integral part of the criminal trial and must be done by the Judge himself. It is not a mere formality, and a deliberate breach of this express provision of law is not a mere irregularity curable by section 537 Where on the date fixed for delivery of the judgment, the Judge being ill, he signed and dated his judgment and sent it to be translated to the accused by the Interpreter, the Judge himself not being present in Court, and the judgment was so translated by the Interpreter, it was an illegality and a retrial must be ordered—Rambit v. Emp., 24 Cr L.J. 594, 1 Bur L.J. 122. But the Allahabad High Court takes a more liberal view and holds that where a Magistrate wrote out a judgment, signed and dated it, but owing to physical incapacity had it read out by another Magistrate, it was at the most an irregularity which was covered by sec 537—Nur Md. Khan v. Emp 21 A L.J. 137, 24 Cr.L.J. 173 A judgment which is not delivered is no judgment Where a Judge after writing his judgment but before delivering it, dies or leaves the Bench, his written judgment cannot be considered as a judgment, but it is merely an opinion. A judgment though written and signed, is inoperative until it is pronounced, and must be taken merely as an expression of opinion—Ramdhun v. K. E., 11 A L.J. 745, 14 Cr L.J. 562

The judgment must be delivered in open Court—Damu v. Sridhar, 21 Cal. 121

The judgment must be pronounced by the Judge or Magistrate who held the trial The duty of signing and delivering the judgment cannot be delegated by the presiding officer to another person. Where a Magistrate, after holding trial in one district, went away to another district and thence sent his judgment to the Magistrate of the former district to be delivered, and the District Magistrate delivered it, the trial was set aside and retrial ordered—Q. E. v. Jia Lal; 1889 A.W.N. 181, Baisnab Charan v. Amin Ali, 50 Cal 664, 38 C.L.J. 202, 24 Cr L J 489. But the Madras High Court and the Oudh Chief Court are of opinion that the delivery of the judgment by the successor of the Magistrate who wrote it is not illegal—In re Sankara Pillai, 18 M.L.J. 197, 7 Cr.L.J. 459, Chandika v. Emp., 28 O.C. 109, 11 O.L.J. 725. See also In re Savarimuthu, 40 Mad 108, where it has been held that the succeeding Magistrate can date, sign and pronounce a judgment written by his predecessor, and thus adopt it as his own.

The judgment must be pronounced in the presence of the accused. Where the accused having absconded, the Magistrate passed sentence in his absence, and upon his re-arrest pronounced the judgment again, it was held that the Magistrate should not have pronounced his previous judgment in the absence of the accused—Q. E. v. Ghohram, Ratanlal 325, Crown v Sardar, 1917 P R 36. If, however, the judgment is one of acquittal or of fine only, it may be passed in the absence of the accused, under sub-section (2)—Crown v Jamal Khatun, 6 S L R 208.

The judgment in a criminal case must be passed without undue delay, as delay is not only unjust to the accused, as it prevents them from appealing at once, but is opposed to the principles of law—Emp v Baldeo, 5 C P.L.R. 24. In a trial by jury, it is not necessary, under section 367, to record a judgment, but only the heads of charges to the jury should be recorded; and these should be written out as soon as possible after the charge to the jury has been actually delivered, when the facts of the case are fresh in the mind of the Judge—Fanindra v Emp., 36 Cal 281. In this case the charge to the jury was written 3 weeks after; and the High Court severely condemned the delay.

It is not necessary that the whole of the judgment should be read. It is sufficient if the substance of the judgment is delivered. Omission to read a portion in the judgment is a mere irregularity covered by section 537—Venkataramanayya, 2 Weir 711, Kamakshamma v Emp., 38 Mad 498, 14 Cr L J 595.

1045. Conviction or acquittal before judgment :—

The judgment must always be written and delivered before sentence is passed. It is illegal to pronounce a sentence at the termination of the trial and to postpone the writing of the judgment to a future occasion—Punjab Circ., p 239. In as much as the sentence in a case of conviction, and the direction to set the accused at liberty in a case of acquittal, can only follow on the decision and cannot precede it, and in as much as the decision must be contained in the written judgment, it must necessarily follow that the sentence is illegal if there is no written judgment when it is passed—Q. E. v. Hargobind, 14 All. 242. Where the judgment was delivered after the order of acquittal was passed, the acquittal was set aside and a re-trial ordered—Q. E. v. Abdul Majid, 1892 A.W.N. 157. Where the judgment was written and delivered some days after the prisoners were convicted and sentenced, it was held that this was a violation of the express provisions of this section and was more than a mere irregularity, and the conviction and sentence must be set aside—Bandanu Atchayya v. Emp., 27 Mad. 237.

In some cases, however, it has been held that such an irregularity does not vitiate the whole proceedings unless there has been a failure of justice; such irregularity will be cured by section 537—Tilak Chandra v. Baisagomoff, 23 Cal. 502, Crown v. Moriokhan, 5 S.L.R. 131; Emp. v. Thave Issaji, 13 Bom.L.R. 635, Damu v. Sridhar, 21 Cal. 121; Kamakshamma, 38 Mad. 498, Sankaralinga v. Narayan, 45 Mad. 913 (F.B.); Md. Hayat Mulla, 7 Rang. 370, 1930 Cr. C. 203 (204); Ata Md. v. Emp., 25 Cr.L.J. 705 (Lah.) Sec. 497 (4) now provides for acquittal of the accused before judgment on taking a bond from him for appearance on the day of judgment.

Where a Magistrate died after pronouncing the sentence but before writing the judgment, the High Court reversed the conviction and sentence and ordered a retrial—Q. E. v. Kamthia, 1 Bom.L.R. 160. But in 2 Weir 438, where the Magistrate died after passing sentence but before recording a judgment, it has been held that a conviction on a trial regularly held will not be set aside merely because the Magistrate had been unavoidably prevented from recording a judgment, and the right of appeal of the accused would not be taken away by the absence of a complete judgment.

Loss of judgment.—This section only imposes the condition that the judgment must be pronounced in open Court and imposes a few other conditions but such conditions do not include the condition that the record should not have been lost. In cases where the judgment has been lost, the appropriate course for a Judge is to re-write the judgment from memory and from the materials on record, and place it on record—Kamakshamma v. Emp., 38 Mad. 498.

367. (1) Every such judgment shall, except as otherwise expressly provided by this Code, be written by the presiding officer of the Court or from the dictation of such presiding officer in the language of the Court, or in English; and shall contain the point or points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision; and shall be dated and signed by the presiding officer in open Court at the time of pronouncing it, and where it is not written by the presiding officer with his own hand, every page of such judgment shall be signed by him.

(2) It shall specify the offence (if any) of which, and the section of the Indian Penal Code or other law under which, the accused is convicted, and the punishment to which he is sentenced.

(3) When the conviction is under the Indian Penal Code, and it is doubtful under which of two sections or under which of two parts of the same section of that Code the offence falls, the Court shall distinctly express the same and pass judgment in the alternative.

(4) If it be a judgment of acquittal, it shall state the offence of which the accused is acquitted and direct that he be set at liberty.

(5) If the accused is convicted of an offence punishable with death, and the Court sentences him to any punishment other than death, the Court shall in its judgment state the reason why sentence of death was not passed.

Provided that, in trials by jury the Court need not write a judgment, but the Court of Session shall record the heads of the charge to the jury.

(6) For the purposes of this section, an order under section 118 or section 123, sub-section (3), shall be deemed to be a judgment.

1046. Change.—The italicised words in sub-section (1) and the new sub-section (6) have been added by section 100 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

Under the old section it was held that the judgment must be written by the Magistrate himself, he could not get it written by a clerk—Q. E. v. Lakshmitai, Ratanlal 545. Subramanya v Q, 6 Mad 396, and that if the judgment was written at the dictation of the Magistrate, and the Magistrate merely signed it, the procedure was illegal—Manik Lal v Corporation of Calcutta, 4 C.L.J. 411. The present Amendment in sub-section (1) will now allow such procedure

Language of judgment—Under this section, the judgment should be written in the language of the Court or in English. Where an Honorary Magistrate wrote his judgment in Urdu instead of in Hindi, the language of the Court, it was held to be irregular, but such irregularity was curable by section 537—Dhanukdhari v Harihar, 4 C.L.J. 232, 4 Cr.L.J. 162.

1047. Contents of judgment.—The judgment must be self-contained and nothing should be left out. If any material finding is left out in the judgment, the defect cannot be cured by the Magistrate's subsequent explanation to the Appellate Court—Jurakhan v. K E, 7 C.L.J. 238. A judgment should contain sufficient particulars to enable a Court of Appeal to know what facts were found and how—Q. E. v. Dhurmiya, Ratanlal 833. The judgment should show that the Court had considered the evidence and had found in a case of conviction that the facts proved to the satisfaction of the Court brought an offence home to the accused person whom the Court convicted—Q. E. v. Pandeh Bhat, 19 All 506 (F B). Where a judgment, though not a long and elaborate one, affords a clear indication that the Court duly considered the evidence, it is a good judgment—Kasimuddin v Q E, 1 C.W.N. 169. But if the judgment is so meagre that it is impossible to form an opinion as to the merits of the case or to say whether there has been a miscarriage of justice or not, the judgment must be set aside—Rupa Mandal v Keshab, 5 C.L.J. 452.

Where an Appellate Court finds that the Magistrate has not written a judgment in conformity with the provisions of section 367, the correct procedure is to accept the appeal and to remand the case for hearing de novo. The Appellate Court cannot retain the appeal on its file and ask for a judgment which the Magistrate has failed to record—Karuppiah v. Emp., 1920 M.W.N. 120, 21 Cr.L.J. 52.

Points for determination—Every judgment of a Criminal Court must contain a clear statement of the points for determination—Bom H C. Cr Cir., p. 33. "The attention of all Criminal Courts is invited to the necessity of very strictly observing the provisions of the latter portions of clause (1) of section 367, which declares that the judgment must contain the points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision"—Cal G R & C O., p. 36. Where the Sessions Judge convicted the accused without stating the facts of the case or the points for determination or even the section under which the accused was convicted, the judgment was set aside—Ektar Khan v Emp., 9 C.W.N. xxlii. The accused person is entitled to have an independent judgment of the trying Court, and such judgment must be prepared in accordance with, and must contain the particulars required by, section 367. Otherwise it is no judgment at all. Where a second class Magistrate thinking that a severer punishment should be inflicted on the accused than what he was authorised to award, recorded his opinion and forwarded the proceeding to the Sub-divisional Magistrate, and the latter in convicting the accused wrote the following judgment: "I agree with the finding arrived at by the learned trying Magistrate and convict all the accused for the offence of unlawful assembly as stated in the charge", held that this was not a judgment at all—Thakur Singh v Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 444 (Pat). Where the Magistrate has given strong and legal reasons for his decision, his omission to refer to the minute details of the case does not vitiate his judgment—Durga Singh v. Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 181 (Pat). Where the judgment showed that the Judge had appreciated the points which the prosecution had to establish, and that he had clearly in view the points for determination, viz., the credibility of the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution, and he expressed his opinion on that point, it was held that the judgment was good.

and should not be set aside—Rohimuddi v Q. E., 20 Cal. 353. Where an Appellate Court rejected an appeal without specifying the points for determination, or the decision or the reasons thereof, the appeal was ordered to be reheard—Utam v. Crown, 1876 P R 6.

In every case of mischief, the question of legal title to the property is a point for determination. It is the duty of the Criminal Court to determine what was the intention of the alleged offender and whether he was not acting in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right—Emp. v. Budh Singh, 2 All 101. In a case of dacoity, the Judge should at first give a general outline of the case, the course of the investigation and the arrest of the various accused, and then the case for and against each accused should be dealt with in detail, and the Judge should arrive at a conclusion with regard to each individual accused—Nga Mu v Emp., 2 Bur.L J 199. In a case of unlawful assembly and riot, the judgment should contain as one of the points for determination a statement as to the existence of the elements constituting the unlawful assembly—Ram Lal v Haricharan, 37 Cal 194. It is the duty of the Judge to determine, where several alternative common objects of the unlawful assembly are alleged in the charge, which of the common objects is made out—Manaruddi v Emp., 35 Cal 718, Dasarathi v Raghu, 36 Cal. 158. In a charge of theft, the point for determination is the dishonest intention, especially if a bona fide claim is set up—Ram Lal v Hari Charan, 37 Cal 194.

'Decision thereon'—The Sessions Judge should be careful to record findings on all the charges under which the prisoner is sent up for trial—Q. v. Mahomed Ali, 13 W R 50. Where there are several accused, the case of each accused should be dealt with in detail, and the Judge should arrive at a decision with regard to each individual accused—Nga Mu v Emp., 2 Bur.L.J. 199, In re Dakshinamurti, 1918 M W N 129, 19 Cr L.J. 200.

Reasons for decision—Every judgment must contain the reasons for decision, a judgment which states merely the offence and the punishment and contains no statement of the reasons for conviction is insufficient and invalid—Q. E. v Kana, Ratanlal 310. Even in a summary trial, the law requires under sec 263 that the Magistrate should give a brief statement of the reasons for his finding. A judgment in a single line is not a judgment in accordance with law—Jankey Rai v Emp., 20 Cr L J 431 (Pat). In a proceeding under sec. 145, the Magistrate should, in the final order, sufficiently state the reasons therefor, so that the High Court may in revision determine whether or not the Magistrate has directed his mind to the consideration of the effect of the evidence adduced before him—Bhuban Chandra v. Nibaran, 49 Cal 187, 25 C W N 887. An order of discharge under section 253 is not a judgment, and the writing of reasons is not necessary. But it is desirable that the Magistrate should record his reasons for the discharge, although it is not compulsory—Emp v Nabi Fakira, 9 Bom. L.R. 250.

Remarks and comments :—The testimony and conduct of police-officers examined in a criminal trial may be commented upon in the judgment in the same degree as those of any other material witnesses, but no further—Q v. Budri, 23 W.R. 65. Comments on the conduct of witnesses and parties should not go beyond what is really necessary for the elucidation of the case. Any humorous remarks or ridicule on strangers should be avoided—Ma Kyn v. Kin Lat, 11 L.C. 1000, 4 Bur.L.T. 173; Emp. v. Baldeo, 5 C.P.L.R. 24. The language of a judgment should be temperate and sober, and not satirical. A judgment should not admit irrelevant matter to the record, but should confine itself to a consideration of the issues before the Court, together with a fair and legitimate comment on any errors or irregularities that may be disclosed in the course of the trial—Emp v Thomas Pellako, 5 Bur.L.T. 20, 13 Cr.L.J. 259. A judgment should not contain remarks about the accused to the effect that he was a person of wealth and influence and had prevented truth from appearing, unless such conduct of the prisoner is established by evidence—Q v. Dhurum, 8 W.R. 13. The judgment should not contain any damaging remarks regarding a witness in a criminal trial—In re Malik Umar, 1910 P.W.R. 2, 11 Cr.L.J. 178, or regarding the conduct of a counsel when such counsel's conduct was not at all objectionable—Lachchu v. Emp., 1 O.L.J. 141, 15 Cr.L.J. 420; or regarding a person who is not a party or witness in the proceeding—Benarsi Das v. Crown, 6 Lah. 166, 26 Cr. L.J. 1326. An appellate judgment should not contain any imputations about the motives of the trying Magistrate—Yacoub, 2 Weir 535. The High Court has power to expunge any objectionable remarks from the lower Court's judgment; see Note 1214 under sec. 439.

Specification of offence :—See sub-section (2). The offence of which the accused is convicted must be specified in the judgment with the same precision as in the charge—K. E v Taik Pyn, 5 L.B.R. 21, 2 I.C. 619; Manaruddi v Emp., 35 Cal 718.

Sentence :—Under this section, the sentence is a part of the judgment, and when an accused person is convicted, it is incumbent upon the Court to pass a formal sentence of even a single day's imprisonment or any other punishment to make the record legally complete—Emp. v. Kalua, 1894 A.W.N. 219. In estimating the sentence to be passed, the defence put forward by the accused should not be treated as a matter of aggravation—Emp v. Cheda Lat, 1883 A.W.N. 170.

As to the legality of passing sentence before judgment, see Note 1045 under sec. 366.

1048. Signing :—This section requires that the judgment must be signed. But if the judgment is written entirely in the hand of the Magistrate, or partly written by his own hand and partly written by another at his dictation, it does not become inoperative by reason of the fact that he forgot to sign and date it. The irregularity does not affect the merits of the case, and is cured by sec. 537—Ram Singh v Emp., 47 All. 294, 23 A.L.J. 8, 26 Cr.L.J. 699; Md. Hayat Mulla, 7 Rang 370, 1930 Cr. C. 203 (204).

The signature should be made with a pen and not with a stamp. There are obvious reasons why judicial documents should be authentic.

cated in such a manner that their authenticity may admit of proof. But the affixing of a signature with a stamp would be no more than a mere irregularity—Subramanya v. Q., 6 Mad. 396. But mere initialling is not signing—Q. E. v. Nanhu, O.S.C. 192.

The signature of the Magistrate must be appended to the judgment at the time of pronouncing it in open Court—Q. E. v. Ganpat, Ratanlal 429, In re Savarimuthu, 40 Mad. 108. But omission to date and sign the judgment at the time of pronouncing it is an irregularity covered by sec. 537—Venkataramanayya, 2 Weir 711 (712).

The dating and signing of the judgment must be done by the presiding officer of the Court; it cannot be delegated to any body else—Q. E. v. Jia Lal, 1889 A.W.N. 181. Where a Magistrate who has tried a case and written out the judgment is succeeded by another before he has actually pronounced the same, it is not obligatory on the succeeding Magistrate to pronounce the same, and much less can he be compelled to do so, though he may, if he chooses, date, sign and pronounce it, in which case he will be adopting it as his own—In re Savarimuthu, 40 Mad. 108. Quere, whether it will be legal for the succeeding Magistrate to date, sign and pronounce the judgment written by his predecessor, when the accused demands a de novo trial (under sec. 350)?—Ibid.

Sub-section (3).—Judgment in the alternative—The 'doubt' in sub-section (3) is the same as that referred to in sec. 236, i.e., a doubt as to the application of law to the facts proved and not a doubt as to whether the accused had committed any offence. See notes under sec. 236. Where the judgment did not state in express terms that the Court was in doubt as to the question under which of two sections the offence fell, it was held that this was at most an irregularity and did not vitiate the judgment—Boya Takirugadu, 2 Weir 440.

Sub-section (4).—Judgment of acquittal—Under sub-section (4) if the judgment is one of acquittal, the accused is entitled to be discharged from custody immediately on the judgment of acquittal being pronounced, and his further detention becomes unlawful. No formal warrant of release addressed by the Court to the Superintendent of the Jail is necessary, it is for the jail authorities (in whose custody the accused had remained) to satisfy themselves of the result of the trial—Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 2.

1049. Sub-section (5).—Judgment in capital cases—Where the Judge convicts the accused of murder and passes on him the alternative sentence of transportation for life, he should state his reasons for not passing the capital sentence—Dwarka, 4 O.W.N. 977, 23 Cr.L.J. 980 (1932). A person convicted of murder should ordinarily be sentenced to death. To justify the passing of a sentence of transportation for life, there should be really extenuating circumstances, and not a mere absence of aggravating circumstances—Emp. v. Nga Myat 18 Cr.L.J. 113 (Bur.); Crown v. Nga Tha, 1 L.B.R. 216 (F.B.), Mi She Yi v. K. E. 25 Cr.L.J. 1121 (Rang). The fact that the crime was committed without premeditation in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel is not an extenuating

the same degree as those of any other material witnesses, but no further—Q v. Budri, 23 W.R. 65. Comments on the conduct of witnesses and parties should not go beyond what is really necessary for the elucidation of the case. Any humorous remarks or ridicule on strangers should be avoided—Ma Kyn v. Kin Lat, 11 I.C. 1000, 4 Bur.L.T. 173; Emp. v. Baldeo, 5 C.P.L.R. 24. The language of a judgment should be temperate and sober, and not satirical. A judgment should not admit irrelevant matter to the record, but should confine itself to a consideration of the issues before the Court, together with a fair and legitimate comment on any errors or irregularities that may be disclosed in the course of the trial—Emp. v. Thomas Pellako, 5 Bur.L.T. 20, 13 Cr.L.J. 259. A judgment should not contain remarks about the accused to the effect that he was a person of wealth and influence and had prevented truth from appearing, unless such conduct of the prisoner is established by evidence—Q v. Dhurum, 8 W.R. 13. The judgment should not contain any damaging remarks regarding a witness in a criminal trial—In re Malik Umar, 1910 P.W.R. 2, 11 Cr.L.J. 178, or regarding the conduct of a counsel when such counsel's conduct was not at all objectionable—Lachchu v. Emp., 1 O.L.J. 141, 15 Cr.L.J. 420; or regarding a person who is not a party or witness in the proceeding—Benarsi Das v. Crown, 6 Lah. 166, 26 Cr.L.J. 1326. An appellate judgment should not contain any imputations about the motives of the trying Magistrate—Yacoob, 2 Weir 535. The High Court has power to expunge any objectionable remarks from the lower Court's judgment, see Note 1214 under sec. 439.

Specification of offence—See sub-section (2). The offence of which the accused is convicted must be specified in the judgment with the same precision as in the charge—K. E v Taik Pyn, 5 L.B.R. 21, 2 I.C. 619, Manaruddi v Emp., 35 Cal. 718.

Sentence—Under this section, the sentence is a part of the judgment, and when an accused person is convicted, it is incumbent upon the Court to pass a formal sentence of even a single day's imprisonment or any other punishment to make the record legally complete—Emp. v. Kalua, 1864 A.W.N. 219. In estimating the sentence to be passed, the defence put forward by the accused should not be treated as a matter of aggravation—Emp. v. Cheda Lal, 1893 A.W.N. 170.

As to the legality of passing sentence before judgment, see Note 1045 under sec. 366.

1048. Signing :—This section requires that the judgment must be signed. But if the judgment is written entirely in the hand of the Magistrate, or partly written by his own hand and partly written by another at his dictation, it does not become inoperative by reason of the fact that he forgot to sign and date it. The irregularity does not affect the merits of the case, and is cured by sec. 537—Ram Singh v. Emp., 47 All. 294, 23 A.L.J. 8, 26 Cr.L.J. 688, Mid Hayat Mulla, 7 Rang. 370, 1930 Cr.  e, sign and pronounce the judgment written by his predecessor, when the accused demands a de novo trial (under sec. 350)?—Ibid

Sub-section (3).—Judgment in the alternative—The 'doubt' in sub-section (3) is the same as that referred to in sec. 236, i.e., a doubt as to the application of law to the facts proved and not a doubt as to whether the accused had committed any offence. See notes under sec. 236. Where the judgment did not state in express terms that the Court was in doubt as to the question under which of two sections the offence fell, it was held that this was at most an irregularity and did not vitiate the judgment—Boya Takirugadu, 2 Weir 440.

Sub-section (4).—Judgment of acquittal—Under sub-section (4) if the judgment is one of acquittal, the accused is entitled to be discharged from custody immediately on the judgment of acquittal being pronounced, and his further detention becomes unlawful. No formal warrant of release addressed by the Court to the Superintendent of the Jail is necessary, it is for the jail authorities (in whose custody the accused had remained) to satisfy themselves of the result of the trial—Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 2.

1049. Sub-section (5).—Judgment in capital cases—Where the Judge convicts the accused of murder and passes on him the alternative sentence of transportation for life, he should state his reasons for not passing the capital sentence—Dwarka, 4 O.W.N. 977, 28 Cr.L.J. 980 (1902). A person convicted of murder should ordinarily be sentenced to death. To justify the passing of a sentence of transportation for life, there should be really extenuating circumstances, and not a mere absence of aggravating circumstances—Emp. v. Nga Myat, 18 Cr.L.J. 113 (Bur), Crown v. Nga Tha, 1 L.B.R. 216 (F.B.), Mi She Yi v. K. E., 25 1121 (Rang). The fact that the crime was committed without circumstance—Emp. v. Nga Myat, 18 Cr.L.J. 113. The reasons justifying the infliction of the lesser penalty under sec. 367 (5) must be such as are in accordance with established legal principles. The drunkenness of the accused is not a sufficient reason for not inflicting capital sentence. Unless drunkenness amounts to unsoundness of mind so as to enable insanity to be pleaded by way of defence, or unless the degree of drunkenness is such as to establish incapacity in the accused to form the intent necessary to constitute the crime, drunkenness is neither a defence nor a palliation and is not a reason for inflicting a sentence of transportation for life instead of a death sentence—Varyam v. Crown, 7 Lah 141, 27 Cr.L.J. 764.

The fact that the accused murdered his victim merely to escape from custody is not a sufficient reason for imposing the lesser sentence of transportation. But where the case rests entirely on circumstantial evidence and it is open to question whether the injuries to the head of the deceased would have caused his death had he not been drowned, these may be reasons for inflicting the lesser punishment—Munnun v. Emp., 4 O.W.N. 754, 28 Cr.L.J. 860 (861). The fact that the accused is a woman is not a sufficient ground for passing a sentence of transportation instead of one of death—Emp. v. Nibbia, 1888 A.W.N. 134; Mi She v. K. E., 25 Cr.L.J. 1121 (Rang). The fact that the accused is a pregnant woman is not a sufficient ground for commutation of sentence—Q. v. Panhee, 15 W.R. 66, in such a case the execution is to be deferred till after delivery, see sec. 382. The fact that the body of the murdered man has not been found is not a sufficient ground—Emp. v. Bhagirath, 3 All 383, Emp. v. Sadhu, 1882 A.W.N. 160; Emp. v. Rogi, 1881 A.W.N. 112, Contra—Q. v. Budurooddeen, 11 W.R. 20.

It is clear from sub-sec. (5) that when a person is found guilty of murder, the sentence of death must be the normal sentence and the sentence of transportation for life is provided only as an abnormal sentence, in passing which reasons must be given as to why the capital sentence is not passed—per Cuming J. in Emp. v. Dulart, 33 C.W.N. 1226 (1230). But S. K. Ghosh J. is of opinion (p. 1232) that sec. 367 (5) should not be interpreted in this way, for such a construction would make the sentence of transportation an exception in murder cases. But this is not true, for in actual practice, capital sentence is sparingly inflicted. Sec. 367 (5) has nothing to do with the measure or degree of punishment in murder cases, but simply lays down a matter of procedure, namely, that reasons should be recorded if a capital sentence is not passed. The sentence of death is not to be taken as a normal sentence, but the Court must look to the circumstances of the case in deciding the sentence to be passed.

Where the Sessions Judge feels reasonable doubt whether a sentence of death would be the proper penalty, the doubt, like all other doubts, should be given in favour of the accused, and a sentence of transportation should be passed. In such a case, it is highly improper for the Sessions Judge to pass a sentence of death and to leave the responsibility to the High Court of commuting the sentence, if necessary—Shive Cho v. K. E., 3 L.B.R. 111.

1050. Heads of charge to the jury :—Under this section, the Judge is not required to write out in extenso the charge which he addresses to the jury. He is to record merely the heads of the charge, because it is impossible for the Judge to write down everything he says to the jury—Keamuddi v. Emp., 51 Cal 79 (82). The heads of charge to the jury need not be a verbatim reproduction of the Judge's observations to the jury, nor is it necessary that the charge should be written out before it is delivered. But whether they are written out before delivery or taken down verbatim, they should be placed on record by the Judge as soon as he may find it possible to do so and whilst what he said is fresh in his recollection. The record need not be meticulous or lengthy, but it must give accurately the substance of what the Judge said to the jury so that the High Court may, if occasion arises, be able to ascertain from the record whether the law and the facts relative to the case were fairly and properly put to the jurors. Where the Judge's record of his charge to the jury is simply this. "Sections 141 to 149 and 299 to 304 I. P. Code read over and explained;" held that such a short summary was not a sufficient compliance with the law—Rupan Singh v. K. E., 4 Pat 626, 27 Cr L J 49, Khayraddin v. Emp., 53 Cal. 372, 27 Cr L J 266; Chotan v. Emp., 7 Pat. 361, 29 Cr L J 804 (805). The heads of the charge mean that the Judge must faithfully record the line upon which he addressed the jury, both on the evidence and on the law, and the object of these heads of charge is to inform the High Court, should occasion arise, of what direction he gave in law to the Jury and the nature of the summing up of the evidence not only for the prosecution but also for the defence. The heads of charge are not intended to be an exhaustive detail of every particular which the Judge may have addressed to the jury, but they should contain in an intelligible form and with sufficient fulness the points of law and direction given by the Judge to the jury, and the record should represent with absolute accuracy the substance of the charge by the Judge to the jury—Eknath v. K. E., 1 P L J. 317, Fanindra v. Emp., 36 Cal 281, Emp v. Ikramuddin. 39 All 348, Abdul Gafur v. Emp. 35 C L J 437, 26 C W N 996, Khayraddin v. Emp., 53 Cal 372, 42 C L J 504, 27 Cr L J 266, Rahamalli v. Emp., 26 Cr L J 1151 (Cal). The heads of the charge should contain such statement as will enable the Appellate Court to decide whether the evidence has been properly laid before the jury, or whether there has been any misdirection in the charge—Q v. Kasim 23 W R 32, Emp v. Baij Nath 1903 A W N 232, Abbas v. Q. E. 25 Cal 736 In re Shambulal, 10 Bom L R 565, Panchu v. Emp., 34 Cal 693; Ikramuddin v. Emp., 39 All 348, 18 Cr L J 491 Dnarika v. Emp. 33 C W N 84

Although under sec. 367, only the heads of the charge to the jury are required to be recorded, still as the law allows an appeal on grounds of misdirection, it is not only desirable but necessary that the charge should be recorded with sufficient fulness to enable the Appellate Court to see that all points of law were clearly explained to the jury, and that the summing up was proper and free from misdirection—Wilson, 30 C.W.N. 693, 27 Cr.L.J. 926; Panchu v. Emp., 34 Cal. 698; Abdul Gafur v. Emp., 26 C.W.N. 996, 24 Cr.L.J. 8; Laxumana, 2 Weir 385. The Judge should also record in his charge what evidence he reads out to the jury—Q. E. v. Baswantappa, Ratanlal 917. It is not sufficient for the Judge to state in his record of the heads of the charge that he referred to certain sections of the Penal Code and explained to the jury the law with regard to the offence; he should set out in the record the directions which he gave to them in respect of the law, in order that the High Court may not have to speculate as to what the Judge said but may be in a position to judge whether the elements constituting the particular offence in question had been properly and fairly explained to the jury—Kasimuddin v. Emp., 47 Cal. 795, 21 Cr.L.J. 694, Chotan Singh v. Emp., 7 Pat. 361, 29 Cr.L.J. 804 (805). The Judge's comments on the evidence of identification should be recorded in a form which will enable the Appellate Court to know what was actually said—Abdul Gafur v. Emp., supra. But failure to record in the charge what actually the Judge's explanation of the law was would not vitiate the trial where it has not occasioned a failure of justice. The High Court will not therefore order a retrial on this ground if it is of opinion that if the jury accepted the evidence of the prosecution they were entitled to convict the accused of the offence charged—Chotan Singh v. Emp., 7 Pat. 361, 29 Cr.L.J. 804 (805); Kasimuddin v. Emp., supra.

Where a joint trial is held of several offences some of which are triable by jury and others with the aid of assessors, and in respect of the latter offences the jurors become assessors, it is the duty of the Sessions Judge to pronounce a judgment containing the particulars specified in this section, in respect of the latter offences. A reference to the charge to the jury is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section—Q. E. v. Datta, Ratanlal 426.

1051. Appellate Judgment:—"It should be observed that section 424 of the Code extends the provisions of section 307 to the judgments of the Lower Appellate Courts, and it is essential that the judgment of such Courts should comply with the provisions of this section"—Cal. G. R. & C. O., p. 36. An appellate judgment, like the judgment of the Court of first instance, must fulfil the conditions laid down in this section, that is, the judgment must state the points for determination, the decision thereon, and the reasons for the decision—Emp. v. Devendra, 17 Bom.L.R. 1085, 16 Cr.L.J. 832; Kali Charan v. Geli Beja, 2 P.L.T. 228, 22 Cr.L.J. 640, 63 I.C. 336; Bindarban, 21 Cr.L.J. 223 (Lah.); Dalip Singh v. Crown, 5 Lah. 308; Mangla v. Emp., 2 P.L.T. 616, 63 I.C. 416, 22 Cr.L.J. 656. Where the Appellate Court merely rejected the appeal without specifying these points, the appeal was ordered to be reheard—Utam v. Crown, 1876 P.R. 6.

Besides specifying these points, the Appellate Court has to decide two more points, viz., (1) is the objection raised in the memorandum of appeal a valid objection? and if not, (2) is there any ground apparent on the record for interference in appeal? A judgment which does not decide these

It is the duty of the Sessions Judge, in disposing of an appeal, to record a judgment according to law; any deficiency in that judgment cannot be made up for by a reference to the judgment of the Magistrate. It is his duty to go into the evidence and try the appeal in a proper manner. Where the Sessions Judge in appeal stated no facts and gave no reasons in his judgment for the conclusion arrived at by him, the appeal must be reheard—Bhola Nath v. Emp., 7 C.W.N. 30; Ektar v. Emp., 9 C.W.N. xxiii

An appellate judgment must be quite independent and stand by itself; it ought not to be read in connection with or as supplementary to the judgment of the Court of first instance—Jamait v. Emp., 35 Cal. 138, Mangala v. Emp., 2 P.L.T. 616, 63 I.C. 416; Solhu v. Krishna Ram, 25 Cr.L.J. 113 (Lah.), Thakur Singh v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 444 (Pat.), Dasogi v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 645 (Pat.); Bach v. Emp., 1 Rang 301. Even when confirming the judgment of the trial Court, the Appellate Court should take its own view of the evidence after perusing the record. The judgment of the Court of appeal should be such that the High Court as a Court of Revision might on looking into the judgment be in a position to judge for itself what the case was and how far the Court of appeal had considered the evidence as bearing on the guilt or innocence of the accused, before it affirmed the judgment of the trial Court—Inatulla v. Emp., 39 C.L.J. 117, 25 Cr.L.J. 1041

The judgment of the Appellate Court in dealing with the case of several accused convicted in a joint trial must show on the face of it that the case of each accused has been taken into consideration, and should state reasons, as far as may be necessary, to show that the Appellate Court has devoted judicial attention to the case of each accused—Jamait v. Emp., 35 Cal. 138, Dakshinamurti v. Emp., 1918 M.W.N. 129, 19 Cr.L.J. 200, Arindra v. K. E., 20 C.W.N. 1296, In re Bapu Naidu, 2 L.W. 958, 16 Cr.L.J. 735; In re Cherukath, 16 Cr.L.J. 496 (Mad.), In re Chinna Manikkam, 48 M.L.J. 504, 26 Cr.L.J. 1089, Madad Ali v. K. E., 24 O.C. 230; Solhu v. Krishna Ram, 25 Cr.L.J. 113 (Lah.).

The Appellate Court must record reasons for confirming, reversing or modifying the sentences or orders of the Magistrate, unless the reasons are set out, the High Court cannot revise the proceedings of the Appellate Court—Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 12. Where the Appellate Judge merely says that he adopts the reasons given by the trial Court, to support the grounds of his decision, or merely states that he is satisfied that the judgment of the trial Court is substantially right, the judgment is erroneous in form—Dasogi v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 645 (Pat.), Baishnab Charan v. Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 311 (Cal.)

An Appellate Court is not required to write a long and elaborate judgment, but it is clearly its duty not only to examine the evidence but also to write a judgment affording a clear indication that the appeal has properly tried and that the points urged by the appellant have been duly considered and decided. An Appellate Court which writes a judgment which the High Court is unable to follow without reference to the judgment of the trial Court, obviously fails in the discharge of the duty imposed upon it by law—Dalip Singh v. Crown, 2 Lah. 308 (310), 23 Cr. L.J. 9.

The judgment of the Appellate Court must show that it has duly considered the evidence of both sides and the pleas raised in appeal, with a judicial mind—Beni v. Emp., 4 O.L.J. 80, 18 Cr.L.J. 689; if it does not consider the evidence for the defence, nor even alludes to it, it is defective—In re Seperumal, 11 Cr.L.J. 331, 7 M.L.T. 182; In re Ballusu, 1912 M.W.N. 881, 13 Cr.L.J. 712; Beni v. Emp., (supra). Even though the Counsel for the appellant does not refer to the defence evidence, it is the duty of the Appellate Court to look into that evidence and after dealing with it come to its own decision—Fidoi Hossein v. Emp., 40 Cal. 376, 14 Cr.L.J. 419. Where a District Magistrate disposed of an appeal in a case under section 100, in which a large mass of evidence had been produced on both sides, by a short judgment in a few lines dealing with some general observations upon the volume of evidence which was put before him and without proper consideration thereof, held that the judgment was not in accordance with law—Sunehri v. Emp., 19 A.L.J. 921, 23 Cr.L.J. 378. A District Magistrate should not dispose of an appeal from an order requiring a person to furnish security, otherwise than by a judgment showing on the face of it that he has applied his mind to a consideration of the evidence on the record and of the pleas raised by the appellant both in the Court below and in the memorandum of appeal—Lal Behari v. Emp., 38 All. 393, 17 Cr.L.J. 309. But the Appellate Court is not bound to give its opinion as to the character of the evidence in prolix detail—Q. E. v. Pandeh Bhat, 19 All. 506. Where in the judgment of the first Court, evidence was set out at great length and reasons fully explained, the judgment of the Appellate Court which confirms the judgment of the trial Court does not become defective in law by reason of the fact that it does not set out again in detail the whole of the evidence and reasons for believing the witnesses, if it appears from the judgment that the Appellate Court appreciated the arguments adduced against the credibility of the prosecution witnesses—Kafiluddin v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 239 (Cal.). But although as a general rule, it is not incumbent on the Appellate Court, when confirming a decision of the Lower Court, to set forth its reasons in full, still if there is anything peculiar in the circumstances of the case, the Appellate Court should notice it—Reg. v. Moraba, 8 B.H.C.R. 101. But it is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section, if the District Magistrate hearing the appeal and confirming the order of the lower Court gives no reasons for his decision but merely says that he has considered the evidence carefully and thinks that it is sufficiently strong to justify the order—San Das v. K. F., 2 Rang. 641; or if the Appellate Court states no reasons whatsoever and confirms the judgment of the Lower Court in these general terms: "I see no reason for distrusting the finding of the Lower Court"—In re Ram

Das, 13 Cal 110, Emp. v. Sameshar, 1888 A.W.N. 280, Emp. v. Bhujpal, 1886 A.W.N. 289; or "after reading the evidence and hearing the counsel I am of opinion that the Lower Court has decided the case rightly; I find no ground for interference, appeal is dismissed"—Girish v. Q. E., 23 Cal 420, Farkan v. Samsher, 22 Cal. 241, Rohimuddy v. Q. E., 20 Cal. 353; Q. E. v. Pandeh, 19 All 506, or "the prosecution evidence is sufficient to warrant the conviction; I decline to interfere" Shamsher Ali, 2 Weir 536; or "I have perused the judgment of the Lower Court, and I agree with the findings arrived at by the learned trying Magistrate and convict all the accused for the offence of rioting as stated in the charge"—Thakur Singh v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 444 (Patna).

Where the judgment of the Appellate Court was in the nature of a stereotyped one, which might answer for any case, it was not one in accordance with this section or section 424—Kasimuddi v. Q. E., 1 C.W. N. 169

Even when an Appellate Court rejects an appeal summarily under section 421, it is advisable to state shortly in its order the reason or reasons which have influenced it in coming to the conclusion that there is no sufficient ground for interference in the case—Q. E. v. Nanhu, 17 All. 241; Ramrao v. Emp., 13 N.L.R. 169, 18 Cr.L.J. 993. Although in rejecting an appeal under section 421, the Appellate Court is not bound to write a judgment and give reasons for its decision—Q. E. v. Warubai, 20 Bom. 540, Rash Behari v. Balgopal, 21 Cal. 92; Ramrao v. Emp., 13 N.L.R. 169, K. E. v. Krishnaya, 25 Mad. 534, still the recording of reasons is necessary in view of the possibility of such orders being challenged by an application for revision—Q. E. v. Nanhu, 17 All. 241; Kundan v. Emp., 36 All 496, 15 Cr.L.J. 512. See Note 1132 under sec. 421.

Even where the Appellate Court dismisses the appeal because no one appears to argue the appeal, the Court is bound to read and consider the evidence and dispose of the appeal by writing a judgment in accordance with the provisions of this section—Noai Sheikh, 11 C.W.N. cxxxv.

Defective Appellate Judgments:—It is difficult to lay down any rule with precision as to what judgment of an Appellate Court complies, and what judgment does not comply, with the requirements of this Code. It cannot be held that merely because the form of judgment does not exactly comply with all the requirements of this section and of section 424, it is not a valid judgment. The omissions in the judgment must be substantial in order to invalidate it—Q. E. v. Pandeh, 19 All. 506. Though the judgment of the Appellate Court is not in proper form, the High Court should not interfere with an order of acquittal, unless there has been a miscarriage of justice—Rupa Mandal v. Keshab, 5 C.L.J. 452, 5 Cr.L.J. 349. Where the Appellate judgment shows that the Judge had appreciated and had in view all the points, the High Court should not interfere in revision merely because the form of judgment does not exactly comply with all the requirements of this section—Rohimuddy v. Q. E., 20 Cal. 353. But where the Appellate Court which dismissed the appeal not summarily but after notice to the parties, omitted to write the judgment altogether, such an omission was not a mere irregularity curable by sec 537, but a grave illegality—Emp. v. Devendra, 17 Bom. L.R. 1085, 16 Cr L J 832, 31 L.C. 1008.

1052. Sub-section (6) :—"We think it desirable to lay down that orders under sections 118 and 123 (3) should be deemed to be judgments for the purposes of the section"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922) This sub-section supersedes In re Ramasamy Chetty, 27 Mad 510 (512) where it was held that an order passed in security proceedings was not a "judgment"

In Venkatachinnaya v K E, 43 Mad 510, it was contended for the Crown that the word 'inquiry' in section 117 did not mean a trial; but Ayling J, in overruling this contention observed as follows (at pp. 524-525) —"If the word is to be given the narrow interpretation contended for the Crown, such provisions as those in Chapter XXVI regarding judgments will not apply to security cases That is to say, the Magistrate in ordering security under section 118 would be under no legal obligation, inter alia, to record a judgment setting forth his reasons (section 367) or to give the accused a copy of it without delay (section 371). So far as I can see, apart from the operation of section 117, the Magistrate might simply record an order requiring the execution of a bond, without recording any reasons or discussing the evidence I do not think this could have been intended, especially as care has been taken to provide for an appeal against an order for security (vide section 406) and for the interference of Chief Presidency or District Magistrate (section 125)" The present sub-section gives legislative recognition to the above remarks of Ayling J

368. (1) When any person is sentenced to death, Sentence of death. the sentence shall direct that he be hanged by the neck till he is dead.

(2) No sentence of transportation shall specify the place to which the person sentenced is to be transported.

9. No Court, other than a High Court, when it has signed its judgment, shall alter or review the same, except as provided in Sections 395 and 484 or to correct a clerical error.

369. Save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, or in the case of a High Court established by Royal Charter, by the Letters Patent of such High Court, no Court, when it has signed its judgment, shall alter or review the same, except * * to correct a clerical error.

Court not to alter judgment

Change :—This section has been amended by section 101 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

The wording of the old section admitted of the interpretation that High Courts had unlimited powers of altering or reviewing their judgment (though such interpretation was never made in any of the decided cases). The present section as now amended lays down that the High Court has no power to alter or review its judgment except as provided by the Letters Patent. The references to sections 395 and 484 have been omitted, because there are cases other than those referred to in these two sections, in which a review of judgment is possible e.g., section 434. See the Report of the Joint Committee of 1922

1053. Scope of section—Although this section refers in express terms to judgments under Chapter XXVI of the Code, still it is clear that the principle laid down herein applies also to final orders which are in the nature of judgments—In re Harilal, 22 Bom 949. An order which is passed on full inquiry and after hearing both sides is in the nature of a judgment, and such an order cannot be altered after it is once passed and signed. Thus, an order of a District Magistrate, passed after full enquiry, refusing to deliver to the Political Superintendent of a Foreign State, a property seized in execution of a search warrant, cannot be altered by the Magistrate himself. The only course open to the Magistrate is to make a reference to the High Court, and have his own order cancelled—In re Harilal, 22 Bom 949. An order under Chapter XII is in the nature of a judgment, and a Magistrate having passed an order under section 146 cannot cancel the order and pass an order under Section 147 instead—Ram Dulare v Ajodhya, 16 O C 192, 14 Cr L J 605, Lachmi v. Bhusi, 19 Cr L J 225 (Pat). An order in sanction proceedings (now abolished) comes under this section and a Sessions Judge refusing to revoke a sanction has no jurisdiction to review his order and revoke it—Q E v Ganesh, 23 Bom 50. A final order in maintenance proceedings (sec. 488) is in effect a judgment, and the Magistrate cannot review a final order passed in such a proceeding—Nanda v Manmaya, 21 C W.N. 344.

But this section does not apply to an order of dismissal of complaint under section 203. Such an order is not a judgment within the meaning of this section—Emp. v. Channa, 29 Mad. 126, and the Magistrate can re-hear the complaint—Chinna, 29 Mad. 126, Alakhatambi v. Hassan Ali, 1 N L R 18. So also an order directing issue of process under sec. 204 is not a judgment, and a Magistrate can, on a reconsideration of that order, cancel the issue of process and order an inquiry under sec. 202—Lalit Mohan v Nand Lal, 27 C W.N. 651.

An order dismissing a summons case for default of appearance under section 247 is in the nature of a judgment, and a Magistrate cannot revive the case once dismissed for default—Ram Coomar v. Ramji, 4 C W.N. 26. But it is competent for a Magistrate to re-hear a warrant case in Further inquiry:—An order for further inquiry does not amount to a review of the order of dismissal or discharge. The terms of this section must be read as controlled by section 437 (now 436). That section does not limit the power of a District Magistrate to make further inquiry into a case in which an order of dismissal or discharge may have been passed by a subordinate Magistrate; and there is no bar to a District Magistrate making further inquiry into a case in which such order may have been passed by himself—Bidhu Chandalini v. Moti, 28 Cal. 102. But where a District Magistrate has already dealt with a case in revision and decided that there was no cause for interfering with the order of discharge, he cannot subsequently order further inquiry, because such an order would be an order reviewing the earlier one and is prohibited by this section—Nga Than v. Emp., 5 Bur. L.T. 37, 13 Cr.L.J. 301.

Proper procedure:—When a mistake has been made in the judgment (e.g., when an appeal has been erroneously dismissed as time-barred, or when an illegal sentence has been passed) it is not open to the Judge or Magistrate to alter or review his judgment or order, but the only course open to him is to submit the case to the High Court—Emp. v. Raghunath, 6 Bom.L.R. 360, Mga E. v. Emp., 1 Bur. S.R. 354, Q. v. Poran Mal, 23 W.R. 49; In re Harilal, 22 Bom. 949; In re Dhondi, 23 Bom. L.R. 846.

1055. No power of High Court to alter its judgment:—See notes under "Change" above. The law is now the same as it was practically before. It should be noted that inspite of the words 'other than a High Court' occurring in the old section, the High Court held that it had practically no power to alter or review its own judgment, under the old law. There being no provision in the Letters Patent or the Government of India Act authorising the High Court to exercise the power of review, the words "other than a High Court" could not be read as conferring on the High Court that power by implication—In re Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382 (389). It has even been remarked in In re Gibbons, 14 Cal. 42 (47) that so far as the High Court was concerned there was no substantive enactment in this section, it did not confer any power on the High Court, nor did it take away any of the powers which existed in that Court before the passing of this section.

The Legislature has not conferred in express words upon the High Court the power of reviewing its judgment in all criminal cases, as it has done in all civil cases. The provisions of the old section, so far as they affect a High Court, merely apply to questions of law, which arise in its original criminal jurisdiction, and which are reserved and subsequently disposed of under the provisions of section 434 and the corresponding sections of the Letters Patent—Q. E. v. Durgacharan, 7 All. 672. The words 'other than a High Court' do not give the Division Bench of the High Court power to review its judgment passed by it in a criminal appeal. The words are to be accounted for by the power of review given to the High Court under section 434 on points specially reserved by the Judge presiding at the High Court Sessions—Q. E. v. Mehan, Patna 791, In re Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382 (404). In other words, the High Court cannot entertain an application to review a judgment passed by it on appeal.

in a criminal case—Q. v. Godai, 5 W.R. 61, Q. E. v. Mohun, Ratanlal 791; Hale v K E., 1909 P.R. 1; Emp v Kale, 45 All. 143 (145); In re Arumuga, 50 M.L.J. 51, 27 Cr L J 184 The Code of Criminal Procedure was passed after the Code of Civil Procedure The latter contains a section expressly authorising review of judgment, but the former contains no corresponding section. From this it may be reasonably inferred that the Legislature did not intend to confer in criminal cases the power similar to that which they had given in civil cases—Q. v. Godai, 5 W.R. 61 (63). In criminal matters, the Letters Patent of the High Court confer on it full power and authority to review a case decided in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction on points of law. But such power to review does not appear to apply to a case decided in the exercise of its appellate or revisional criminal jurisdiction—Ibrahim v. Emp., 30 Cr L J 749 (Rang.). As soon as an appellate judgment is pronounced and signed by the Judges, the High Court is functus officio, and neither the Court itself nor any Bench of it has any power to revise the decision or interfere with it in any way—In re Gibbons, 14 Cal. 42; Q. E. v. Durgacharan, 7 All. 672; In re Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382 (401); Paras Ram v Emp., 1 O.W.N. 891, 26 Cr.L J 543. Even if a single Judge of the High Court has passed an order dismissing an appeal, a Division Bench of the High Court cannot review that order by re-hearing the appeal—Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382 (404). If the Division Bench of the High Court passes an erroneous order in appeal, the only remedy is to make a petition (under Ch. XXIX) to the Local Government, the authority with whom rests the discretion either of executing the law or of commuting or setting aside the sentence—Q. E. v. Mohun, Ratanlal 791; Emp. v. Kale, 45 All. 143 (145). So also, a Division Bench cannot review an order which has been passed by them in revision—Q. E. v. Fox, 10 Bom 176 (F.B.); Gobind Sahai v. Emp., 38 All. 134; Q. E. v. Durgacharan, 7 All 672; Al Ah Lok v. K. E., 1905 U B R. (Cr. P. C.) 35; Nand Kishore v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 447 (Pat.); Q. E. v. Chimaba, Ratanlal 458. A single Judge of the High Court has no power to alter or revise an order passed by him in revision—In re Soma Naidu, 47 Mad. 428 (431). The High Court will not review its order passed in appeal or revision, even on the ground of discovery of fresh evidence, because such evidence ought to have been produced at the trial—Q. E v. Chimaba, Ratanlal 458; Emp. v. Kale, 45 All. 143 (145). So also, if a revision case is dismissed by the High Court for default of payment of printing charges, it is not competent for the High Court to rehear the case or entertain a fresh application for revision—Appayya v. Venkatappayya, 44 M L J. 27, 23 Cr.L J. 746. Even if a revision petition is dismissed for default of appearance of the practitioner who filed it, the High Court is not competent to restore the petition to its file—In re Ranga Rao, 23 M.L.J. 371. But in another recent case of the Madras High Court, as well as in cases of the other High Courts it has been held that when a criminal appeal or revision petition is dismissed by the High Court for default of appearance, there is no decision on the merits, and therefore there is no proper disposal of the case according to law. There being no provision in the Code for dismissing an appeal or revision petition for default of appearance, the order of dismissal is no "judgment" at all, and the High Court is not debarred from rehearing the appeal or revision petition—Kunhammad Haji, 46 Mad. 382 (402, 403) (dissenting from In re Ranga Rao, 23 M.L.J. 371 and Emp. v. Md Yasin, 4 Bom 101); Rajjab Ali v. Emp., 46 Cal 60 (63), 20 Cr.L.J. 265; Kishen Singh v. Girdhari, 23 Cr.L.J. 750 (Lah.); Ibrahim v. Emp., 30 Cr.L.J. 749 (Rang.). Similarly, if an order is passed in the absence of the accused without giving him an opportunity of being heard in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (2) of sec. 439, as for instance where by mistake a case is posted on a day anterior to that fixed in the notice to the accused, the order is null and void, and the High Court is to proceed with the matter afresh after proper notice to the accused—In re Soma Naidu, 47 Mad. 428 (434), 46 M.L.J. 456, 34 M.L.T. 218, 26 Cr.L.J. 370; Rajjab Ali v. Emp., 46 Cal 60 (63). If an appeal is dismissed by a High Court Judge under sec. 421 without the appellant or his pleader being given reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same, the order is passed without jurisdiction, and the Court has power to make an order that the appeal should be reheard after giving the appellant or his pleader a reasonable opportunity of being heard—Md. Sadiq v. Crown, 7 Lah.L.J. 108, 26 Cr.L.J. 1169, A.I.R. 1925 Lah 355.

Under the present section as now amended, the power of the High Court is as limited as it was before the amendment. "In view of the cases reported in the Indian Law Reports, 7 All 672, 10 Bom 176 (F.B.), and 14 Cal. 42 (F.B.), it is proposed to make it clear that section 369 confers no power on the High Court to alter or review its own judgment after it has been signed"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921) Even sec 361A does not confer on the High Court the power to review its own judgment—Nazar Mohd. v. Hara Singh, 26 P.L.R. 616, 27 Cr. L J. 23; Sadiq v. Emp., 7 Lah. L J. 108, 26 Cr.L.J. 1169

As soon as the judgment is signed, it becomes final and the Court is functus officio. The mere fact that there has been no formal order issued by the High Court or communicated to the Lower Court in pursuance of the judgment does not enable the High Court to review its judgment. A judgment must be taken to mean and refer to the judicial act of the Court in finally disposing of the case and must therefore indicate only the order of the Court when it is read out and signed by the Judge, and cannot be meant to refer to the formal order on the judgment subsequently drawn up and issued merely as a clerical act by the ministerial officers of the Court—In re Arumuga, 50 M.L.J. 51, 27 Cr.L.J. 184, A.I.R. 1926 Mad 420

The High Court, like the Lower Courts, can review its judgment before it is signed—Amodini v. Darsan, 38 Cal. 828, 13 Cr.L.J. 120; Bibhutl v. Dasi Moni, 7 C.W.N. vii. The Allahabad High Court can review its judgment after it is signed but before it is sealed, because the judgment of that High Court is not complete until it is sealed, and till then it may be altered by the Judge concerned—Q. E. v. Lalit, 21 All. 177; Gobind Saha v. Emp., 38 All. 134; Emp. v. Kallu, 27 All 92.

370. Instead of recording a judgment in manner hereinbefore provided, a Presidency Magistrate shall record the following particulars :—

Presidency
Magistrate's judgment.

- (a) the serial number of the case;
- (b) the date of the commission of the offence;
- (c) the name of the complainant (if any);
- (d) the name of the accused person, and (except in the case of an European British subject) his parentage and residence;
- (e) the offence complained of or proved ;
- (f) the plea of the accused and his examination (if any);
- (g) the final order;
- (h) the date of such order; and
- (i) in all cases in which the Magistrate inflicts imprisonment, or fine exceeding two hundred rupees, or both, a brief statement of the reasons for the conviction.

1056. Scope of section :—This section does not apply to proceedings under section 2 (1) and 3 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859). Those proceedings are not criminal proceedings, and no offence can be said to have been committed under those sections. A Presidency Magistrate is not therefore bound to frame a record in such proceedings in accordance with the provisions of this section—Abheram v. Abdul, 27 Cal. 131.

1057. Clause (i)—Reasons for conviction :—The meaning of this clause is that where the offence is sufficiently grave to involve a fine of Rs 200 or imprisonment as the substantive sentence, the Magistrate is bound to record his reasons (In re Dervish Hussain, 46 Mad. 253) so as to enable the party to bring the matter up to the High Court; but in petty cases, which can be met by a fine of few rupees, the decision of the Magistrate may be recorded shortly—Molceram v. Belaseeram, 14 Cal. 174. This section requires that in cases in which the accused is sentenced to imprisonment, a Presidency Magistrate shall record a brief statement of the reasons for the conviction. It is not sufficient for him to record that the offence is proved, for that may be necessarily implied from the fact that he has convicted the accused. The law requires something further as the reasons for the conviction—Natabar v. Provash, 27 Cal. 461. So also, a mere statement to the effect "I believe the evidence for the prosecution and the evidence of the complainant, and I convict th accused" is not a statement of reasons—Emp. v. Shankar, 17 Bom L.R. 890, 16 Cr.L.J. 771. The Magistrate should state his reasons in such a manner as to enable the High Court to judge of the sufficiency of the materials before the Magistrate to support the conviction—Yacoob v. Adamson, 13 Cal. 272; Emaman v. Emp., 31 Cal 993, Toolsey v Emp., 8 C.W.N. 587. Where there was not on the record any summary of the evidence nor such a statement of facts and reasons for conviction as would enable the High Court to say whether the materials were sufficient to support the conviction, it was held that the conviction should be set aside—Toolsey, v. Emp., 8 C.W.N. 587; Yacoob v. Adamson, 13 Cal 272; Emaman v Emp., 31 Cal. 983. Even, in a non-appealable case, the Presidency Magistrate should state his reasons so as to enable the High Court in revision to judge the sufficiency of materials before the Magistrate to support the conviction—Yacoob v. Adamson, 13 Cal 272. A Presidency Magistrate (as also an Honorary Presidency Magistrate), who tries and convicts an accused in a summary trial is bound to give reasons for the conviction—In re Varadarajula, 31 M.L.T. 400, In re Thurman, 20 L.W. 330, 25 Cr.L.J. 1084. But the omission to record the reasons in a summary trial is a mere irregularity, and the High Court will not interfere in revision if the accused has not been prejudiced—In re Thurman (supra).

The omission to record the various particulars required to be recorded under sec. 370 is a mere irregularity and not an illegality, where all the important items of these particulars have been recorded, and the omissions are of no real importance—Bishnupada v Emp., 30 C.W.N. 981, 27 Cr.L.J. 1131.

The imprisonment referred to in this clause is substantive imprisonment. A sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine is not a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of this clause—Moteeram v Belaseeram, 14 Cal. 174.

If the Magistrate omits to record the reasons, the defect is not cured by section 441 which permits a Presidency Magistrate to submit with the record (when called for under section 435) a statement setting forth the grounds of his decision. Section 441 does not abrogate the terms of section 370, but it merely allows the Presidency Magistrate to supplement the reasons which have been already recorded under section 370—In re Dervish Hussain, 46 Mad 253. But if the statement submitted under section 441 discloses sufficient grounds for the decision, the defect in not recording reasons under sec. 370 may be excused under section 537, if no substantial failure of justice has occurred—Ibid.

371. (1) On the application of the accused a copy of the judgment, or when he so desires, a translation in his own language, if practicable, or in the language of the Court, shall be given to him without delay. Such copy shall in any case other than a summons case, be given free of cost.

(2) In trials by jury in a Court of Session, a copy of the heads of the charge to the jury shall, on the application of the accused, be given to him without delay and free of cost.

(3) When the accused is sentenced to death by a Sessions Judge, such Judge shall further inform him of the period within which, if he wishes to appeal, his appeal should be preferred.

Case of person sentenced to death.

The application for copy of judgment need not be stamped See Q. E. v. Ragba, Ratanlal 364

Under clause (2), only a copy of the heads of the charge to the jury is supplied to the accused, because the Sessions Judge is not required to write a judgment but only to record the heads of the charge

The period of limitation for appeal from a sentence of death is 7 days from the date of the sentence (Art. 150, Limitation Act) excluding the time requisite for obtaining copies (sec 12, Limitation Act) Under subsection (3), the Judge should not only inform the accused that he must file his appeal within 7 days, but should also record that the accused was so informed, and whether he desires to appeal.—See N. W. P. Gazette, 1873, p 101.

372. The original judgment shall be filed with the record of proceedings, and where the original is recorded in a different language from that of the Court and the accused so requires, a translation thereof into the language of the Court shall be added to such record.

Judgment when to be translated.

373. In cases tried by the Court of Session, the Court shall forward a copy of its finding and sentence (if any) to the District Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the trial was held.

Court of Session to send copy of finding and sentence to District Magistrate.

CHAPTER XXVII.

OF THE SUBMISSION OF SENTENCES FOR CONFIRMATION.

374. When the Court of Session passes sentence of death, the proceedings shall be submitted to the High Court, and the sentence shall not be executed unless it is confirmed by the High Court.

Sentence of death to be submitted by Court of Session.

When the record of a case in which a sentence of death has been passed is submitted to the High Court under section 374, all the Police Diaries connected with the case should be simultaneously forwarded—Cal. G R & C O., p 39.

375. (1) If when such proceedings are submitted the High Court thinks that a further inquiry should be made into, or additional evidence taken upon, any point bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the convicted person, it may make such inquiry or take such evidence itself, or direct it to be made or taken by the Court of Session.

Power to direct further inquiry to be made or additional evidence to be taken.

(2) Such inquiry shall not be made nor shall such evidence be taken in the presence of jurors or assessors, and, unless the High Court otherwise directs, the presence of the convicted person may be dispensed with when the same is made or taken.

(3) When the inquiry and the evidence (if any) are not made and taken by the High Court, the result of such inquiry and the evidence shall be certified to such Court.

1058. Under this section the High Court can take additional evidence itself. In Q. E. v. Basvanta, 25 Bom. 168, the High Court admitted in evidence a confession rejected by the Sessions Judge. In Bhagwan v. Crown, 1911 P.W.R. 16, 12 Cr.L.J. 412, the High Court (then Chief Court) admitted further evidence and inspected the building where the offence was alleged to have been committed.

The High Court when recording further evidence under this section, can dispense with the presence of the accused, especially where the additional evidence is recorded by itself—K. E. v. Tirumal, 24 Mad. 523.

The High Court acting under this section is not entitled, with a view to make its opinion still more conclusive with reference to the discrepancies in the testimony of the witnesses on which the Trial Judge has properly dwelt, to test that testimony still further by reading the earlier statements of those witnesses made to the police and entered in the police diary; in other words, to treat as evidence what could be used at all events only for the purpose of discrediting those witnesses—Dal Sing v. K. E., 44 Cal. 876 (P.C.).

376. In any case submitted under Section 374, whether tried with the aid of assessors or by jury, the High Court—Power of High Court to confirm sentence or annul conviction.

- (a) may confirm the sentence, or pass any other sentence warranted by law, or
- (b) may annul the conviction, and convict the accused of any offence of which the Sessions Court might have convicted him, or order a new trial on the same or an amended charge, or
- (c) may acquit the accused person :

Provided that no order of confirmation shall be made under this section until the period allowed for preferring an appeal has expired, or, if an appeal is presented within such period, until such appeal is disposed of 1059. Power of High Court .—Though a High Court has power to substitute its own finding for the unanimous verdict of the jury in a trial for murder, when the sentence comes on for confirmation before the High Court, still as a matter of practice the High Court will not generally allow the verdict to be attacked arbitrarily. It is necessary that the convict must show prima facie that the verdict is unsupported by evidence. The High Court will not permit the same latitude in the criticism of the evidence before the jury that it allows in an ordinary appeal from a trial with assessors—Gul v. Emp., 15 S.L.R. 103 (F.B.), 23 Cr L.J. 33. But the High Court will undoubtedly interfere with the verdict if it is perverse or if evidence has been improperly admitted or excluded, or if there is a misdirection by the Judge—Gul v. Emp., supra. Where there has been a misdirection in the summing up to the jury, the conviction and sentence should be set aside and a retrial ordered—Emp. v. Rajab Ali, 31 C.W.N. 881, 28 Cr L.J. 742 (744). But questions of misdirection are of less importance in a case of reference, because on a reference the High Court is bound to come to its own independent conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, independently of the verdict of the jury or of the opinion of the Judge—Hazrat Gul Khan, 32 C.W.N. 345 (349), 29 Cr L.J. 546, 47 C.L.J. 240.

High Court may go into facts and law —When a case is submitted under section 374, the whole case is reopened before the High Court, and the High Court is bound to go into the facts as well as the law, although the conviction is by the verdict of the jury—Q. v. Jaffir Ali, 11 W.R. 57, Q. E. v. Chatradhari, 2 C.W.N. 49; Emp. v. Daji, 17 Bom L.R. 1072, 16 Cr L J. 818; and the High Court's power under this section is not limited as in appeal—Chatradhari, 2 C.W.N. 49. In a case referred to the High Court for confirmation of a death sentence, it is the practice of the High Court to be satisfied on the facts of the case as well as the law that the conviction is right, before it proceeds to confirm the sentence—Q. E. v. Abdul Razak, Ratanlal 710. Though the jury have unanimously convicted an accused for murder, it is the duty of the High Court on a reference under sec 374, to be satisfied that the finding of fact is supported by the evidence on the record—Arshed Ali v. Emp., 30 C.W.N. 166. Where the material evidence in the case could not be believed and was not supported by trustworthy evidence, and the confessions of some of the co-accused were not genuine but appeared to have been inspired in order to bring them into a line with the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, the High Court set aside the conviction and acquitted the accused, even though the jury passed a unanimous verdict of guilty, and there was no misdirection by the Judge to the jury—Panchu Mandal v Emp., 32 C.W.N. 702 (704), 29 Cr.L J. 833.

Where the High Court hears the appeal of a co-accused not sentenced to death along with a reference under section 374 in respect of a person sentenced to death, it was held under the old law that it was not open to the High Court to go into the facts in the appeal—Q. E. v. Chatradhari, 2 C.W.N. 49, and the hearing of the appeal was limited, as laid down in sections 418 and 423 (2), to points of law only—Ibid. But now see the new sub-section (2) of section 418.

Question of jurisdiction :—In determining whether the sentence should be confirmed, the High Court may also consider whether the conviction was by a Court of competent jurisdiction—Emp. v. Sarmukh, 2 All 218.

1060. Commutation of sentence :—Where the condition of the convict was such that if he were ordered to be hanged, a complete severance of the body from the neck would ensue (owing to an aperture in the neck communicating with the larynx), the High Court commuted the sentence of death into one of transportation for life—Boodhoo, 2 C.L.R. 215. In Autor Singh v. Emp., 17 C.W.N. 1213, there being a difference of opinion among the Judges who heard the reference, the case had to be referred to a third Judge (sec. 378) and there was a delay of six months in the High Court, before the final decision was arrived at. The third Judge upheld the conviction for murder, but commuted the sentence of death into one of transportation on the ground that the capital sentence had been hung over the heads of the accused for six months owing to the delay in the High Court.

Conviction for any other offence :—Where the accused was tried before the Sessions Judge for murder and concealment of murder, and was convicted of murder, but no finding was given on the minor charge, the High Court in acquitting the accused of the charge of murder, could convict him of the minor charge, where there was evidence to support it, inspite of the omission of the Sessions Judge to give any finding in respect of this minor charge—Md. Shah v. Crown, 1913 P.R. 8. The Calcutta High Court altered the conviction for murder into a conviction for grievous hurt (sec. 326 I.P.C.) where it was found that the intention to kill was wanting—Hazrat Gul Khan, 32 C.W.N. 345 (353), 29 Cr.L.J. 546. The Bombay High Court holds that in a reference under this section, the High Court cannot alter a conviction for murder into one for culpable homicide not amounting to murder, unless there is a petition of appeal along with the reference. If no appeal is preferred, the only course is to order a retrial for the other offence—Reg v. Balapa, 1 Bom 639. But there is nothing in this section to warrant such a view.

1061. Retrial :—Where the evidence taken before the Court of Session was incomplete, and further evidence was necessary before judgment could be properly pronounced upon the accused, the High Court ordered a retrial—K. E. v. Daulat, 6 C.W.N. 921. Where the accused was undefended in the Sessions Court, the High Court ordered a retrial on the same charge after proper arrangement being made for his defence—K. E. v. Mohar Ali, 19 C.W.N. 556, 16 Cr.L.J. 481. See also Reg v. Balapa, 1 Bom 639 above.

377. In every case so submitted, the confirmation of the sentence or any new sentence or order passed by the High Court, shall, when such Court consists of two or more Judges, be made, passed and signed by at least two of them.

Confirmation or new sentence to be signed by two Judges

378. When any such case is heard before a Bench of Judges and such Judges are equally divided in opinion, the case, with their opinions thereon, shall be laid before another Judge, and such Judge, after such hearing as he thinks fit, shall deliver his opinion, and the judgment or order shall follow such opinion.

Procedure in case of difference of opinion.

If the Judges of the High Court are in disagreement over the question of sentence, one favouring the death penalty and the other recommending that a sentence of transportation would meet the ends of justice, this in itself is a sufficient ground that death sentence is not to be inflicted. But this is not an inflexible rule, and the third Judge is required to go into the facts of the case and to judge for himself after considering all the circumstances, whether the case is or is not a fit one for the infliction of the death penalty—Emp v. Dukari, 33 C.W.N. 1226 (1234). When a case is referred to a third Judge, he must give his own independent opinion, and should not necessarily decide the case according to the opinion of the Judge who was in favour of acquittal—Emp v. Bundu, 1897 A.W.N. 125.

379. In cases submitted by the Court of Session to the High Court for the confirmation of a sentence of death, the proper officer of the High Court shall, without delay, after the order of confirmation or other order has been made by the High Court, send a copy of the order under the seal of the High Court, and attested with his official signature, to the Court of Session.

380. Where proceedings are submitted to a Magistrate of the first class or a Sub-divisional Magistrate as provided by Section 562, such Magistrate may thereupon pass such sentence or make such order as he might have passed or made if the case had originally been heard by him, and, if he thinks further inquiry or additional evidence on any point to be necessary, he may make such inquiry or take such evidence himself or direct such inquiry or evidence to be made or taken.

1062. The Magistrate to whom a case is submitted under section 562, must pass such sentence and make such order as he thinks fit. If, however, on a perusal of the evidence he comes to the conclusion that the conviction should not have taken place, he can acquit the accused under the powers vested in him under this section—Mt Thi v. Mt Kin, 1915 U.B.R. 1st Qr. 55

The Magistrate to whom the case is referred cannot send the case back to the inferior Magistrate. Where a second class Magistrate, finding the accused guilty of an offence under section 325 I. P. C., submitted the case to the District Magistrate for an order under section 562, but the District Magistrate sent the case back to the 2nd class Magistrate pointing out the sec. 562 [before its present amendment] was inapplicable (as the offence was beyond its scope), it was held that the District Magistrate's order sending back the case was illegal; because, under this section, he could pass such sentence or order as he might have passed if the case had originally come to him, and he could not have sent it to the second class Magistrate for the purpose of sentence if he had originally heard it—K E. v. Abdul, 4 L.B.R. 150

Appeal.—See sections 407 and 408 as now amended.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

OF EXECUTION.

381. When a sentence of death passed by a Court of Session is submitted to the High Court for confirmation, such Court of Session shall, on receiving the order of confirmation or other order of the High Court thereon, cause such order to be carried into effect by issuing a warrant or taking such other steps as may be necessary.

Execution of order passed under section 376.

"The date named by the Sessions Court, in its warrant for the execution of a sentence of death, shall not be less than fourteen or more than twenty-one days from the date of the issue of such warrant"—Cal. G. R. & C. O., page 39

382. If a woman sentenced to death is found to be pregnant, the High Court shall order the execution of the sentence to be postponed, and may, if it thinks fit, commute the sentence to transportation for life.

Postponement of capital sentence on pregnant woman.

1063. The fact that the accused is a pregnant woman is not a sufficient ground for commutation of sentence—Q v Panhee, 15 W R. 66, in such a case, execution will be deferred until delivery, as provided by this section

The High Court is the only tribunal in which the law has vested the power of postponing the execution of a sentence of death passed on a woman found to be pregnant—Anonymous, 2 Weir 441 (442)

The pregnancy of the woman should be certified by a civil surgeon—Bombay Gazette, 1879, page 471.

383. Where the accused is sentenced to transportation or imprisonment in cases other than those provided for by section 381, the Court passing the sentence shall forthwith forward a warrant to the jail in which he is, or is to be confined, and, unless the accused is already confined in such jail, shall forward him to such jail, with the warrant.

Execution of sentences of transportation or imprisonment in other cases

1064. Sentence when to commence —A sentence of imprisonment ought to commence from the time the sentence is passed. A sentence of imprisonment to take effect at a future date is bad in law. A Magistrate has no power to postpone the execution of the sentence at the request of the accused—In re Kishen Soonder, 12 W.R. 47. Where a Magistrate passes a sentence of imprisonment on an accused and admits him to bail in order that he may have the means of appealing, held that the admission to bail does not make the sentence one to commence at a future date, and does not therefore make it illegal—In re Olhoy Kumar, 7 C L R 393, Kishen Soonder, 12 W.R. 47. When a Judge convicts the accused, he must pass sentence on him at once; he has no power to adjourn the passing of sentence for an indefinite period—Emp v. Keshavlal, 14 Bom L R 144, 13 Cr L.J. 288

The commencement of the sentence cannot also be ante-dated. A sentence of imprisonment for the time already passed in the lock-up is illegal, but a sentence of imprisonment until the rising of the Court is good and legal—Bhagel v. Crown, 1907 P W R 9

When a prisoner has been committed to jail under two separate warrants, the sentence in the one to take effect from the expiry of the sentence in the other, the date of such second sentence shall, in the event of the first sentence being remitted on appeal, be presumed to take effect from the date on which he was committed to jail under the first or original sentence—Cal. G. R. & C. O., page 40.

Where to be imprisoned:—When a case is submitted to the High Court under section 307, and the High Court passes a sentence, it does so as a Court of Reference and not in the exercise of its ordinary original jurisdiction, and therefore it has power, on conviction and sentence, to send the accused to jail outside the Presidency Town. The High Court is required to send the accused to that jail in which he would have been confined by the Court submitting the case—In re Horace Lyall, 29 Cal 286

It is illegal for a Magistrate to direct the accused to be imprisoned in a Police lock-up. A jail is a prison within the meaning of the Prisons Act and the Prisoners Act, but it does not include a police lock-up—K. E. v Po Thin, 7 L B R. 62

It is illegal to confine a person in a jail other than that mentioned in the warrant—Shamsonessa v. Anne Love, 11 Cal 527 (cited under section 384).

Calculation of period of imprisonment.—In calculating sentences of imprisonment, the day on which the sentence is passed and the day of release ought to be included and considered as days of imprisonment, for example, a man sentenced on the 1st January to one month's imprisonment should be released on the 31st January, and not on the 1st February.—Mad. G. O. No 2411 dated 22-11-81.

384. Every warrant for the execution of a sentence of imprisonment shall be directed to the officer in charge of the jail, or other place in which the prisoner is, or is to be, confined.

Direction of warrant for execution.

1065. The warrant of imprisonment must be signed by the Magistrate; and the signature should be affixed by pen and not by means of a stamp—Subramanya Ayyar v. Q., 6 Mad. 396.

The period of imprisonment should be definite; thus, in an order under sec. 123, the Magistrate should state the period for which the accused is to be imprisoned in default of finding security; it is illegal to direct the accused to be imprisoned until he gives security—Mailamdi v. Taripulla, 8 Cal. 644

It is illegal to confine a person in a jail other than that mentioned in the warrant. Where a sheriff's officer delivered over to the officer-in-charge of the Alipore Jail, a judgment-debtor who had been duly committed to Presidency Jail, the confinement in the Alipore Jail was held to be illegal—Shamshonnessa v. Anne Love, 11 Cal. 527

385. When the prisoner is to be confined in a jail, Warrant with whom the warrant shall be lodged with to be lodged. the jailor.

386. (1) Whenever an offender has been sentenced Warrant for levy of to pay a fine, the Court passing the fine. sentence may take action for the recovery of the fine in either or both of the following ways, that is to say, it may—

(a) issue a warrant for the levy of the amount by attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to the offender;

(b) issue a warrant to the Collector of the District authorising him to realise the amount by execution according to civil process against the moveable or immoveable property, or both, of the defaulter:

Provided that, if the sentence directs that in default of payment of the fine the offender shall be imprisoned, and if such offender has undergone the whole of such imprisonment in default, no Court shall issue such warrant unless for special reasons to be recorded in writing it considers it necessary to do so.

(2) The Local Government may make rules regulating the manner in which warrants under sub-section (1), clause (a), are to be executed, and for the summary determination of any claims made by any person other than the offender in respect of any property attached in execution of such warrant.

(3) Where the Court issues a warrant to the Collector under sub-section (1), clause (b), such warrant shall be deemed to be a decree, and the Collector to be the decree-holder, within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, and the nearest Civil Court by which any decree for a like amount could be executed shall, for the purposes of the said Code, be deemed to be the Court which passed the decree, and all the provisions of that Code as to execution of decrees shall apply accordingly :

Provided that no such warrant shall be executed by the arrest or detention in prison of the offender.

Change —The whole section has been redrafted by sec 102 of the Cr. P. C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923 The old section stood as follows :—

"386 Whenever an offender is sentenced to pay a fine, the Court passing the sentence may, in its discretion, issue a warrant for the levy of the amount by distress and sale of any moveable property belonging to the offender, although the sentence directs that, in default of payment of the fine, the offender shall be imprisoned."

The main changes introduced are —Firstly, under the old law, fine could be recovered only by distress and sale of moveable property, under the present law it can be recovered by sale of immoveable property also, as provided in clause (b). Secondly, under the old law, fine could be recovered by distress and sale even though the offender had undergone the full term of imprisonment in default of payment of fine; the present section ordinarily prohibits the recovery of fine in such cases, and allows it only on special reasons; see the proviso to sub-sec. (1) Thirdly, sub-sections (2) and (3) have been newly added. The reasons have been stated below. In clause (a) the word 'attachment' has been substituted for 'distress' by the Select Committee of 1916, "as we think it is more appropriate."

1066. Scope of section —Sections 63–70 I. P. C., and the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code in respect of levy of fines shall apply to all fines imposed under any Act, Regulation, Rule or Bye-law unless the Act, Regulation, Rule or Bye-law contains an express provision to the contrary—Section 25, General Clauses Act (X of 1897).

Thus, the provisions of sections 386–389 of this Code shall apply to the levy of penalties and fines imposed under Act V of 1861 (General Police Act) on conviction before a Magistrate—Section 37, Police Act (V of 1861) Compensation under section 250 of this Code shall be recoverable as a fine, and this section prescribes the mode in which the fine may ordinarily be recovered—Paryag v. Arju Meen, 22 Cal 139. But the provisions of this section do not apply to fines imposed under Act XXI of 1856 (Abkari Act); such fines cannot be levied by distress and sale of the offender's property—Govt v. Junglee Beldar, 17 W.R. 7.

A warrant can be issued under this section only to levy a fine, but not to recover the amount of damage done to a Railway carriage, where no fine has been imposed on the offender. Such warrant is illegal, and cannot be executed under this section—Abdul Majid v Mukharji, 10 P.L.T. 124, 30 Cr L.J. 635.

1067. Sentence of fine :—It should be specific—A sentence of fine imposed upon more than one prisoner individually and collectively, is not a proper sentence. It should be specifically stated in the sentence what amount each individual prisoner is to pay—Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 5.

It should be levied immediately—There should be no delay in the levy of a fine directly upon passing a sentence. A Magistrate cannot defer the levying of the fine imposed on the prisoner till the period of appeal shall have expired, or until the orders of the Appellate Court are received on appeal preferred by the accused. Nor can the Appellate Court order the original Court to abstain from levying the fine till the disposal of appeal—2 W.R. (Cr. Let.) 13. As to the period of limitation within which fine may be recovered, see section 70 I.P.C.

Who can levy fine—The term 'Court' is not restricted to the particular individual who held office. The successor in office of a Judge or Magistrate may levy a fine imposed by his predecessor—Chunder Coomar v Modhusoodun, 9 W.R. 50.

1068. Clause (a)—Distress and sale—It is lawful for the Magistrate to issue his warrant for the levy of fine by distress and sale of the goods of the offender, and at the same time to order his imprisonment for non-payment of fine. It is not necessary to postpone imprisonment till the distress and sale of goods have failed to realise the fine, and the imprisonment should not be allowed to stop the process for the levy of fine so as to give the offender time to remove his goods beyond the reach of the law—Govt. v Jungle Beldar, 17 W.R. 7.

This clause allows the distress and sale of moveable property of the offender. But growing crops are not moveable property for the purposes of this clause—Anonymous, 2 Weir 444. Rights and interests or shares in the joint moveable property of a joint Hindu family, of which the accused is a member, cannot be sold under this clause—Anonymous, 2 Weir 442 (443). Q. E. v Sita Nath, 20 Cal. 478, Hira Lal v Crown, 1915 P.L.R. 28, 16 Cr.L.J. 166. If the accused is a member of an Alayasantana family, the distress and sale of his moveable property in execution of a warrant under this clause is illegal—Achuma v Rudra, 2 Weir 443. But according to the Bombay High Court, the words "belonging to the offender" do not mean "belonging exclusively to the offender" and therefore the share of the accused in the moveable property of the joint Hindu family of which the accused is a member can be attached—Shivlingappa v Gurlingava, 49 Bom. 906, 27 Bom.L.R. 1363, 27 Cr.L.J. 652 (655). Moveable property (money) belonging to the accused's brother and deposited in Court by the accused's brother as security for the appearance of the accused in a criminal trial cannot be seized, as the money does not belong to the accused. Even the fact that the accused and his brother are members of a joint Hindu family will not enable the Court to seize the money—Girdhari Lal v. Emp., 19 A.L.J. 887, 22 Cr.L.J. 744. Moveable property of the offender in a Native State cannot be seized for the realisation of a fine adjudged by a British Court; only the property remaining in British India can be seized and sold—Anonymous, 2 Weir 444.

1069. Clause (b).—The old law provided for the distress and sale of moveable property only; immoveable property could not be attached and sold for the recovery of fine—Maaari v. Mehr Din, 22 Cr L.J. 399 (Lah.), 61 I.C. 527; Reg. v. Lallu, 5 B.H.C.R. 63; Q. E v Sitanath, 20 Cal 478. Clause (b) now allows attachment and sale of immoveable properties also.

1070. Proviso :—Levy of fine after imprisonment :—It was held under the old section that an offender who had undergone the full term of imprisonment to which he was sentenced in default of payment of fine was still liable to have the amount levied by distress and sale of any moveable property belonging to him—Q v. Moodsoodun, 3 W.R. 61, because the imprisonment which the Court imposed in default of payment was intended as a punishment for non-payment and not as a satisfaction and discharge of the amount due—Reg v. Gulab Chand, Ratanlal 91 (92). But the Court had a discretion in the matter whether fine should be recovered after the accused had undergone imprisonment for nonpayment. If it appeared that the fine was not paid for want of means or that its realisation would be ruinous to the offender or his family, it was not desirable that further steps should be taken for the levy of fine; but if there was reason to believe that the offender had means to pay but would not pay and would prefer to undergo imprisonment, the law was strictly enforced and steps were taken for the realisation of the fine within the period allowed by law—See Punjab Circ., Chapter LI, p 264

The proviso in the present section now lays down that if the offender has undergone the whole term of the imprisonment awarded in default of fine, the Court should not issue a warrant for levy of the fine. "The new proviso directs that after the imprisonment awarded in default of payment of fine has been served, no further steps should be taken for the recovery of the fine, unless the Court for special reasons to be recorded considers it necessary. The infliction of a double punishment is ordinarily uncalled for, and by the issue of warrants for the recovery of fines when there is no real reason why they should be recovered, the time of the police is frequently wasted. Convicted persons also are thus harassed for long periods after they have expiated their offences by undergoing imprisonment."—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921).

"Unless for special reasons..to do so" :—These words at the end of the proviso are intended for the case of a contumacious person who may evade the fine and suffer imprisonment, and yet having the means to pay the fine, not pay the fine. In such a case, the serving of the period of imprisonment provided in default of payment of fine should not absolve the person from paying the fine. See Legislative Assembly Debates, 8th February, 1923, page 2061.

1071. Sub-section (2).—Claims of third parties :—By this sub-section, power is given to the Local Government to make rules regarding the execution of warrants and the determination of claims—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

Under the old law, when a claim was preferred by a third party to the ownership of the property distrained, the Magistrate was not required by law to try any such claim, because this section did not contain any provision for the trial of claims which might be preferred to the property distrained under this section—Q. E. v. Gasper, 22 Cal. 935, Hira Lal v. Crown, 1915 P.L.R. 28, 16 Cr.L.J. 166. What the Magistrate had to do in such a case was to postpone the sale of the property and to allow the claimant an opportunity of establishing his title in a Court having jurisdiction to determine civil rights—Anonymous, 2 Weir 445. When a claim was preferred, the Court was to direct postponement of the sale of the property for such time as might be necessary to enable the claimant to establish his right (by a civil suit). But if the property was of such a nature that an immediate sale would be for the benefit of the owner, the property could be sold and the sale proceeds held over—Q. E. v. Chhagan, Ratanlal 976, Q. E. v. Kandappa, 20 Mad. 88, Q. E. v. Gasper, 22 Cal. 935.

Under the present law, the Magistrate is empowered to determine summarily the claims of third parties. This view was also taken in a Burma case—Mingang v. Emp., 1 Bur. S.R. 332.

1072. Sub-section (3).—"We would add a clause after sub-section (2) to enable a fine to be realised through the Collector as if the order was a decree of a Civil Court. We can see no reason why a property-owner who may be able to conceal his moveables should not be forced to pay a fine which has been inflicted upon him by a Criminal Court, just as much, and by the same process, as a civil debt. It seems to be recognised that the liability is so enforceable by section 70, Indian Penal Code, and the decision in Emp. v. Sitanath Mitra 1 L.R. 20 Cal. 478, and we think that this should be made clear by the section under consideration. The proper person to effect such realisation is, we think, the Collector of the district, who will be treated as the decree-holder"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

The Joint Committee of 1922, approving of this amendment has remarked: "We recognise that the procedure prescribed may in some case involve considerable delay, and we attempted to find some more summary method of proceeding against immoveable property on the lines of those laws which enable moneys due to the Crown to be recovered as arrears of land revenue. We have, however, found ourselves unable to devise any procedure which will not be open to most of the objections put forward against the present clause."

The immoveable property of an agriculturist can be attached and sold in execution of an order passed under this section, and the mere fact that under sub-sec. (3) the warrant is to be deemed a decree does not justify a Court in holding that the exceptional provisions of sec. 22 of the Deccan Agriculturists Relief Act must be applicable to such a warrant. Sec. 386 sub-sec. (3) only applies the provisions of the C. P. Code as to execution of decrees, and there is nothing in the C. P. Code which involves the application of sec. 22 of the D. A. R. Act. Sec. 22 of that Act mainly has reference to decrees which are passed in the ordinary way in suits to which an agriculturist is a party, and the mere fact that the warrant under sec. 386 (3) Cr. P. Code is executable as if it were a decree does not suffice to make the provisions of sec. 22 of the D. A. R. Act applicable to such a warrant—Collector v. Mahadu, 28 Bom.L.R. 1231, A.I.R. 1926 Bom 582 (583). In Punjab, sec. 16 of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act lays down that no land belonging to a member of an agricultural tribe shall be sold in execution of any decree or order by any Civil Court; and the combined effect of that section and of sec. 386 (3) Cr. P. Code is that such land cannot be sold in pursuance of a warrant issued by a Magistrate to the Collector for levy of a fine in a criminal case—Emp v. Milkha, 30 Cr.L.J. 1006 (1007), 1929 Cr C 212.

1073. Revision :—The order of a Magistrate for sale of properties under this section is not a judicial proceeding and is not the proper subject of criminal revision; the claimant whose property is wrongly sold under this section may proceed by way of civil suit (either against the purchaser or against the Secretary of State)—Secretary of State v. Sukhdeo, 1898 A.W.N. 173, Q. E. v. Kandappa, 20 Mad 83, Hira Lal v. Crown, 1915 P.L.R. 28, 16 Cr L.J. 166.

387. A warrant issued under Section 386 sub-section (1) clause (a) by any Court Effect of such warrant. may be executed within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Court, and it shall authorize the attachment and sale of any such property without such limits, when endorsed by the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such property is found.

Change :—The italicised words have been substituted for the words "such warrant" (occurring in the old section) by sec 103 of the Cr. P. C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. This amendment is merely verbal, and consequential to the amendment of sec. 386.

The word attachment has been substituted for the word distress in this section as well as in section 386, as the term is more appropriate.

payment of the fine, and the Court issues a warrant under S. 386, it may suspend the execution of the sentence of imprisonment and may release the offender on his executing a bond, with or without sureties, as the Court thinks fit, conditioned for his appearance before such Court on the day appointed for the return to such warrant, such day not being more than fifteen days from the time of executing the bond; and in the event of the fine not having been realized the Court may direct the sentence of imprisonment to be carried into execution at once.

fault of payment of the fine, and the fine is not paid forthwith, the Court may—

(a) order that the fine shall be payable either in full on or before a date not more than thirty days from the date of the order, or in two or three instalments, of which the first shall be payable on or before a date not more than thirty days from the date of the order and the other or others at an interval or at intervals, as the case may be, of not more than thirty days, and

(b) suspend the execution of the sentence of imprisonment and release the offender, on the execution by the offender of a bond with or without sureties as the Court thinks fit, conditioned for his appearance before the Court on the date or dates on or before which payment of the fine or the instalments thereof, as the case may be, is to be made; and, if the amount of the fine or of any instalment, as the case may be, is not realised on or before the latest date on which it is payable under the order, the Court may direct the sentence of imprisonment to be carried into execution at once.

(2) In any case in which an order for the payment of money has been made, on non-recovery of which imprisonment may be awarded, and the money is not paid forthwith, the Court may require the person ordered to make such payment to enter into a bond as prescribed in sub-sec. (1), and, in default of his so doing, may at once pass sentence of imprisonment as if the money had not been recovered.

(2) The provisions of sub-section (1) shall be applicable also in any case in which an order for the payment of money has been made, on non-recovery of which imprisonment may be awarded, and the money is not paid forthwith; and if the person against whom the order has been made, on being required to enter into a bond such as is referred to in that sub-section, fails to do so, the Court may at once pass sentence of imprisonment.

Change—This section has been redrafted by the Criminal Procedure Code Second Amendment Act XXXVII of 1923. This amendment has been made on the recommendation of the Indian Jails Committee See Gazette of India, 1923, Part V, p. 242.

Sub-section (1) :—Sub-section (1) is inapplicable where no alternative sentence of imprisonment (for non-payment of fine) has been passed. Where a Magistrate sentences an offender to a fine, but omits to pass a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine, he has no power to bind over the accused in his own recognizance to appear (under clause b) —Venkatrapragada, 2 Weir 445

389. Every warrant for the execution of any sentence may be issued either by the Judge or Magistrate who passed the sentence, or by his successor in office.

Who may issue warrant.

See 9 W.R. 50 cited under sec. 386

390. When the accused is sentenced to whipping only, the sentence shall, subject to the provisions of section 391, be executed at such place and time as the Court may direct.

Time and place of execution of sentence of whipping only.

The italicised words have been added by sec. 21 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923.

1074. It has been held that if the accused is sentenced to whipping only, the sentence cannot be deferred: it must be carried out as soon as practicable. This section authorises the Court to fix the time and place for its execution, but not to postpone it—Q. E. v. Abdulla, Ratanlal 906; Meyyan v. Emp., 26 Mad. 465. An order that an accused shall not be whipped until after the expiry of the sentence of imprisonment passed in another trial, is illegal. The sentence should be carried out as soon as practicable—Q. E. v. Nga Po, L.B.R. (1900—1902) 53. The sentence cannot be postponed pending an intended appeal—Meyyan v. Emp., 26 Mad. 465. But these cases should now be read subject to clause (a) of sec 391 which allows postponement of whipping if the accused furnishes bail.

Even if the case does not fall under sec. 391 (a), i.e., even though the accused is sentenced to whipping only, and does not furnish bail, the sentence of whipping need not necessarily be carried out on the very day that it is passed. The words "at such place and time as the Court may direct" give a wide discretion to the Court in the matter, and the Court may direct that the sentence should be carried out as soon as practicable. Thus, if the Court passes the sentence of whipping at a late hour on Saturday and directs the sentence to be carried out as soon as practicable, it is not illegal to carry out the sentence on Monday (whipping not being allowed on Sunday by the Jail Rules)—Emp. v. Gopala, 30 Bom L R 389, 29 Cr L J 573 (574).

For general rules as to whipping see notes under sec 32

391. (1) When the accused—

Execution of sentence of whipping only, or of whipping in addition to imprisonment.

(a) is sentenced to whipping only and furnishes bail to the satisfaction of the Court for his appearance at such time and place as the Court may direct, or

(b) is sentenced to whipping in addition to imprisonment, the whipping shall not be inflicted until fifteen days from the date of the sentence, or if an appeal is made within that time, until the sentence is confirmed by the Appellate Court, but the whipping shall be inflicted as soon as practicable after the expiry of the fifteen days, or in case of an appeal, as soon as practicable after the receipt of the order of the Appellate Court confirming the sentence.

(2) The whipping shall be inflicted in the presence of the officer in charge of the jail, unless the Judge or Magistrate orders it to be inflicted in his own presence.

(3) No accused person shall be sentenced to whipping in addition to imprisonment, when the term of imprisonment to which he is sentenced is less than three months.

1075. This section has been amended by sec. 22 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. The old section contemplated only those cases where the accused was sentenced to whipping as well as to imprisonment; if the accused was sentenced to whipping only, the section did not apply, and the sentence of whipping could not be postponed—Anonymous, 2 Weir 446. But the newly added clause (a) now provides for such cases,

Clause (a) provides that a sole sentence of whipping should not be inflicted, if the accused furnishes bail, until 15 days from the date of the sentence, or if an appeal is made within that time, until the sentence is confirmed on appeal. This is because the Code now provides for an appeal from a simple sentence of whipping (sec 413) which formerly was not appealable—Emp. v. Gopala, 30 Bom L.R. 389, 29 Cr.L.J. 573 (574)

Postponement of whipping till after expiry of imprisonment.—Where a person has been sentenced to whipping as well as to imprisonment, the whipping may be postponed, as provided by this section, until 15 days from the date of sentence or until confirmation of the sentence on appeal, but it is illegal to postpone the sentence of whipping till after the term of imprisonment has expired—Anonymous, 6 M.H.C.R. App. 38; Anonymous, 7 M.H.C.R. App. 29, Q. E. v. Habla, Ratanlal 803 (804), Emp. v. Jagannath, 4 Bom L.R. 929. Where an accused is convicted of two different offences, for one of which he is sentenced to imprisonment, and for the other to whipping, it is not permissible to postpone the whipping merely because the accused appeals against his conviction for the first offence—Jarwant, 4 Bom L.R. 436. Where a Magistrate ordered that the prisoner be brought before him at the expiration of the sentence of imprisonment, and that the sentence of whipping should then be carried out, the High Court cancelled the sentence of whipping as having become inoperative and incapable of being carried out by lapse of time—Hur Chandra v. Jafer Ali, 20 W.R. 72. Where an accused is sentenced in one case to 18 months' imprisonment and 15 stripes, and in another case he is also sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment and 15 stripes and the Magistrate orders in the second case that the sentence passed in that case must take effect after the expiry of the sentence in the first case, held that the sentence of whipping in the second case is illegal and must be set aside, because under this section, whipping can be postponed till 15 days from the date of sentence or till the disposal of the appeal, but it cannot be postponed till 18 months—Sagram, Ratanlal 300 (301). Where the accused was sentenced to imprisonment for two years and was further ordered "to receive 30 stripes on the day of his release from prison," held that the sentence of whipping was altogether illegal and improper and must be set aside, as it was ordered to be carried out after the expiry of the imprisonment—Emp. v. Jiwa Ram, 1881 A W N 138

As soon as practicable.—The whipping must be carried into effect as soon as practicable after the expiry of the time specified in this section. But if through accident, or neglect or wilful breach of duty of the officer the sentence of whipping is not immediately carried into execution, the prisoner is not thereby freed from the liability of undergoing the sentence still remaining unexecuted—Q. E. v. Mahadhu, Ratanlal 136

Double sentence of whipping—An accused cannot be sentenced to a double sentence of whipping when he is convicted of two offences, thus, where a person is convicted of offences under sections 454 and 380 I P C, it is illegal to pass a sentence of 15 stripes for each offence—Q. E. v. Dagdu, Ratanlal 955. The High Court altered the sentence to 15 stripes for both the offences

Sub-section (3)—When a sentence of imprisonment for less than three months is awarded, an additional sentence of whipping is illegal—Q. E. v. Bhica, 2 Bom L.R. 54.

392. (1) In the case of a person of or over sixteen years of age, whipping shall be inflicted with a light rattan not less than half an inch in diameter, in such mode, and on such part of the person, as the Local Government directs; and, in the case of a person under sixteen years of age, it shall be inflicted in such mode, and on such part of the person, and with such instrument, as the Local Government directs.

Mode of inflicting punishment.

(2) In no case shall such punishment exceed thirty stripes, and, in the case of a person under sixteen years of age, it shall not exceed fifteen stripes.

Limit of number of stripes.

'Such part of the person'—(1) In case of a person of or over sixteen years of age, in C P, Madras, Bengal and Assam, the punishment of whipping is inflicted on the bare buttocks, the offender being tied to a triangle—See C P Gazette, Notification No 20 of 4-1-1899, Fort St George Gazette, 1898, Part I, p 1248, Wilkins, 148, Assam Gazette, 1899, Part II, p 384 In Burma the punishment is inflicted on the breech—Burma Gazette, 1891, Part I, p 201 In Bombay, if the punishment is inflicted in private (i.e. within the precincts of the prison), it shall be inflicted on the bare buttocks, and when inflicted in public (i.e. outside the jail precincts), across the bare shoulders—Bombay Government Gazette, 1893, Part I, p 110, Bom G. R. No 608 of 1897

(2) In case of a person under sixteen years of age in Bombay, U. P., C. P., and the Punjab, the whipping is inflicted on the bare buttocks, with a light rattan not exceeding half an inch in diameter, but the offender is not tied to a triangle but simply held on it, or is held in some other convenient way. See Bom. G. R. No 6222, dated 16-9-1899; G. O.

No 1290 of 12-5-1898 (U. P.); C. P. Gazette Notification No. 20 of 4-1-1899, Punjab Gazette, 1899, Part I, p. 314. In Burma the whipping is inflicted on the breech—Burma Gazette, 1899, Part I, p. 307. In Bengal, it may be inflicted on the posteriors or on the hands as the Court may direct—Cal. G. R. and C. O., page 62. "Having regard to the general feeling of the respectable classes of the people as to the degrading character of the punishment of whipping, the Lieutenant-Governor has left it to the discretion of the Court in the case of juvenile offenders, to inflict the punishment on the hand instead of on the buttocks. This discretion should be exercised according to the circumstances of each case, as age and social position of the offenders and the nature of the offence. For very young boys of respectable position convicted of offences which do not imply depravity or confirmed dishonesty, strokes on the hand appear to be the appropriate punishment. Care is, however, necessary and should be taken to avoid causing serious injury to the hand when whipping is inflicted on the palm"—Cal. G. R. & C. P., pages 63-64. In C. P., if the boy is under twenty years of age, the whipping may be inflicted on the hands, at the discretion of the Magistrate—C. P. Gazette, Notification No. 20 of 4-1-1899.

Number of stripes.—Under the provisions of this section and the next, not more than one sentence of whipping and that not exceeding thirty stripes, should be awarded at one time—Emp v. Nga Po, 1906 U B R (Cr. P. C.) 47.

393. No sentence of whipping shall be executed by instalments: and none of the following persons shall be punishable with whipping, namely—

Not to be executed by instalments.
Exemptions

- (a) females;
- (b) males sentenced to death or to transportation or to penal servitude, or to imprisonment for more than five years;
- (c) males whom the Court considers to be more than forty-five years of age.

1076. This section forbids the execution of the punishment of whipping in respect of certain persons, and since the execution is prohibited, such persons cannot be sentenced to whipping, for it is futile to pass a sentence which cannot be executed. Therefore a person who is sentenced to 7 years' rigorous imprisonment cannot be sentenced to whipping in addition, because the execution of such punishment is prohibited by clause (b) of this section—Akbar v. Crown, 1919 P.R. 30.

Sentence of whipping cannot be enhanced.—The accused was convicted under section 382 I. P. C. and was sentenced to whipping, and the sentence was duly executed. An application was afterwards made to enhance the sentence on the ground that it was inadequate; it was held that the sentence of whipping could not be enhanced by the infliction of an additional number of stripes, because under this section no sentence of whipping could be executed by instalments—Q. E. v. Balu, Ratanlal 537.

Clause (b) :—A sentence of whipping passed on a person who is already under sentence of death etc., is illegal. Even if the sentence of whipping precedes instead of following the other sentence, the passing of the latter sentence renders the infliction of the punishment of whipping illegal—Anonymous, 1 Mad 56

394. (1) The punishment of whipping shall not be inflicted unless a medical officer, if present, certifies, or, if there is not a medical officer present, unless it appears to the Magistrate or officer present, that the offender is in a fit state of health to undergo such punishment.

(2) If, during the execution of a sentence of whipping, a medical officer certifies, or it appears to the Magistrate or officer present that the offender is not in a fit state of health to undergo the remainder of the sentence, the whipping shall be finally stopped.

1077. 'Particular attention should be directed to section 394 which prohibits the execution of a sentence of whipping when the offender is not in a fit state of health to undergo that punishment, and all officers are reminded that the Governor-General in Council considers that the precaution of having a medical officer present at the time of the infliction of the punishment should be observed in every instance when practicable"—Cal G R & C O. page 65

Before the commencement of whipping, the Medical Officer must give a certificate whether the offender is in a fit state of health to undergo the whole punishment of whipping. There is no provision of law authorising a medical officer to give a certificate that the accused is fit to receive only a portion of the sentence, such a certificate cannot be held as granted under sub-section (1)—Pub. Prosecutor, 31 Mad. 84 Such a certificate cannot be treated as one under sub-section (2), because that sub-section refers to a certificate granted during the execution of the sentence—Ibid

Under sub-section (1), the Medical Officer is to give a certificate either that the offender is in a fit state of health to undergo the whole sentence passed on him or that he is not in a fit state of health to undergo it at all. If he certifies that the accused is fit to undergo a smaller number of stripes than that ordered by the Magistrate, the certificate cannot be held as one granted under this section, and is invalid; the

Magistrate cannot in such a case inflict a smaller number of stripes in accordance with the medical certificate, and in lieu of the rest of the stripes not inflicted he cannot award imprisonment under section 395 infra—Public Prosecutor, 31 Mad. 84.

395. (1) In any case in which under Section 394,

Procedure if punishment cannot be inflicted under S. 394. a sentence of whipping is wholly or partially prevented from being executed, the offender shall be kept in custody till the Court which passed the sentence can revise it; and the said Court may, at its discretion, either remit such sentence, or sentence the offender in lieu of whipping, or in lieu of so much of the sentence of whipping as was not executed, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding twelve months or to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees which may be in addition to any other punishment to which he may have been sentenced for the same offence.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise any Court to inflict imprisonment for a term or a fine of an amount exceeding that to which the accused is liable by law, or that which the said Court is competent to inflict.

Change—The italicised words have been added by section 105 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "The Amendment in sub-section (1) enables a sentence of fine to be awarded in lieu of a sentence of whipping which cannot be carried out"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

Under the old law it was held that the Court had no power to revise a sentence of whipping by inflicting a fine—Q. E. v. Sheodin, 11 All 308; Anonymous, 2 Weir 449 These cases are now rendered obsolete

1078. 'Wholly or partially prevented' :—'Wholly prevented' refers to sub-section (1) of section 394, 'Partially prevented' refers to sub-section (2) of that section—Public Prosecutor, 31 Mad 84

'The Court which passed the sentence can revise it' :—The only Court which can revise the sentence is the Court which passed the sentence Even where a sentence of imprisonment and whipping passed by a District Magistrate is confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge, still the Magistrate is not prevented from revising the sentence—Emp. v. Chetu, 1889 P R 10 But the words 'the Court which passed the sentence' do not mean the same officer who inflicted the sentence, therefore, where a Magistrate who passed the original sentence of whipping was transferred, the District Magistrate who had jurisdiction over the whole district was competent to commute the sentence of whipping to one of imprisonment—Chhaju v. Emp., 1901 P R 33.

Power of revision.—The Court can revise the sentence of whipping by awarding solitary confinement in lieu of whipping, under this section—Q. E. v. Gaman, 1899 P.R. 14. The Court may remit the sentence altogether, even though it is competent to inflict a term of imprisonment in lieu of whipping—Crown v. Po Thil, 1 L.B.R. 202

The imprisonment which the Court can award under this section in lieu of whipping must not exceed the term which the Court is competent to award under sec 32. Where a Magistrate sentences the accused to the maximum term of imprisonment which he is competent to inflict as well as whipping, and the whipping cannot be carried out, he cannot sentence him to a further term of imprisonment in lieu of whipping, but ought to remit the sentence of whipping altogether—Karat Ahamad, 2 Weir 449, Q. E. v. Ram Baran, 21 All. 25, Crown v. Barkat Ali, 1901 P.R. 11.

396. (1) When sentence is passed under this Code

Execution of sentences on escaped convicts.

on an escaped convict, such sentence, if of death, fine or whipping, shall, subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, take effect immediately, and, if of imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, shall take effect according to the following rules, that is to say—

(2) If the new sentence is severer in its kind than the sentence which such convict was undergoing when he escaped, the new sentence shall take effect immediately.

(3) When the new sentence is not severer in its kind than the sentence the convict was undergoing when he escaped, the new sentence shall take effect after he has suffered imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, as the case may be, for a further period equal to that which, at the time of his escape, remained unexpired of his former sentence.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section—

(a) a sentence of transportation or penal servitude shall be deemed severer than a sentence of imprisonment;

(b) a sentence of imprisonment with solitary confinement shall be deemed severer than a sentence of the same description of imprisonment without solitary confinement; and

- (c) a sentence of rigorous imprisonment shall be deemed severer than a sentence of simple imprisonment with or without solitary confinement.

1079. The word sentence includes an order of imprisonment passed under section 123—Q. E. v. Pandu Khandu, Ratanlal 774, Contra.—K. E. v. Nga Po Thin, 2 L.B.R. 72.

What this section contemplates is that the severer sentence must be undergone first. Where the accused who was a life-convict under sentence of transportation for murder was convicted for attempting to escape from lawful custody and was sentenced to four months' rigorous imprisonment, the latter sentence must not commence immediately, but should be undergone after the expiry of the sentence of transportation—Q. E. v. Mahadu, Ratanlal 965.

397. When a person already undergoing a sentence of imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation is sentenced to imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, such imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation shall commence at the expiration of the imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation to which he has been previously sentenced, unless the Court directs that the subsequent sentence shall run concurrently with such previous sentence:

Provided that if he is undergoing a sentence of imprisonment, and the sentence on such subsequent conviction is one of transportation, the Court may, in its discretion, direct that the latter sentence shall commence immediately or at the expiration of the imprisonment to which he has been previously sentenced:

Provided, further, that where a person who has been sentenced to imprisonment by an order under section 123 in default of furnishing security is, whilst undergoing such sentence, sentenced to imprisonment for an offence committed prior to the making of such order, the latter sentence shall commence immediately.

Change :—The italicised words and the second proviso have been added by section 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below.

1080. Principle :—The general rule is that a sentence commences to run from the time of its being passed, and this section creates an exception in the case of persons already undergoing imprisonment, and postpones the operation of the subsequent sentence until after the expiry of the previous sentence—In re Krishnanand, 3 B.L.R.A.C. 50; Q. v. Sobrai, 20 W.R. 70.

'Undergoing imprisonment'—A person is said to be undergoing an imprisonment the moment the sentence of imprisonment is passed, though he has not yet been sent to jail. Therefore, where a person is tried on the same day for two different offences in two different trials, then as soon as the first trial is over and he is convicted and sentenced he is said to 'undergo imprisonment', and if he is convicted and sentenced in the second trial also, he is said to be sentenced to imprisonment 'while already undergoing a sentence of imprisonment' within the meaning of this section—Muthusami, 2 Weir 451, Emp v Nga Po, 3 Bur L.J. 32, 25 Cr.L.J. 1310 But in Makhan v Emp, 19 Cr.L.J. 207 (All.), it has been held that until an accused has actually passed into jail, he cannot be said to be undergoing imprisonment, and therefore where two sentences of imprisonment are passed in two trials on the same accused on the same day, this section does not apply, as the accused cannot be said to be 'undergoing imprisonment' under the first trial, as soon as the sentence is passed, therefore the second imprisonment need not commence after the expiry of the imprisonment awarded in the first trial, the Magistrate may order that the two sentences should be concurrent Detention under the order of a Civil Court is not a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of this section; therefore a Magistrate has no power to order that the sentence of imprisonment awarded by him shall take effect on the expiry of a term of detention in the Civil jail which had been ordered by a Civil Court—Emp v Makha Gyi, 4 Bur L.J. 9, 3 Rang. 93, 26 Cr.L.J. 821, A I R. 1925 Rang 202.

1081. Order of sentences :—The meaning of this section is that sentences will take effect in the order in which they are passed. The sentence which is first passed and which the accused is undergoing must be given effect to first, and any subsequent sentence passed upon the accused must follow after the expiration of the first sentence. Where a Magistrate passes separate sentences of imprisonment on the same accused in separate trials and on the same day, the sentences will take effect in the order in which they are passed, by the terms of this section, and the Magistrate need not therefore give any direction in his judgment in respect of the same—Muthusami, 2 Weir 451

But the above rule as to the sequence of sentences applies only to the 1st para of this section. It is only the sentences mentioned in para 1 (viz sentences of imprisonment) that can be directed to take effect in the order in which they were passed. A sentence of whipping cannot be deferred till the sentence of imprisonment, for that will contravene the provisions of sec. 391—Q E v Sagram, Ratanlal 300. As regards the sentences mentioned in the first proviso, the Magistrate has a discretion to direct either that the subsequent sentence should take effect after the expiration of the prior sentence, or that it should take effect at once.

Imprisonment in foreign territory :—Where a person sentenced to imprisonment in a foreign territory is subsequently convicted of an offence in British India, it is competent for the Magistrate to pass a sentence which shall take effect after the expiration of the sentence in the foreign State.—Q. E. v. Venkataram, 20 Mad. 444

1082. Concurrent sentences :—It was held, prior to the present amendment, that a Magistrate could not direct that the subsequent sentence should run concurrently with the previous sentence, because a Magistrate could pass concurrent sentences only when the offences were tried at one and the same trial (see sec. 35)—Kamal Mandal v. K. E., 20 C.W.N. 1300; Q. E. v. Mahomed, Ratanlal 552; Anonymous, Ratanlal 15, Q. E. v. Bhagwandas, 2 Bom. L.R. 111; Erip. v. Tukaram, 4 Bom. L.R. 876; Govindasamy, 13 Cr.L.J. 466, 1912 M.W.N. 396; Pattayil v. Sarni, 2 Weir 453; Harak Narain v. Emp., 19 A.L.J. 316. Malbul v. K. E., 11 A.L.J. 263, 14 Cr.L.J. 240; Ngai Sein Po v. Emp., 1 Rang. 306; Emp. v. Ganda Singh, 1912 P.L.R. 20, Q. E. v. Khuda Bux, 2 S.L.R. 23; K. E. v. San, 4 L.B.R. 147, 7 Cr.L.J. 445, even where the trials were held on the same day, the Magistrate could not make the sentences in the two trials concurrent—Muzafar v. Q. E., 1894 P.R. 12. But now the amendment made at the end of the first para of this section will allow the subsequent sentence to run concurrently with the previous one. "In accordance with the amendment, a Court will be empowered to pass a sentence to run concurrently with any other term of imprisonment etc. which the person convicted is already undergoing"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). See Mahadeo v. Emp., 27 Cr.L.J. 807 (812) (Nag).

'At the expiration of' :—A person was convicted by a Magistrate and sentenced to 2 years' imprisonment, and a month afterwards he was sentenced to three years' imprisonment by the Court of Session, which directed the sentence to take effect on the expiration of the sentence passed by the Magistrate. On appeal the conviction and sentence passed by the Magistrate were set aside. It was held that the sentence of the Sessions Court must be deemed to have commenced from the time it was ordered to commence, viz after the expiration of the Magistrate's sentence whether by reversal or completion of the punishment, and not before—Anonymous, Ratanlal 139; K. E. v. Khandu, Ratanlal 523. But in Anonymous, 2 Weir 450, under similar circumstances, it was held that the imprisonment already undergone must be reckoned as imprisonment under the sentence in the conviction which was not reversed. So also the Calcutta High Court lays down: "Where a prisoner has been committed to jail under two separate warrants, the sentence in the one to take effect from the expiry of the sentence in the other, the date of such second sentence shall, in the event of the first sentence being remitted in appeal, be presumed to take effect from the date on which he was committed to jail under the first or original sentence"—Cal G. R. & C. O., page 40. But these remarks can only apply where the sentences in the two trials are of the same kind; otherwise the Bombay rulings cited above should apply. Those rulings are more reasonable and practical, though the Madras case and the Calcutta High Court Rule are more favourable to the accused

First proviso :—Where a person who is already undergoing imprisonment is sentenced by the Sessions Judge to transportation for life, the sentence of transportation passed by him will commence at the expiration of the previous sentence of imprisonment, unless the Judge in his discretion makes a further order that the sentence of transportation shall take effect immediately—Q. E. v Hari, Ratanlal 391.

An order directing that a sentence shall take effect on the expiration of another sentence, is not a part of the judgment and may therefore be made after the judgment has been signed. Therefore, where a Sessions Judge, in ignorance of the fact that the accused is already undergoing imprisonment, sentences him to transportation for life, it is subsequently open to him to order, even after the judgment has been signed, that the sentence of transportation shall take effect immediately—Q. E. v Hari, Ratanlal 391.

1083. Second proviso :—This proviso lays down that if a person who is imprisoned under section 123 in default of furnishing security, is subsequently sentenced to imprisonment for an offence committed prior to the passing of the order under section 123, the latter sentence (i.e., the substantive sentence of imprisonment) shall take effect immediately. This is also laid down in a large number of decided cases. Joghi v Emp., 31 Mad 515; Vishnu, 37 Bom 178, 13 Cr L J 849; Emp. v. Durga, 5 Bom. L.R. 26; Lekria, 8 N L.R. 20, 13 Cr.L.J. 189.

Under the old law, there was no distinction as to whether the offence for which the person imprisoned under sec 123 was subsequently convicted was committed before or after the making of the order under section 123. The law was that if a person undergoing imprisonment under section 123 was subsequently convicted of an offence and sentenced to imprisonment (whether this offence was committed before or after the sentence of imprisonment passed under section 123 was immaterial), the latter imprisonment must take effect at once and should not be postponed till after the expiry of the period of imprisonment awarded under section 123—Q. E. v Tulshya, Ratanlal 970, Venkatigada, 2 Weir 452, In re Pichart, 16 Cr.L.J. 622 (Mad), Emp v Vishnu Balakrishna 14 Bom L.R. 965, 37 Bom. 178, Emp v. Kanji, 5 Bom L.R. 26, Emp. v Durga, 6 Bom L.R. 1098, Pandhi, 3 S.L.R. 114, 4 I.C. 603, Crown v Sukhal, 15 S.L.R. 205, 23 Cr L.J. 255, Crown v Ghulam, 7 S.L.R. 203, Muthu Komaran, 27 Mad 525, Joghi v Emp., 31 Mad 515, Shin Taung v. Emp., 10 Bur. L.T. 266, Diwan Chand, 1895 P.R. 14, Lekria, 8 N L.R. 20. And this law has not been altered under the present section. In Emp. v Arjun, 34 Bom 326 and Markanda v K. E., 1 P.L.J. 212 it has been held that the two sentences must run concurrently. This would be in consonance with the amendment made at the end of the first para of this section. (In Emp. v Tula Khan 30 All 334 it was held that the sentence under section 123 must take effect first. But this ruling was dissented from in almost all the cases cited above).

With reference to this amendment the Joint Committee (1922) observe :
 "We think that the law should be that in cases where an offence has been committed prior to the order under sec 123 but the conviction takes place subsequently, the sentences should ordinarily run concurrently; but where the offence is committed after the order under sec. 123 has been passed, e.g., cases of escape from custody or jail or offences committed in jail, then we think that the imprisonment for the subsequent offence should ordinarily not be concurrent; otherwise the prisoner might in some cases receive no further punishment for his subsequent offence "

398. (1) Nothing in section 396 or section 397 shall be held to excuse any person from any part of the punishment to which he is liable upon his former or subsequent conviction.

Saving as to sections 396 and 397.

(2) When an award of imprisonment in default of payment of a fine is annexed to a substantive sentence of imprisonment, or to a sentence of transportation or penal servitude for an offence punishable with imprisonment, and the person undergoing the sentence is after its execution to undergo a further substantive sentence or further substantive sentences of imprisonment, transportation or penal servitude, effect shall not be given to the award of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine until the person has undergone the further sentence or sentences.

Sub-section (2) renders obsolete the ruling in Anonymous, Ratanlal 132, where it has been held that when a convict is imprisoned under two warrants which order consecutive punishments, the first warrant should be completely executed both in respect of the substantive sentence of imprisonment and the imprisonment in default of fine, before any effect is given to the second warrant. Now, under sub-section (2) the imprisonment in default of payment of fine shall take effect last of all.

399. (1) When any person under the age of fifteen years is sentenced by any Criminal Court to imprisonment for any offence, the Court may direct that such person, instead of being imprisoned in a criminal jail, shall be confined in any reformatory established by the Local Government as a fit place for confinement, in which there are means of suitable discipline and of training in some branch of useful industry or which is kept by a person willing to obey such rules as the Local Government prescribes with regard to the discipline and training of persons confined therein.

Confinement of youthful offenders in reformatories.

(2) All persons confined under this section shall be subject to the rules so prescribed.

(3) This section shall not apply to any place in which the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897, is for the time being in force.

1084. A sentence of imprisonment is a condition precedent to an order under this section. Where there is no preliminary sentence of imprisonment, an order under this section cannot be passed—Bakhtawar, 1910 P R 34, 8 I C. 1166

The period of detention in the Reformatory School should be a definite period. Where the trying Magistrate ordered the offender to be detained in a Reformatory for five years 'or until he attains the age of 18 years,' in lieu of imprisonment, it was held that the words 'or until 18 years' should be deleted—Emp v Rama Sudama, 15 Bom L R. 306, 14 Cr.L J. 256.

The period of detention in the Reformatory must not be longer than the period of imprisonment at first ordered. Where a Magistrate finding a juvenile offender guilty of theft in a building sentenced him to three months' rigorous imprisonment and ordered that in lieu of that sentence the offender should be confined in a Reformatory for 14 months, it was held that having once passed a sentence of imprisonment for a particular term, it was not competent to the Magistrate to direct that the offender should be confined in a Reformatory for a longer term—Reg v. Ganpaya, Ratanlal 109.

'Reformatory':—Where no Reformatories have been established, but only Reformatory Schools, the Court should not order the offender under this section to be sent to a Reformatory, but should pass an order under the Reformatory Schools Act, sending the boy to a Reformatory School—Q E v Madasamu, 12 Mad 94.

Subsection (3).—The introduction of the Reformatory Schools Act repeals the operation of this section so far as may be practicable in those places where that Act applies—Q E v Madasamu 12 Mad 94. Thus, this section has no application in the Punjab where the Reformatory Schools Act is in force—Crown v. Noor Mahomed, 1918 P R 17, 19 Cr L J 917, 47 I C 433

400. When a sentence has been fully executed, the officer executing it shall return the warrant to the Court from which it issued with an endorsement under his hand certifying the manner in which the sentence has been executed.

CHAPTER XXIX.

OF SUSPENSIONS, REMISSIONS AND COMMUTATIONS OF SENTENCES.

401. (1) When any person has been sentenced to punishment for an offence, the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government may, at any time, without conditions or upon any conditions which the person sentenced accepts, suspend the execution of his sentence or remit the whole or any part of the punishment to which he has been sentenced.

Power to suspend or remit sentences.

(2) Whenever an application is made to the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government for the suspension or remission of a sentence, the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government, as the case may be, may require the presiding Judge of the Court before or by which the conviction was had or confirmed to state his opinion as to whether the application should be granted or refused, together with his reasons for such opinion, and also to forward with the statement of such opinion a certified copy of the record of the trial or of such record thereof as exists.

(3) If any condition on which a sentence has been suspended or remitted is, in the opinion of the Governor-General in Council or of the Local Government, as the case may be, not fulfilled, the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government may cancel the suspension or remission, and thereupon the person in whose favour the sentence has been suspended or remitted may, if at large, be arrested by any police-officer without warrant and remanded to undergo the unexpired portion of the sentence.

(4) The condition on which a sentence is suspended or remitted under this section, may be one to be fulfilled by the person in whose favour the sentence is suspended or remitted, or one independent of his will.

(4A) The provisions of the above sub-sections shall also apply to any order passed by a Criminal Court under any section of this Code or of any other law, which restricts the liberty of any person or imposes any liability upon him or his property.

(5) Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to interfere with the right of His Majesty, or of the Governor-General when such right is delegated to him, to grant pardons, reprieves, respites or remissions of punishment.

(5A) Where a conditional pardon is granted by His Majesty or, in virtue of any powers delegated to him, by the Governor-General, any condition thereby imposed, of whatever nature, shall be deemed to have been imposed by a sentence of a competent Court under this Code and shall be enforceable accordingly.

(6) The Governor-General in Council and the Local Government may, by general rules or special orders, give directions as to the suspension of sentences and the conditions on which petitions should be presented and dealt with.

Change .—The italicised words and sub-sections (4A) and (5A) have been added by section 107 of the Cr P C Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923).

1085. Scope of section .—This section applies only to persons sentenced to imprisonment, and not to persons upon whom a conditional pardon has been tendered under section 337—Q E v Gangacharan, 11 All 79

In cases of murder, the Judge may report any extenuating circumstances calling for a mitigation of the punishment to the Government, and the Govt may thereupon take such action under this section as it thinks proper—Q. E v Kader Nasya, 23 Cal 604 Q E v Lakshman 10 Bom 512. In these two cases, the accused committed murder without any apparent sane motive, and was suffering from mental derangement of some sort, and the High Court holding that the accused was not entitled to be acquitted under section 84 I P C., recommended the case to the Local Government under this section to be dealt with in such manner as it thought fit.

Procedure .—All recommendations for remission or suspension of a sentence made under section 401 by an officer of any subordinate Court to the Local Government, in regard to a convict whose case has been before the High Court on appeal, shall be made through the High Court—Cal. G. R. & Co O p 40

Certified copy of record .—The original record need not be sent “Objection has been taken to the inconvenience of this, and we think, that it will be sufficient to require a certified copy of the record to be furnished."—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

"Such record thereof as exists":—"It is well known that in the case of proceedings in a High Court the Judges object to their notes being treated as part of the record, and we have therefore referred in our proposed amendment of section 401 (2) to 'a certified copy of the record of the trial, or of such record thereof as exists' We think in cases where it is necessary, in considering a petition for mercy, for Government to know, as it frequently may be, the nature of the evidence given at a trial in a High Court, we can safely trust to the courtesy of High Court Judges to furnish a copy of their notes"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

Subsections (4A) and (5A) :—"The new clause (4A) is intended to make it clear that the power to remit sentences conferred by section 401 can be exercised in the case of orders of a penal nature, e.g. orders under section 563 of the Code. The object of the new clause (5A) is to enable any condition, upon which a pardon has been granted by His Majesty or by the Governor General when such power has been delegated to him, to be enforced in the same way as a sentence of a Court"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921).

In sub-section (4A), the word 'law' has been used instead of the more common word 'Act' to make it clear that this section applies to the case of persons sentenced by tribunals constituted by Regulations and Ordinances—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

Subsection (5) :—"Or of the Governor-General":—"We have made a formal amendment in this sub-section in view of the special delegation to the present Governor-General of His Majesty's prerogative of pardon"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

402. (1) The Governor-General in Council or the Local Government may, without the consent of the person sentenced, commute any one of the following sentences for any other mentioned after it:—

death, transportation, penal servitude, rigorous imprisonment for a term not exceeding that to which he might have been sentenced, simple imprisonment for a like term, fine.

(2) Nothing in this section shall affect the provisions of section 54 or section 55 of the Indian Penal Code.

Sub-section (2) has been added by section 108 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923 "Doubts have been expressed as to the consistency of section 402 with section 54 or 55 of the Indian Penal Code, and these have now been resolved"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

CHAPTER XXX

OF PREVIOUS ACQUITTALS OR CONVICTIONS.

403. (1) A person who has once been tried by a Person once convicted or acquitted not to be tried for same offence. Court of competent jurisdiction for an offence and convicted or acquitted of such offence shall, while such conviction or acquittal remains in force, not be liable to be tried again for the same offence, nor on the same facts for any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him might have been made under section 236, or for which he might have been convicted under sec. 237.

(2) A person acquitted or convicted of any offence may be afterwards tried for any distinct offence for which a separate charge might have been made against him on the former trial under section 235, sub-section (1).

(3) A person convicted of any offence constituted by any act causing consequences which, together with such act, constituted a different offence from that of which he was convicted, may be afterwards tried for such last mentioned offence, if the consequences had not happened, or were not known to the Court to have happened, at the time when he was convicted.

(4) A person acquitted or convicted of any offence constituted by any acts may, notwithstanding such acquittal or conviction, be subsequently charged with, and tried for, any other offence constituted by the same acts which he may have committed, if the Court by which he was first tried was not competent to try the offence with which he is subsequently charged.

(5) Nothing in this section shall affect the provisions of section 26 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, or section 188 of this Code.

Explanation.—The dismissal of a complaint, the stopping of proceedings under section 249, the discharge of the accused, or any entry made upon a charge under section 273, is not an acquittal for the purposes of this section.

Illustrations.

(a) A is tried upon a charge of theft as a servant and acquitted. He cannot afterwards, while the acquittal remains in force, be charged with theft as a servant, or upon the same facts with theft simply, or with criminal breach of trust.

(b) A is tried upon a charge of murder and acquitted. There is no charge of robbery; but it appears from the facts that A committed robbery at the time when the murder was committed; he may afterwards be charged with, and tried for, robbery.

(c) A is tried for causing grievous hurt and convicted. The person injured afterwards dies. A may be tried again for culpable homicide.

(d) A is charged before the Court of Session and convicted of the culpable homicide of B. A may not afterwards be tried on the same facts for the murder of B.

(e) A is charged by a Magistrate of the first class with, and convicted by him of, voluntarily causing hurt to B. A may not afterwards be tried for voluntarily causing grievous hurt to B on the same facts, unless the case comes within paragraph 3 of the section.

(f) A is charged by a Magistrate of the second class with, and convicted by him of, theft of property from the person of B. A may be subsequently charged with, and tried for, robbery on the same facts.

(g) A, B and C are charged by a Magistrate of the first class with, and convicted by him of, robbing D. A, B and C may afterwards be charged with, and tried for, dacoity on the same facts.

1086. Principle—This section is an amplification of the well known maxim of law 'nemo debet bis vexari'. This principle does not rest on any doctrine of estoppel but embodies the well established rule of common law that a man may not be put twice in peril for the same offence—Emp v Chinna, 29 Mad 126 (F B.). Where an offence has already been the subject of judicial investigation and adjudication, and there has been an acquittal, the acquittal is conclusive, and it would be a very dangerous principle to adopt to regard a judgment of not guilty as not fully establishing the innocence of the accused—Rex v. Plummer, [1902] 2 K B. 339; Emp v. Lalit Mohan, 38 Cal 559 (578).

1087. "A person" :—Person not tried at the first trial—This section bars a subsequent trial of the same person who had once been placed on trial for the same offence. But does it bar the trial of persons who had not been placed in the first trial but who were implicated in the offence committed by the accused who was placed in the first trial? According to Bishun Das v. K. E., 7 C.W.N 493, the principle of this section extends to such persons, and therefore where three out of five persons concerned in the same offence were at first placed on trial and acquitted, a subsequent trial of the remaining two persons for the abetment of the offence was barred by this section. But this ruling has been disapproved of in several other cases. Thus, where on a complaint charging a number of persons with several offences, only three were sent up for trial, and they were acquitted on the ground that the prosecution case was untrue, and subsequently other persons alleged to be implicated in the same offences were sent up, it was held (dissenting from Bishun Das v K E, 7 C.W.N. 493) that the trial of these persons was not barred under this section—Kokari Sardar v Mehr Khan, 37 Cal. 680, Subal Chandra v Ahadulla, 53 Cal. 606, 30 C.W.N. 546, 27 Cr.L.J. 788. So also, where in a previous trial, two persons were acquitted by the jury of the offence of conspiring with a third person who was not placed on trial, it was held that the acquittal of those two persons did not operate as a bar to the trial of the third person—Manindra v Emp, 41 Cal. 754, 18 C.W.N. 580. See also Hatim Mollah, 10 C.W.N. 1031. But, in such a case, although the plea of autre fois acquit would not be available to the present accused, and the acquittal of another person would not bar the issue of process against the present accused, still the fact that another person accused upon the same facts of having been implicated in the same offence has been acquitted may properly be taken into consideration by the Magistrate in determining whether upon the material before him there is sufficient ground for proceeding to issue process against the present accused—Subal Chandra v Ahadulla, 53 Cal. 606, 30 C.W.N. 546, 27 Cr.L.J. 788.

Person absent in the first trial:—Where a complaint against two accused A and B was dismissed, and the accused A who attended Court to answer the charge was acquitted, the acquittal would operate in favour of the other accused (B) also who was absent, and would bar fresh proceedings against him on the same facts—Panchu v Umar, 4 C.W.N. 346. In this case the second accused was placed on trial, though he was absent on the day of hearing. But where out of three persons concerned in an offence, two persons were found and the third absconded and the two were placed on trial and convicted, the case of the third, when found, should be heard and decided irrespective of the fact that there had been a previous trial and conviction of the other accused, the second trial is not barred by this section—Emp v Ghure, 36 All. 168, 12 A.L.J. 231, 15 Cr.L.J. 200.

1088. "Tried".—There must be a previous trial of the accused, to bar a subsequent trial under this section. Where a complaint of a non-cognizable offence was made before the Police, and the Magistrate did not take cognizance of that offence on the police report, there could not be said to have been a trial of that offence, and consequently a subsequent complaint of that offence is not barred by this section—Govt v Shidapa, 5 Bom. 405. So also, where a Magistrate after taking cognizance of an offence dismisses the complaint under section 203, there cannot be said to have been a trial of the accused; and it is open to the Magistrate to rehear the complaint—Emp. v. Chinna, 29 Mad 126. So also, where no process had been issued against the accused, and no proceedings taken against them, but the Magistrate simply permitted the withdrawal of the charge-sheets against the accused, it was held that the withdrawal of the charge-sheets was no bar to fresh proceedings being taken against the accused by drawing fresh charge-sheets—In re Muthia-Moopan, 36 Mad 315, 14 Cr.L.J. 559.

It is not necessary that there should be a full previous trial and an acquittal or conviction on the merits. Where the accused appears and answers to a charge but he is acquitted under sec. 247 for non-appearance of the complainant, he is said to be tried and acquitted (although there was no trial on the merits) and he cannot be tried again for the same offence—Suraya v. Venkata, 2 Weir 457, In re Guggilapu Peddaya, 34 Mad 253; Suku Ram v. Krishna, 33 C.W.N. 260, 30 Cr.L.J. 585. The words "who has once been tried" mean against whom proceedings have been commenced in Court, i.e., against whom the Court has taken cognizance of the offence and issued process. Therefore where the Police filed a charge-sheet against a certain person before a Magistrate and summons was issued, but before it was served the Public Prosecutor, with the consent of the Court, withdrew from the prosecution under sec. 494, and the accused was acquitted, it was held that the accused must be said to have been 'tried and acquitted' within the meaning of this section, and the acquittal barred a further trial for the same offence—In re Dudikula Lal Sahib, 40 Mad. 976. But in another Madras case it is held that the non-appearance of a complainant on the first day of hearing and the consequent acquittal of the accused under sec. 247 do not bar a retrial, because the accused cannot be said to have been 'tried' on the first complaint, the trial of an accused in a summons case cannot be said to begin until the particulars of the offence are stated to the accused under sec. 242, and where there is nothing in the record to show that any trial was commenced on the first complaint, sec. 403 would not bar the Court from taking cognizance of the second complaint—Kotayya v. Venkayya, 40 Mad. 977 (Note). See Note 1089 below.

Irregularity in the first.—If there is a gross irregularity or illegality in a trial, such trial will not operate as a bar to a retrial of the accused for the same offence—Shahabat, 13 W.R. 42. Even if the order of acquittal was passed in the first trial under a misapprehension of law, it would still operate as a bar to a second trial—Bawa Manghnidas, 4 S.L.R. 174, 11 Cr.L.J. 731, 8 L.C. 936. The absence of a charge does not make the trial illegal. Where the trial had otherwise been regularly conducted even though no formal charge had been framed, the order of acquittal would bar subsequent proceedings—Emp. v. Gurdu, 3 All 129.

But where the first trial was conducted without any complaint at all, the trial was void ab initio and therefore a second trial is not barred—Nanakram v. Emp., 19 Cr.L.J. 796 (Oudh). The trial of an accused under sec. 21 of the Bengal Food Adulteration Act (VI of 1919) without obtaining the sanction of the Municipality is not a trial at all. Consequently the acquittal of the accused at such a trial does not bar a fresh prosecution after having obtained the necessary sanction—P. Banerjee v. Bipin Bihary, 30 C.W.N. 382, 27 Cr.L.J. 751

1089. Conviction or Acquittal :—This section bars a second trial when the accused is acquitted in the first trial, and not where he is simply discharged—Parmeshwari v. Jagannath, 17 A.L.J. 867.

What amounts to acquittal—It is not necessary that there should be an acquittal on the merits; therefore the withdrawal of the remaining charges under section 240, on conviction of one of several charges, has the effect of acquittal, and bars a fresh trial on the same facts—Okhoy v. Modhoo, 19 W R 55. The non-appearance of the complainant in a summons case has the effect of acquitting the accused (sec. 247) and he cannot be tried again for the same offence—Emp v. Dulla, 45 All. 58; Nityananda v. Rakhahari, 38 C L.J. 196, 24 Cr.L.J. 716, Suku Ram v. Krishna, 33 C.W.N. 260, 30 Cr L.J. 585, Panchu v Umar, 4 C.W.N. 346; Ram Mahto v. Emp, 2 P L T. 170, Kiran Sarkar v Emp, 5 P.L.T. 15, 24 Cr.L.J. 815, In re Guggilapu Paddaya, 34 Mad 253, In re Sinnu Goundan, 38 Mad. 1028, 26 M L J 160, Suraiya v Venkata, 2 Weir 457. Contra—Kotayya v. Venkayya, 40 Mad 977 (Note) cited in Note 1088. The withdrawal of a summons-case by the complainant operates as an acquittal of the accused. A compromise under sec. 345 has the effect of acquittal—Wali Asmal, Ratanlal 519; Hasta v. Crown, 1914 P R 29, 16 Cr L.J. 81, 26 I C. 993. The withdrawal of the Public Prosecutor from the case under section 494 (b) has the effect of acquitting the accused, and will bar a fresh trial—Sivarama, 12 Mad 35, In re Dudikula, 40 Mad. 976; Mahadeogir v. Emp, 14 Cr L.J. 135, 9 N.L.R. 26, Mleghraj, 23 Cr.L.J. 305. But an order made under sec 494 (a) is an order of discharge of the accused person and sec 403 does not bar the entertainment of a fresh complaint—Ramanand v. Ali Hassan, 26 Cr L.J. 129 (Pat). The dismissal of a summons-case amounts to an acquittal—Saifuddin, 1917 P.W.R. 14, 18 Cr L.J. 324. An order of acquittal under sec 258 cannot be treated as an order of discharge, it is one of acquittal and bars a second trial of the same offence on the same facts—In re Gandhi Apparaju, 43 Mad 330, 21 Cr L.J. 91

But a wrong order of acquittal will not bar a subsequent trial under this section. If a Magistrate tries a warrant case as a summons-case and acquits the accused without framing a charge, such an order of acquittal will be treated as one of discharge only, and cannot operate as a bar to a re-trial—Emp v Jada, 1886 A W N 260, Lajja Ram, 1888 A W N 96. If in a warrant case, before the charge is drawn up and the accused called upon to plead to it, the Magistrate erroneously acquits the accused, the acquittal amounts only to a discharge and does not bar a re-trial—Robert Sheriff, 6 W R 13. (But if the trial has been otherwise regularly conducted, the absence of a formal charge will not convert the order of acquittal into one of discharge, and the order of acquittal will bar a re-trial—Emp v Gurdu 3 All 129) Where a preliminary charge-sheet was laid by the Police before the Magistrate under sec 107, against several persons, but the Police intending to withdraw it in order that they might present a fresh charge-sheet against some only of those included in it, the Magistrate permitted the withdrawal and endorsed on the charge-sheet that the accused were acquitted, it was held that such an endorsement was illegal, because neither an order of discharge nor one of acquittal could be passed in a case where no process has been issued against the accused; and therefore the Magistrate's order was no bar to fresh proceedings being taken on a second charge-sheet—In re Muthia Moopan, 36 Mad. 315

On the other hand, where a person who ought to have been acquitted, is erroneously ordered to be discharged only, the order of discharge will be treated as one of acquittal, and will bar a re-trial. Thus, where a Public Prosecutor withdraws from the case under sec. 494, after the frame of charge, the accused ought to be acquitted and not discharged, if however, he is ordered to be discharged, he will be deemed to have been acquitted and a subsequent trial and conviction on the same facts is illegal and will be set aside—Q. E. v. Sivarama, 12 Mad. 35. So also, where in a warrant case, the accused has pleaded to a charge, the Magistrate can either convict or acquit him; his order dismissing the case will be one of acquittal, and not one of discharge of the accused—In re Jadubar, 5 C.L.R. 259, Hasta v Crown, 1914 P.R. 29, 16 Cr.L.J. 81, 26 I.C. 993.

An Appellate Court set aside a conviction and sentence on the ground that the Court below did not comply with the provisions of sec. 360. It left the question of retrial to the District Magistrate. The District Magistrate held a retrial. Held that the order of the Appellate Court did not amount to an acquittal. It was passed on a consideration of a point of law only and without recording any finding on the merits of the case. Such an order did not bar the retrial of the accused by the District Magistrate—Emp. v. Miajan, 53 Cal. 192, 27 Cr.L.J. 733, following Beni Madhab v. Emp., 46 Cal. 212.

Burden of proof.—The burden of proof of previous conviction or acquittal is upon the party setting it up—Raghunandan, 1889 A.W.N. 8.

1090. Court of competent jurisdiction:—The Council of Elders established under the Punjab Frontier Regulation (IV of 1887) is a Court of competent jurisdiction, for the purposes of this section, and a person convicted by such Council cannot be retried on the same facts—Sarwar v Emp., 1884 P.R. 30. Under the Burma Village Act, the village headman has the power to try as a Court an offence under sec. 294 I.P.C. and other offences. Therefore, a person who had once been tried by the village headman for an offence under sec. 294 I.P.C. is not liable to be tried again for the same offence—Nga E. v. K E, 1 Rang. 449. A village Munsif in Madras is not a recognised tribunal under the Cr.P. Code, and consequently an acquittal by a village Munsif does not bar the trial of the accused by a Magistrate—Rama Naidu v. Veerapuram Venkatasami, 53 M.L.J. 102, 28 Cr.L.J. 507.

It is necessary to a plea of autre fois acquit that the first Court should have had competent jurisdiction to try the offence, and therefore the conviction or acquittal of an accused by a Court not having jurisdiction is no bar to the institution of fresh proceedings against the accused on the same facts—Pratab, 2 W.R. 9; Q. E. v. Robert Sheriff, 6 W.R. 13. A trial by a Court not having jurisdiction is void ab initio, and the accused, if acquitted, is liable to be retried. It is not necessary to get the trial set aside before the accused can be retried—Q. E. v. Husain, 8 Bom. 307. Where a conviction by a Magistrate who had no jurisdiction to try the offence is set aside by the Appellate Court, and that Court discharges the accused without ordering a retrial, this section does not bar fresh proceedings being taken in the proper Court—Abdul Ghani v. Emp., 29 Cal 412, Hussain v. Emp., 39 All. 293. But where an accused is tried and acquitted by a Court which on the face of it is a Court of competent jurisdiction in respect of the offence charged, his subsequent trial is barred by this section; and the second Court in which the accused is tried again is not entitled to impeach the competency of the Court which held the first trial on the ground that the presiding officer might perhaps have laboured under the disqualification prescribed by sec 556. Until the order of acquittal passed by the first Court is set aside by some competent Court, the man acquitted is entitled to plead it under sec 403 in connection with any other proceeding that may be taken against him—Darbari v. K. E., 8 A.L.J. 1129.

The trial of the accused by a Court in a Native State bars their trial by a Court in British India on the same facts and for the same offence—Tela Singh v. Emp., 5 Lah L.J. 574.

The word "jurisdiction" refers not only to the character and status of the tribunal, but also includes local jurisdiction as laid down in secs 177-184 and 188. Therefore, previous acquittal of an offence by a Court having no local jurisdiction to try the offence is not a bar to the subsequent trial by a competent Court—In re Shanker, 53 Bom. 69, 30 Cr L.J. 54 (56).

Where the law requires a previous sanction (now abolished) or complaint under sec 195 before a charge can be entertained by a Court, that Court is not a Court of competent jurisdiction until the sanction has been obtained or the complaint has been made. Therefore the discharge or acquittal of the accused owing to want of such sanction or complaint does not bar a subsequent trial of the accused for the same offence after the requisite complaint has been made or sanction obtained—Emp. v. Ambaji, 52 Bom. 257, 29 Cr L.J. 545, Emp. v. Jiwan, 37 All. 107, 16 Cr L.J. 144; In re Samsuddin, 22 Bom. 711, Jivram v. Emp., 40 Bom. 97, 16 Cr L.J. 761, Fakir Mahomed v. Emp., 21 S.L.R. 1, 27 Cr L.J. 1105 (1106); Muhammad Yasin v. Emp., 5 Pat. 452, 27 Cr L.J. 819 (850). Therefore, where the accused was acquitted in the previous trial for the offence of forgery and cheating a Sub-Registrar, for which no sanction was obtained under section 195 before prosecution, the acquittal did not bar a subsequent trial for aiding and abetting cheating held after a formal sanction had been granted by the Sub-Registrar. The previous trial was not a trial by a Court of competent jurisdiction.

since no sanction under sec. 195 was obtained before trial—Emp v. Jiwan, 13 A.L.J. 4, 37 All. 107. Contra—Ganapathi, 36 Mad. 308 (314), where it was held that the absence of a sanction or complaint did not affect the competency of the tribunal. But this decision has been disapproved of in almost all the cases cited above.

No sanction is required for a prosecution under sec. 82 of the Registration Act, and therefore, a Court has jurisdiction to try the accused for that offence, without a sanction—Maung Saing v. K. E., 1 Rang 299, 25 Cr.L.J. 191 (following Gopi Nath v. Kuldip, 11 Cal. 566). But see Hussain Khan v. Emp., 39 All. 293 and Mohan Lal v. Emp., 19 A.L.J. 813, 22 Cr.L.J. 50.

While such conviction or acquittal remains in force :—This means 'as long as such conviction or acquittal is not set aside by a Court of Appeal or Revision.' If the conviction or acquittal is set aside by the Appellate Court, the result will be that the previous trial is annulled and the prisoner may be again put upon his trial—Kali Churn, 7 W.R. 2. So long as the conviction or acquittal is not set aside it will bar a second trial, even though the second Court considers that the acquittal in the first trial is not warranted by the evidence produced in the first trial—Dwarkanath, 7 W.R. 15 (22). So also, an acquittal of an offence arising out of certain facts under a wrong section will prevent a further inquiry into any offence based on the same facts, until that acquittal is set aside—Ram Nidh v. Ram Saran, 26 O.C. 282.

1091. Retrial.—Where the jury is discharged under section 305, the accused may be retried under section 308; such a retrial is not barred by this section. In such a case, the accused is being tried on the original indictment, and not 'tried again.' The duty of the Court is to continue the trial of the accused before another jury, and this process may continue, without the accused being 'tried again' under section 403—Emp v. Nirmal Kanta, 41 Cal. 1072. (Moreover, in such a case, i.e., where the jury is discharged under section 305, the accused is neither convicted nor acquitted, and therefore his retrial is not barred under this section).

An appeal or a revision is not a retrial, but a continuation of the same trial—Q. E v. Jabanullah, 23 Cal. 975 (977); Bahvant, 9 All. 134; Bali Reddi, 37 Mad. 119 (122); and therefore the Court of Appeal can convict the accused on a charge on which he has been acquitted by the first Court, or order a retrial on the same charge—Krishna Dhan, 23 Cal. 377.

1092. "For the same offence" :—The former conviction or acquittal is a bar to a second trial, if the offence is the same. Thus, a person charged with and acquitted of an offence under the Bombay Abkari Act (V of 1878) cannot subsequently be tried for the same offence—Q. E v. Gustadi, 10 Bom. 181 (182). An offence under sec. 5 of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1914 (reckless driving) and an offence under sec. 279 I. P. C. (rash driving on the public road so as to endanger human life) are the same, even though punishable under different Acts, and a person convicted of the former offence cannot be again charged with the latter—Gur Narain v Emp., 26 A.L.J. 160, 29 Cr.L.J. 271. The accused was tried and convicted for an offence under the Railways Act. In that trial, although there was no charge for assault, the Court took into account the fact that the accused had committed an assault upon the complainant, and in consideration thereof inflicted a heavy sentence. The accused was subsequently charged under sec. 323 I. P. C. Held that the second trial was illegal in as much as it was a trial for practically the same offence for which he had been already punished, though indirectly, in the first trial—Kailashpati v Gopi, 33 C.W.N. 948 (949). The accused was at first charged with having forged pattahs A and B, but no mention of any charge as to pattah B was made in the order of commitment, and he was tried and acquitted on the indictment for forging pattah A. He was subsequently charged with having forged pattah B. Held that as the offence of forging pattah B was not the same offence as forging pattah A, the second trial was not barred, even though evidence was given at the first trial tending to show that both pattahs were forgeries. The Court before which the second trial is held has nothing to do with the evidence given in the former trial except for the purpose of ascertaining whether the offence which formed the subject of the first trial is the same as the offence which forms the subject of the second charge. If the offence is the same, the former conviction or acquittal is a bar to a second trial, whether the second Court considers that the former conviction or acquittal was warranted by the evidence given in the first trial or not. If the offence is not the same, the former conviction or acquittal is no bar to the trial upon the second charge, notwithstanding that the evidence given in the two cases is the same. Two distinct offences cannot be converted into one offence by reason of any evidence adduced upon the trial for one of them—per Peacock C.J. in Q. v. Dwarkanath, 7 W.R. 15 (20, 21).

The trial of the accused for the dishonest receiving or retaining of certain stolen articles bars a second trial of the accused in respect of other stolen articles found in his possession on the same date, in the absence of evidence to show that the different articles which were the subject of the charges in the two trials were received at different times—Ganesh Sahu v. Emp., 50 Cal. 594; K. E. v. Bishun Singh, 3 Pat. 503 (519), 5 P.L.T. 319, 25 Cr.L.J. 738; Ishan Muchi v. K. E., 15 Cal. 511; Q. E. v. Makhan, 15 All. 317. See also Sheo Charan v. Emp., 45 All. 485, 24 Cr.L.J. 432. But the Sind Court dissents from those rulings and is of opinion that where properties are stolen on different dates, the presumption is that the properties passed from the hands of the thief to the receiver at different dates, and the burden lies on the accused to prove that they passed to him at one and the same time. In the absence of such proof, a prior acquittal of the receiver with regard to one item of stolen property does not bar subsequent trial in respect of a different item of property stolen on a different date—Dadlomal v. Emp., 21 S.L.R. 154, 27 Cr.L.J. 1256 (1257).

Where a person has been tried for some offence and acquitted, he cannot be subsequently charged with conspiracy, of which that offence is alleged to form a part—Emp. v. Lalit Mohan, 38 Cal 559

Continuing offence :—A person who has once been tried for building a house without the sanction of the Municipal Committee and acquitted, cannot be retried for the same offence simply on the ground that the house continues to stand and thus constitutes a continuing offence. The previous acquittal will bar a retrial—Saifuddin, 1917 P.W.R. 17, 18 Cr L J 324.

Second complaint by different person :—A person once convicted of an offence cannot be tried again for the same offence and on the same facts, even though the complainant in the second case is not the same person as the complainant in the first case. Thus, the accused assaulted several persons A, B, etc. At first A filed a complaint against the accused, and they were convicted under section 323 I. P. C. Afterwards B filed a similar complaint against the same accused on the same facts. Held that the second trial was barred—Ram Chandar v. Emp., 18 A L J 85.

"Same facts" :—A Court ought not to decide that a charge pending trial before him is barred under this section without an investigation of the facts put forward on behalf of the complainant—Radha Kishan v. Fatik Chand, 23 C.W.N. 543. Where the complainant charges the accused before the Magistrate with a certain offence, and a preliminary objection is put forward on behalf of the accused that he had been previously tried on the same facts in another Court and acquitted, it is the duty of the Magistrate to hear the evidence and ascertain what are the facts in the two cases, in order to determine whether the facts in the present case are the same as those in the previous case—M. N. Mukherjee v. Matangi Charan Palit, 23 C.W.N. 599, 20 Cr.L.J. 572. Where the accused was charged in the former trial for an offence under sec 401 I. P. C., but the charge failed because the approver's statement on which the prosecution was based was considered unreliable, a subsequent trial for an offence under sec. 413 I. P. C. is not barred by the provisions of this section, because the second trial is not based on the same facts as those on which the former trial proceeded. In the first trial the prosecution rested primarily on the approver's statement, but in the second trial the prosecution is based entirely on the evidence as to the discovery of the stolen property in the house of the accused—Chhagan v. Emp., 26 P.L.R. 470, 26 Cr.L.J. 1097. Where the prosecution of the accused rests on facts wholly and completely different from those on which he was previously prosecuted, the previous acquittal does not bar the subsequent proceedings, even though under the same section of the I. P. Code. Thus, the previous acquittal of an accused on a charge under sec 498 I. P. C. is not a bar to subsequent proceedings under the same section on a charge of subsequent detention of the same woman upon different facts—Waryam v. Emp., 29 P.L.R. 52, 29 Cr.L.J. 3.

1093. Trial for different offence upon the same facts:

The protection offered by this section extends to different offences only when they are based on the same facts and fall within the provisions of section 236 or section 237—Q. E. v. Subedar Krishnappa, 1 Bom. L.R. 15 Where a person has been tried and convicted or acquitted for an offence arising out of a particular set of facts, he cannot, while such conviction or acquittal remains in force, be again tried in respect of any offence based on the same facts, unless the case can be brought under one or other of the specific exceptions to the rule provided by sub-sections (2) to (4)—Mahadeogir v. Emp., 9 N.L.R. 26, 14 Cr.L.J. 135.

Examples:—(1) A trial for the offence of theft of an animal bars a subsequent trial for the offence of mischief for subsequently killing that animal—Madar, 1 Weir 497. Similarly where a person was tried for the offence of mischief and was acquitted on the ground that the tree in respect of which the mischief was alleged to have been committed was his own property, he cannot afterwards be tried for theft of the same tree, on the same facts—Q E v Erramreddi, 8 Mad 296

(2) Where the accused with a body of people committed rioting and mischief to the trees of the complainant, and was at first tried for the offence of mischief alone and acquitted, held that he could not be tried again for the offence of rioting which was based on the same facts as the offence of mischief—In re Chinnappa 19 L.W. 31, 25 Cr.L.J. 244, A I R 1924 Mad 478

(3) Where the accused have been tried and acquitted on charges of forgery and abetment thereof, they cannot afterwards on the same facts be prosecuted for offences under sec. 82 (c) of the Registration Act, since they could have been charged in the previous trial under sec 82 of the Registration Act—Maung Saing v. Emp, 1 Rang 299, 25 Cr L.J. 191, A I R. 1924 Rang. 213

(4) A person acquitted of using criminal force cannot be tried for hurt on the same facts—Kaptan v Smith, 16 W R 3

(5) Where a person is convicted on a charge under sec 411 I P C of having been dishonestly in possession of property knowing it to be stolen, he cannot be subsequently convicted under sec 414 I P. C of voluntarily assisting in concealing other property stolen on the same occasion from the same person—Q E v. Mian Jan, 28 All 313 The accused was charged before the Sessions Judge with the offence of abetment of theft; the Judge acquitted the accused but was satisfied that he had committed the offence of receiving stolen property (sec 411 I P C) The Judge however did not charge him with that offence, as he could have done under sec. 236 of this Code Subsequently, the accused was charged with an offence under sec 411 I P C, and put on his trial Held that the second trial was barred under the provisions of sec 403—In re Pundalik, 26 Bom L R 440, 26 Cr L J 831

(6) Where a person has been tried and acquitted on a charge under section 211 I P. C he cannot be tried again on a charge under sec. 182 I P C—Ganapathi, 36 Mad 308

(7) A person acquitted on a charge under section 324 I. P. C. cannot be again tried on the same facts for an offence under section 323 I. P. C.—Wali Asmat, Ratanlal 519.

(8) A conviction under sec. 5 of the Motor Vehicles Act (VIII of 1914) for reckless driving bars a subsequent prosecution on the same facts under sec. 279 I. P. C. for rash driving on the public road so as to endanger human life—Gur Narain v. Emp., 26 A.L.J. 160, 29 Cr.L.J. 271.

(9) Where the prisoner was at first tried under sec. 498 I. P. C. for having enticed away a married woman from her husband, and was acquitted on the ground that the whole case was fabricated, and the prisoner was next charged and convicted under sec. 363 I. P. C. of having kidnapped two infants of the woman, who were with her when she left the house; it was held that the second trial was illegal, because so long as the acquittal under section 498 I. P. C. remained in force, the second Court was bound to take it as proved that the accused did not entice away the woman; and therefore, the offence under sec. 363 alleged to have been committed while the prisoner enticed away the woman was disproved by the above finding of fact—Ganesh Das, 1911 P.L.R. 56, 12 Cr.L.J. 94, 9 I.C. 511.

(10) A person acquitted of the charge of cheating cannot be tried again for the offence of falsification of accounts, upon the same facts—Emp v Nand Kishore, 20 Cr.L.J. 667 (Patna).

(11) The accused was tried under sec. 363 I. P. C. and acquitted. The Sessions Judge directed further inquiry to be made to ascertain whether offences under secs. 366 and 368 I. P. C. were committed. It was held that the order directing further inquiry was illegal, in as much as kidnapping (sec. 363 I. P. C.) is an essential element in offences under secs. 366, 368 I. P. C., and the accused having been already acquitted of the offence of kidnapping, he could not be put on trial again for offences under secs. 366, 368 I. P. C.—Md. Saleh v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 526 (Pat.).

(12) An acquittal of the prisoner on charges under secs. 380, 411 I. P. C. for being found in possession of a quantity of jute, bars subsequent proceedings in respect of the same act under sec. 54A of the Calcutta Police Act, because in the previous trial the charge of theft (secs. 380, 411 I. P. C.) might have been joined with a charge under sec. 54A of the Calcutta Police Act, under the provisions of sec. 236 of this Code—Manhari v. K. E., 45 Cal. 727, 22 C.W.N. 199, 19 Cr.L.J. 198.

(13) Where the accused was acquitted of a charge of unlawful assembly with the common object of assaulting a person, the District Magistrate is not justified in ordering a further inquiry into the offence of hurt on the same facts, while the order of acquittal remains in force—Jaliram v. v. Raj Kumar, 5 C.W.N. 72.

(14) Where a person was at first charged with kidnapping a minor girl, under section 363 I. P. C., but the trying Magistrate finding that the girl was not under sixteen, acquitted the accused, a second trial on the same facts for the offence of abducting the girl in order to confine her secretly (section 365 I. P. C.) was barred. The accused in the first trial might have been charged in the alternative with the second offence, under section 237 of this Code—Kala Nath v. K. E., 24 C.W.N. 856, 21 Cr L J. 639.

(15) If a person charged under section 338 I. P. C., with having caused grievous hurt by rashly driving a motor car, was acquitted on the ground that it was not proved that he was driving the car, he cannot be subsequently tried under section 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act for the offence of driving the car without a license—Maksuddin v. Emp, 2 P.L.T. 31, 22 Cr L.J. 63.

(16) Where an accused was tried under sec 408 I P. C for criminal breach of trust in respect of three sums of money alleged to have been dishonestly misappropriated, and it was part of the prosecution case at the trial that he had made three false entries to conceal the misappropriation, and he was acquitted by the jury, but was subsequently charged on the same evidence under section 477A I P C (falsification of accounts) in respect of the said three entries, it was held that he should not on the same facts be tried again for what were virtually the same offences charged in a different form—Emp v Jhaqbar, 49 Cal 924

(17) Where the accused were at first charged under sec. 193 I P. C. and acquitted by the Magistrate who dealt very exhaustively with the evidence and came to the conclusion that the culpability of the accused had not been established beyond reasonable doubt, and the accused were subsequently charged with offences under secs 467 and 471 read with sec 120B of the I P C upon facts which were wholly inseparable from the facts upon which the previous case was proceeded with, held that the subsequent trial was barred by this section—Cheraghali v Satish, 30 C.W.N. 384, 26 Cr.L J 1023

(18) The accused went into a Mahomedan graveyard and there cut down a tree. They were at first tried under sec 297 I P. C for hurting the religious feelings of the Muhammadans by cutting down the tree, and were acquitted. They were subsequently prosecuted for theft of the tree. Held that the trial of the accused for theft, based on the same set of facts, was barred under sec 403—Futteh Ali v Emp, 8 Lah. 52, 27 Cr L J 1019 (1020)

(19) The accused who was employed on a steamship assaulted the captain of the ship and was convicted of an offence under sec 68 Calcutta Police Act. Subsequently the captain filed a complaint under sec 103 (iv) of the Merchant Shipping Act against the accused on the same facts. Held that the second trial was barred. In fact the second complaint was for the same offence under a different enactment—Alfred Laird v Emp, 31 C W N 195, 28 Cr L J 233 (234)

(20) The acquittal of the accused on a charge under rule 21 of the Burma Forest Rules for having extracted teak timber without a l and under rule 71 for converting timber at a sawpit without a sawpit license, is a bar to the subsequent prosecution of the accused on the same facts for offences under secs. 379 and 411 I. P. Code—Yeok Kuk, 6 Rang. 386, 29 Cr.L.J. 930 (931).

But the previous trial for an offence founded on a particular set of facts does not bar a second trial for a different offence based on different facts. Thus, the previous acquittal on a charge of theft does not bar a subsequential trial for the offence of receiving stolen property, as the latter offence is supported by certain additional facts ascertained subsequent to the first trial—Dy. Leg. Rem. v. Hatim Molla, 10 C.W.N. 1031. An acquittal on the charge of murder does not prevent another trial upon a charge of robbery, because the two offences are so widely different that in the first trial for murder the accused could not have been convicted of the offence of robbery under the provisions of sec. 237 of the Code—Walla v. Crown, 4 Lah. 373 (375). The accused falsely represented himself to be another and borrowed money by executing a mortgage of a property standing in the latter's name. He subsequently falsely personated the latter in the Registration office for getting the mortgage registered. He was at first charged with cheating by false personation (sec 419 I. P. C.) but acquitted. He was subsequently charged under sec 82 (c) Registration Act. Held that the second trial was not barred, because the offence committed in the Registration office was a different and subsequent offence for which he could not have been charged in the first trial, under sec. 236 of this Code—Me Tok v. Emp., 6 Bur L.J. 201, 28 Cr.L.J. 908 (910).

"For which a different charge might have been made":—This section protects a person against a trial for 'any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him might have been made', but where the offence for which he is to be tried again is the same charge that was made against him in the first trial, the defence must fail. Thus, where the accused was charged in the first trial with the murder of A under section 302 I. P. C., as well as with culpable homicide of A under section 304 I. P. C., and was acquitted by the jury of the charge of murder, but the jury disagreeing as to the culpable homicide, the accused was retried for that offence, it was held that the second trial was not illegal, for a charge in respect of that offence had already been made in the first trial. If the accused had been charged with murder alone, no doubt a verdict of not guilty would protect him from another trial for culpable homicide; but where a charge of culpable homicide was also made, the case falls outside the provisions of the law dealing with cases where it 'might have been made'—Emp. v. Nirmal Kanta Roy, 41 Cal 1072, 18 C.W.N. 723, 15 Cr L.J. 460.

1094. Sub-section (2)—Sub-section (2) permits a second trial for a distinct offence for which a charge might have been framed under sec. 235 (1) as having been committed in the course of the same transaction.

The expression "distinct offence" means an offence entirely unconnected with a former offence charged—Yeok Kuk, 6 Rang. 386, 29 Cr L J 930 (931).

Examples :—(1) Where certain persons, after beating the inmates of a house, carried off a woman, and on the first trial they were charged under sections 452 and 325 I. P. C. for house-trespass and grievous hurt, and convicted, it was held that such conviction did not bar a subsequent trial for the offence of abduction which had been committed in the course of the same transaction. The case fell under section 235 (1) and therefore under sub-section (2) of this section—Baldeo v. K E, 3 A.L.J. 2, 3 Cr.L.J. 93.

(2) A previous conviction for being in possession of counterfeit coins, under section 243 I. P. C., does not bar a subsequent trial under section 240 I. P. C. for passing other coins, knowing them to be counterfeited. They were two distinct offences—Emp. v Prasanna, 31 Cal 1007.

(3) The accused was at first tried on a charge of abetment of forgery of a document. He was again tried by the Sessions Court, in respect of the same document, for using as genuine a forged document. It was held that the previous acquittal was no bar to the second trial. The case was not governed by sub-section (1) of this section, in as much as the case was not one contemplated by section 236, there being nothing doubtful what should be the true view of the offence committed; the case fell under sub-section (2) of this section, because the two offences were distinct offences, and committed in the course of the same transaction within the meaning of section 235 (1)—Jivram v Emp, 40 Bom 97.

(4) The acquittal of an accused of a charge under section 400 I. P. C. does not bar the trial of the accused under section 395 I. P. C. for committing one of the dacoities in respect of which evidence was given at the previous trial—Q E v Subedar Krishnappa, 1 Bom.L.R. 15.

(5) Where six documents were alleged to be fabricated at one and the same time, and at first the accused was tried for fabricating three of the documents and acquitted, a second trial for fabricating the other three documents was not barred. But in the circumstances of the case it was not desirable that the second trial should take place, as the fabricating of all the documents was treated in the first trial as one offence—Emp v Inamullah, 2 A L J 673, 2 Cr L J 790.

(6) A conviction for an offence under sec 5 of the Motor Vehicles Act VIII of 1914 (reckless driving) does not bar a subsequent prosecution under sec 325 or 328 I. P. C. (causing grievous hurt to a person in consequence of rash driving)—Gur Narain v Emp 26 A L J 160, 29 Cr L J 271.

(7) The conviction of the accused for an offence under the Excise Act does not prevent the accused from being subsequently tried for an offence under the Merchandise Marks Act, the two offences being distinct and committed in the course of the same transaction—Q E. v. Croft 23 Cal 174.

(8) The conviction of the accused for committing affray (sec 160 I. P. C.) is no bar to their trial and conviction for the offence of causing hurt (sec. 323 I. P. C.) committed in the course of the affray—Rari Sukh v. Emp., 47 All. 284, 23 A.L.J. 8, 26 Cr.L.J. 688

(9) A complaint was preferred under sections 352 and 504 I P C but the Magistrate issued process upon the accused directing him to appear and take his trial under section 352 only. The Magistrate acquitted the prisoner of the offence under section 352, but being of opinion that on the evidence adduced a prima facie case of an offence under section 504 had been made out, ordered process to issue directing the accused to appear and stand his trial under section 504. It was held that sub-section (2) of this section applied and the retrial was not illegal—Buyay Krishna v. Balai Chand, 20 Cr.L.J. 43

(10) The accused who were Police constables, committed rioting in the course of which they took several persons in custody. They were at first tried for wrongful confinement under section 342 I P C in respect of the arrests made by them, and were acquitted; subsequently they were convicted of rioting under section 147 I P C. Held, that the second trial was not barred. The two offences fell under section 235 (1) of this Code—Ram Sahay v. Emp., 48 Cal 78, 24 C.W.N 763, 21 Cr.L.J. 614

(11) The accused was charged under sec 409 I P. C. for criminal breach of trust in respect of Rs. 18,924, alleged to have been misappropriated by him between 1st October 1921 and 1st March 1922. The charge was withdrawn with the leave of the Court and the accused was acquitted. He was subsequently charged with having committed criminal breach of trust in respect of a sum of Rs 100 on the 30th November 1921. The prosecution alleged that the defalcation of this item of Rs. 100 was not included in the sum of Rs 18,924 and the facts relating thereto were not known to him at the time of the previous charge. Held that as the sum of Rs 100 (the subject of the subsequent charge) was not included in the gross sum of Rs 18,924 (the subject of the previous charge), the offence subsequently charged was not the same in respect of which the accused was previously acquitted; therefore the previous acquittal did not operate as a bar to the subsequent trial of the accused—Nagendra Nath v. Emp., 50 Cal 632, 25 Cr.L.J 156, 27 C.W.N. 578 (following Emp. v. Kashinath, 12 Bom.L.R. 226). But where the prosecution knew perfectly well what was the gross sum in respect of which the accused had committed breach of trust, and they could have proceeded against the accused in the first trial in respect of the gross amount under sec 222 (2), but instead of doing so they elected to proceed on three items and got the accused convicted, and then they picked up three other items and got the accused tried a second time, held that the second trial was not desirable, though not illegal—Sidh Nath v. Emp., 33 C.W.N 454 (457), 1929 Cr. C 90 (91)

(12) A person who has been convicted of theft (sec 379 I. P. C.) in respect of a certain quantity of opium can be subsequently tried for illicit possession of the same opium under sec. 9 of the Opium Act (I of 1878)—Deoki v. Emp., 48 All. 496, 24 A.L.J. 559, 27 Cr.L.J. 767.

(13) A person acquitted of the offence of causing hurt with a dangerous weapon (sec 324 I. P. C.) can be subsequently tried for the offence of going armed with a dangerous weapon under sec. 19 (e) Arms Act—Manjubhai, 53 Bom. 604, 1929 Cr C 38, 30 Cr.L.J. 1059 (1061).

This clause applies when the case falls under subsection (1) of sec. 235, and not to a case falling under subsection (2) of sec 235. Thus, a person who has been tried and acquitted of offences under sections 201 and 202 I. P. C. cannot be tried again for an offence under section 176 I. P. C. based on the same facts. Such a case does not come under section 235 (1) but under section 235 (2), and therefore sub-section (2) of section 403 does not apply. It falls under sub-section (1) of section 403 and the second trial is barred—Sharbekhan v Emp. 10 C.W.N. 518; see also Ghamandi v. Babu, 27 A.L.J. 1056 1929 Cr C 491 (492).

1095. Sub-section (3).—‘Constituted a different offence’—The facts or circumstances must be such as to indicate a different kind of offence of which there could be no conviction at the first trial. It is not enough to show merely circumstances of aggravation or serious consequences of the offence which have occurred since the first trial. Where a person was convicted under section 31 of the Rangoon Police Act, 1899 for being in possession of an article supposed to be stolen, he cannot be tried subsequently for an offence under section 457 I. P. C. merely on the ground that the owner of the article is traced and some further evidence is available—Nga Shwe v Emp 8 Bur L.T 129, 16 Cr.L.J. 267, 28 I.C. 155. The new evidence must constitute a different kind of offence, for which he could not have been tried at the first trial.

‘Were not known to the Court.’—The new facts or consequences must have occurred since the conviction or acquittal at the first trial. Thus, where a person was at first tried for causing grievous hurt and convicted, and after the conviction the injured man died, it was held that the accused could be again tried for the offence of culpable homicide, since the consequence of hurt (i.e. the death) did not take place until after the first trial—Crown v Sarbiland 1901 P.R. 3 Sailani, 36 All. 4. So also, where a person was acquitted of an offence under the Bombay City Municipal Act, for proceeding to erect certain balconies in contravention of the Act, he can be subsequently tried for failure to remove these balconies after notice, because the offence of non-removal of these balconies could not have been committed until the notice to remove them was served, and the service was made only after the previous acquittal—Municipality of Bombay v Javer 4 Bom L.R. 575.

But if the new facts or consequences were known to the Court at the time of the first trial, a second trial for an offence constituted by these new facts would be barred. Thus, where the prisoner was at first tried for causing hurt, and before the trial and conviction for hurt the injured man died, and this fact was known to the Court which convicted the prisoner for hurt, he could not again be tried for homicide.

under this sub-section, though he might be under sub-section (4)—Mahadeogir v. Emp., 9 N.L.R. 26, 14 Cr.L.J. 135.

1096. Sub-section (4) :—‘Was not competent’ :—The words ‘was not competent to try’ mean ‘had no jurisdiction to try’—K. E. v. Krishna Aiyar, 24 Mad 641. Jurisdiction includes local jurisdiction, so if the previous Court had no local jurisdiction to try the subsequent offence, it was a Court “not competent to try” that offence within the meaning of this clause—In re Shanker, 53 Bom. 69, 30 Cr.L.J. 54 (56). If a person has been acquitted or convicted of an offence, but the same facts disclose another offence which could not be tried by the same Magistrate who tried the first offence, then the previous acquittal or conviction is no bar to further proceedings for the latter offence—In re Venkataranga, 18 Cr.L.J. 643 (Mad), Palani Goundan v. Emp., 48 M.L.J. 490, 26 Cr.L.J. 1087. Therefore the trial of the accused for an offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt by a Magistrate does not bar the trial of the accused for attempt to murder on the same facts, as the previous trial was by a Court not competent to try the latter offence—Q v Panna, 7 N.W.P. 371. Where a Magistrate convicted the accused of rioting, a fresh complaint of dacoity based on the same facts was not barred, since the Magistrate who tried the offence of rioting was not competent to try the offence of dacoity—Viran Kutti v. Chiyamu, 7 Mad 557. Similarly, a previous conviction for the offence of causing hurt tried before a Magistrate does not bar a subsequent trial by the Sessions Judge of an offence under section 304, upon the same facts—Emp v Bahinu, 5 Bom L.R. 125, In re Gandi Apparaju, 43 Mad 330. A conviction by a Magistrate for a minor offence does not bar a subsequent trial for murder, because the Magistrate was not competent to try the offence of murder—Ladkia, Ratanlal 337 (338); Wadhwa v Crown, 1912 P.R. 7. A person acquitted or convicted by a Magistrate under section 465 I.P.C. may on the same facts be tried by a Court of Session under section 467 on the allegation that the document said to have been forged was a valuable security—Abdul Hakim, 19 Cr.L.J. 388 (Cal), 44 I.C. 740. When on a complaint made under sections 409 and 477A I.P.C., a second class Magistrate proceeded to deal with the case as one under section 408 I.P.C. and acquitted the accused, and the complainant afterwards presented a further complaint to the District Magistrate praying for the trial of the accused under sections 409 and 477A I.P.C.; it was held that the District Magistrate was competent to take cognizance of the second complaint, as the second class Magistrate who dealt with the first complaint was not empowered to commit the accused persons for trial to the Court of Session—Krishnadhane v. Mahendra, 23 C.W.N. 518. The accused was tried and acquitted on a charge under sec 498 I.P.C. for having taken away a girl from the custody of her mother with intent to have illicit intercourse with her. He was subsequently charged under secs 363 and 366 I.P.C. for having kidnapped the girl from the lawful guardianship of her mother with intent to have intercourse with her. Held that the plea of autre fois acquit would prevail with respect to the charge under sec 363, but not with respect to the charge under sec 366, as it was a Sessions offence which the Magistrate who tried the accused under sec. 498 was not competent to try—Chhanu Prasad, 10 P.L.T. 446, 29 Cr.L.J. 760 (761) A person convicted by a village Headman under the Burma Village Act, for assault, can be tried subsequently by a Magistrate for the causing of hurt upon the same facts, the village Headman not being competent to try the offence of causing hurt—Michit v. Mi Nyun, (1919) 3 U.B.R. 135, 20 Cr.L.J. 533, 51 I.C. 773

If however the Court (Sessions Judge) which tried the previous offence was also competent to try the subsequent offence, the trial of the latter offence is barred by this section, and the fact that the first offence was triable with the aid of assessors and the second offence was triable by a jury, is immaterial—K. E v Krishna Aiyar, 24 Mad. 641 This sub-section refers to the competency of the tribunal to try the offence, and not to the nature of the offence, i.e., as to whether it is triable by jury or with assessors

It was held in a Madras case that the words "competent to try" in this clause referred to the character and status of the tribunal, and that where the law required a sanction or complaint under sec 195 before the Court could take cognizance of the offence, the sanction or complaint was not a condition of the competency of the tribunal but 'was only a condition precedent for the institution of proceeding before that tribunal; and that want of sanction or complaint did not make the Court incompetent to try the offence within the meaning of this clause if the Court was otherwise competent to try the offence—In re Ganapathi, 36 Mad 308 (314). But this ruling has been disapproved of in 37 All 107, 52 Bom 257 and several other cases. See these cases cited in Note 1090 ante. The words "competent to try" are equivalent to "in a legal position to have tried and acquitted or convicted" That is, they refer narrowly to the legal position of the Court at the time of the former trial in relation to the particular offence committed by the accused, and not broadly to the jurisdiction of the Court with regard to the class of offences in general—Babu Lal v Ram Saran, 30 Cr.L.J. 806 (809) (Pat) Thus, the absence of a proper complaint by the person specified under section 199 of this Code renders the Court "incompetent" to try the offence. Where a Magistrate dismissed a complaint of an offence under section 498 I P C on the ground that the complaint was not made by the person specified under section 199, and acquitted the accused, it was held that the order of acquittal amounted to a finding that the Court was 'not competent to try the offence' in the absence of a complaint by the proper person, and therefore a fresh complaint instituted by the proper person (the husband of the woman) was not barred under this section—Umeruddin v. Emp., 31 All 317, 9 Cr.L.J. 526 Similarly, where the accused was first tried under sections 366, 368 and 376 I. P. C and acquitted, and subsequently, the husband of the woman preferred complaint under section 498 I P C, on the same facts, and the accused was tried and convicted, it was held that the second conviction was illegal, since the previous Court was not competent to try the accus

under this sub-section, though he might be under sub-section (4)—Mahadeogir v. Emp., 9 N.L.R. 26, 14 Cr.L.J. 135.

1096. Sub-section (4) :—‘Was not competent’:—The words ‘was not competent to try’ mean ‘had no jurisdiction to try’—K. E. v. Krishna Aiyar, 24 Mad. 641 Jurisdiction includes local jurisdiction; so if the previous Court had no local jurisdiction to try the subsequent offence, it was a Court “not competent to try” that offence within the meaning of this clause—In re Shanker, 53 Bom. 69, 30 Cr L.J. 54 (56). If a person has been acquitted or convicted of an offence, but the same facts disclose another offence which could not be tried by the same Magistrate who tried the first offence, then the previous acquittal or conviction is no bar to further proceedings for the latter offence—In re Venkataranga, 18 Cr L.J. 643 (Mad), Palani Goundan v. Emp., 48 M.L.J. 490, 26 Cr L.J. 1087 Therefore the trial of the accused for an offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt by a Magistrate does not bar the trial of the accused for attempt to murder on the same facts, as the previous trial was by a Court not competent to try the latter offence—Q v Panna, 7 N.W.P. 371. Where a Magistrate convicted the accused of rioting, a fresh complaint of dacoity based on the same facts was not barred, since the Magistrate who tried the offence of rioting was not competent to try the offence of dacoity—Viran Katti v. Chiyamu, 7 Mad. 557 Similarly, a previous conviction for the offence of causing hurt tried before a Magistrate does not bar a subsequent trial by the Sessions Judge of an offence under section 304, upon the same facts—Emp. v. Bahinu, 5 Bom L.R. 125, In re Gandhi Apparaju, 43 Mad. 330 A conviction by a Magistrate for a minor offence does not bar a subsequent trial for murder, because the Magistrate was not competent to try the offence of murder—Ladkia, Ratantlal 337 (338), Wadhawa v. Crown, 1912 P.R. 7 A person acquitted or convicted by a Magistrate under section 465 I.P.C. may on the same facts be tried by a Court of Session under section 467 on the allegation that the document said to have been forged was a valuable security—Abdul Hakim, 19 Cr L.J. 388 (Cal), 44 I.C. 740 When on a complaint made under sections 409 and 477A I.P.C., a second class Magistrate proceeded to deal with the case as one under section 408 I.P.C. and acquitted the accused, and the complainant afterwards presented a further complaint to the District Magistrate praying for the trial of the accused under sections 409 and 477A I.P.C.; it was held that the District Magistrate was competent to take cognizance of the second complaint, as the second class Magistrate who dealt with the first complaint was not empowered to commit the accused persons for trial to the Court of Session—Krishnadhone v. Mahendra, 23 C.W.N. 518 The accused was tried and acquitted on a charge under sec 498 I.P.C. for having taken away a girl from the custody of her mother with intent to have illicit intercourse with her. He was subsequently charged under secs 363 and 366 I.P.C. for having kidnapped the girl from the lawful guardianship of her mother with intent to have intercourse with her. Held that the plea of autre fois acquit would prevail with respect to the charge under sec 363, but not with respect to the charge under is no bar to the retrial of the accused for the same offence—Q. v. Shahbut, 13 W.R. 42.

Discharge of accused:—Sec. 403 applies only to cases of acquittal or conviction, and has no application to a case in which the accused person has been discharged—Parameshwari v. Jagan Nath, 17 A.L.J. 867, 20 Cr.L.J. 403, 51 I.C. 163

It is competent for the Magistrate to rehear a complaint after the accused is discharged under sec. 253 or 259. See notes under those sections. An order of discharge under sec. 333 is no bar to fresh proceedings—K. E. v. Sheikh Idoo, 49 Cal. 71; but see Emp. v. Jitendra, 52 Cal. 590, 26 Cr.L.J. 1397. Where a person is discharged under sec. 119, he is merely permitted to depart. Such a discharge is not an acquittal, and fresh proceedings may be taken against the accused. See Velu Tayi Ammal v. Chidambaravelu, 33 Mad. 85. Where a conviction by a Magistrate who had no jurisdiction to try the case is set aside on appeal, and the Appellate Court, without ordering a retrial, merely discharges the accused, this section does not bar a fresh trial by a competent Magistrate—Abdul Ghami v. Emp., 29 Cal. 412, Ram Reddi, 3 Mad. 48

But although there is nothing in law against the entertainment of a second complaint on the same facts against a person who has been discharged, yet, unless very strong grounds are shown, (i.e., discovery of new facts, etc.), a person who has been charged once and discharged ought not to be harassed on the same charge—In re Malayil, 18 Cr.L.J. 329 (Mad.).

When an order of discharge is passed, no formal order under sec. 436 or 437 is necessary for the institution of a fresh trial—Mohesh Mistree, 1 Cal. 282; Emp. v. Donnelly, 2 Cal. 405, Emp. v. Hari Dayal, 4 Cal. 16, Nobin v. Russik, 10 Cal. 268; Q. E. v. Dolegobind, 28 Cal. 211, Mir Ahmad v. Md. Askari, 29 Cal. 726, Mehrban, 29 All. 7, Emp. v. Gowdapa, 2 Bom. 534; Q. E. v. Dorabji, 10 Bom. 131; Chinnathambi v. Gurusamy, 28 Mad. 310, Narayanasawmy, 32 Mad. 220; Alauddin, 17 O.C. 273, 15 Cr.L.J. 638.

PART VII.

OF APPEAL, REFERENCE AND REVISION.

CHAPTER XXXI.

OF APPEALS.

404. No appeal shall lie from any judgment or order of a Criminal Court except as provided for by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force.

Unless otherwise provided, no appeal to lie.

1099. No appeal :—Ordinarily no appeal lies, except as otherwise provided by this Code or by any other special law. In a case in which no appeal lies from an order, the proper course is to make an application for revision—Zahur v Md. Hasan, 1893 A.W.N 147. Although the law may not allow appeal in certain cases, the High Court in the exercise of the powers vested in it as a Court of Revision, may, in those cases and on very exceptional grounds, act as an Appellate Court—Q. E v. Sheikh Badrudin, 8 Bom 197. If an appeal is presented to the High Court in a case in which no appeal is allowed to the High Court, the case may be disposed of under its revisional powers, if the High Court finds that it is a proper case in which it may exercise its revisional jurisdiction. See Rongai, 9 Cal. 513.

1100. Appeal to Privy Council .—Unlike the Civil Procedure Code, the Code of Criminal Procedure contains no provision for appeal to the Privy Council. It is only in the power of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council exercising the prerogative right on behalf of the Crown to entertain appeals in matters of criminal jurisdiction—In re Joy Kissen Mookerjee, 1 W R 13 (P.C.)

An appeal to the Privy Council lies only under very special and exceptional circumstances. It is not in every case in which it could be shown that the Judge had misdirected the jury, that an appeal will be allowed—MacCrea, 15 All 310. Before granting the certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council, the High Court must be satisfied that there is a reasonable ground for thinking that grave and substantial injustice may have been done by reason of some departure from the principles of natural justice—In re Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 33 Bom 221, 10 Bom L R 973, 9 Cr L J. 226.

The power of the Judicial Committee to review proceedings of a criminal nature is undoubted. But there are reasons both constitutional and administrative which make it manifest that this power should not be lightly exercised. The overruling consideration on the topic has reference to justice itself—Channing Arnold v. Emp., 41 Cal. 1023 (P.C.), 18 C.W.N. 785 (800). The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council does not lightly interfere in criminal cases; but where justice had been gravely and injuriously miscarried, and the sentence pronounced against the appeal formed an invasion of his liberty and denial of his just rights as a citizen, their Lordships felt called upon to interfere, although the proceedings taken were unobjectionable in form—Louis Edouard Lanier v. King, 18 C.W.N. 98 (103) (P.C.), 15 Cr.L.J. 305, 26 M.L.J. 1. In the region of fact, the Judicial Committee will not interfere unless something gross amounting to a complete misdescription of the whole bearing of the evidence has occurred—Channing Arnold v. K. E., 41 Cal. 1023 (P.C.), 18 C.W.N. 785 (799).

The rule has been repeatedly laid down and invariably followed that His Majesty will not review or interfere with the course of criminal proceedings, unless it is shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process or by some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done—In re Dillet, (1887) 12 A.C. 459 (467), Abdul Rahman v. Emp., 5 Rang. 53 (P.C.), 6 Bur. L.J. 65, 29 Bom.L.R. 813, 31 C.W.N. 271, 52 M.L.J. 585, 25 A.L.J. 117, 28 Cr.L.J. 259; Clifford v. K. E., 40 Cal. 568 (P.C.), 18 C.W.N. 374 (378), Dal Sing v. K. E., 44 Cal. 876 (881) (P.C.). Their Lordships will not interfere on the mere ground of misdirection to jury, nor will they assume a miscarriage of justice to have resulted therefrom, without reference to the question whether that misdirection did or did not affect the jury's mind. The Judicial Committee is not a Court of criminal appeal. It is not guided by its own doubts of the accused's innocence or suspicion of his guilt. It will not interfere with the course of criminal law unless there has been such an interference with the elementary rights of the accused as has placed him outside the pale of regular law, or, within that pale, there has been a violation of the natural principles of justice so demonstratively manifest as to convince their Lordships, first, that the result arrived at was opposite to the result which their Lordships would themselves have reached, and secondly, that the same opposite result would have been reached by the local tribunal also if the alleged defect or misdirection had been avoided—Channing Arnold, supra. Where injustice of a serious character has occurred owing to the admission of a whole body of inadmissible evidence, their Lordships had to interpose—Pillai v. K. E., 36 Mad. 501 (P.C.), 17 C.W.N. 1110. The Sovereign in Council interferes only when it is shown that injustice of a serious and substantial character has occurred. A mere mistake on the part of the Court below, as for example, in the admission of improper evidence, will not suffice, if it has not led to injustice of a grave character. Nor do the Judicial Committee advise interference merely because they themselves would have taken a different view of the evidence admitted. Such questions are, as a general rule, treated as being for the final decision of the Courts below. Error in procedure may be of a character so grave as to warrant the interference of the Sovereign. Such error may, for example, deprive a man of a constitutional or statutory right to be tried by a jury or by some particular tribunal. Or it may have been carried to such an extent as to cause the outcome of the proceedings to be contrary to fundamental principles which justice requires to be observed. But where the error consists only in the fact that evidence has been improperly admitted, which was not essential to a result which might have been come to wholly independently of it, the case is different. The dominant question is the broad one, whether substantial justice has been done, and if substantial justice has been done it is contrary to the general practice of the Board to advise the Sovereign to interfere with the result—Dal Singh v. K.-E., 44 Cal. 876 (882, 889) (P.C.), 15 A.L.J. 475, 19 Bom L.R. 510, 21 C.W.N. 818, 33 M.L.J. 555, 18 Cr.L.J. 471. The extreme case in which the Judicial Committee would advise His Majesty to interpose is this, that it must be established demonstratively that justice itself in its very foundation has been subverted, and that it is therefore a matter of general Imperial concern that by way of an appeal to the King it be then restored to its rightful position—Channing Arnold, 41 Cal. 1023 (P.C.), 18 C.W.N. 785 (803).

Period of limitation for appeal:—See Arts 150, 150A, 154, 155 and 157 of the Indian Limitation Act IX of 1908

405. Any person whose application under section 89 for the delivery of property or the proceeds of the sale thereof has been rejected by any Court, may appeal to the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the sentences of the former Court.

'Court to which appeals ordinarily lie' means Court to which appeals lie in the majority of cases, even though in a particular instance, the appeal may lie to another Court—In re Anant Ram, 11 Bom 438

406. Any person who has been ordered under section 118 to give security for keeping the peace or for good behaviour may appeal against such order—

(a) If made by a Presidency Magistrate, to the High Court;

(b) If made by any other Magistrate, to the Court of Session :

Provided that the Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, direct that in any district specified in the notification, appeals from such orders made by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate or a Presidency Magistrate shall lie to the District Magistrate and not to the Court of Session :

Provided further, that nothing in this section shall apply to persons the proceedings against whom are laid before a Sessions Judge in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (2) or sub-section (3A) of section 123.

1101. Change.—This section has been redrafted by section 109 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The old section stood thus :—

“406 Any person ordered by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate or a Presidency Magistrate to give security for good behaviour under section 118 may appeal to the District Magistrate.”

The main changes introduced are :—(1) Under the old section an appeal was allowed only in a good behaviour case, no appeal lay from an order directing security to keep the peace—In re Chet Ram, 27 All. 623; Har Datt v Emp., 14 A.L.J. 268, 17 Cr.L.J. 163, Baranasi v. Partab, 11 A.L.J. 16, 35 All. 103, Suleman, 11 Bom.L.R. 740, 10 Cr.L.J. 375, 3 I.C. 774, Shamrao v Emp., 19 N.L.R. 160, 25 Cr.L.J. 67, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 60. These cases are now over-ruled, and an appeal is now allowed from such order.

(2) Under the old law there was no appeal against an order of a District Magistrate or Presidency Magistrate directing security—Phullu, 1898 A.W.N. 127; under the present law, an appeal lies from the order of any Magistrate.

(3) Under the old law, the appeal lay to the District Magistrate; under the present law, it will ordinarily lie to the Court of Session, and in the case of orders by a Presidency Magistrate, to the High Court. The reason of this amendment has been thus stated “All cases in the district relating to the breach of the peace and good behaviour are cases in which the District Magistrate is interested officially, and it is only fair that any order passed by a Magistrate should be revisable on appeal by an independent tribunal such as the Sessions Judge”—Legislative Assembly Debates, 8th February 1923, pp. 2063, 2064

1102. Scope.—This section applies only to an order requiring security under sec. 118, an order directing security to keep the peace under sec. 106 is not appealable—Rowtha v Muttusamy, 2 Weir 460

Clause (b) —Under the old law, an appeal from an order passed by a Magistrate (other than the District Magistrate) lay to the Court of the District Magistrate and not to the Court of Session—Mahendra v K. E., 48 Cal. 874, 25 C.W.N. 383, 23 Cr.L.J. 229, Mahomed Shah, 1 S.L.R. 98. Even an appeal from the order of an Additional District Magistrate lay to the District Magistrate and not to the Sessions Judge—Mahendra, 48 Cal. 874. Under the present law, the appeal will ordinarily lie to the Sessions Court; only under a special notification under the first proviso, the appeal will lie to the District Magistrate.

Second proviso :—This proviso expressly lays down that the moment a reference is made to the Court of Session under sec. 123, it operates as a bar to an appeal. The reason is two-fold. first, since the Sessions Judge is seized of the case on the reference, any appeal to him is unnecessary; secondly, if an appeal is allowed to the Court of the District Magistrate under the first proviso, there may be two different decisions, one by the District Magistrate on appeal, and another by the Sessions Judge on the reference. The principle of this proviso was also recognised under the old law, see Qamar Din v. Emp., 23 Cr.L.J. 454 (Lah.)

Where the order of a Sub-divisional Magistrate under sec. 123 is confirmed by the Sessions Judge, the order passed by the Sessions Court becomes the operative order, and no appeal lies therefrom to the District Magistrate as it were from the order of the Sub-divisional Magistrate—Shwe Gyan, L.B.R. (1893-1900) 381. When a reference has been made to the Sessions Judge under sec. 123 and disposed of, no appeal lies to the District Magistrate—Crown v. Ida, 1900 P.R. 15; nor even to the High Court—Chand Khan, 9 Cal. 878.

406A. Any person aggrieved by an order refusing to accept or rejecting a surety under Section 122 may appeal against such order—

Appeal from order refusing to accept or rejecting a surety.

- (a) if made by a Presidency Magistrate, to the High Court;
- (b) if made by the District Magistrate, to the Court of Session; or
- (c) if made by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate, to the District Magistrate.

This section has been added by section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. "We think that there should be a general right of appeal against the rejection of a surety, and we have provided for it in section 406A"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

407. (1) Any person convicted on a trial held by any Magistrate of the second or third class, or any person sentenced under section 349, or in respect of whom an order has been made or a sentence has been passed under section 380, by a Sub-divisional Magistrate of the second class, may appeal to the District Magistrate.

Appeal from sentence of Magistrate of the second or third class.

(2) The District Magistrate may direct that any appeal under this section, or any class of such appeals, shall be heard by any Magistrate of the first class subordinate to him and empowered by the Local Government to hear such appeals, and thereupon such appeal or class of appeals may be presented to such Subordinate Magistrate, or, if already presented to the District Magistrate, may be transferred to such Subordinate Magistrate. The District Magistrate may withdraw from such Magistrate any appeal or class of appeals so presented or transferred.

Change :—The italicised words have been added by section 111 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. A similar amendment is made in section 408 also.

1103. 'Convicted on a trial'.—Since the word 'offence' as defined by section 4 includes an act in respect of which a complaint may be made under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act, a person against whom an order under section 22 of that Act is made is a person 'convicted on a trial' within the meaning of this section, and an appeal against such conviction by a second or third class Magistrate lies under this section—Ponnuswami 29 Mad. 517; see also Rodriks v. Papa Dada, 46 Bom. 58.

Second or Third Class Magistrate.—If a second class Magistrate, after the hearing of the case is complete, is invested with first class powers and he convicts the accused in the latter capacity, he will be deemed to have held the trial as a second class Magistrate, and the appeal against his judgment in this trial will lie to the District Magistrate, and not to the Sessions Judge—Emp. v. Nga Paw, 4 L B R 239, 8 Cr L J 48 (49). The wording of this section ("trial held") shows that it is not the conviction by a second class Magistrate but the holding of trial by such Magistrate that determines the forum of the appeal—Sheobhanjan, infra. But where a Magistrate begins a trial as a second class Magistrate, but before the hearing of the case is complete (e g before the examination and cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses is finished, or before a charge is framed), he is invested with first class powers, i.e., where part of the trial is held by him as a second class Magistrate and part as a first class Magistrate, the proper tribunal for hearing the appeal from his conviction is the Sessions Judge and not the District Magistrate—Sheobhanjan v. Emp., 6 P.L.T 554, 26 Cr L J 914 (915), Babu Ram v. Crown, 8 Lah 203, 28 Cr L J 781 (782), Durga Das, 28 Cr L J 50 (51) (Lah); Emp v. Maganlal, 29 Bom L R. 482, 28 Cr L J 474; Venkatareddi v. Ramayya, 51 Mad 257, 29 Cr L J. 71.

An appeal from a Bench of Magistrates invested with 2nd or 3rd class powers will lie under this section to the District Magistrate—Q. E. v.

Narayanamsami, 9 Mad. 36 But if a Bench when sitting together is invested with first class powers, though consisting of second or third class Magistrates, an appeal from such Bench will not lie to the District Magistrate but to the Sessions Judge—Havaldar v. Jagu Mian, 9 Cal. 96.

'Sentenced under sec. 349':—Sec. 349 prescribes the procedure to be adopted when a Magistrate cannot pass adequate sentence. Under that section, a 2nd or 3rd class Magistrate can only transfer such case to the Subdivisional Magistrate.

1104. Sub-sec. (2) :—Transfer by District Magistrate—The District Magistrate may delegate his work of hearing appeals, but not any revisional work. Where a District Magistrate directed an Assistant Collector under him to perform all "routine work of the Collector's office including criminal, appellate and revisional work," it was held that as regards revisional work, such a delegation was ultra vires, because this section does not refer to work of that kind; but as regards appellate work, the delegation is valid—Bai Harku v. Sitaram, 2 Bom. L.R. 536.

An Additional District Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate for the purposes of this sub-section, and the District Magistrate may transfer an appeal to the Additional District Magistrate. See sec. 10 (3).

The Court to which an appeal is transferred for disposal, and on which the responsibility for its correct disposal rests, is not bound by any opinion as to the necessity for taking further evidence formed by the Court from which the appeal was transferred and which is no longer responsible for the decision of the appeal—In re Alagu Ambalam, 31 Mad. 277, 18 M.L.J. 89, 7 Cr.L.J. 329.

Even though a District Magistrate has transferred the appeal to a Sub-divisional Magistrate, the District Magistrate has jurisdiction to withdraw the appeal to his own file from the file of a Sub-divisional Magistrate, by whom it has been heard in part. Where such Sub-Divisional Magistrate had issued summons for the examination of certain witnesses as Court witnesses, it is not incumbent on the District Magistrate, on the withdrawal of the case to his own file, to examine those witnesses, as he is not bound by any opinion of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate—In re Alagu Ambalam, supra

408. Any person convicted on a trial held by an Assistant Sessions Judge, a District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the first class, or any person sentenced under section 349, or in respect of whom an order has been made or a sentence has been passed under section 380, by a Magistrate of the first class, may appeal to the Court of Session :

(a) * * *

Appeal from sentence of Assistant Sessions Judge or Magistrate of the first class.

- (b) when in any case an Assistant Sessions Judge or a Magistrate specially empowered under section 30 passes any sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding four years, or any sentence of transportation, the appeal of all or any of the accused convicted at such trial shall lie to the High Court;
- (c) when any person is convicted by a Magistrate of an offence under section 124A of the Indian Penal Code, the appeal shall lie to the High Court.

Change :—The italicised words have been added by section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. Clause (a) which referred to European British Subjects has been omitted by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923

1105. 'Convicted'—A person who is convicted but on whom no sentence is passed, the person being released on probation under section 562, is said to be 'convicted' within the meaning of this section and can appeal—Emp. v. Monohar, 1904 P.R. 24, 1 Cr.L.J. 1098, Emp. v. Madhav, 28 Bom. L.R. 671, 27 Cr.L.J. 873, Hayat v. Crown, 1917 P.R. 20, 18 Cr.L.J. 401; Bahadur v. Ismail, 52 Cal. 463, 29 C.W.N. 151. If a Magistrate of the first class convicts a person and passes an order under sec 562 in a summary trial, section 414 will not apply but the case will be governed by this section, and an appeal will lie to the Sessions Judge—Emp. v. Hira Lal, 46 All 828 (830), 22 A.L.J. 751, 25 Cr.L.J. 1244. An Ordinance (e.g. Ordinance III of 1914) is a law, and an infringement of its provisions is an offence. A person convicted of such offence by a District Magistrate may appeal to the Sessions Judge, and the latter has jurisdiction to hear the appeal—Sher Singh v. Emp., 1916 P.R. 10, 17 Cr.L.J. 225 (226). A person who is directed by a 1st class Magistrate to pay compensation under sec 22 of the Cattle Trespass Act can be said to be convicted of an offence, and the appeal from his conviction is governed by this section—Rodricks v. Papa Dada, 46 Bom. 58, 23 Bom. L.R. 836, 22 Cr.L.J. 624.

"Trial held"—If a trial is commenced by a second class Magistrate, but during the course of the trial and before the hearing is complete, he is invested with first class powers, the trial is said to be held by a first class Magistrate, and the appeal lies to the Sessions Judge. See Sheobhanjan Singh, 6 P.L.T. 554 and other cases cited in Note 1103 under sec. 407.

Sentence under section 349—When a case is referred to a District Magistrate under section 349, the fact that he is also invested with special powers under section 30 will not empower him to pass a sentence of years' imprisonment; such a sentence is ultra vires having regard to the last clause of section 349. The appeal in such a case will lie to the Court of Session, and not to the High Court under proviso (b)—Nga Pya v. K. E., 4 L.B.R. 53, 6 Cr.L.J. 289.

Sentence under section 380:—Where proceedings were submitted under section 380 by a second class Magistrate to a first class Magistrate, in order that the accused might be dealt with under section 562, and the latter convicted and sentenced the accused, and the question arose under the old law as to whether an appeal lay to the Sessions Judge or to the District Magistrate, it was held that the sentence passed by the first class Magistrate under section 380 in a case submitted to him was unquestionably a sentence passed by such Magistrate, and the appeal lay to the Court of Session—Emp. v. Bhimappa, 17 Bom. L.R. 895, 16 Cr.L.J. 733, 31 I.C. 338. This is now expressly laid down in the present section as amended.

1106. Court of Session:—Where a Magistrate was authorised to try all offences throughout the whole District, and there were two Sessions Divisions in the District, an appeal from a sentence of the Magistrate will lie to the Sessions Division within whose jurisdiction the Headquarters of the Magistrate were situate, irrespective of the place where the offence was committed—Valia Ambu v. Emp., 30 Mad. 136, Hiralal v. Crown, 1918 P.R. 7, 19 Cr.L.J. 310.

Appeal heard without jurisdiction.—Where an accused person was acquitted by a Sessions Judge in an appeal which he had no jurisdiction to hear, he may be re-arrested even after the expiration of the period to which he was originally sentenced to be imprisoned, and may be made to undergo the remaining portion of the sentence—Gopala Shiru, Ratnial 17 (18).

1107. Proviso (b):—The reason for this proviso obviously is that when a long term of imprisonment has to be undergone, the question whether the offence is proved should be tried in appeal by a Court of a higher grade than it would be tried by if the sentence were less—Nga Pya, 4 L.B.R. 53, 6 Cr.L.J. 289. The sentence of imprisonment exceeding four years in this proviso must be taken to mean the substantive sentence of imprisonment apart from any sentence of imprisonment in default of fine. Therefore an appeal from a sentence awarding 4 years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100, and in default of fine, to six months' rigorous imprisonment, lies to the Court of Session and not to the High Court—Khuda Bakhsh v. Crown, 1918 P.R. 19, 19 Cr.L.J. 742; Nga Tun Tha, 1 L.B.R. 57.

An appeal from the conviction and sentence of less than four years' imprisonment by an Assistant Judge lies to the Sessions Judge, and not to the High Court simply because by the time the appeal is filed the Assistant Sessions Judge has been promoted to the position of Offg. Sessions Judge (and is therefore incompetent to hear the appeal against his own order). The proper procedure in such a case would be to file the appeal before the Offg. Sessions Judge who on receipt of the appeal would either send it to the High Court or would postpone its hearing till the return of the permanent incumbent—Garib Lal v. Crown, 3 P.L.J. 192, 19 Cr.L.J. 442.

In calculating the term of 4 years under this proviso, the Court must not take into account the length of time during which the accused was under trial. The Court is only concerned with the actual substantive sentence imposed—Jagadish, 10 N.L.J. 135, 28 Cr.L.J. 672.

1108. Concurrent sentences:—Under section 35 (3), concurrent sentences cannot be aggregated together for the purpose of raising the status of the forum of appeal—Gurusahay v. Emp., 3 P.L.J. 138; Emp v Tulsı Ram, 35 All 154, 11 A.L.J. 111. Therefore, where an Assistant Session Judge or a Magistrate specially empowered under sec 30 passes several sentences of imprisonment upon an accused, each of which is for a term of four years or under, and the sentences are ordered to run concurrently, the appeal from the conviction and sentences lies to the Sessions Court and not to the High Court—Lakshmi v K. E., 23 C.L.J. 595, Gurusahay v Emp., 3 P.L.J. 138, Sher Muhammad v Crown, 1901 P.R. 25, Jagadish v. K. E., 10 N.L.J. 135, 28 Cr.L.J. 672

Magistrate acting under section 30.—Under this proviso, where a person is convicted by a Magistrate invested with enhanced powers under section 30, and sentenced to imprisonment for more than four years, an appeal lies to the High Court and not to the Court of Session—Ahmad Khan v. Crown, 1916 P.R. 5, 17 Cr.L.J. 299

If the appeal is presented to the Sessions Judge instead of to the High Court, and the Sessions Judge disposes of the appeal, the proceedings before the Sessions Judge are void under sec. 530 (r)—In re Abdulla, 2 Rang 396 (387), 26 Cr.L.J. 293

1109. 'All or any of the accused':—"This amendment provides that in a trial in which more than one person are accused, and in which by reason of the sentences passed an appeal lies in the case of some persons to the Sessions Judge and of others to the High Court, the appeal of all shall lie to the latter tribunal"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). If several persons are tried jointly, and the Assistant Sessions Judge passes a sentence of over four years' imprisonment on some of the accused, and a sentence of less than four years on the others, the appeal by the latter will also lie to the High Court and not to the Court of Session—Palani v Emp., 17 M.L.J. 248, 5 Cr.L.J. 496, Richhe v Emp., 13 A.L.J. 272, 16 Cr.L.J. 353, Q. E. v. Jaisingh, 1900 P.R. 12, Debi Din v K. E., 24 A.L.J. 151, 27 Cr.L.J. 175 (The contrary view held in Nittoor Moideen, 43 M.L.J. 561 is hereby overruled). Even if in such a case, the persons over whom sentences of over four years were passed did not appeal to the High Court, the appeal of the other persons over whom sentences of less than four years were passed would lie to the High Court and not to the Court of Session—Har Dayal v Emp., 37 All 471, 13 A.L.J. 719, 16 Cr.L.J. 606; Ahmad Khan v Emp. 1916 P.R. 5

Proviso (c) —Where the accused was convicted by a District Magistrate under section 124A I. P. C., and sentenced to two years' imprisonment, and was in the same trial convicted of an offence under section 14

1. P. C. and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment, the two sentences must be aggregated and considered as one sentence under section 35 (3) for the purposes of appeal, and the appeal against the single sentence will lie to the High Court. It is not necessary that the prisoner will file an appeal against the conviction under section 124A to the High Court, and another appeal against the conviction under section 153A to the Court of Session—Joy Chandra v. Emp., 38 Cal. 214 (219).

409. An appeal to the Court of Session or Sessions Judge shall be heard by the Sessions Judge or by an Additional Sessions Judge:

Appeals to Court of Session how heard.

Provided that an Additional Sessions Judge shall hear only such appeals as the Local Government may, by general or special order, direct or as the Sessions Judge of the division may make over to him.

Change :—The proviso has been added by section 113 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

1110. Under this section, the Sessions Judge can transfer an appeal preferred to him to the Additional Sessions Judge; he cannot transfer it to the Assistant Sessions Judge for disposal. Even section 193 (2) does not confer on him such powers, because the word 'case' under that section does not include an appeal—Abdul Razzak, 37 All. 286, 16 Cr.L.J. 316.

410. Any person convicted on a trial held by a Sessions Judge, or an Additional Sessions Judge, may appeal to the High Court.

Appeal from sentence of Court of Session.

1110A. If a Sessions Judge imposes a fine for intentional insult to him in Court, in a summary way, the accused is said to be 'convicted on a trial,' and may appeal under this section to the High Court—In re Chappu Menon, 4 M.H.C.R. 146.

If a Sessions Judge on appeal has taken additional evidence under sec. 428, and has dismissed the appeal, the prisoner has no further right of appeal to the High Court—Ishahak, 27 Cal. 372.

'May appeal.'—This section confers a right of appeal to the High Court to a person convicted on a trial held by the Sessions Judge or an Additional Sessions Judge. The word 'may' does not mean that it is at the option of the High Court to entertain or not appeals under this section—Pohpi, 13 All. 171 (178).

411. Any person convicted on a trial held by a Presidency Magistrate may appeal to the High Court, if the Magistrate has sentenced him to imprisonment for a term exceeding six months or to fine exceeding two hundred rupees.

Appeal from sentence of Presidency Magistrate.

1111. 'Imprisonment.'—The word 'imprisonment' means a substantive sentence of imprisonment, and does not include an award of imprisonment in default of payment of fine, the operation of which is contingent only on the fine not being paid. Therefore, where the Presidency Magistrate inflicted a sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200, and in default of payment, three months' simple imprisonment, the two sentences of imprisonment could not be combined to give the prisoner a right of appeal—In re Jotharam, 2 Mad. 30; Schein v. Q. E., 16 Cal. 799, Q. E. v. Hari, 20 Bom. 145.

412. Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, where an accused person has pleaded guilty and has been convicted by a Court of Session or any Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class on such plea, there shall be no appeal except as to the extent or legality of the sentence.

No appeal in certain cases when accused pleads guilty.

1112. Conviction on his own plea:—The principle of this section is that the accused in pleading guilty to the charge is considered to have waived his right to question the legality of the conviction; he can only question the extent or legality of the sentence—Emp v. Akub Ali, 31 C.L.J. 122; Emp v. Jafar, 5 Bom. 85. When a person has been convicted on his own plea by a Presidency Magistrate, no appeal shall lie to the High Court, except as to the extent or legality of the sentence, although he is sentenced for a term exceeding six months or to fine exceeding Rs. 200—Jafar, 5 Bom 85. Where a charge has been framed against an accused person under section 221 (7) of this Code, and such person has pleaded guilty to the charge that he is a previous convict, the Appellate Court under section 412 is precluded from opening the question whether the accused is a previous convict or not—Emp. v. Kissan, 4 N.L.R. 163, 9 Cr L.J. 56.

A person who pleaded guilty to the charge and was convicted by a second class Magistrate, is not barred from contending in appeal that the conviction is illegal. Sec. 412 bars the appeal where the conviction was by a first class Magistrate—Chunilal v. Emp., 28 Bom L.R. 1023, 27 Cr.L.J. 1148.

If a person who has no right of appeal under this section, makes an appeal, and the Appellate Court hears the appeal, sets aside the conviction and acquits him, the order of acquittal is without jurisdiction and must be set aside by the High Court—Emp. v. Nga Lu Gale, 5 Rang 710, 29 Cr.L.J. 115 (116).

Extent and legality of the sentence:—Under this section, the right of appeal, when the accused has pleaded guilty, is limited to such matter as may be a special ground of complaint with respect to the sentence, (as distinguished from the conviction itself), whether on the ground that the sentence is beyond what the circumstances of the case required, or that the sentence is illegal or not authorized by law—Emp. v. Jafar, 5 Bom. 85. Although the Appellate Court may reject an appeal on the ground that the accused has pleaded guilty before the Lower Court, still the extent and legality of the sentence will have to be considered by the Appellate Court—Govind Raghu, Ratn Lal 954; and in order to consider the legality of the sentence the Appellate Court must satisfy itself that the plea of guilty was properly made after the nature of the offence was explained to and understood by the prisoner—Kalu Dosan, 22 Bom. 759.

But where no sentence was passed (e.g., where the accused was convicted upon his own plea of guilty, and was released under section 562 on his executing a bond) the right of appeal is absolutely barred—Hayata v Crown, 1917 P.R. 20, 18 Cr.L.J. 401.

413. Notwithstanding anything herein-

ed, there shall be no appeal by a convicted person in cases in which a Court of Session or the District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the first class passes a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month only or of fine not exceeding fifty rupees only or of whipping only.

413. Notwithstanding anything herein-

ed, there shall be no appeal by a convicted person in cases in which a Court of Session [] passes a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month only or in which a Court of Session or District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the first class passes a sentence of fine not exceeding rupees fifty only. * *

Explanation.—There is no appeal from a sentence of imprisonment passed by such Court or Magistrate in default of payment of fine when no substantive sentence of imprisonment has also been passed.

Change —This section has been amended by section 24 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1923. Under this section as now amended, a right of appeal is given against conviction by District Magistrates or Magistrates of the first class where they pass sentences of imprisonment even for a period of one month or less. Under the old law (section 416) only an European British subject could appeal against such sentence. "We consider that outside the presidency towns in the case of all persons, both European and Indian, there should be an appeal against any sentence of imprisonment passed by a Magistrate. This involves a substantial modification of the general law of the land and will to a certain extent increase the work of the Sessions Courts. Nevertheless we are of opinion on general grounds, and apart from the particular case of the European British subject, that an appeal should lie against any sentence. It is to be noted that short sentences of imprisonment should where possible be avoided, and the number of sentences of one month and under passed by District Magistrates and first class Magistrates should not, as far as we can judge, be very large. In the case of a sentence passed in a trial by a Court of Session, we would allow no appeal in respect of a sentence of one month or under"—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee, Para, 19.

This section also gives a right of appeal against a sentence of whipping.

1113. Sole sentence of imprisonment—Where the accused was sentenced to 14 days' imprisonment and to pay the cost of court-fees, the sentence is a sole sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month; and the order to pay the court-fees is no part of the sentence and is not a sentence of fine added to imprisonment, so as to make it appealable (sec. 415)—Madan v. Haran, 20 Cal 687; Q. E. v Khajabhoy, 16 Mad 423, Emp. v. Karuppanna, 29 Mad. 188; Para Munyan, 1 Weir 724. Contra—Thangavelu, 22 Mad. 153, Anonymous, 2 Weir 723, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 28.

Fine—Compensation awarded under section 22 of the Cattle Trespass Act is not a fine, and therefore an appeal lies from an order awarding compensation less than rupees fifty—Rodriks v. Papa Dada, 46 Bom. 58, 22 Cr.L.J. 624.

Aggregation of sentences:—Where a person is charged with two separate offences in one trial, the amount of the whole punishment awarded for the two offences must be regarded as one sentence for the purpose of determining whether an appeal lies or not—Haradhan, 3 C.L.R. 511, Reg. v Rama, 1 Bom. 223. See section 415.

Passing appealable sentence at the request of accused—When a Magistrate at first passed a non-appealable sentence, and shortly afterwards at the request of the accused enhanced the sentence to make it appealable, and on appeal the Sessions Judge struck out the added sentence as illegal, and declined to hear the appeal on the ground that the sentence as originally passed was not appealable, it was held that as the Magistrate had passed an appealable sentence, an appeal lay under this section, whether that sentence was passed legally or illegally, and that the Sessions Judge was bound to hear the appeal on the merits—Keshavlal, 35 Bom. 418, 12 Cr.L.J. 431.

tried summarily in which a Magistrate empowered to act under section 260 passes a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding three months only, or of fine not exceeding two hundred rupees only, or of whipping only.

tried summarily in which a Magistrate empowered to act under section 260 passes a sentence * * * of fine not exceeding two hundred rupees only. * * *

This section has been amended by section 25 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. By this amendment, certain sentences passed on summary convictions which were originally non-appealable (viz. imprisonment for three months or less, or whipping) are now made appealable. Under the old law, only European British subjects could appeal from such sentences.

If a Magistrate of the first class passes an order under sec. 562 in a summary trial, this section does not apply, because an order under sec. 562 is not a sentence of imprisonment or fine, but section 408 will govern the case and an appeal will lie to the Court of Session—Emp v Hira Lal, 46 All. 828 (829), 22 A.L.J. 751, 25 Cr.L.J. 1244.

415. An appeal may be brought against any sentence referred to in section 413 or section 414 by which any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned are combined, but no sentence which would not otherwise be liable to appeal shall be appealable merely on the ground that the person convicted is ordered to find security to keep the peace.

Explanation.—A sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine is not a sentence by which two or more punishments are combined within the meaning of this section.

1114. Combination of sentences—Where the accused was sentenced to one day's imprisonment and a fine of fifty rupees, the fact that the accused was not actually sent to jail does not prevent the combination, the passing of the sentence of imprisonment is sufficient, and the two sentences of imprisonment and fine may be combined for the purposes of appeal—Alam, 33 All. 510, 12 Cr.L.J. 389.

Security to keep the peace :—The imprisonment to be undergone in default of furnishing security to keep the peace is not a part of a substantive sentence. If the substantive sentence is not in itself appealable, it does not become so, merely because the person convicted has been ordered to find security to keep the peace—Maghu v. K. E., 7 O.C. 338, 1 Cr.L.J. 1054.

The words "security to keep the peace" refer only to those cases where the accused is ordered to find security to keep the peace under this Code, and not where he is ordered to do so under any local enactment. Thus, where the accused was sentenced in a summary trial to a non-appealable term of imprisonment, and further ordered under sec. 31A of the Rangoon Police Act to give security, it was held that this section did not apply, and the sentence passed was appealable—Kathan v. K. E., 4 L.B.R. 359.

Again, this section applies where the accused is ordered to give security to keep the peace, and not where he is required to furnish security for good behaviour—Kathan v. K. E., 4 L.B.R. 359.

415A. Notwithstanding anything contained in this Chapter, when more persons than one are convicted in one trial, and an appealable judgment or order has been passed in respect of any of such persons, all or any of the persons convicted at such trial have a right of appeal.

Special right of appeal in certain cases.

This section has been added by sec. 114 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923, to remove the conflict of opinion which existed under the old law, as will be evident from the undernoted cases 1115. Where several persons are tried and convicted at one trial, some of whom are sentenced to appealable sentences while the rest are awarded non-appealable sentences, all of them will be able to appeal, the fact that non-appealable sentences are passed on some of them does not, by virtue of sec. 413, take away their right of appeal. Sec. 413 applies to the case where only a non-appealable sentence is passed and not where non-appealable as well as appealable sentences are pronounced—Crown v. Naurati, 1915 P.R. 30, Ba Thaw v. K. E., 4 L.B.R. 354, 9 Cr.L.J. 356; Jaisukh v. Crown, 1916 P.R. 16, Sheopal v. K. E., 15 O.C. 386, 14 Cr.L.J. 170; Lal Singh v. Emp., 38 All. 395, Biswanath v. Emp., 22 Cr.L.J. 297 (Pat). Section 413 curtails the right of appeal only in cases in which there is no sentence upon any convicted person above the limit prescribed by sec. 413; but if any of the convicted persons in the same case has received any punishment above that limit, the right of appeal of any other person receiving a sentence below that limit is not at all curtailed, but he along with the one who received a higher punishment has the right uncontrolled and uncurtailed—Pheku v. K. E., 4 P.L.J. 435, 20 Cr.L.J. 545 (per Jwala Prasad J.). This view has been adopted in the present section.

The contrary view was taken in In re Urama, 15 Cr.L.J. 371, 16 M.L.T. 33; Venkatakrishnaya, 40 Mad. 591; Pheku v. K. E., 4 P.L.J. 435 (per Atkinson J.); Husain Khan, 39 All. 293; Crown v. Unar, 18 Cr.L.J. 72, 10 S.L.R. 156; In re Annasami, 7 L.W. 571, Jhagru, 24 Cr.L.J. 679 (All.); in these cases it was held that the language of section 413 was imperative and took away the right of appeal under such circumstances, and the accused against whom non-appealable sentences were passed could not acquire the right by reason of the fact that they were tried jointly with some other persons who received appealable sentences—Annasami, 7 L.W. 571, 19 Cr.L.J. 623. This view has not been accepted by the Legislature and is overruled by the present section.

Where a person has been ordered to be released on probation of good conduct under sec. 562 (which order is appealable under sec. 408) and other persons have been awarded non-appealable sentences, the latter persons also will be entitled to appeal, by operation of this section—Bahadur v. Ismail, 52 Cal. 463, 29 C.W.N. 151, 26 Cr.L.J. 455. Where more persons than one are jointly convicted in one trial by the High Court criminal sessions, and leave to appeal is granted to one of them under sec. 449 (1) on the ground of his being an European British Subject, such leave should also be granted to the other accused (even if they are not European British Subjects) in view of the provisions of sec. 415A—Gallagher v. Emp., 54 Cal. 52, 28 Cr.L.J. 481.

416. [Repealed].

This section, which has been repealed by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923 stood as follows:—

"416. Nothing in sections 413 and 414 applies to appeals from sentences passed under Chapter XXXIII on European British subjects."

That is, it laid down that in respect of those sentences which were non-appealable in the case of Indian subjects, an European British subject had a right of appeal. This distinction is now abolished and both European and Indian subjects are placed on the same footing, and given equal rights of appeal.

417. The Local Government may direct the Public Prosecutor to present an appeal to the High Court from an original or appellate order of acquittal passed by any Court other than a High Court.

Appeal on behalf of Government in case of acquittal.

If one of two accused is acquitted, and no appeal is preferred by the Government against his acquittal, he must be deemed to be innocent of the charge made against him, and the Sessions Judge (in an appeal by the other accused against his conviction) ought not to pass any remarks impugning the correctness of the acquittal. If the Sessions Judge passes any such remarks, the High Court will order those remarks to be expunged from the record—Abdul Aziz v. Emp., 25 Cr.L.J. 1245 (Lah.)

1116. Only Government can appeal:—The High Court has no authority to entertain an appeal under this section except upon an appeal by the Local Government—Okhoy v. Madhoo, 19 W.R. 55; A David, 6 C.L.R. 245; Thandavan v. Peranna, 14 Mad. 363. The intention of the Legislature is that there should be no interference by the High Court with acquittal, even though improper, except upon a formal appeal by the Local Government—Emp. v. Miyaji, 3 Bom. 150. The law, by limiting the right of appeal against judgments of acquittal to the Local Government, prevents personal vindictiveness from seeking to call in question judgments of acquittal by way of appeal, and evidently intends that such interference shall take place only in those cases where there has been a miscarriage of justice so grave as would induce the Local Government to move in the matter—Dy Leg. Rem v Karuna, 22 Cal. 164

Even the District Magistrate is not competent to refer the case to the High Court. See Note 1197 under sec 438 Where the prisoners convicted by a Magistrate are acquitted on appeal by the Sessions Judge, it is not competent for the District Magistrate to transmit the proceeding to the High Court to have the Sessions Judge's order of acquittal set aside—In re A David, 6 C L R 245.

The power of appeal under this section should be sparingly used by the Government, but the discretion to exercise that power is not subject to the control of the High Court—Emp v Sakharani, 21 Bom L R 1054, Emp. v. Moti, 26 Bom L R 113, 25 Cr L J 786, Crown v Arjan, 1917 P.R. 43, 19 Cr L J. 85, 43 I C 245

As to the High Court's power of revising an order of acquittal, either at the instance of the Local Government, or at the instance of a private complainant, see Notes 1204 and 1219 under sec. 439.

1117. Public Prosecutor —Only the Public Prosecutor can file an appeal under this section. The Local Government cannot direct any other person to appeal. The Legal Remembrancer is a Public Prosecutor within the meaning of this section—Legal Remembrancer v. Tularam, 23 C.W.N. 96, 46 Cal. 544 But the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal cannot be deemed to be the Public Prosecutor for the province of Behar, from the mere fact that he has been directed by a letter of the Government of Behar to file an appeal in the Calcutta High Court under section 417 against an order of acquittal passed in a Behar case, when the letter did not specially appoint him as such, and especially when there is already a Public Prosecutor for the province of Behar And the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal therefore cannot file the appeal—Dy Leg Rem. v Gaya Prosad, 41 Cal 425

A private prosecutor can neither present an appeal under this section nor apply in revision—Thandavan v Perianna, 14 Mad 363, In re Poona Churn, 7 Cal. 447.

1118. High Court —An appeal will lie under this section only to the High Court Where a District Magistrate entertained an appeal from an order of acquittal passed by the subordinate Magistrate, it was held that the District Magistrate acted without jurisdiction—Rangasami, 7 Mad 213, Sami Ayya, 26 Mad. 478 So also, a Sessions Judge has no right to entertain an appeal against an order of acquittal—Bajjanath v. Gouri Kant, 20 Cal 633; Baroda, 2 C.W.N. cclvi 1119. Order of acquittal :—The withdrawal of a complaint by a complainant operates as an order of acquittal—Luchi, 19 W.R. 55. A judgment passed by the Sessions Judge, following the verdict of the jury acquitting the accused, is a judgment of acquittal for the purpose of appeal by the Local Government—Emp v. Judoonath, 2 Cal. 273. The words 'appellate order of acquittal' mean and include all judgments of an Appellate Court by which a conviction is set aside—Gokool, 24 W.R. 41.

The 'acquittal' contemplated by this section need not be acquittal upon all the charges. Where in a case tried by jury, an accused charged with murder was acquitted of that charge but was convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, this section would apply and an appeal by the Local Government would lie in respect of the charge of murder, even though the judgment of the Sessions Judge was not a judgment of absolute acquittal—Emp. v. Judoonath, 2 Cal. 273, Sitaram v. Emp., 12 O.L.J. 421, 2 O W N 550, 26 Cr.L.J. 1364.

The acquittal in this section means the particular acquittal complained of by the Government. Where the accused is charged under secs 211 and 500 I P. C. and acquitted of both the offences, but the Government preferred an appeal against the acquittal under sec. 500 I P. Code, the High Court cannot question the propriety of the acquittal under sec 211 I. P. C.—Q. E. v. Karigowda, 19 Bom. 51.

An order of a Sessions Judge passed on appeal under sec 406 discharging an accused who was ordered by a Magistrate under sec. 118 to furnish security for good behaviour, cannot be considered to be an original or an appellate order of acquittal within the meaning of sec. 417, so as to give the Local Government a right of appeal to the High Court—Emp. v. Samai Deen, 1 Luck. 231, 13 O L J 276, 27 Cr.L.J. 626.

Interlocutory orders .—This section allows an appeal only from an order of acquittal but not from any interlocutory order (e.g. an order refusing to amend the charges) which he has passed in a case which has ended in an acquittal. Any objection to such an interlocutory order cannot be included in the grounds of appeal against the order of acquittal. An order refusing to add or amend the charges is not an "order of acquittal", it is not even an order which can be said to form the basis of the order of acquittal or a necessary condition of its tenability. It cannot be said that the acquittal was due to the circumstance that the amendment was not allowed. But an order excluding as irrelevant a body of evidence tendered for the Crown, which had led to an acquittal as a logical and inevitable consequence, stands on a different footing. In such a case the Government, on its appeal against the acquittal, can also take objection to the order excluding the evidence—Q. E. v. Vajiram, 16 Bom. 414 (428); followed in Emp v. Stewart, 21 S L R. 55, 27 Cr.L.J. 1217 (1228) (per Rupchand A.J.C.). In the latter case, Kincaid J.C. is of opinion (dissenting from 16 Bom. 414) that although an order refusing to add or alter charges is not appealable under section 417, still if such order is followed by an order of acquittal, the Local Government may appeal.

1120. When appeal will lie :—An appeal against acquittal is a special weapon which the Local Government judiciously reserves for exceptional occasions and which is used after most anxious consideration and in cases which are themselves of great public importance or in which a principle is involved. It cannot be expected that the Government will utilise it freely in cases which, though of importance to individual subjects, are of little or no general interest—Siban Rai v Bhagwat, 5 Pat 25 (32), 27 Cr L.J. 235. The High Court will not interfere merely because it might itself, sitting as a Court of original jurisdiction, have arrived at a different conclusion—Mangat, 1903 P R 11; Jawai, 19 Cr.L.J. 275, 44 I.C. 179, 1918 P L R. 70, Bishen Singh, 1914 P L R. 125, 15 Cr L J 203 (207); Emp. v. Ram Karan, 26 P L R 295, 7 Lah L J 528, 26 Cr L J 1141, Robinson, 16 All 212, Gayadin, 4 All 148, Kunja Dusadh, 23 Cr.L.J. 410, 3 P.L.T. 396, but it must be shown, before an appeal can be accepted, that the judgment of the Lower Court was so clearly wrong or perverse or unreasonable that its maintenance would amount to a miscarriage of justice—Ghulam Muhammad, 1897 P R 10, Emp v Ram Karan, supra; Gayadin, 4 All. 148, Bishen Singh, supra, Q E v Robinson, 16 All. 212, Kunja Dusadh, 23 Cr L.J. 410, 3 P L T. 396, Emp v Sundardas, 26 Cr L.J. 1028 (Sind). In respect to pure questions of fact, the power of Government to appeal from an acquittal should be limited to those cases where through the incompetence, stupidity or perversity of a subordinate tribunal such unreasonable and distorted conclusions have been drawn from evidence as to produce a positive miscarriage of justice. Where the decision of the Subordinate Court is an honest and not an unreasonable one, of which the facts were susceptible, the High Court will not interfere—Q E. v. Robinson, 16 All 212. The interference of the High Court should be limited to those instances in which the Lower Court has so obstinately blundered and gone wrong as to produce a result mischievous at once to the administration of justice and to the interests of the public—Emp v Gayadin, 4 All 148. In a Punjab case, however, it has been held (dissenting from 4 All 148) that sec 417 appears to place the Local Government in no better or worse position in appealing from a conviction, and it would be legislating rather than interpreting the law, to weigh a Government-appeal with the necessity of showing that the Court below 'obstinately blundered' or 'has so gone wrong as to produce a result mischievous to the administration of justice and to the interests of the public'—Emp. v Ullam, 1885 P R 29. In some other Punjab cases it has been held (dissenting from the Allahabad ruling) that in order to justify interference with a judgment of acquittal on a question of fact, it is sufficient if the finding is clearly wrong on the evidence and unreasonable in the opinion of the Appellate Court, whether or not the unreasonableness amounts to perversity, stupidity or incompetence or whether the Court below can be said to have obstinately blundered in coming to it—K E v Chatter, 1904 P R 7, 1 Cr L J 781, 1904 P L R 97 Emp. v Bakhtawar, 28 P.L.R. 313, 28 Cr L J 556 (561). In an appeal by Government from acquittal, the accused starts with a double presumption in his favour. Firstly, there is the rule that it is for the prosecution to make out their case, and until they do so beyond all reasonable doubt the accused must be presumed to be innocent, and secondly, that the accused having succeeded in securing an acquittal from a Court, the superior Court will not interfere until the Crown show conclusively that the inference of guilt is irresistible—Ghulam Nabi, 6 Pat. 768, 29 Cr.L.J. 301 (305). Before the High Court will interfere with an acquittal, the culpability of the accused must be very clear and indubitable—Lachhman Das, 1918 P.W.R. 30, 19 Cr.L.J. 710

Where there has been an acquittal by a unanimous verdict of the jury accepted by the Sessions Judge, the mere fact that there has been a misdirection to the jury will not justify the reversal of the verdict, unless the misdirection has in fact occasioned a failure of justice—Shyam Sundar, 26 C.W.N. 558. The High Court will not accept an appeal against an acquittal merely because the trial in the Court below was illegal on account of misjoinder of charges; the Appellate Court will interfere only where it is satisfied that the order of acquittal is obviously erroneous or is one which should not be maintained owing to the trial Court having omitted to consider material evidence—Jagat Ram, 48 I.C. 167, 19 Cr.L.J. 987 (Pun.). Where no evidence whatsoever was produced against the accused owing to the neglect or omission of the Crown, and he was acquitted, the High Court would not accept an appeal against the acquittal and remand the case to the lower Court on the ground that there had not been a proper trial of the accused. Such a procedure would expose the accused to a further ordeal and expenses, and he ought not to be made to suffer because of the deficiencies of the prosecution in the conduct of the trial—Crown v Jaswant Rai, 5 Lah. 404. The High Court will not interfere unless the judgment of the Court below was wrong and perverse and without jurisdiction and based upon obvious errors in procedure; it will not interfere where the decision of the Magistrate even though wrong was based at the most on a doubtful weighing of facts and not on any irregularity or negligence or other matter going to the jurisdiction or the regularity of the trial—Dy. Legal Remembrancer v Amulya, 18 C.W.N. 666, 15 Cr.L.J. 160. Where the question involved in the case is not of any public interest, and the parties have a remedy in a Civil Court, no interference with the order of acquittal is necessary—Ganga Singh v Ramzan, 26 Cr.L.J. 337 (Lah.). Where the evidence is all oral and its credibility is a mere matter of opinion without involving other considerations, the opinion of the Court which heard the witnesses must be treated as almost conclusive and the High Court should not interfere—Chatter Singh, 1904 P.R. 7, 1 Cr.L.J. 781; Bishen Singh 1914 P.L.R. 125, 15 Cr.L.J. 203 (207); Emp v Samand, 22 Cr.L.J. 172 (Lah.). Before the High Court could interfere, it must be satisfied that the indications of mistake are obvious or the evidence is too strong to be rejected—Chatter Singh, supra; Bishen Singh, supra; Md Shaffi, 1918 P.R. 25, 19 Cr.L.J. 723; Palia v. Crown, 20 Cr.L.J. 188, 49 I.C. 604, 1919 P.W.R. 12, Emp v Samand, 22 Cr.L.J. 172 (Lah.), 59 I.C. 924. An appeal will lie under this section when there is an error of law on the part of the Lower Court—Timmal, 21 All. 122. Where the Session Judge has overlooked the material and crucial circumstance which goes to corroborate the evidence of a complice and has acquitted the accused, the High Court will entertain the appeal from acquittal, and determine one way or the other the guilt of the accused—Gobardhan, 9 All 528 Where the Lower Court has considered evidence from a wrong angle, and has come to an erroneous decision, appeal will lie, and the High Court has jurisdiction to convict the accused—Emp. v. Sunderdas, 21 S.L.R. 111, 26 Cr.L.J. 1028 (1029); Emp. Kadir Bux, 9 S.L.R. 17, 16 Cr.L.J. 604, 32 I.C. 137.

1121. Appeal from acquittal and appeal from conviction compared:—The Code makes no distinction between an appeal from an acquittal and one from a conviction. Any rule of Court which differentiates their position would be tantamount to an usurpation of legislative functions by the Court. If there is any difference in the respective positions of Government as appellant under sec. 417 and a convict appealing from the judgment convicting and sentencing him, it takes its rise from the principles of judicial construction and adjudication in criminal cases, with which the statute law has no concern. There are certain rules of adjudication and procedure which judges in India invariably follow. One of these is that every man is to be presumed innocent until his guilt is established, another that if there is a reasonable doubt, the accused must have the benefit of that doubt. An appellant from a judgment of conviction can always shake the support of these principles, if he can show that the facts of his case come within their purview. If he makes out that the essential evidence against him is not sufficiently reliable, as the lower Court thought, that all reasonable doubt as to his guilt is not removed thereby, he is at liberty to succeed on these principles. An appellant from a judgment of acquittal has, on the contrary, to work in the face of these principles and satisfy the Court that the accused can derive no benefit from them on the facts of the case under appeal. His task is thus naturally more difficult than that of the convict appellant. In all questions of fact, the Court of first instance, which has all the witnesses before itself, has a great advantage over the Court of appeal, which deals with the evidence second-hand; great regard is therefore paid to the opinion of the first Court on oral evidence, and a Court of appeal is ordinarily reluctant to differ from its opinion, unless for cogent grounds. In an appeal from a conviction regard is tempered somewhat by considerations of fairness to the accused in deciding the question of his guilt which the highest principles of criminal law enjoin on the Courts. But such considerations have no application in an appeal from an acquittal where naturally the Court is loath to disturb a finding of the first Court rejecting the evidence against the accused as unreliable and declaring his innocence. The cumulative effect of these considerations creates a considerable difference between an appeal from a conviction and one from an order of acquittal as regards the decision of their subject matter, though both appeals are placed on the same footing in the statute law of procedure—K. E. v. Chatter Singh, 14 P.R. 7, 1904 P.L.R. 97, 1 Cr.L.J. 731; Q. E. v. Bibhuti, 17 Cal. 491, 49 I.C. 84; Harnaman, 1909 P.R. 15, 4 I.C. 864, 11 Cr.L.J. 66. Upon sound principles of criminal jurisprudence, the indications of error in the judgment of acquittal ought to be clearer and more palpable and the evidence more cogent and convincing in order to justify its being set aside than would be necessary in the case of a judgment of conviction—K. E. Chatter Singh, supra; Emp. v. Bakhtawar, 28 P.L.R. 313, 28 Cr.L.J. 55 (561); Emp. v. Turezi, 1920 P.L.R. 125, 21 Cr.L.J. 349, 55 I.C. 68. Apart from these considerations, there is no distinction as to the mode of procedure between the two classes of appeals. Both appeals are governed by the same rules and subject to the same limitations. There is nothing in the Code which indicates that an appeal from an acquittal allowed in the interest of public safety, peace and order, should receive a different treatment from any other appeal or class of appeals—Harnaman supra, Q. E. v. Bibhuti, 17 Cal. 485; Q. E. v. Prag Dai, 20 All 459; Uttam, 1885 P.R. 29; Lakshmi Narasimham, 2 Weir 462, Chatter Singh, 1904 P.R. 7, 1 Cr.L.J. 781. In both kinds of appeals, the appellant has to satisfy the Court that there does exist some good and strong ground apparent upon the record for interfering with the deliberate determination by the Judge who has had all the evidence before him and has arrived at that determination with that great advantage in his favour—Q. E. v. Prag Dai, 20 All 459. So also, with regard to the considerations of evidence, an appeal from an acquittal does not stand on a different footing from an appeal from a conviction. No distinction is drawn in the Code between two two kinds of appeal, as regards dealing with the evidence—Dy. Legal Remembrancer v. Matukdhari, 20 C.W.N. 128, 17 Cr.L.J. 9, Emp. v. Sakharani, 21 Bom. L.R. 1054, 21 Cr.L.J. 17, 54 I.C. 161. If the High Court thinks that the lower Court has taken an erroneous view of the evidence and should have convicted, the High Court can convict the accused, in the same way as it can acquit an accused in an appeal against a conviction, if it thinks that the lower Court ought to have acquitted. In this respect the Code makes no distinction between an appeal from an acquittal and an appeal from a conviction—Emp. v. Moti, 26 Bom. L.R. 113, 25 Cr.L.J. 786; Emp. v. Sakharani, supra, Emp. v. Kadir Bux, 9 S.L.R. 17, 16 Cr.L.J. 604, 32 I.C. 137. An appeal by Government against acquittal must be considered on its merits just as any other appeal always must be. The onus is on the appellant, and the onus is all the heavier if the judgment appealed from is one which approaches the consideration of the question from a correct point of view and gives the accused the benefit of a reasonable doubt which exists in the mind of the Judge—Emp. v. Autar, 47 All 306, 23 A.L.J. 25, 26 Cr.L.J. 676.

In an appeal from an acquittal, as in an appeal from a conviction, the appellant is entitled to go into facts and ask the appellate Court to take a view of facts different from that taken by the trial Court. But the accused in an appeal from acquittal retains his right of being presumed to be innocent until the charge is fully brought home to him. He has the right of being given the benefit of any reasonable doubt as to his guilt; he has also the benefit of the opinion of the trial Court upon the credibility of the witnesses whom that Court had the advantage of seeing face to face; and he has the right to ask the Appellate Court that the acquittal should not be set aside unless the trial Court has taken a perverse view of the evidence and has arrived at an unnatural and distorted conclusion—Deboo Singh, 8 Pat. 496, 1929 Cr. C. 243 (248).

In a criminal appeal by the Government to the High Court, the arrest of the accused may be ordered pending appeal—Gobin, 1 Cal. 281, Mangu, 2 All. 340. In capital cases, in which the Government appeals under this section, it is undesirable that the prisoner's fate should be discussed while he remains at large; in such cases, the Government should apply for the arrest of the accused under section 427—Gobardhan, 9 All. 528. Where, on an appeal under this section, the accused is arrested and convicted, and sentence is passed on him, the sentence will run from the date of the committal of the accused to jail and not from the date of the arrest or of the sentence—Mahuddi, 6 C.L.R. 349.

Limitation :—An appeal under this section must be presented within six months from the date of the order appealed against (see Art. 157 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908).

418. (1) An appeal may lie on a matter of fact

Appeal on what as well as a matter of law, except matters admissible. where the trial was by jury, in which case the appeal shall lie on a matter of law only.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) or in section 423, sub-section (2), when, in the case of a trial by jury any person is sentenced to death, any other person convicted in the same trial with the person so sentenced may appeal on a matter of fact as well as a matter of law.

Explanation.—The alleged severity of a sentence shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to be a matter of law.

Change .—Sub-sec. (2) has been added by sec 115 of the Cr P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923 The reason is stated below

1122. Scope of section —This section is applicable alike both to appeals by Government (sec 417) against an order of acquittal and to appeals by convicted persons against a conviction and sentence—Emp v. Gubbi, 17 C.P.L.R 75 (92) Therefore where in a case tried by jury, the Local Government appealed to the High Court under section 417 against an order of acquittal, and the grounds of appeal were all questions of fact, the High Court rejected the application, because under this section, an appeal in the jury-case could lie only on a question of law—Parmeshur, 10 Cal 1029

A Judicial Commissioner sitting on the original side and holding a sessions trial is to be deemed a Sessions Judge and not a Judge of the High Court, and an appeal from his decision lies under this section to

1123. Trial by jury :—Where the trial was by jury, the appeal would lie on a matter of law only. By restricting appeals from cases triable by jury to matters of law only, this section gives finality to the verdict of the jury, where there has existed no error of law nor misdirection, and where the Judge has concurred with the majority—Balappa, Ratanlal 730.

The words 'where the trial was by jury' mean 'where the trial was in fact held by jury' and not 'where the trial ought to have been held by jury.' And therefore where the accused was tried by jury in a case which ought to have been tried with the aid of assessors, no appeal would lie except on a question of law; the trial would be treated as one by a jury—Parbhushankar, 25 Bom. 680; Jeyram, 23 Bom. 696, Surja Kurmi, 25 Cal. 555. But in Mohim Chunder, 3 Cal. 765, Goshain Luchmun, 24 W.R. 30, Bavabhai, Ratanlal 961, Narkoo, 18 W.R. 59, it was held that in such a case the trial would be deemed as one held with the aid of assessors, treating the verdict of the jury as the opinion of the assessors, and the prisoner would not lose his right of appeal on the facts. In Pattikadan Ummaru, 26 Mad. 243, where a person was charged with an offence triable by jury, and the jury acquitted him of that charge but found him guilty of an offence triable with the aid of assessors, Benson J. held that the verdict was to be treated as an opinion of assessors, and that an appeal lay on the facts of the case; but Bhashyam Aiyanger J. held that the jury had authority under section 238, in trying an offence triable by jury, to find as an incident to the trial that certain facts were proved in the trial which constituted a minor offence, and to return a verdict of guilty on such offence, though such offence might not be triable by a jury, and therefore in this case the verdict was to be treated as a verdict on a trial by jury and an appeal would lie only on a point of law.

In a case where a person is tried by a jury, and there is also another charge which is tried by the Judge with the same jury as assessors, an appeal will lie on a question of fact—Karuppa Gounden, 18 Cr.L.J. 346 (Mad.).

1124. Matter of law :—An appeal under this section from cases tried by jury lies on matters of law only, and the Appellate Court cannot go into the facts of the case. If it were to do so, it would be substituting the decision of the Judges of that Court for the verdict of the jury who had the opportunity of seeing the demeanour of witnesses and weighing the evidence with the assistance which this affords, whereas the Judges of the Appellate Court can arrive at a decision only on a perusal of the paper-evidence—Wafadar v. Q. E., 21 Cal. 955; Ikramuddin, 39 All. 349; Ramesh Chandra, 46 Cal. 895, 23 C.W.N. 661. If there is no question of law involved in the case, the High Court has no power to interfere, however absurd or perverse the verdict may be—Chinna Tevan, 14 Mad. 36. But this section does not prohibit the High Court, in a case in which an appeal lies on a question of law, from deciding questions of fact which other sections of the Code require the Court to decide in order to do justice in the case—Smither, 26 Mad 1 (14) See page 1119 post.

Every petition of appeal in cases tried by jury should state clearly in what respect the law has been contravened. The Court will not hunt through the records and find out the illegality if any. The parties must point out in their petition of appeal wherein there has been a departure from the law. Unless the exact contravention of law is pointed out, the petition of appeal is liable to be rejected—Gopal, 1 W R 21.

Examples of 'matters of law'.—The question as to the admissibility of evidence which has been rejected by the Sessions Judge is a matter of law—Pitambar, 2 Bom. 61; so also, the question as to whether the evidence which had been admitted by the Sessions Judge ought to have been admitted is a matter of law—Emp. v. Waman, 27 Bom. 626; Ramesh, 46 Cal. 895, 23 C W N. 661, so also, an omission to consider relevant evidence—7 Cal 263, or a misdirection to the jury—Ali Fakir, 25 Cal 230; Ramesh, supra, or a non-direction by the Judge on a question of prime importance in favour of the prisoner—Malgowda, 27 Bom 644. But the High Court will not interfere with the verdict of the jury merely because the Sessions Judge admitted an inadmissible evidence regarding an unimportant matter which had only a remote bearing on the question in issue and the admission of which could not have affected the verdict of the jury—Keramat v K. E., 42 C L J 528, 27 Cr.L.J. 277.

The High Court on a point of law as to the admissibility of evidence can review the whole case and determine whether the admission of rejected evidence would have affected the result of the trial—Pitambar, 2 Bom 61; Ram Chandra Gooma, 19 Bom 749.

When High Court can go into facts —Where a Judge does not agree with the verdict of the jury and submits the case to the High Court under section 307, the whole facts of the case may be gone into by the High Court. The clear provisions of section 307 allowing the High Court to consider the entire evidence are not in any way curtailed by section 418 or 423 and the High Court can interfere with the verdict of the jury if it thinks proper to do so—Q E v McCarthy, 9 All 420; see also Ikramuddin, 39 All 348. So also, the High Court can go into the facts when a case is referred to it under section 374 for a confirmation of the sentence of death—Jaffir Ali 19 W R 57. Q E v Chatradhari, 2 C W N 49. In short, in a case tried by a jury, the High Court can enter into facts only on a reference under section 307 or 374, and not on an appeal under this section.

Sub-section (2) .—Where in a Sessions trial of several accused, one of the accused was sentenced to death, and the other to lower punishments, and all of them appealed, it was held under the old law that the High Court, on a reference under section 374 in respect of the person sentenced to death, could go into the facts, but in dealing with the appeal of the other persons the High Court must be confined to matters of law and could not enter into the facts—Q. E. v. Chatradhari, 2 C.W.N. 49. This anomaly is now removed by sub-section (2). "This clause provides that when in the case of a trial by jury, one person is sentenced to death and another to a lower punishment, the second accused may appeal on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law. This is intended to remove the anomaly under the existing law that a High Court acting under section 374 could consider the facts of the case as regards the former accused, but on an appeal of the second accused could only intervene on a point of law"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

419. Every appeal shall be made in the form of a petition in writing presented by the appellant or his pleader, and every such petition shall (unless the Court to which it is presented otherwise directs) be accompanied by a copy of the judgment or order appealed against, and, in cases tried by a jury, a copy of the heads of the charge recorded under section 367.

1125. Scope of section :—This section prescribes the form under which a petition of appeal is to be presented. It applies even where the accused is in jail; section 420 deals only with the manner in which the petition of appeal is to be presented when the petitioner is in jail, and does not dispense with the other formalities prescribed by this section. Section 420 is not derogatory to the general rule laid down in section 419—Q. E. v. Pohpi, 13 A.J. 171 (179).

1126. Contents of petition :—A petition of appeal in a case tried by jury can be made only on a question of law, and the petition should state clearly in what respect the law has been contravened. The Court will not hunt through the records to find out the illegality, if any. If the contravention of law is not stated in the petition, it will be rejected—Gopal, 1 W.R. 21.

A petition of appeal containing defamatory statements against the Magistrate will not be entertained. Such petition may be returned for representation after eliminating the scandalous remarks—In re Clive Durant, 15 Bom. 488. A petition of appeal containing a false statement will not make the petitioner liable to punishment for the false statement; because a criminal appeal is a continuation of the criminal case, and the appellant has got all the privileges of the accused—Subbaya, 12 Mad. 451 (cited in Note 981 under section 342).

1127. Presentation of petition :—As regards presentation, no special method is enjoined in the Code, and the question is one of administrative convenience alone. Therefore an actual presentation to an officer of the Court, such as a Bench Clerk (in the High Court) or to one of the Judges, its members, is valid—Kadirikoya, 39 Mad. 527, 29 M.L.J. 101. But depositing a petition of appeal in a box kept for the convenience of parties (in the compound of a Court-house) and intended for the deposit of papers for the Court is not a proper presentation, because the box is not intended for appeals and also because a petition of appeal might have been deposited there by a person who could not legally present it—Vasudevayya, 19 Mad. 354.

The petition should be presented in person; the transmission of it by post is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section—Luriseti Pitchaya, 2 Weir 467, Bhagwan, Ratanlal 464; Arappa, 15 Mad 137.

Presentation by Pleader—The petition should be delivered to the proper officer of the Court, either by the appellant or by his pleader—Q. E. v. Arappa, 15 Mad. 137. Presentation of an appeal by the vakil's gomasta or clerk is equivalent to presentation by pleader, if the vakil has signed the petition and has been duly authorised by a vakalatnama—Gudiyati Samuel, 2 Weir 469, Karuppa Udayan, 20 Mad 87. But presentation of the petition through a person who is not the clerk of the pleader, and over whose action and conduct the pleader has no control, is not a proper presentation—Q. E. v. Ramasami, 21 Mad 114. Where a petition of appeal was prepared on behalf of three accused and signed under vakalat by their pleader, and was presented by another pleader who held vakalat only from one of the accused, it was held that there was a proper presentation of the petition of appeal on behalf of all the accused—Muthu Mirá, 2 Weir 470 (471). But where the prisoners had conflicting interests to each other, e.g., where each of the prisoners made confessions exonerating himself and incriminating the other, it would be improper for one pleader to present an appeal on behalf of both and to represent both who had conflicting interests—Hira, 1890 P R 13.

The word 'pleader' includes a 'mukhtear' as well as any other person authorised by the appellant, and the presentation of the petition through them would be proper—Imp v Sivaram, 6 Bom 14, In re Suba Aitala, 1 Mad 304. This is now made clear by the present definition of the word 'pleader' in section 4 (r) as amended in 1923, by which a mukhtear has been placed on the same footing as a pleader.

1128. Copy of judgment—It is in the discretion of the Appellate Court to admit an appeal without its being accompanied by a copy of the judgment or order appealed against, where injustice might accrue to the appellant by insisting on a strict compliance with this section. But in such cases, before hearing the appeal, the Court should have before it a copy of such judgment or order which it may get by sending for the record—Emp v Sitaram 5 Bom L R 704. Where there are several accused in a case, and all of them prefer a joint appeal, only one copy of the judgment appealed against is required to be filed, and it is not necessary that there shall be a distinct appeal-petition by each of the convicted persons separately accompanied by a separate copy of the judgment—Emp v Sitaram, 5 Bom L R 704, Batasha v Emp., 18 Cr.L.J 512 (Oudh). Where the order appealed against is not complete in itself, and the reasons of the dismissal are given in another judgment to which the order refers, a copy of such judgment also must be filed—Parmanand v. Mohan Lal, 30 Cr.L.J. 235 (236).

The Appellate Court has a discretion to dispense with the copy or order appealed against not only at the time of filing the appeal but even at any subsequent stage—Parmanand, supra.

A copy furnished in the prisoner's own language is sufficient—Ratanlal 82. See notes under Section 371.

420. If the appellant is in jail, he may present his petition of appeal and the copies accompanying the same to the officer in charge of the jail, who shall thereupon forward such petition and copies to the proper Appellate Court.

Procedure when appellant in jail.

1129. This section deals with the manner of presentation of an appeal by a prisoner in jail, but it does not dispense with the formalities prescribed by section 419. These formalities must be observed; see 13 All. 171 cited in Note 1125 under section 419.

Where the petitioner is in jail, every facility such as pen, ink, paper and even a writer should be allowed to him to enable him to prepare the petition of appeal—Nitto Gopaul, 13 W.R. 69; Shek Dadabhai, 1 B.H.C.R. 16.

Where a jail appeal has been presented through the officer-in-charge of the jail and has been dismissed under sec. 421 no further appeal can be preferred through Counsel under section 419—Khali, 44 All. 759, 23 Cr.L.J. 505; Gaya Din, 24 O.C. 304, 23 Cr.L.J. 148; In re Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382 (392); Ram Autar v. Emp., 11 O.L.J. 536, 1 O.W.N. 354, 25 Cr.L.J. 1313. The reason is that when a right of appeal has once been exercised, and that appeal has been disposed of, the accused will not be allowed to appeal again—Khali, supra.

A jail appeal can be heard and disposed of by a Vacation Judge—In re Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382 (399).

A jail appeal was preferred by some of the prisoners, and while the appeal was pending, a petition of appeal on behalf of some of the prisoners was filed through a mukhtar. The Sessions Judge rejected the jail appeal in ignorance of the fact that an appeal had been filed through a mukhtar. Held that the High Court in its revisional powers would set aside the order of dismissal of the jail appeal, and direct the Sessions Judge to rehear both the appeals—Emp. v. Mewa Ram, 48 All. 208, 23 A.L.J. 1051, 26 Cr.L.J. 1621.

When a prisoner sentenced to death subject to confirmation of the High Court presents his appeal from jail under the provisions of this section, and the Local Government has granted him the privilege of being represented by a counsel at the expense of the Crown, but the accused refuses to give any instructions to such counsel, stating that he does not wish to be represented by him, it is the duty of the counsel to conduct the appeal on behalf of the accused, without in the least considering what the accused's views may be on the subject. The concession of the Crown towards the accused may or may not be appreciated by the accused, but it in no way affects the conduct of the appeal—Ram Prasad v. Emp., 4 O.W.N. 638, 28 Cr L.J. 679 (680)

421. (1) On receiving the petition and copy under section 419 or section 420, the Appellate Court shall peruse the same, and, if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering, it may dismiss the appeal summarily:

Summary dismissal of appeal.

Provided that no appeal presented under section 419 shall be dismissed unless the appellant or his pleader has had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same.

(2) Before dismissing an appeal under this section, the Court may call for the record of the case, but shall not be bound to do so.

1130. Appellant not bound to appear—Once an appeal is received, it should not be dismissed merely because the appellant or his pleader failed to appear to support the petition, but the Appellate Court must consider whether there exist sufficient grounds for its interference, and must judicially determine the appeal on the merits—Q. E. v. Deoshanker, Ratanlal 593; Ram Bharose v. Emp., 14 A L J 327, 17 Cr L J. 353; Ratan Chand v. Emp., 9 Cr L J. 553, 5 N L R 76, In re Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382 (402), Baldeo v. Emp., 24 Cr L J 475 (Pat); Koura v. Emp., 1895 P.R. 21. If the appellant does not appear but leaves the question of admission or rejection of the appeal to be determined by the Appellate Court on the papers, the Appellate Court is bound to peruse the papers and cannot dismiss the appeal summarily under this section on the ground of non-appearance of the appellant by counsel or in person—Vali Mahomed, Ratanlal 739 (740)

'No sufficient ground for interfering' The appellant's pleader should be allowed, if necessary, to refer to the certified copies of the evidence to show that there were sufficient grounds for interfering. Where the Judge disallowed the pleader to refer to the evidence, he acted erroneously—Manga v. K. E., 11 O.C. 360, 9 Cr L J 55

Where there are in the memorandum of appeal allegations of withholding witnesses, of refusals to grant warrants and summonses to witnesses, and of disregard of certain evidence filed in the case, there were sufficient grounds for interference—Adam Isaq, Ratanlal 916. So also, where the grounds of appeal disclose reasons for discrediting the witnesses for the prosecution, there are sufficient grounds for interference and the Appellate Court ought not to dismiss the appeal—Rangachariu, 29 Mad 236.

If no sufficient grounds for interference are shown, the Appellate Court should not interfere, but should dismiss the appeal—Emp v Sajivan, 5 All. 386.

1131. Summary dismissal of appeal :—Although this section gives the Appellate Court power to dismiss an appeal summarily, that power must be exercised with judicial discretion. Appeals which are complicated both in law and fact ought not to be summarily dismissed—Kailash, 19 Cr.L.J. 228 (Cal.); Sukhdeo, 3 P.L.J. 389, 19 Cr.L.J. 209, Rahimaddi, 22 Cr.L.J. 349 (Cal.). Where there has been a dispute as to facts and where the credibility of witnesses for the prosecution has been impugned, it is proper for the Appellate Court to call for the record and look at the evidence, and not to dismiss the appeal summarily—Padarath v. Emp, 24 Cr.L.J. 477 (Pat.). The summary dismissal of an appeal is not justified where there were disputed questions of fact in the case, and the number of witnesses and documents were large, and the Court of first instance had discussed the evidence and come to certain findings—Rahimaddi v. Emp., 22 Cr.L.J. 349 (Cal.).

An order of summary rejection of appeal under this section is final. Such an order is not open to review and it is immaterial whether such order is made before or after the papers have been called for—Mahomed Yashin, 4 Bom 101; Q. E. v. Bhimappa, 19 Bom 732; Clegg, 1687 P.R. 24. But the Madras High Court holds that if the appeal has been dismissed for default of the pleader's appearance, and it is proved to the satisfaction of the Appellate Court that there is a reasonable excuse for the non-appearance of the pleader, the Appellate Court may rehear the appeal on the merits—Anonymous, 2 Weir 471, 7 M.H.C.R. App 29; In re Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382 (403).

When an appeal is dismissed under this section, the Court has to power to alter the conviction and sentence—Naga, 2 Weir 475, Govindrao, Ratanlal 304 (305); Bana, Ratanlal 384 (385); Mathurlaldas, Ratanlal 74.

Withdrawal of appeal :—A petition of appeal presented for admission may be withdrawn, before it is dismissed under this section—Chundernath, 5 C.L.R. 372.

Admission of a connected appeal :—Where two co-accused presented two appeals, the fact that the Appellate Court admitted the appeal of one of the appellants, does not affect his power to dismiss the other appeal summarily under this section—Jagat Chandra v Lal Chand, 5 C.W.N. 332.

Piecemeal disposal of appeal :—A person was convicted in one trial on two separate charges of cheating. On appeal the Sessions Judge summarily dismissed the appeal on one charge and admitted the appeal on the other, and the appeal on this latter charge was ultimately allowed. Held that the procedure adopted by the Appellate Court in disposing of the appeal piecemeal, was no doubt unusual and undesirable, but not illegal—Ismail v. Emp., 5 Rang 274, 28 Cr L J. 765 (766)

1132. Judgment and record of reasons—An Appellate Court in rejecting an appeal summarily under this section is not bound to write a judgment—Rash Behari v. Balgopal, 21 Cal. 92; Varubai, 20 Bom. 540; Annavarapa Krishnayya, 25 Mad 534; Bala Subbanna, 2 Weir 473; Nazar Mohd v. Hara Singh, 26 P.L.R. 616, 27 Cr L J. 23, Gurbari, 2 P.L.J. 695; Nitya Pal v. Beni Madhab, 9 C W N 623; Ramrao, 13 N.L.R. 169, 18 Cr.L.J. 993; Nga Ba, 19 Cr L.J. 316 (Bur.); Nga Sein, U.B.R. (1906) 2nd Qr. 49. But it is advisable that a Court which dismisses an appeal under this section should briefly record its reasons for such dismissal, in view of the possibility of such order being challenged by an application for revision—Q. E. v Ram Narain, 8 All. 514; Kundan, 36 All. 496, 15 Cr L J. 512, Gurbari v. Em, 2 P.L.J. 695; Gobind v. Emp., 61 I.C. 49, 2 P.L.T. 10; Ramkant, 19 Cr L J. 304 (Pat.); Q. E. v Nanhu, 17 All 241; Ramrao, 13 N L R 169, 18 Cr L J. 993; Jagarnath v. Emp, 25 Cr.L.J. 1237 (Pat.); Brij Mohan v Emp, 26 Cr.L.J. 4 (Oudh). Though ordinarily an Appellate Court in rejecting an appeal summarily is not bound to record a judgment, still the Court should not dispose of an appeal under this section otherwise than by a judgment showing on the face of it that it has applied its mind to a consideration of the evidence on the record, and of the pleas raised by the accused both in the Court below and in his memorandum of appeal—Lal Behari, 38 All 393, 17 Cr.L.J. 309, Janesh Ram v Gyan Chand, 21 Cr.L.J. 139 (Pat), Chandrasekhar v. Rajaram, 30 Cr L J. 791 (792) (Nag); Gobind, 2 P.L.T. 10, 61 I C 49, 22 Cr.L.J. 321. Where in a case in which the evidence was voluminous, the Appellate Court, without considering either the evidence of the witnesses or the documents, disposed of the appeal practically in a single paragraph, the appellate judgment was not in accordance with law and the appeal must be reheard—Narain Prosad v. Emp, 1 P L T 716, 57 I C 664, 21 Cr L J 648

The Appellate Court need not go to the length of writing an elaborate judgment, but should notice briefly and clearly what objections were urged on appeal and how they were disposed of—Ekkowrie, 32 Cal 178. It should record at least so much as would satisfy the High Court, when an application for revision is made, that it has fully considered all the questions in issue and has appreciated the simplicity or gravity of the case—Gurbari, 2 P.L.J. 695, 19 Cr L J. 151. Where no reason is given for the summary dismissal, the High Court will either remand the appeal to the Appellate Court to be admitted and heard, or will itself examine the evidence—Ramkant, 19 Cr L J. 304 (Pat), Nga Ba, 19 Cr L J. 316

1133. Proviso—Right of appellant to be heard:—This proviso is an embodiment of the legal maxim 'Audi alteram partem,' i.e., no man shall be condemned unheard. This maxim derives its origin from a saying of Seneca to the following effect: "Whoever may have decided anything, the other side remaining unheard, granted that his decision may have been just, will not have been just himself"—Pohpi, 13 All. 171 (175).

Appeal from jail.—The proviso lays down that no appeal under section 419 shall be dismissed without giving the appellant or his pleader an opportunity of being heard. But this proviso does not apply to jail appeals presented under sec. 420, and therefore the Appellate Court is not bound to give the accused any time to engage counsel. But under Rule 50 of the Madras Rules of Practice, seven days' time is allowed before a jail appeal is circulated to the Judges. So an appellant has sufficient opportunity of engaging counsel if he wishes to do so—In re Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382 (400).

As to the question whether notice should be given to an appellant filing his appeal from jail, it has been held in some Madras cases, that sec. 419 (which is referred to in this proviso) is of general application and embrace the cases of all appellants whether in or out of jail, and there is nothing in sec. 420 to indicate that it was intended to deprive appellants who are in jail of the opportunity of being heard on their appeal. Notice is, therefore, necessary to be given to the accused though he is in jail and there is nothing in this section to prevent the prisoner from being heard in person—Kolina Butchaya, 2 Weir 472 (473); if the prisoner is not represented by a pleader, the Appellate Court has power to direct that the prisoner be brought before it—Anonymous, 2 Weir 473. If the convict files a petition of appeal from jail through a legal practitioner, the Appellate Court is not competent to dismiss the jail appeal summarily, but should hear the convict's pleader—Bhawani v. K. E.

A.L.J. 693, 4 Cr.L.J. 373. But Mahmood J has expressed the opinion in Q. E. v. Pohpi, 13 All. 171 (180) that as this proviso does not apply to an appeal presented from jail, neither the prisoner nor his pleader, if he engages one, has the right to insist that he shall be heard. The Sind' Court is of opinion that this proviso is confined to sec. 419, and does not apply to an appeal preferred by the accused from prison under sec. 420. If the accused is in jail, and has no pleader, any notice to him is useless, because he cannot appear in Court and cannot give any further information to the Court. Consequently, the Appellate Court can summarily dismiss such appeal on perusal of the papers, without calling upon him to appear—Loung v. Emp., 20 S.L.R. 189, 27 Cr.L.J. 933 (934).

Other Appeals.—It is not competent to the Appellate Court to reject an appeal summarily without giving a reasonable opportunity to the appellant or his pleader of being heard—Rangachari v. Emp., 29 Mad. 236; Gobind, 2 P.L.T. 10, 61 I.C. 49, 22 Cr.L.J. 321; Rajkumar v. Tinkowri, 12 C.W.N. 248; Ranga Row v. Emp., 23 M.L.J. 371, 13 Cr.L.J. 710. If the appeal is rejected under this section without hearing the appellant or his pleader, the Appellate Court may be directed to rehear the petition of appeal, and to give the appellant an opportunity of being heard—Fakira, Ratanlal 703. Where the Appellate Court rejected the appeal summarily owing to default of the pleader's appearance, and satisfactory reason for his non-appearance was shown, the Court should rehear the appeal on the merits—Anonymous, 2 Weir 471, 7 M.H.C.R. App. 29; In re Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382; Ratan Chand, 5 N.L.R. 76, 9 Cr.L.J. 553. Where the accused's pleader presents a time-barred appeal, together with an application for excusing the delay under sec. 5, Limitation Act, on the ground that the accused under a bonafide mistake had presented proceedings in a wrong Court, the Appellate Court should not dismiss the appeal summarily, but should give the pleader an opportunity of being heard as to the allegation of there being sufficient cause for excusing the delay—Nurudin, 29 Bom.L.R. 701, 28 Cr.L.J. 653 (655). Where the notice for hearing the appeal was served in the afternoon of 21st March on the appellant's pleader at Amalner asking him to be present on the 22nd March at Jalgaon or any other place where the camp of the District Magistrate might be, and on the day in question the District Magistrate was encamped at Edlabad, at a considerable distance from Amalner, so that the appellant's pleader could not appear at the place and the appeal was consequently dismissed, held that the order of dismissal must be set aside as there was no sufficient notice to the appellant's pleader of the date and place of hearing—In re Arjun, 22 Bom.L.R. 188, 55 I.C. 853, 21 Cr.L.J. 373. Where the District Magistrate called upon the appellant's pleader to argue the appeal on the same day that it was presented, and on the pleader asking time, the Magistrate refused to grant him time and rejected the appeal, it was held that the appellant's pleader was not afforded reasonable opportunity of being heard—Emp v Gurshida, 2 Cr.L.J. 58, 7 Bom.L.R. 89, Ramtchal v Emp, 36 Cal. 385, 13 C.W.N. 684, In re Turka Hussan, 48 Mad. 385, 47 M.L.J. 661. But this section does not contemplate that an appeal cannot be heard on the very day on which it is presented, and that notice must be given of some future date on which the appellant or his pleader may be heard. There is nothing in this section to prevent the Court from hearing the appellant's pleader at the time when he presents the appeal, if the pleader desires that course, but if he does not desire to be heard at once, then certainly the Court should appoint a future date of which notice is to be given to the appellant or his pleader, so that he may be heard on that date—Basavaneppa, 29 Bom.L.R. 488, 28 Cr.L.J. 467 (468).

A particular date should be fixed, on which the appeal is to be heard. A general notice posted in the Court that appeals will be heard for admission only on the first Court-day next after presentation is not a compliance with the provisions of this section. The Court should fix a time in each particular case, so as to enable the appellant or his pleader to be heard—Malan, 5 Mad. 11.

1134. Sub-section (2):—Although the Legislature does not make it obligatory on the part of the Appellate Court to send for the records before dismissing an appeal, still the practice of summarily dismissing an appeal without calling for the records is always inconvenient and must not be adopted—Emp v. Jugal Kishore, 1883 A.W.N. 145. If questions of facts are argued in the appeal, the appeal ought not to be disposed of under section 421 without sending for the original records.

of the Court below—In re Turka Husain, 48 Mad. 385, 47 M.L.J. 661, 26 Cr.L.J. 411. Where the grounds of appeal disclose reasons for discrediting the witnesses for the prosecution, the Appellate Court ought to call for the records—Rangachari v. Emp., 29 Mad. 236.

An Appellate Court is not bound to call for the record in an appeal in which the only question is a question of fact and the judgment of the Court below is so plain and clear that calling for the record would be a mere waste of time. But when the judgment of the lower Court is a long and intricate judgment requiring careful consideration, the Appellate Court ought not to refuse to call for the record—Sukhdeo, 3 P.L.J. 389, 19 Cr.L.J. 209.

After the record is sent for and received, the Appellate Court ought to hear the pleader and cannot dismiss the appeal summarily without hearing him, if the Appellate Court so dismisses the appeal, the order of dismissal must be set aside and the appeal will be directed to be reheard—Lalit Kumar v. K. E., 42 C.L.J. 551, 27 Cr.L.J. 382, Surendra v. K. E., 42 C.L.J. 554, 27 Cr.L.J. 554, 27 Cr.L.J. 412. But the Bombay High Court is of opinion that it is not imperative on the Appellate Court to hear the appellant's pleader, after the record is called for, and there would be no illegality on the part of the Court in dismissing the appeal after perusal of the record, without giving the pleader another opportunity of being heard, especially when the pleader had been heard before the records were called for, but it is desirable that the pleader should be heard after the record is called for, because his arguments about the evidence can then be better appreciated—Basavanappa, 29 Bom L.R. 488, 28 Cr.L.J. 467 (468). The Sind Court is also of opinion that although the records have been called for, still as the case is not fixed for hearing under sec 423, it is not obligatory on the Court to give the pleader a hearing before dismissing the appeal, especially where the pleader has once been heard before the records were sent for—Jivayo, 2 S.L.R. 39, 10 Cr.L.J. 204.

1135. Revision:—Where an appeal has been dismissed summarily under this section without recording any reasons or judgment, the High Court can either go into the case on its own account and examine the evidence, or can remand the appeal to the Lower Appellate Court to be admitted and heard—Ram Kant v. Emp., 19 Cr.L.J. 304 (Pat.). Though the practice usually is to remand the case to the Lower Appellate Court and ask for a judgment from that Court after a regular hearing, the High Court has discretion to go into the case itself, and, if necessary, to consider the questions of fact as if in first appeal—Aman Ali, 8 I.C. 379, 13 O.C. 309, 11 Cr.L.J. 631; Nga Ba, 19 Cr.L.J. 316 (Bur.). If the High Court finds that the case should not have been dealt with summarily, the High Court will send back the case ordering the Appellate Court to hear it on its merits and pass a judgment—Nga Ba, 19 Cr.L.J. 316 (Bur.). Where the Sessions Judge summarily dismissed an appeal from the conviction of a Magistrate, the High Court itself finding that the evidence on which the conviction was based was insufficient, set aside the conviction and acquitted the accused, instead of remanding the appeal for a rehearing on the merits—Isswar Chandra, 10 C.W.N. 446 (448), 3 Cr.L.J. 385. See also Aman Ali, supra

422. If the Appellate Court does not dismiss the appeal summarily, it shall cause

Notice of appeal. notice to be given to the appellants or his pleader, and to such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf, of the time and place at which such appeal will be heard, and shall, on the application of such officer, furnish him with a copy of the grounds of appeal; and, in cases of appeals under section 417, the Appellate Court shall cause a like notice to be given to the accused.

1136. Restrictive order for admission :—A restrictive order for admission of a criminal appeal is not contemplated by this section, and must be deemed to be ultra vires. Therefore, where a criminal appeal was admitted for consideration of the sentence only, it was held that the whole appeal should be heard and that the appellant could not be restricted to any selected ground out of those specified in his petition—Nafar v. Emp, 41 Cal 406, 18 C.W.N. 147; Gaya Singh v. Emp, 4 Pat. 254, 6 P.L.T. 381, 26 Cr.L.J. 862. Except where there are express words as in secs 412 and 418, the Code does not provide for an appeal for the limited purpose of reviewing only a part of the judgment. The appellant has a right to be heard fully on the merits and the Judge is bound by sec. 424 to record a complete judgment—Dagdu Gangaram, Ratanlal 826

1137. Notice.—Notice to the appellant of the time and place of hearing is obligatory, and an order disposing of an appeal without giving such notice is illegal. The appeal must be restored to the file and disposed of according to law—Venkataramudu 2 Weir 475 (476). Where a criminal appeal filed through a counsel is admitted, it cannot be dismissed summarily without giving notice to the accused, for, after an appeal is admitted, the Court cannot act under sec 421—Ta Pu v. Emp, 3 Bur L.J. 18, 25 Cr.L.J. 933

To whom to be given —Notice may be given to the appellant or his pleader. But the attention of the pleader should be directed to the notice, when notice is given to the pleader only, the mere fact that the pleader of the appellant is present in Court when an order is made admitting an appeal is not sufficient—Gopal Chunder, 10 C.L.R. 57

The word 'pleader' includes mukhtear, and notice to the mukhtear is sufficient for the purposes of this section—Shivaram, 6 Bom 14

If the appellant could not be found at the address given by him, the notice of the hearing of appeal or a copy of it should be left at the address given—Hari Narayan, Ratanlal 869

In case of appeals under sec. 417, notice must be given to the accused.

Where the Court passes an order, awarding compensation to the accused under sec. 250, and the complainant appeals, it is desirable that notice should be given to the accused so as to afford him an opportunity of supporting the order passed in his favour, although there is no express provision of law to that effect—Palaniappavelan, 29 Mad. 187, Venkatarama v. Krishna, 38 Mad. 1091; Ram Chand v. Jesa Ram, A I.R. 1924 Lah. 675 (676), 25 Cr.L.J. 609; Menon v Ibrahim, 20 S.L.R. 41, 27 Cr.L.J. 248. But the absence of notice to the accused will not vitiate the appellate proceedings—Nagi Reddi v. Basappa, 33 Mad. 89; Krishna v Narayana, 41 M.L.J. 172, 22 Cr.L.J. 583, 62 I.C. 823; Rashid, 8 Lah. 568, 28 Cr.L.J. 416. So also, no notice to the Crown is necessary, because it is a matter in which the Crown is very little interested—Palaniappavelan, supra; Krishna v. Narayana, supra; Guruswami v. Tirumurthi, 27 M.L.J. 629, 15 Cr.L.J. 648.

Although this section does not require any notice to be given to the complainant, still in appeals from orders under sec. 545, (directing that the expenses properly incurred by the prosecution be defrayed out of the fine), it would be better in practice to give notice to the complainant also. But the absence of such notice will not afford any ground for interference in revision—Mangalchand, 14 N.L.R. 131, 19 Cr.L.J. 927, 47 I.C. 443. It is the settled practice of the Calcutta High Court that where compensation has been awarded to the complainant under sec. 545, and an appeal is preferred, the notice of the appeal must be given to the complainant, and an order of acquittal in the absence of such notice may be set aside by the High Court in revision—Bharasa v. Sukdeo, 53 Cal. 969, 43 C.L.J. 583, 27 Cr.L.J. 1086.

Notice should also be given to such officer as the Local Government appoints—Emp v. Palaniappavelan, 29 Mad. 187. In Bengal, notice should be given to the Legal Remembrancer so far as the High Court is concerned. In other cases, the District Magistrate has been appointed as the officer to receive notices of appeals. If the rule is granted against the order of a Sessions Judge, he is the proper person to show cause—7 C.W.N. 80; Calcutta Gazette, 1883, Part I, page 1200. Where an appeal is preferred to the District Magistrate, notice must be given to the Public Prosecutor—Bharasa v. Sukhdeo, 53 Cal. 969, 43 C.L.J. 583, 27 Cr.L.J. 1086. In Bombay, District Magistrates should be served with notice—Bombay Gazette, 1883, Part I, page 182; 24 Bom.L.R. 1150. The same is the rule in the Punjab, Oudh and C. P. See Punjab Gazette, 1883, Part I, page 53; Oudh Crim. Digest, p. 27; C. P. Gazette, 1883, Part II, page 101. In Madras, the Public Prosecutor is the officer to be served with notice in case of appeals to the Sessions Court and the High Court—Fort St. George Gazette, 1887, Part I, page 30. In other cases, the District Magistrate is the proper officer. Thus, in an appeal before the Joint Magistrate, notice should be served on the District Magistrate—Vellayan v. Solai, 39 Mad. 595, 18 Cr.L.J. 600.

Omission to give notice to the District Magistrate is a mere irregularity, according to the Madras High Court—Vellayan v. Solai, 39 Mad. 505, 28 M.L.J. 693; but according to the Bombay High Court, such omission is an illegality and not merely an irregularity—Emp. v. Shivlingappa, 24 Bom L.R. 1150, A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 74, 24 Cr.L.J. 700. But objection on the ground of absence of notice should be made by the District Magistrate and not by the complainant; and the High Court will not interfere in revision at the instance of the complainant where the objection on the ground of absence of notice to the District Magistrate comes not from the District Magistrate but from the complainant—Devendra v. Shetappa, 25 Bom L.R. 251, A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 264, 26 Cr.L.J. 751. But where an appeal is heard by the District Magistrate who is himself the officer authorised to receive notice no formal notice to him is necessary—Krishna v. Narayana, 44 M.L.J. 172, 22 Cr.L.J. 583, 62 I.C. 823. But in another Madras case, where an appeal was originally heard by the District Magistrate and was ultimately heard by a Joint Magistrate, it was held that this fact did not relieve the Joint Magistrate of his duty of giving notice to the District Magistrate—Mid. Mustafa v. Shanmuga, 25 Cr.L.J. 1389, A.I.R. 1925 Mad 375

Notice to appellant in jail—If the appellant is in jail and is not represented by a pleader, notice must be given to him—Kotina Butchayya, 2 Weir 472 (473), Lal Bahadur v. Emp., 50 All 543, 29 Cr.L.J. 384 (385) (F.B.). The Sind Court is of opinion that no notice is necessary to be given to the appellant in jail—Loung, 20 S.L.R. 189, 27 Cr.L.J. 933 (934).

Time and place of hearing:—The notice must specify the exact date of hearing. It is not enough that the Magistrate had directed that the appeal would be heard in a certain month (e.g., in January)—Wazir Khan, 1891 A.W.N. 46. So also, a general notice posted in the Court-house that the appeal will be heard on the first Court day next after presentation of the appeal is not sufficient. A particular date must be fixed—Malan, 5 Mad 11

It is imperative on a criminal Appellate Court to hear the appeal at the time and place named in the notice of appeal—Ratan Chand, 5 N.L.R. 76, 9 Cr.L.J. 553. Therefore where a notice is issued fixing a particular place for the hearing of the appeal, the Court ought not to hear the appeal at a different place without giving notice of the change of place—Bahaval, 1891 P.R. 7. The disposal of an appeal on a date previous to the date fixed for hearing amounts to a material error in procedure—Shanmugam v. Alaga, 2 Weir 475. If notice has been issued to an appellant to appear at the headquarters on a particular date, and if on that particular date, the officer who will hear the appeal moves out into camp, he should not dismiss the appeal for default of the appellant's appearance at the camp, but should fix a fresh date and issue a fresh notice. A general order directing appellants to follow officer into camp is not sufficient—Nihal Singh v. Emp., 1905 P.R. 2 Cr.L.J. 66

423. (1) The Appellate Court shall then send for the record of the case, if such record is not already in Court. After perusing such record, and hearing the appellant or his pleader, if he appears, and the Public Prosecutor if he appears, and in case of an appeal under section 417, the accused if he appears, the Court may, if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering, dismiss the appeal, or may—

(a) in an appeal from an order of acquittal, reverse such order and direct that further inquiry be made, or that the accused be retried or committed for trial, as the case may be, or find him guilty and pass sentence on him according to law;

(b) in an appeal from a conviction, (1) reverse the finding and sentence, and acquit or discharge the accused, or order him to be retried by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such Appellate Court or committed for trial, or (2) alter the finding, maintaining the sentence, or with or without altering the finding, reduce the sentence, or (3) with or without such reduction and with or without altering the finding, alter the nature of the sentence, but, subject to the provisions of section 106 sub-section (3), not so as to enhance the same;

(c) in an appeal from any other order, alter or reverse such order;

(d) make any amendment or any consequential or incidental order that may be just or proper.

(2) Nothing herein contained shall authorize the Court to alter or reverse the verdict of a jury, unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge, or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him.

1138. Powers and duties of Appellate Court :—It is the duty of the Appellate Court, in dealing with an appeal preferred to it, to consider the evidence both oral and documentary, and to apply its mind to the case before recording a judgment therein. Where the Appellate Court fails to do this, the judgment cannot be said to be a judgment in accordance with law—Narain, 21 Cr.L.J. 648, 57 I.C. 664, 1 P.L.T. 716. It is the duty of the Appellate Court to look into the evidence of both sides in order to come to a decision. Where the Appellate Court did not think it necessary to deal with the evidence adduced by the defence in the case, because no reference to that evidence was made by the counsel for the appellant, and that evidence was practically ignored by him, held that the Appellate Court acted illegally in doing so—Fidoi Hossein, 40 Cal. 376, 14 Cr.L.J. 419. The rule by which a Criminal Appellate Court is to be guided in dealing with a criminal appeal is that it has to come to a conclusion for itself upon the evidence on the record, assisted so far as it might be by such reasons or arguments as it might elicit from the conclusions and reasons contained in the judgment of the original Court. If the Appellate Court entertains any doubt about the correctness of the conviction or the commission of the offence, it should discharge the accused—Milan v. Sagai Bepari, 23 Cal. 347, Maula Baksh, 1898 P.R. 6, Ma Ka v. Po Shaw, 4 L.B.R. 340, 9 Cr.L.J. 25. It is the duty of the Appellate Court in every case to examine the evidence for itself and to give to the accused person the benefit of any reasonable doubt which it may entertain after such examination. Doubtless, an Appellate Court should not lightly disturb the conclusion of a Court of First Instance, and should give due weight to the fact that the witnesses received credit from the Court before which their depositions were given, but in every case it is the duty of an Appellate Court to arrive at an independent opinion—Yacoub, 2 Weir 535. In an appeal from a conviction and sentence, it is for the Appellate Court to be satisfied affirmatively that the prosecution case is substantially true and that the guilt of the accused has been established beyond all reasonable doubt. It is not for the appellants to satisfy the Appellate Court that the first Court had come to a wrong finding—Kanchan v. Emp., 42 Cal. 374.

When an inspection of the scene of the occurrence is material either to the case for the prosecution or for the defence, it is desirable that the Appellate Court should inspect the spot—Bhagwan Kaur, 1911 P.W.R. 16, 12 Cr.L.J. 412, 11 I.C. 596 (F.B.).

When an Appellate Court does not dismiss an appeal summarily, it must dispose of it in the manner provided by this section. It has no power to refer to the High Court for decision on a question of law arising in an appeal—Sulaiman, 7 L.B.R. 251, 15 Cr.L.J. 667.

In dealing with a case under this section, there is no restriction on the powers of the Appellate Court to dispose of the case in any of the manners provided by this section; it can acquit the accused, or order a retrial or order the accused to be committed, etc.—Taju Pramanik v. Q. E., 25 Cal. 711; Ramprasad v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 1000 (1091) (Nag.).

Sentence :—The power of an Appellate Court to pass sentence is measured by the power of the Court from whose judgment or order the appeal has been made. Therefore, an Appellate Court when passing a sentence on appeal cannot pass a sentence which the original Court was not competent to pass—Emp. v. Muhammad Yakub, 45 All 594; Mehi Singh v. Mangal, 39 Cal. 157; Ramasami, 2 Weir 487; Q. E. v. Subbaya, 12 Mad. 451; Sitaram v Emp., 11 L.C. 788, 7 N.L.R. 109. Thus, where a second class Magistrate passed a sentence of 4 months' imprisonment, but the District Magistrate on appeal altered the sentence into a fine of Rs 400, held that the sentence passed by the Appellate Court was ultra vires, because the second class Magistrate could not have awarded a fine of Rs 400 (sec. 32)—Emp. v Muhammad Yakub, 45 All. 594.

Perusal of record .—The Appellate Court must peruse the whole record, and not merely the judgment of the Lower Court. A decision based upon a perusal of the judgment alone is not valid, and the appeal must be reheard—Abbash Ali, 14 Cr.L.J. 182 (183) (Cal). An appeal may be dismissed summarily under sec. 421 without perusal of the record, and upon perusal of the copy of the judgment alone. But under the present section, the records must be called for and perused. If the records of the case are lost, it is the duty of the Appellate Court to order a new trial—Khimat Singh, 1889 A.W.N. 55.

No dismissal for default of appearance :—If the appeal is not dismissed summarily under sec. 421, the Appellate Court is bound to peruse the record and consider whether there is any ground for interference with the acquittal or conviction, even though the appellant does not appear. The Appellate Court must dispose of the appeal on the merits, and is not entitled to dismiss an appeal for default of appearance of the appellant—Q. E. v. Pohpi, 13 All 171 (187) (F.B.); Bansi Mirdha, 50 Cal 972, 27 C.W.N. 947; Ramchandra v Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 662, 21 A.L.J. 100; Ram Bharose v. Emp., 14 A.L.J. 327, 17 Cr.L.J. 353; Shiam Bahary v. Emp., 20 Cr.L.J. 271 (Pat), Baldeo v. Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 475 (Pat.); Newa Lal v. Emp., 4 P.L.T. 552, 24 Cr.L.J. 453; Trimhak v Emp., 50 Bom. 673, 27 Cr.L.J. 1167; Kuldip v. Emp., 6 Pat. 16, 23 Cr.L.J. 351; Ratan Chand, 5 N.L.R. 76, 9 Cr.L.J. 553; Balkaran, 6 O.L.J. 370, 20 Cr.L.J. 744, 50 I.C. 152.

Adjournment .—If the hearing of the appeal is adjourned to another date, notice of the adjournment should be given to the appellant—Sham-behari, 20 Cr.L.J. 271 (Pat). Where a Magistrate disposed of an appeal before the day fixed for the adjourned hearing, and without giving notice to the appellant or his pleader, it was held that the procedure was illegal—Shanmugam v. Alagia, 2 Weir 475.

Sufficient ground for interference :—An appellant is not precisely in the same position before an Appellate Court as he is before the Court trying him, but must satisfy the Court that there is sufficient ground for interfering with the order of conviction. If no sufficient ground has been shown, it is the duty of the Appellate Court not to interfere—Sajwan, 5 All 386.

1139. Dismiss the appeal—Where an appeal is admitted and dealt with under this section, the Appellate Court can dismiss the appeal only on the merits, and has no power to dismiss it summarily (e.g. without perusing the records and without giving notice under sec 422)—Q. E. v Gopala, 1 Bom L R 225, Ram Hari v Santosh, 23 Cr.L.J 733 (Cal.), Virasami, 2 Weir 474 (475), Newa Lal v Emp., 4 P.L.T. 552, 24 Cr L J 453, A I R 1923 Pat 363, Ta Pu v Emp., 3 Bur.L.J 18, 25 Cr L.J 933. An appeal can be summarily dismissed only under sec 421, whereas sec 423 contemplates the regular hearing or consideration of the appeal which has not been summarily dismissed under sec 421.

In dismissing an appeal under this section on the merits, the Appellate Court is bound to write a judgment, and the judgment must comply with the requirements of sections 424 and 367. On failure to do so, the judgment may be set aside and the appeal directed to be re-heard—Q. E. v Gopala, 1 Bom.L.R 225.

1140. Right of parties to be heard—If the appellant is present or is represented by a pleader, the appellant in person or his pleader must be heard—Q. E. v Pohpi, 13 All. 171 (187) (F B), 20 Cr.L.J 271. But where the Appellate Court disposed of the appeal on the merits after perusing the records and considering the grounds of appeal, the judgment of the Appellate Court would not be set aside on the mere ground that the pleader for the accused was not heard in the Appellate Court (the pleader being prevented from appearing in time on account of a railway strike)—Olayet Khan v. K. E., 1 Pat. 589 (590), 24 Cr.L.J. 118.

If the appellant is in jail and is not represented by a pleader, he may be heard in person—Kotina, 2 Weir 472 (473); and the Appellate Court has power to direct that the prisoner be brought before it—Anonymous, 2 Weir 473. If the appellant, who is in jail, is not represented by a pleader, and if on receipt of the notice under sec 422, he desires to be heard in person, he must be allowed to appear in person at the hearing of the appeal, and the Appellate Court must arrange for the appellant to be produced in Court—Lal Bahadur v. Emp., 50 All 543, 26 A L J. 275, 29 Cr.L.J 384 (385) (F.B.), dissenting from Q. E. v. Pohpi, 13 All 171 (F.B.) and Ram Prasad, 4 O W.N 638, 28 Cr.L.J. 679, where it has been held that an appellant from jail has no right to appear at the hearing of the appeal. The Sind Court is of opinion that an appellate in jail cannot appear in person in Court—Loung, 20 S L R 189, 27 Cr.L.J. 933 (934).

A complainant cannot claim as of right to be heard in the appeal. The matter is one which may be left in each case to the discretion of the Court—Anonymous, 2 Weir 476, 7 M.H.C.R. App. 42. A private prosecutor as such has no right to be heard, but the Court may grant permission in any particular case—Akbar v. Emp., 1886 P R. 29, Dowlatram, 9 C.W.N. 1v.

If the Public Prosecutor does not appear on behalf of the Government, a vakil privately instructed to support the prosecution may be heard—Anonymous, 2 Weir 476.

The counsel for the appellant has a right of reply—Promoda, 11 C.W.N. xlii. There is nothing in the language of this section to preclude the appellant or his pleader from replying to the arguments of the Public Prosecutor, and as a matter of principle such right of reply should be conceded to him. The practice of the High Court has been uniformly in favour of allowing this right to the appellant or his pleader—Buta Singh, 18 Cr.L.J. 3, 1917 P.R. 21; Amanat v. Nagendra, 38 Cal. 307. The Oudh Court holds that although the appellant's counsel has no right of reply, still it is a privilege which should not ordinarily be refused—Prag v. Emp., 11 O.L.J. 693, 1 O.W.N. 473, 25 Cr.L.J. 1169; Bahra v. Emp., 25 Cr.L.J. 1173 (Oudh).

1141. Clause (a) :—Appeal from acquittal.—Clause (a) of this section can apply only to the High Court, because section 417 which provides for appeals against orders of acquittal requires that such appeals shall lie to the High Court—Rangasami v. Narasimhulu, 7 Mad 213, 2 Weir 477. Therefore, a Sessions Judge has no power to set aside the order of acquittal and direct the commitment of the accused to the Court of Session—Baroda v. Karait, 2 C.W.N. cclvi; or to direct further inquiry to be made in a case of acquittal by a Magistrate. Such a power can be exercised only by the High Court—Baijanath v. Gauri Kanta, 20 Cal. 633. So also a District Magistrate has no power to entertain an appeal from an order of acquittal, and is incompetent to reverse a Subordinate Magistrate's order of acquittal and direct a rehearing—Rangasami v. Narasimhulu, 7 Mad. 213; Sami Ayya, 26 Mad 478.

As to the grounds on which the High Court will interfere with an order of acquittal, see Note 1120 under sec. 417.

An appeal against an order of acquittal in a case tried by jury must be supported by a ground which is covered by sec. 418, which provides, in cases of trial by jury, for an appeal on a matter of law only. Where the Local Government appealed against an order of acquittal, and the grounds upon which the appeal was sought to be preferred were questions of fact, the High Court rejected the appeal—Parmeshur, 10 Cal. 1029.

The High Court, in exercising jurisdiction in the matter of appeals against acquittals, should confine its exercise to the particular acquittal complained of by the Government. At the same time it would not be proper for the High Court to consider the appeal on grounds not contained in the objection urged on behalf of the Government—Q. E. v. Karigowda, 19 Bom 51 (68).

Acquittal :—This clause confers a power to direct further inquiry only in respect of a case of an appeal from an order of acquittal, and not in a case in which an order of discharge or dismissal may have been passed—Charoobala v. Barendra, 27 Cal. 126.

‘Find him guilty’ :—These words do not necessarily mean that the Appellate Court can find the accused guilty only of the offence of which he has been acquitted by the trial Court, and not of any other offence. The Appellate Court can certainly convict the accused of another offence or of a minor offence covered by the offence of which he has been acquitted, under the provisions of sec. 237 or 238, read with sec. 423, provided no prejudice has been caused to the accused—Emp. v. Ismail, 52 Bom 385, 29 Cr.L.J. 403 (405), 30 Bom. L.R. 330, Kauromal, 25 Cr L J. 1057 (1059), A.I.R. 1925 Sind 105.

1142. Clause (b) :—Appeal from conviction :—If an accused, who is charged with several offences, is convicted of some of the offences and acquitted of the others, and appeals, the case is one of ‘appeal from conviction’ and not of appeal from acquittal. consequently sec. 417 does not apply—Emp. v. Jabanulla, 23 Cal 975 (978, 980).

In an appeal from a conviction, the Appellate Court may, if it likes, take further evidence (section 428) but cannot direct further inquiry—Muhammad Ata, 19 A.L.J. 961, 23 Cr.L.J. 402

‘Reverse the finding and sentence’ —Before an Appellate Court can set aside a conviction, it must be satisfied that the conviction is wrong. It seems a logical consequence of this that when without finding the conviction to be wrong, the Appellate Court sets it aside, the appellate order would be ultra vires—Emp. v. Sheikh Rasul, 17 C P L R. 97.

An Appellate Court is not competent to set aside a conviction merely on the ground that all the witnesses cited for the defence have not been examined. The proper course in such a case is to have the evidence taken of the other witnesses before disposing of the appeal—Turaka Pakir, 2 Weir 481. A conviction ought not to be reversed unless the admission of the rejected evidence would have affected the result of the trial—Imp. v. Pitambar, 2 Bom 61.

The proper procedure on appeal in a case where the Lower Court had refused to take the defence of the accused, is to set aside the conviction and sentence passed by the Lower Court, and order the Magistrate to begin the proceedings anew against the accused from the stage when his evidence was refused—Gohar v Emp, 1884 P R 28

After reversing the finding and sentence, the Appellate Court can order the accused either to be retried or to be committed for trial. The Appellate Court cannot itself frame a charge against the accused, and hold a regular trial—G. C Sircar v K E, 3 Rang 68, 4 Bur L J 29, 26 Cr. L J. 1119

Power to acquit —When an Appellate Court sets aside a verdict of the jury on the ground of misdirection it is open to that Court to acquit the accused. At the same time, as a matter of practice the proper course in such cases is to direct a retrial. It is only in special circumstances that an appellate Court would be justified in acquitting—Dhiraji v. Alasi, 24 A L J 506, 27 Cr L J 785

1143. Re-trial :—A Sessions Judge has power to order a new trial when the case comes before him in appeal. This power should however be sparingly exercised and a retrial should not be ordered unless there are grave reasons for doing so—Mohan Lal, 13 A L J 477, 16 Cr.L.J. 433, 29 I C 65.

Before quashing a conviction and ordering a new trial on the ground that though the accused was shown by the evidence to have committed some offence, he has been convicted under a wrong section, the Appellate Court must come to a certain conclusion as to the offence which the accused was shown by the evidence to have committed, and it ought to consider whether, if the evidence showed that the accused should properly have been convicted of another offence than that he was charged with, he would be prejudiced by amending the conviction. Before ordering a retrial, the Appellate Court is bound to see what possible object could be served by a fresh trial—Iyachikone, 2 Weir 480.

When retrial may be ordered—A retrial may be ordered where the trial is held to be illegal on the ground of want of jurisdiction of the Court that tried the case—Q. E v Sukha, 8 All. 14; Hamdu, 3 Bur L T. 9, 8 I.C 594, 11 Cr.L.J 684. Thus, where an offence triable only by a Magistrate of the 1st class or Court of Session was tried by a second class Magistrate, the Appellate Court may order the accused to be retried by a 1st class Magistrate or by the Court of Session—Q E v. Sukha, 8 All 14 (17). (In Abdul Gani v Emp., 29 Cal. 412, it has been held that where a trial was void for want of jurisdiction, it is not necessary for the Appellate Court to order a retrial; and therefore where the Appellate Court in such a case merely discharged the accused and did not order a retrial, the omission to pass such order would not prevent the Magistrate from taking further proceedings against the accused). The power of the Appellate Court is not confined to cases where the conviction and sentence are set aside for want of jurisdiction in the trying Magistrate. It may order a retrial if it is of opinion that much necessary evidence had not been adduced and much documentary evidence had not been exhibited in the trial Court, and that a full and complete inquiry into the real facts is advisable—Salish Chandra v Q E, 27 Cal. 172 (174); Jeremiah v Vas, 36 Mad 457 (468). If in an appeal from a conviction the Judge finds that the evidence discloses the commission of a more serious offence, he may set aside the conviction and sentence and order the accused to be retried by a Court of competent jurisdiction or committed for trial, according to the nature of the evidence against him—Dari Roy, 11 C.W.N. c. A retrial would be proper where the accused was rightly acquitted of one offence, but the Appellate Court comes to the conclusion that he ought to have been tried for another, or where persons who ought not to have been tried together have been so tried—Jeremiah v Vas, 36 Mad. 457 (468). If the Appellate Court is of opinion that the appellant ought to have been convicted of an offence different from that with which he was charged in the Lower Court, the Appellate Court ought to annul the conviction and order a retrial—Ram Prasad, 1882 A.W.N. 112. A retrial may be ordered in a case in which the Appellate Court sets aside the conviction on the ground of misdirection to the jury—Sadhu Sheikh v. Emp., 4 C.W.N. 576 (582). A retrial will be ordered if there was a misjoinder of charges in the trial Court, and the Judge's charge to the jury was defective—Bircndra v. Emp., 30 Cal. 822 (830). An Appellate Court in discharging the accused on the ground of misjoinder of parties has power to add a direction that the accused should be retried—Kumudini Kanta, 28 Cal. 104; Hamdu, 3 Bur.L.T. 9, 8 I.C. 594. A retrial ought to be ordered if it is found that the accused has not been properly convicted—Abdool v. Khatir, 3 C.W.N. 332. An Appellate Court may order a retrial on the ground that the trial Court had omitted to consider an important piece of documentary evidence, and that there was a gross mistake in drawing up the charge—Sheoparsan, 28 Cr.L.J. 693 (Pat.) Where the Lower Court has committed an error in procedure in convicting the accused upon evidence which was not given in their presence, the Appellate Court is competent to order a retrial—Pera Naicken, 2 Weir 481 (482), so also, a retrial may be ordered if the Appellate Court is of opinion that in the trial Court there was an irregularity in the procedure by which material evidence was excluded—Sadashir, Ratanlal 938 (939). A Sessions Judge has power to direct a retrial to be had upon a charge framed in whatever manner he thinks fit, on the ground that the accused has been misled in their defence by the absence of a charge or by a defect in the charge—Sarat Chandra v. Emp., 7 C.W.N. 301, see also Manna, 9 N.L.R. 42, 14 Cr.L.J. 230. Where the trial Court has failed to record a judgment in conformity with section 367, the proper procedure for the Appellate Court is to reverse the order of the Court below and to remand the case for a trial de novo—Karupiah, 1920 M.W.N. 120, 21 Cr.L.J. 52, 54 I.C. 404.

Where the Sessions Judge on appeal annuls the conviction of the accused on the ground of want of jurisdiction of the Magistrate who tried the case, but omits to order a new trial, the Judge is not precluded from passing such order subsequently. The order of retrial does not amount to an alteration of the judgment annulling the conviction, within the meaning of sec. 369—In re Ram Reddi, 3 Mad. 48.

Where the High Court on appeal set aside the verdict of the jury who convicted the accused, and observing that it would be open to the Crown to proceed further with the case if so advised, directed the petitioner to be released on bail until fresh trial if any, it was held that the order amounted to an order of retrial—Beni Madhab v. Emp., 46 Cal. 212, 23 C.W.N. 94, 20 Cr.L.J. 225.

Scope of retrial:—Where an Appellate Court reverses the verdict of a jury and orders a retrial, such retrial, unless the Appellate Court has limited the scope, must be taken to be one upon all the charges originally framed—Krishna Dhan v. Q. E., 22 Cal. 377, Nizamuddin v. Emp., 40 Cal. 163. But it cannot be laid down as a general rule that a retrial necessarily opens up to the whole case. In cases falling within sec. 236 of this Code, where a retrial is ordered without any express limitation, it must be taken to mean the retrial of the whole case. But in cases not falling under sec. 236, that is, where an accused person is charged at one trial with distinct offences constituted by distinct acts, a different principle would apply—Krishna Dhan v. Q. E., supra. In cases falling within sec 236, there is one set of facts which may be viewed in different ways. When a retrial is ordered, the whole facts are necessarily reopened and nothing can prevent the jury in the second trial from coming to any verdict that they consider right upon the facts proved before them. But where there are two different sets of facts and a verdict has been given on one set which no one impugns, then there is no reason why, when an appeal is brought on the other set of facts, the order for retrial should reopen both—Abdul Hamid v. Emp., 6 Pat 208, 27 Cr.L.J. 1100 (1102).

It is doubtful whether the Appellate Court can order a retrial of the accused for a graver offence than that for which he has been convicted—Bir Singh, 28 P.L.R. 166, 28 Cr.L.J. 575. Where an order of remand is passed by an Appellate Court under section 423, the Court cannot restrict the evidence to be taken to that mentioned in its order, but it should order the case to be retried in view of the instructions contained in its order. The accused is entitled to adduce such additional evidence as he may desire—Mir Sarwarjan, 3 C.L.J. 303. Thus, where in an appeal from a conviction, the Sessions Judge set aside the conviction and ordered a retrial, but at the same time directed that the evidence already on the record should be treated as evidence in the case, it was held that the direction was contrary to the provisions of secs. 423 and 428 and was therefore illegal—Bhado, 3 P.L.W. 224, 19 Cr.L.J. 77, 43 I.C. 109.

When retrial should not be ordered—The mere fact that the Appellate Court finds the decision of the Lower Court not so satisfactory as it should have been does not authorise the Appellate Court to pass an order remanding the case to the Lower Court with instructions to write out a proper judgment—Tara Chand v. Emp., 32 Cal. 1069. Where a Sessions Judge on appeal thinks that the evidence of some more witnesses, who were not examined in the Lower Court, is necessary, he should proceed under sec 428 (1) and cannot order retrial on that ground—Emp. v. Luchman, 31 Cal 710, Iswar Prasad, 16 A.L.J. 325, 19 Cr.L.J. 485, 45 I.C. 149. Where the prosecution wanted to let in evidence necessary to prove the offence, but the Magistrate refused to take that evidence, stating that it was unnecessary, the case was a proper one in which retrial could be ordered or in which the Court could properly call for additional evidence under sec 428; but as a new trial would involve much unnecessary delay and expense, it is more convenient to order additional evidence to be taken than to order a retrial—Jeremiah v. Vas, 36 Mad 457 (470). A retrial should not be ordered with the object of enabling the prosecution to fill up deficiencies in the evidence for the prosecution—Hamdu Meah, 3 Bur. L.T. 9, 8 I.C. 594, 11 Cr.L.J. 684. Where the evidence recorded by the Magistrate is as full as the law requires and there is no irregularity in the procedure, it is not competent to a Sessions Judge on appeal to order a retrial. He must consider the case on the evidence before him and proceed to judgment—Maganlal, Ratanlal 530, Boudville, 1 Bur L.J. 32; the mere fact that an inadmissible or irrelevant evidence has been admitted by the Lower Court does not justify a retrial. Such evidence may be left out of consideration—Boudville, 1 Bur.L.J. 32; Wafadar, 21 Cal. 955 (1970). Where there is no evidence on the record to warrant a conviction for the offence charged, an order for retrial is not justified—Ramprasad v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 1090 (Nag.). The Appellate Court ought not to send the case back for retrial, unless there is some material already on the record tending to indicate that the offence has been committed, or unless the Appellate Court was given by the prosecution sufficient assurance indicating that there would be produced practically unimpeachable evidence of the offence if a retrial is ordered—Mogambara, 28 M.L.J. 379, 17 Cr.L.J. 183.

By a Court of competent jurisdiction:—Under this section, when an Appellate Court orders a retrial, it can specify the Court by which the appellant is to be retried. There is nothing in this section which prevents such specification of the Court—Kasturbhai, Ratanlal 367

If the Appellate Court finds that the accused had committed an offence triable by a Magistrate of the first class but has been tried by a 2nd class Magistrate through oversight or under a misapprehension, the Appellate Court may order the accused to be retried by a Court competent to try the offence i.e., by a first class Magistrate—Sukha, 8 All. 14 (17). Even if the Lower Court was competent to try the offence, the Appellate Court may order the retrial by another Court of competent jurisdiction—Shaik Ali, L.B.R. (1893—1900) 238.

Under the provisions of this section, the retrial, if ordered, must be by a Court of competent jurisdiction 'subordinate to the Appellate Court,' and therefore an Appellate Court cannot direct a case to be retried by itself—Pakira Ratanlal 982, Dhiraji v. Akasi, 24 A.L.J. 506, 27 Cr.L.J. 785. But in Manikla, 30 Mad. 228 and Vedakadeth Kanaran, 2 Weir 481, it has been held that the words 'Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such Appellate Court' are not to be taken as words of limitation, and do not exclude the power of the Appellate Court of itself trying the offender when the offence is within the jurisdiction of the Appellate Court. But if the accused has been tried before a jury, and the High Court, on appeal, sets aside the conviction on the ground of misdirection, the accused is entitled to be re-tried before a jury, and as a matter of procedure and in justice to the accused, this course should be adopted. It is doubtful whether the High Court can, under this section, retry the case itself—Sadhu Sheikh, 4 C.W.N. 576 (581, 582)

The Appellate Court may order the retrial to be held by any Court of competent jurisdiction. The High Court has power under this section to order a retrial of the appeal by the Lower Appellate Court—1913 P.L.R. 7, 13 Cr.L.J. 737

1144. Order of commitment —If the Appellate Court finds that the accused has committed an offence which the Lower Court was not competent to try, the Appellate Court may order retrial by a Court of competent jurisdiction; and if there is no Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to the Appellate Court, it ought to direct the commitment of the accused to the Sessions—Chinna, 2 Weir 484 (485). Where the accused who has committed an offence triable solely by the Sessions Court, has been tried by a Magistrate, the Appellate Court is competent to direct a committal to the Sessions—Q. E. v. Sukha, 8 All. 14 (17); Hasan Raza v. Emp., 20 A.L.J. 568. In Q. E. v. Sukha, supra, Brodhurst J expressed the opinion that an Appellate Court can order a commitment only where the offence committed by the accused is triable exclusively by the Court of Session. But this view has been dissented from in the following cases, where it has been laid down that even if the offence be not exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions, the Appellate Court is still competent to direct a committal to the Sessions—Misri Lal v. Lachmi, 23 Cal. 350 (351); Q. E. v. Maula Bakhsh, 15 All 205 (206), Abdul Rahiman, 16 Bom. 580 (584). This section gives the Appellate Court the power to order an accused person to be committed to the Sessions, when it considers that that is the procedure which should have been adopted by the Magistrate in the case—Q. E. v. Abdul Rahman, 16 Bom 580 (584). Thus, a commitment may be ordered by the Appellate Court, if it is of opinion that the Magistrate, though of competent jurisdiction to try the case, was not competent to punish the accused adequately—Dani, 1895 P.R. 16; Abdul Rahman, 16 Bom 580 (584).

Where the Appellate Court directs a commitment to the Court of Session, an investigation preliminary to commitment is not necessary. The commitment can be made on the evidence already recorded—Anonymous, 2 Weir 479

An order of commitment passed by the Sessions Judge on appeal under this clause can be revised by the High Court under sec 439—Ram Samugh v. Emp., 11 O L J. 748, 1 O W.N. 525, 25 Cr.L.J. 1375

Commitment to itself—The Appellate Court has power of ordering the accused appellant to be committed to the Court of Session, even though the Court of session is the Appellate Court itself—Q. E. v. Maula Bakhsh, 15 All. 205 (207) But the Appellate Court cannot itself commit a case to itself, but, as a Court of Appeal, can only direct a competent Magistrate to make a commitment to itself. Reading this section with sec. 193 it is manifest that except in cases in which a Court of Session is expressly empowered to take cognizance of an offence as a Court of original jurisdiction, it has no power to do so unless a commitment has been made by a Magistrate duly empowered in this behalf—Maula Khan, 1907 A.W.N. 178, 6 Cr L.J. 7.

1145. Alteration of finding :—Where the accused were charged by the lower Court with several offences, and were convicted of the graver offences and acquitted of the minor charges, the Appellate Court can alter the finding of the lower Court and convict the accused of the minor charges, and acquit them of the graver offences—Golla Hannappa, 35 Mad 243. An Appellate Court can substitute a conviction for a lesser offence from that which has been held by the Court of first instance to have been committed by the accused—Jawad Husain v. Emp., 2 Luck 503, 28 Cr.L.J. 673. But in convicting an accused of an offence with which he was not charged in the lower Court, the Appellate Court can act only in accordance with the provisions of secs. 237 and 238—Padmanabha, 33 Mad 264; Emp. v. Sakharani, 8 Bom L.R. 120; G. C. Sircar v. Emp., 3 Rang. 68, 4 Bur.L.J. 29, 26 Cr.L.J. 1119; Mahabir v. Emp., 49 All. 120, 24 A.L.J. 998, 27 Cr L.J. 1118. Thus, where on an appeal from a conviction of murder, the Appellate Court comes to the conclusion that the offence of murder is not proved but that there is evidence on the record to support a conviction for an offence against property, the Appellate Court ought to acquit the accused of murder, but it cannot alter the conviction of murder into a conviction of an offence against property, because the latter offence is so widely different from the former that it is illegal under sec 237 or 238 to convict the accused of the latter offence when he is charged only with the former—Wallu v. Crown, 4 Lah. 373; Ghaus v. Emp., 7 Lah. 561, 27 P L R. 610, 27 Cr L.J. 1004, Q. E. v Yusuf, 20 All 107. It is not open to an Appellate Court to find a man guilty of the abetment of an offence, on a charge of the substantive offence itself—Padmanabha, 33 Mad 264. Where the Court of Session had convicted an accused of an offence under sec 409 I. P. C. and the High Court on appeal found that the conviction was not sustainable under that section, the Court refused to alter the finding into a conviction for some other offence (e.g., an offence under sec 161 I. P. C.) for which the accused had not been charged or tried and which was of an entirely different nature from the offence with which he was charged—Imdad Khan, 8 All. 120. When the accused was charged with and convicted of an offence under sec 457, I P C. and on appeal the Sessions Judge altered the charge and recorded a conviction under sec 411, I P. C., held that the Appellate Court had no power to so alter the charge as to make it necessary for the accused to meet an entirely different case from that with which he was charged in the trial Court—Mula v. Emp., 23 A.L.J. 924, 26 Cr.L.J. 1494. But where the prosecution has established certain acts constituting an offence, and the Court has misapplied the law to those acts by charging and convicting the accused for an offence other than that for which he should have been properly charged, and it appears that in spite of such error of the Court, the accused has by his defence endeavoured to meet the accusation of the commission of those acts, then the Appellate Court may alter the charge or finding and convict him for an offence which those acts properly constitute, if the accused is not at all prejudiced by the alteration of finding—Lala Ojha v Q E, 26 Cal 863, Amrit, 1890 A W N 86. Such an error is one of form rather than of substance, and the alteration by an Appellate Court of the charge or finding into a more serious offence would not necessitate a retrial for that offence. Therefore, where a person is convicted of an attempt to commit an offence, the Appellate Court, if it thinks that the acts of the accused constitute the substantive offence itself, may convict him of the substantive offence without ordering a retrial—Lala Ojha v. Q E, supra. Where the accused has been convicted by the trial Court of an offence under sec 380 I P. C., the Appellate Court can alter the conviction into one under sec. 403 I.

Code, as the two offences are of the same nature and the appellant cannot be taken by surprise by such a procedure—Biru v. Emp., 30 Cr.L.J. 413 (414), 11 Lah.L.J. 113.

The Appellate Court in altering a finding under this clause cannot act in contravention of the provisions of section 239. Thus, the petitioner and four others were tried jointly, the other four being convicted of an offence under section 454 of the I. P. Code and the petitioner was convicted of abetment thereof. On appeal the Appellate Court acquitted the petitioner of the offence of abetment but convicted him under secs 411 and 414 I. P. C. Held, that the conviction by the Appellate Court cannot be maintained, because under sec. 239 the petitioner could not have been tried in the original Court jointly with the four accused under sections 411 and 414 I. P. C., while the latter were being tried under section 454 I. P. C.—Sahib Singh v. K. E., 1905 P.R. 38, 1905 P.L.R. 115.

Where an accused was convicted of a composite offence, the Appellate Court may alter the conviction into one of the elements of the composite offence. Thus, where the accused was convicted of house-breaking by night, under sec 457 I. P. C. and the Appellate Court altered the conviction to one under sec. 414 I. P. C., it was held that sec 457 I. P. C. applied to a composite offence, and under sec 238 of this Code an accused may be convicted of any element of the composite offence, and that under this section it was competent to the Appellate Court to alter the finding—Balu, Ratanlal 293

Under clause (b) the Appellate Court can, in an appeal from a conviction, alter the finding of the Lower Court and find the appellant guilty of any offence of which he has been acquitted by that Court. Sec. 417 does not stand in the way, because that section applies only where there has been a complete acquittal and not where an appeal is preferred in a case in which the Magistrate has acquitted the accused of one offence but convicted him of another—Q. E. v. Jabanulla, 23 Cal. 975 (979, 980); Sardar, 34 All. 115 (117). Thus, where the Magistrate acquitted the accused under sec. 148 I. P. C. and convicted him under sec. 325 I. P. C., it was open to the Sessions Judge to alter the conviction under sec 325 into one under sec. 148 I. P. C.—Appanna v. Pithani, 34 Mad. 545. Similarly, where in such a case the Lower Court has found only one of the accused guilty of murder and acquitted the others of murder but convicted them of other offences, an appeal against the conviction of murder opens out the entire case and the Appellate Court may find all the three persons guilty of murder—Dulli v. Emp., 16 A.L.J. 918, 20 Cr.L.J. 22, 48 I.C. 502. Where in the trial Court the accused was charged with murder (sec. 302 I. P. C.) but was convicted of culpable homicide (sec. 304), the appellate Court can convict the accused of murder—On Shive v. Emp., 1 Rang. 436, 25 Cr.L.J. 247.

If the Appellate Court finds that the sentence is illegal or inadequate, and does not think it expedient to order a new trial, he may alter the conviction in order to legalise the sentence—K. E. v. Kyaw Hla, 3 L.B.R. 112, 3 Cr.L.J. 348.

In altering the finding of the Lower Court, the Appellate Court is not bound by any preliminaries of complaint under sec. 198. Thus, on an appeal from a conviction under sec 182 I P. C the Appellate Court is competent to alter the conviction to one under sec. 500 I. P. C. notwithstanding that there was no complaint by the aggrieved party—Emp. v. Gur Narain, 25 All 534

The word 'finding' is not limited to a finding upon a point of law, as distinct from a finding upon a point of fact—Mahangu Singh, 3 P.L.J 565, 19 Cr.L.J. 735.

1146. Alteration when improper—(1) It is improper for the Appellate Court to alter the finding so as to convict the accused of an offence of an entirely different character. Thus, under the provisions of secs. 237 and 238, it is illegal to alter a conviction under sec. 376 I. P. C. into one under sec. 366 I P. C., because the charge under the later section involves different elements and different questions of fact from the former—Emp. v Sakharam, 8 Bom L.R. 120, G C. Sircar v. K. E., 3 Rang 68, 4 Bur.L.J. 29, 26 Cr L J 1119, so also, it is illegal to alter a conviction under sec. 379 I. P. C. into one under sec 143 I P C—Jatu v Mahabir, 27 Cal 660. So again, it is improper to alter a conviction under secs 211 and 109 I P. C into one under sec. 193 I. P. C—Manoranjan, 3 C.W.N. 367; or to alter a conviction under sec 468 I. P. C into a conviction under 471 I P C—Akbar v. Emp., 8 N.L.J 87, 26 Cr.L.J. 1358; or to alter a conviction under sec. 147 into one under secs. 448 and 323 I. P. C.—Yakub Ali v. Lethu, 30 Cal. 288; or to alter a conviction for wrongful confinement into one for assault—Rameswar v. Jogi, 5 C.W.N. 296. See Note 1145

(2) It would be improper and unfair to the accused for the Appellate Court to convict him of a more serious offence to which he had never pleaded at the trial, especially if the new offence was not cognate to the offence for which he was tried and convicted, and if there were circumstances of aggravation to which he had not pleaded guilty—Lala Ojha v Q E., 26 Cal. 863, K. E. v Po Yin, 3 L B R 232

(3) An Appellate Court is not competent to alter the finding of a Magistrate, so as to convict an accused person of an offence which the Lower Court is not competent to try—Pershad, 7 All 414 (F.B)

(4) When a person has been charged with a certain offence and has been convicted of that offence, the Appellate Court cannot, on finding that the conviction is not sustainable, convict the accused of abetment of that offence—Mahabir v Emp., 24 A L J. 993, 49 All 120, 27 Cr L J. 1118, Padmanabha, 33 Mad. 264; Rcg v Chand Nur, 11 B H C.R 240. See Note 771 under sec 238.

Notice to appellant—If a Judge on appeal finds that the evidence recorded discloses a different offence, he may alter the finding of the Court below; but in doing so, he ought to give intimation to the accus

Code, as the two offences are of the same nature and the appellant cannot be taken by surprise by such a procedure—Bura v. Emp., 30 Cr.L.J. 413 (414), 11 Lah.L.J. 113

The Appellate Court in altering a finding under this clause cannot act in contravention of the provisions of section 239. Thus, the petitioner and four others were tried jointly, the other four being convicted of an offence under section 454 of the I. P. Code and the petitioner was convicted of abetment thereof. On appeal the Appellate Court acquitted the petitioner of the offence of abetment but convicted him under secs 411 and 414 I. P. C. Held, that the conviction by the Appellate Court cannot be maintained, because under sec. 239 the petitioner could not have been tried in the original Court jointly with the four accused under sections 411 and 414 I. P. C., while the latter were being tried under section 454 I. P. C.—Sahib Singh v. K. E., 1905 P.R. 38, 1905 P.L.R. 115.

Where an accused was convicted of a composite offence, the Appellate Court may alter the conviction into one of the elements of the composite offence. Thus, where the accused was convicted of house-breaking by night, under sec. 457 I. P. C. and the Appellate Court altered the conviction to one under sec. 414 I. P. C., it was held that sec. 457 I. P. C. applied to a composite offence, and under sec. 238 of this Code an accused may be convicted of any element of the composite offence, and that under this section it was competent to the Appellate Court to alter the finding—Balu, Ratanlal 293.

Under clause (b) the Appellate Court can, in an appeal from a conviction, alter the finding of the Lower Court and find the appellant guilty of any offence of which he has been acquitted by that Court. Sec. 417 does not stand in the way, because that section applies only where there has been a complete acquittal and not where an appeal is preferred in a case in which the Magistrate has acquitted the accused of one offence but convicted him of another—Q. E. v. Jabanulla, 23 Cal. 975 (979, 980); Sardar, 34 All 115 (117). Thus, where the Magistrate acquitted the accused under sec. 148 I. P. C. and convicted him under sec. 325 I. P. C., it was open to the Sessions Judge to alter the conviction under sec. 325 into one under sec. 148 I. P. C.—Appanna v. Pithani, 34 Mad 545. Similarly, where in such a case the Lower Court has found only one of the accused guilty of murder and acquitted the others of murder but convicted them of other offences, an appeal against the conviction of murder opens out the entire case and the Appellate Court may find all the three persons guilty of murder—Dulli v. Emp., 16 A.L.J. 918, 20 Cr.L.J. 22, 48 I.C. 502. Where in the trial Court the accused was charged with murder (sec. 302 I. P. C.) but was convicted of culpable homicide (sec. 304), the appellate Court can convict the accused of murder—On Shive v. Emp., 1 Rang. 436, 25 Cr.L.J. 247.

If the Appellate Court finds that the sentence is illegal or inadequate, and does not think it expedient to order a new trial, he may alter the has no power to alter a sentence in this way—Lachmi Kant, 18 All. 301. Dhansang, 18 Bom. 751.

(5) Where the Lower Court imposed fine and imprisonment, and the Appellate Court, in lieu of imprisonment, imposed an additional fine, thus increasing the amount of fine imposed by the Lower Court, it amounted to an enhancement of sentence—Ramasami, 2 Weir 487.

(6) The addition of imprisonment by the Appellate Court to a sentence of fine only imposed by the Lower Court is an enhancement of sentence. The appellant was convicted of causing simple hurt and was sentenced to fine only; on appeal, the Appellate Court altered the conviction to one of causing grievous hurt (which is punishable with imprisonment and fine) under Sec. 325 I. P. C. and in order to make the sentence legal under that section, recorded a sentence of one day's rigorous imprisonment. It was held that the Appellate Court had no power to so enhance the sentence—Chandalavada Ramanappa, 2 Weir 486.

(7) The addition of a sentence of whipping by the Appellate Court, although the sentence of imprisonment is reduced, that is, the alteration of a part of the imprisonment into a sentence of whipping, amounts to an enhancement of the sentence—Appu 2 Weir 487. The Rangoon High Court also holds that the alteration of the whole or part of the sentence of imprisonment into a sentence of whipping amounts to an enhancement—In re Kyang 30 Cr L J 328 (329). On the contrary it has been held in Q. v Banda Ali, 15 W.R. 7, that the alteration of a sentence of whipping into one of imprisonment may amount to an enhancement of punishment. In this case their Lordships expressed a doubt as to which sentence was the more severe. 'The Legislature has not supplied us with any data from which the comparative severity of the two sentences of whipping and rigorous imprisonment can be determined, and it is impossible to say how many lashes would be equivalent to a sentence of rigorous imprisonment for a specified period'—Mitter J. In fact the two sentences are of so dissimilar a nature that they do not admit of comparison. Recently a Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court has attempted to find out a standard of comparison, and by applying the provisions of sec 395, has laid down that the substitution of 30 stripes for a sentence of one year's imprisonment, or the substitution of 25 stripes for a sentence of 9 months, would not ordinarily amount to an enhancement of sentence. But a substitution of 30 stripes for a sentence of 3 months' imprisonment is manifestly an enhancement and is therefore illegal—Chit Pon, 7 Rang 319 (F B), 30 Cr L J 986 (989), 1929 Cr C 169. See also In re Kyang, supra.

(8) Where in a criminal appeal, the terms of imprisonment are reduced but a punishment of solitary confinement is imposed, the imposition of solitary confinement, though the imprisonment is lessened, amounts to an enhancement of the sentence—Peman, 1890 A W N 170.

(9) The substitution of rigorous imprisonment in place of simple imprisonment amounts to an enhancement of sentence—Emp v Muhammad Yakub Ali, 45 All 504.

(10) The Appellate Court in altering a sentence, cannot award a sentence which the original Court could not have passed. If it does so, it will amount to an enhancement of sentence. See Note 1138 ante.

What does not amount to enhancement—(1) An additional order passed by the Appellate Court directing the accused to furnish security to keep the peace does not amount to an enhancement of sentence—Miran Bakhsh, 1905 P.R. 21, 2 Cr.L.J. 190; Zafar Husain, 20 Cr.L.J. 302 (All); Maharaj Singh, 20 Cr.L.J. 760 (Nag). Such power has been expressly conferred on a Court of Appeal by section 106 (3) and a Judge is competent in appeal to demand such security—Ibid.

(2) An order passed by the Appellate Court directing the accused person to pay the costs of the complainant under sec. 31 of the Court Fees Act (now 546A of this Code) does not amount to an enhancement of sentence, because the order of costs is not a penalty or sentence passed in the case but is an incidental order under clause (d) of this section—Emp. v. Karuppanna, 29 Mad. 188, Thimiah v. K. E., 47 Mad 914 (915). Although the fees ordered to be paid are to be recovered as if they were fines, still there is no warrant for treating the same as part of the fine imposed as punishment for the offences—In re Vemuri Seshanna, 26 Mad 421, Thimiah v. K. E., 47 Mad 914 (915).

(3) Where an Appellate Court adopts the view taken by the original Court as to the acts committed by the accused, and only differs from it in its application of the law, and maintains the sentence, neither the letter nor the spirit of sec. 423 is broken by the Appellate Court in maintaining the sentence. There is no enhancement. Thus, where the accused was convicted by the trial Court for voluntarily causing hurt with a dangerous weapon under sec. 324 I.P.C., and was sentenced to 2 months' imprisonment, and in appeal the Appellate Court altered the conviction into one for simple hurt under sec. 323 I.P.C., but the sentence was maintained, held that it did not amount to an enhancement of sentence—In re Rangaswami, 53 M.L.J. 691, 28 Cr.L.J. 824 (825).

If conviction is confirmed, some sentence must be passed.—If the Court of appeal affirms a conviction, it should, if it disapproves of the sentence passed by the Lower Court, pass some other sentence, even though a nominal one. It cannot set aside the sentence absolutely while upholding the conviction. Every conviction must be followed by sentence—Lakshmbai, Ratanlal 545.

Clause (c) :—An order requiring a person to furnish security falls under this clause. The Appellate Court can either reverse (i.e., set aside) the order or alter the order, e.g., by reducing the amount of security. But an order remanding the case for fresh inquiry is bad in law. But of course fresh proceedings can be started under sec. 110 on receiving fresh information—Chandan, 30 P.L.R. 416, 30 Cr.L.J. 491.

1149. Clause (d)—Amendment :—Under this clause the Court can make any amendment that may be just or proper. Thus, where the accused was convicted under section 325 I.P.C., and on appeal the parties applied to compromise the case, the High Court acting under section 423 (d) amended the order of conviction by substituting for it an order that the offence should be compromised—Emp. v. Ram Piyari, 32 All, 153 Where the Sessions Judge had directed certain property to be handed over to the Magistrate as unclaimed property, the High Court amended the order by directing that the Magistrate should dispose of the property according to law—Abadi Begam v. Ali Husen, 1897 A W.N. 26 The Sessions Judge can amend the order of the Magistrate by directing a greater amount of property to be restored to the complainant than the amount restored by the Magistrate—Gopi Nath v. Emp, 3 A.L.J. 770, 4 Cr.L.J. 370

'Amendment' means amendment of the main order of the Court below; and the Appellate Court cannot make any amendment when there has not been an appeal against the main order of the lower Court Thus, where the Magistrate in passing a judgment of acquittal has made some unfavourable remarks about the credibility of certain witnesses, it was held that the High Court could not amend the judgment by directing those remarks to be expunged from the judgment, when there has been no appeal to the High Court against the main order of acquittal—Emp. v. Dunn, 44 All 401 (405, 406), 20 A L J 261, 23 Cr L J. 349. But this is no longer good law in view of sec 561A which empowers the High Court to pass any orders that may be just, and thus to expunge remarks from the lower Courts' judgments, irrespective of the fact whether there has been an appeal against the main order or not See Note 1214 under sec. 439, and the report of the Joint Committee cited under sec. 561A But the ruling in 44 All. 401 would apply to lower Appellate Courts, and those Courts would have no power to expunge remarks from the trial Court's judgment unless there be an appeal from the main order in the case.

1150. Incidental or consequential orders—(1) An order under sec 106 demanding security from the appellant is an incidental order Sec 106 (3) gives the Appellate Court power to pass such order in appeal, even where the original Court was not competent to do so.

(2) An order under sec. 106 passed by the Original Court may be set aside in appeal, and the appellate order setting aside the order for security is an incidental order within the meaning of this section—Abdul Wahed v Amiran, 30 Cal 101.

(3) On an appeal against an order binding over a person to keep the peace under sec. 107, the Appellate Court can reverse the order of security and order a retrial The order of retrial is an incidental order under clause (d) of sec 423 It does not fall under clause (b) because the case is not one of 'appeal from conviction,' the person proceeded against under sec 107 not being a person convicted of any offence—Bhagavat Singh v. Emp., 48 All 501, 24 A L J. 566, 27 Cr L J 945

(4) An order under sec 471 (1), directing the accused to be committed to a lunatic asylum, is clearly an order which the acquitting Court, whether original or appellate, not only has the power to make, but is bound to make under sec. 423 (d)—8 Bur.L.T. 286, 16 Cr.L.J. 670, 30 I.C. 654

(5) An order under sec. 517, 520 or 522 of the Code is a consequential or incidental order within the meaning of this clause and can be passed by the Appellate Court—Gourhari, 29 Cal. 724; Arunachala Thevan, 46 Mad. 162 (164). Therefore an order in a case of criminal misappropriation, directing restoration of property which is found to have belonged to the complainant, is clearly a consequential or incidental order and one which is under the circumstances just and proper—Gopi Nath v. Emp., 3 A.L.J. 770, 4 Cr.L.J. 370.

An order of the Appellate Court setting aside an order passed by the Lower Court under sec. 522, is an incidental order within the meaning of this clause—Uir v. Syed Ali, 19 C.W.N. 990, 16 Cr.L.J. 607. See also Gourhari, 29 Cal. 724. Where the accused was convicted under secs. 352 and 448 I. P. C. and the convicting Magistrate passed an order under sec. 522 of this Code restoring possession of the property (which was the subject matter of the offence under sec. 448 I. P. C.) to the complainant, but the accused was afterwards acquitted on appeal, it was held that the Appellate Court had power, under section 423 (d) and sec. 522 read together, to order restitution of the property to the accused—Manki v. Bhagwants, 27 All. 415.

(6) Under this clause, the Appellate Court can exercise the powers conferred by sec. 562 of the Code—Burch, 24 All. 306. 'The Court before which he is convicted' in sec. 562 is not limited to the Court of first instance, but includes the Court of appeal—Narayanaswami, 29 Mad. 567. This is now expressly provided by sub-section (2) of section 562.

(7) An order by the Appellate Court directing the accused to pay the costs of the complainant under sec. 31 of the Court Fees Act (now 546A of this Code) is no part of the penalty or sentence passed in the case and therefore not an enhancement of sentence, but is an incidental order under this clause—Emp. v. Karuppana, 29 Mad. 188; Thimiah v. K. E., 47 Mad. 914 (915). The contrary view taken in Q. E. v. Tangavelu, 22 Mad. 153, decided under the Code of 1882 which did not contain clause (d), is no longer correct.

(8) Where a case was tried by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates and the judgment was signed by one of them only, the District Magistrate on appeal, without in any way interfering with the judgment of the Bench of Magistrates, passed an order sending back the case so that the judgment might be signed by the other Magistrates, held that there was nothing wrong in the order of the District Magistrate. It was an incidental order under this clause—Gopal Das, 41 All. 217 (219).

Orders which cannot be passed :—The only consequential or incidental orders which fall within the purview of this clause are orders which follow as a matter of course being necessary complements to the main orders passed, without which the latter would be incomplete and ineffective (such as directions as to the refund of fines realised from acquitted appellants, or on the reversal of acquittals, any direction as to the restoration of compensation paid under sec. 250) for which no separate authority is needed—Emp. v. Dunn, 44 All. 401 (405). But an Appellate Court cannot award compensation under sec. 250, because such order is not a necessary complement of the main order of acquittal; only the Magistrate by whom the case is heard in the first instance can pass such order—Balli Pande v. Chittan, 28 All. 625, Mehi Singh v. Mangal, 39 Cal. 157. An order of confiscation under the Indian Forests Act VII of 1878 cannot be regarded as an order incidental on a conviction under that Act, under sec. 54 of that Act, the confiscation is regarded as a punishment in addition to any other punishment prescribed for the offence. Therefore an Appellate Court cannot pass such order—Ainuddi v. Q. E., 27 Cal. 450. The High Court cannot award the costs incurred in a revision petition filed against an order passed under Ch. XII—Veerappa v. Avudayammal, 48 Mad. 262. See this case cited in Note 478 under sec. 148.

1151. Sub-section (2):—Interference with verdict of jury :—The considerations governing an appeal from a trial held with the aid of assessors differ greatly from those governing an appeal from a trial by jury. In the latter case the appeal is restricted by the provisions of sec. 423 (2), whereas in the former case the whole case is before the Appellate Court—Champa Pasin, 29 Cr.L.J. 325 (329) (Pat). The High Court cannot alter or reverse the verdict of the jury unless it is of opinion that the verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by the Judge—Bongiri Pattakadar, 32 Mad. 179, Emp. v. Smither, 26 Mad. 1 (16), Shambhu, 10 Bom.L.R. 565; Waman, 27 Bom. 626. When the Court is of that opinion, it can reverse the verdict, but the power ought not to be exercised lightly, especially when the verdict is one of acquittal and unanimous—Shambhu, 10 Bom.L.R. 565. The High Court cannot, on an appeal from the unanimous verdict of the jury, interfere with it, in the absence of a misdirection by the Judge, when there is some circumstantial evidence of the guilt—46 Cal. 635. Where there is evidence on the record to justify the jury's verdict, and the Judge's charge to the jury was fair and accurate, and the jury arrived at an eminently reasonable conclusion, the High Court will not interfere—Babban, 4 O.W.N. 901, 28 Cr.L.J. 937.

If there has been no misdirection by the Sessions Judge nor a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him, the High Court cannot reverse the verdict, but if the High Court is of opinion that the accused should have been acquitted and the verdict was against the weight of the evidence, the High Court can direct a copy of its judgment together with a copy of the paper book to be sent to the Local Government for such action as the latter may like to make—Ram Charitar, 8 P.L.T. 691, 28 Cr.L.J. 691 (697).

"Alter or reverse" :—The word 'reverse' evidently means to set aside, to make null, the word 'after' is intended to mean the substitution of a finding of 'guilty' for 'not guilty' or vice versa. The verdict may be reversed i.e., set aside, or it may be altered, i.e., another finding may be substituted for that of the jury—Smither, 26 Mad. 1 (15).

'Erroneous':—To enable the Appellate Court to interfere with the verdict of the jury, the verdict must be erroneous. The High Court will not set aside the verdict, if it is not erroneous in spite of the misdirection—Naimuddi, 22 C.W.N. 572, 19 Cr.L.J. 649. The effect of this clause is to prevent the High Court from reversing the verdict of the jury, on account of any misdirection by the Judge or misunderstanding of the law by the jury, unless such misdirection or misunderstanding is on points material to the verdict, so that the verdict may be said to be tainted with error in the process in which it has been arrived at—Wafadar v. Q. E., 21 Cal 955 (977). The word 'erroneous' is not to be read as meaning 'wrong on the facts'. It must be read in connection with the words that follow, as meaning that the verdict has been vitiated and rendered bad or defective by reason of misdirection or misunderstanding of the law—Wafadar v. Q. E., 21 Cal 955 (977); Waman, 27 Bom 626, Lalsingh, Ratanlal 452 (454). It is the duty of the Appellate Court to ascertain whether the process or method which the Judge directed the jury to follow as to the acceptance or discarding of evidence, or as to the view taken of the law, was erroneous on any material point, but it is not the duty of the Appellate Court to determine for itself whether the verdict as a conclusion of fact was right or wrong. To hold the latter view, would be tantamount to hold that an appeal would lie upon the facts from the verdict of a jury, in the face of the provisions of sec. 418—Wafadar v. Q. E., 21 Cal. 955 (977). When there is no error in matter of law, and there was some evidence to go to the jury, the High Court cannot interfere—Choonsee, 5 W.R. 13; Jaspath v. Q. E., 14 Cal 164.

Misdirection:—See notes under sec. 297. Both secs. 423 (2) and 537 require that before the verdict can be set aside on the ground of misdirection, the Court must be satisfied that the misdirection is of such a nature that it may be reasonably supposed that the verdict was erroneous by reason of such misdirection, or in other words, there has been a failure of justice by reason of such misdirection—Ali Fakir, 25 Cal 230; Biru Mandal v. Q. E., 25 Cal 561; Shyam Sundar, 26 C.W.N. 558. In determining whether the verdict ought to be set aside and a new trial granted, on the ground of a defective summing up of the evidence, the question to be considered is not whether upon a proper summing up of the whole evidence a jury might have given a different verdict, but whether the legitimate effect of the evidence would require a different verdict. If the evidence is such that the High Court would have affirmed the conviction if the trial had been before a Judge and assessors, instead of a trial by jury, the High Court ought not to set aside a verdict given by a jury merely because the Judge has not, in summing up, given a proper caution or advice to the jury as to the weight which they might properly give to the evidence—Elahee Buksh, 5 W.R. 80 (per Peacock C.J.); followed in Jamiruddi, 29 Cal. 782.

In order to set aside a verdict of the jury, it is not sufficient to say that the conviction would be a miscarriage of justice; the appellant must further establish that such failure of justice was the result of a misdirection of the Judge to the jury—Champa Pasin, 29 Cr.L.J. 325 (332) (Pat.)

Misunderstanding.—There must be misunderstanding by the jury of the law as laid down by the Judge, the verdict will not be set aside on the ground that the counsel for the accused (and not the jury) had misunderstood the expressions used by the Judge, specially when it appeared that the expression used by the Judge was perfectly intelligible and could not have the meaning suggested by the counsel for the accused—Q E v Shib Chunder, 10 Cal. 1079.

Verdict must be set aside in its entirety—The term 'verdict' in this sub-section means a verdict on all the charges, and not merely the verdict upon each charge separately. Therefore if in a trial there are several charges in which there is an acquittal on some and a conviction on the other charges, and the verdict is found to be erroneous on appeal, the Appellate Court must set aside the verdict in its entirety. Where the Appellate Court in such a case reverses the verdict of the jury and orders a retrial, the retrial, unless the Appellate Court has limited the scope, must be taken to be one upon all the charges originally framed—Krishna Dhan v. Q. E., 22 Cal. 377, Jamiruddi, 16 C.W.N. 900, 13 Cr.L.J. 715, Bhola, 1904 P.R. 12, 1 Cr.L.J. 942.

1152. Power of High Court after reversal of verdict—Once the verdict of the jury is set aside under this sub-section there is no restriction on the power of the Appellate Court to deal with the case, of which it has complete seizin, in any of the manners provided in this section. Its power is not restricted to directing a retrial, and it may also reverse the finding and sentence and acquit or discharge the accused, or order him to be retried, or alter the finding and maintain the sentence, or, without altering the finding, reduce the sentence—Taju Pramanik v. Q. E., 25 Cal. 711. Sub-section (2) contains no provision as to what the Court is to do, or has power to do, when it reverses or alters the verdict of the jury. To ascertain that, it is necessary to revert to the language of sub-section (1), and in it no distinction is made between the powers of an Appellate Court in a case tried by jury and in any other case. And so, after reversal of the verdict of the jury, in an appeal against an acquittal, the High Court may under clause (a) order further inquiry or retrial or commitment or may find the accused guilty and pass sentence on him according to law—Emp. v E W Smither, 26 Mad. 1 (15).

Power to order retrial—The High Court, on setting aside a verdict of the jury on the ground of irregularity, has jurisdiction to order a retrial—Bani Madhab v. Emp., 46 Cal. 212. It is open to the High Court to order a new trial of the accused by a new jury, when it is found that the verdict of the jury is tainted with prejudice and is based on rumours as to the prisoner's previous conduct—Anchula Nallacharla, 2 Weir 384. But it is not always obligatory on the High Court to order a retrial, whatever may be its view as to the weight to be attached to the evidence.

that the power under sec. 423 is identical with the power under sec. 367, viz., the power of determining the facts or of ordering retrial—Q. E. v. Ram Chandra, 19 Bom. 749 (762), dissenting from 21 Cal. 955.

424. The rules contained in Chapter XXVI as to the judgment of a Criminal Court of original jurisdiction shall apply, so far as may be practicable, to the judgment of any Appellate Court other than a High Court:

Judgment of subordinate appellate Courts.

Provided that unless the Appellate Court otherwise directs, the accused shall not be brought up, or required to attend, to hear judgment delivered.

1153. Appellate judgment.—When an appeal is dismissed summarily under sec. 421, no judgment is required to be written. See Note 1132 under sec. 421.

But if the appeal is dismissed not summarily but under sec. 423, after notice given under sec. 422, the Court must deliver a judgment that would fulfil the conditions laid down in sec. 367. Omission to write a judgment is not an irregularity cured by sec. 537 (a) of the Code—Devendra, 17 Bom. L.R. 1085, 16 Cr. L.J. 832, 31 L.C. 1008.

Appellate Court.—Judges of Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court, sitting as Sessions Judges for the district of Karachi, should follow as closely as possible the provisions of secs. 367 and 424. But the omission to do so cannot nullify the whole proceeding before the Sessions Court. The clause "so far as may be practicable" occurring in sec. 424 would certainly bring the error within the scope of sec. 537—Fakir Bux v. Emp., 20 S.L.R. 261, 27 Cr. L.J. 833.

Contents of judgment.—The judgment must fulfil the requirements of sec. 367; that is, it must contain the point or points for determination raised by the memorandum of appeal, the decision thereon and the reasons for that decision—Devendra, supra; Kalu Mirza, 37 Cal. 91, Jawam, 8 N.L.R. 84, 13 Cr. L.J. 559. See Note 1051 under sec. 367, under heading "Appellate judgment." An appeal under sec. 476B must be dealt with as an ordinary appeal under secs. 424, and cannot be disposed of summarily without giving any reason. If it is so disposed of, the case will be remitted to the Appellate Judge so that he may rehear the appeal and write a judgment in accordance with law—Hamid Ali v. Madhusudan, 54 Cal. 355, 31 C.W.N. 281, A.L.R. 1927 Cal. 284 (285).

If the appellate judgment is not in accordance with law, the High Court may remand the appeal for rehearing and delivery of a proper judgment—Bholanath v. Emp., 7 C.W.N. 30; Ram Lal v. Haricharan, 37 Cal. 194; Chanda Singh, 1913 P.R. 2, 13 Cr. L.J. 737; Q. E. v. Gopala, 1 Bom. L.R. 225.

It is improper for an Appellate Court to record in its judgment grave imputations on the motives of the trying Magistrate, when such imputations have no other foundation than suspicion. If the Appellate Magistrate considers that the trying Magistrate is actuated by improper considerations in the performance of his judicial functions, it is his duty to report his opinion to the District Magistrate, but any imputations ought not to find a place in the judgment—Yacoub, 2 Weir 535.

425. (1) Whenever a case is decided on appeal by Order by High Court on appeal to be certified to lower Court.

the High Court under this Chapter, it shall certify its judgment or order to the Court by which the finding, sentence or order appealed against was recorded or passed. If the finding, sentence or order was recorded or passed by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate, the certificate shall be sent through the District Magistrate.

(2) The Court to which the High Court certifies its judgment or order shall thereupon make such orders as are conformable to the judgment or order of the High Court; and, if necessary, the record shall be amended in accordance therewith.

426. (1) Pending any appeal by a convicted person,

Suspension of sentence pending appeal.
Release of appellant on bail.

the Appellate Court may, for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, order that the execution of the sentence or order appealed against be suspended, and, also, if he is in confinement, that he be released on bail or on his own bond.

(2) The power conferred by this section on an Appellate Court may be exercised also by the High Court in the case of any appeal by a convicted person to a Court subordinate thereto.

(3) When the appellant is ultimately sentenced to imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, the time during which he is so released shall be excluded in computing the term for which he is so sentenced.

1154. 'Pending an appeal':—A sentence cannot be suspended until an appeal has been actually preferred and is pending. Where a Magistrate postponed the execution of the sentence for a stated period, at the request of the accused, to allow him to appeal, it was held that the suspension of the sentence was bad in law—Kishen Soonder, 12 W R. 47. A sentence cannot be suspended in the absence of an appeal—Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 1.

"Appellate Court":—The power conferred by this section to suspend the sentence can be exercised only by the Appellate Court—2 Weir 536. The sentence cannot be suspended by the Magistrate or Judge who passed it—Kishen Soonder, 12 W.R. 47; Anonymous, 4 M.H.C.R. App. 1. So also, a Sessions Judge has no power to suspend the execution of a sentence passed by a second Class Magistrate, because the appeal from that Magistrate will not lie to the Sessions Judge—Govt Pleader v. Kodu Moidin, 2 Weir 536.

Sentence.—An order of detention passed by a District Magistrate under sec. 10 of the Reformatory Schools Act (VII of 1897) is not a 'sentence' within the meaning of this section, nor is it a punishment enumerated in sec. 53 of the Penal Code. A Sessions Judge has therefore no power to suspend its operation under this section—Krishna Pandaram, 16 Cr.L.J. 134 (Mad).

Release on bail.—The Appellate Court can exercise the powers conferred by this section and release the accused on bail, whether the offence is bailable or not—Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 1.

Exclusion of time—It is only when the convicted person has been released (and not where his sentence has been illegally suspended) that the term during which the sentence is suspended shall be excluded in computing the sentence—Kodu Moidin, 2 Weir 536.

427. When an appeal is presented under section 417, the High Court may issue a warrant directing that the accused be arrested and brought before it or any subordinate Court, and the Court before which he is brought may commit him to prison pending the disposal of the appeal, or admit him to bail.

428. (1) In dealing with any appeal under this

Appellate Court may take further evidence or direct it to be taken.

Chapter, the Appellate Court, if it thinks additional evidence to be necessary, shall record its reason, and may either take such evidence itself, or direct it to be taken by a Magistrate, or, when the Appellate Court is a High Court, by a Court of Session or a Magistrate.

(2) When the additional evidence is taken by the Court of Session or the Magistrate, it or he shall certify such evidence to the Appellate Court, and such Court shall thereupon proceed to dispose of the appeal.

(3) Unless the Appellate Court otherwise directs, the accused or his pleader shall be present when the additional evidence is taken; but such evidence shall not be taken in the presence of jurors or assessors.

(4) The taking of evidence under this section shall be subject to the provisions of Chapter XXV, as if it were an inquiry.

Powers of Civil and Criminal Courts compared:—A Civil Court has ordinarily no power to take evidence of its own motion; it has to decide the case on the evidence adduced by the parties. But a Criminal Court stands on a different footing. Section 540 enables the Magistrate at any stage of the inquiry or trial to examine any witness he may find necessary, in order to come to a proper conclusion. Section 428 also in general terms empowers the Appellate Court to take additional evidence—Bhami Laxuman, 1910 M.W.N. 819, 8 I.C. 145, 11 Cr.L.J. 511.

1155. Object and scope of section:—The object of this section is the prevention of a guilty man's escape through some careless or ignorant proceedings of a Magistrate, or the vindication of an innocent person wrongfully accused, where the Magistrate through the same carelessness or ignorance has omitted to record the circumstances essential to the elucidation of truth—Wooday Chand, 18 W.R. 31; Akhtar v. K. E., 6 P.L.T. 431, 26 Cr.L.J. 1171, Varadarajulu, 42 Mad. 885 (892). The intention of the Legislature in enacting this section is to empower the Appellate Court to see that justice is done between the prosecutor and the person prosecuted, and if the Appellate Court finds that certain evidence is necessary in order to enable it to give a correct finding, it would be justified in taking action under this section—Dalla v. Emp., 7 Lah. 148, 27 Cr.L.J. 463. But this section cannot be invoked to cure an illegality. Thus, where the Magistrate committed an illegality in procedure by not allowing the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, the Sessions Judge cannot remand the case to the Magistrate with a direction to allow the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses and to certify the additional evidence so taken by the Sessions Judge. The proper course for the Sessions Judge, is to set aside the conviction and order the Magistrate to commence from the stage when the illegality occurred or to hold a de novo trial—Lakshman, 53 Bom. 578, 1929 Cr. C. 130 (134).

The power under this section can be exercised only by the Appellate Court. A Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate not acting as an Appellate Court is not authorised to take additional evidence or order it to be taken—Moni Mohan, 6 C.L.J. 251. But the High Court acting as a Court of revision, under Sec. 439, has the power of an Appellate Court to direct evidence to be taken—Ibid. The power to take or call for additional evidence given by this section is expressly limited to appeals under this Chapter; see Krishna, 33 Mad. 90.

sentence cannot be suspended in the absence of an appeal—Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 1.

"Appellate Court".—The power conferred by this section to suspend the sentence can be exercised only by the Appellate Court—2 Weir 536. The sentence cannot be suspended by the Magistrate or Judge who passed it—Kishen Soonder, 12 W.R. 47; Anonymous, 4 M.H.C.R. App. 1. So also, a Sessions Judge has no power to suspend the execution of a sentence passed by a second Class Magistrate, because the appeal from that Magistrate will not lie to the Sessions Judge—Govt. Pleader v Kodu Moidin, 2 Weir 536.

Sentence.—An order of detention passed by a District Magistrate under sec. 10 of the Reformatory Schools Act (VII of 1897) is not a 'sentence' within the meaning of this section, nor is it a punishment enumerated in sec. 53 of the Penal Code. A Sessions Judge has therefore no power to suspend its operation under this section—Krishna Pandaram, 16 Cr.L.J. 134 (Mad).

Release on bail.—The Appellate Court can exercise the powers conferred by this section and release the accused on bail, whether the offence is bailable or not—Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 1.

Exclusion of time.—It is only when the convicted person has been released (and not where his sentence has been illegally suspended) that the term during which the sentence is suspended shall be excluded in computing the sentence—Kodu Moidin, 2 Weir 536.

427. When an appeal is presented under section

Arrest of accused in appeal from acquittal.

417, the High Court may issue a warrant directing that the accused be arrested and brought before it or any subordinate Court, and the Court before which he is brought may commit him to prison pending the disposal of the appeal, or admit him to bail.

428. (1) In dealing with any appeal under this

Appellate Court may take further evidence or direct it to be taken.

Chapter, the Appellate Court, if it thinks additional evidence to be necessary, shall record its reasons, and may either take such evidence itself, or direct it to be taken by a Magistrate, or, when the Appellate Court is a High Court, by a Court of Session or a Magistrate.

(2) When the additional evidence is taken by the Court of Session or the Magistrate, it or he shall certify such evidence to the Appellate Court, and such Court shall thereupon proceed to dispose of the appeal.

(3) Unless the Appellate Court otherwise directs, the accused or his pleader shall be present when the additional evidence is taken; but such evidence shall not be taken in the presence of jurors or assessors.

(4) The taking of evidence under this section shall be subject to the provisions of Chapter XXV, as if it were an inquiry.

Powers of Civil and Criminal Courts compared :—A Civil Court has ordinarily no power to take evidence of its own motion; it has to decide the case on the evidence adduced by the parties. But a Criminal Court stands on a different footing. Section 540 enables the Magistrate at any stage of the inquiry or trial to examine any witness he may find necessary, in order to come to a proper conclusion. Section 428 also in general terms empowers the Appellate Court to take additional evidence—Bhami Laxuman, 1910 M.W.N. 819, 8 I.C. 145, 11 Cr.L.J. 511.

1155. Object and scope of section :—The object of this section is the prevention of a guilty man's escape through some careless or ignorant proceedings of a Magistrate, or the vindication of an innocent person wrongfully accused, where the Magistrate through the same carelessness or ignorance has omitted to record the circumstances essential to the elucidation of truth—Wooday Chand, 18 W.R. 31; Akhtar v. K. E., 6 P.L.T. 431, 26 Cr.L.J. 1171, Varadarajulu, 42 Mad. 885 (892). The intention of the Legislature in enacting this section is to empower the Appellate Court to see that justice is done between the prosecutor and the person prosecuted, and if the Appellate Court finds that certain evidence is necessary in order to enable it to give a correct finding, it would be justified in taking action under this section—Dulla v. Emp., 7 Lah. 148, 27 Cr.L.J. 463. But this section cannot be invoked to cure an illegality. Thus, where the Magistrate committed an illegality in procedure by not allowing the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, the Sessions Judge cannot remand the case to the Magistrate with a direction to allow the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses and to certify the additional evidence so taken by the Sessions Judge. The proper course for the Sessions Judge, is to set aside the conviction and order the Magistrate to commence from the stage when the illegality occurred or to hold a de novo trial—Lakshman, 53 Bom. 578, 1929 Cr. C. 130 (134).

The power under this section can be exercised only by the Appellate Court. A Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate not acting as an Appellate Court is not authorised to take additional evidence or order it to be taken—Moni Mohan, 6 C.L.J. 251. But the High Court acting as a Court of revision, under Sec. 439, has the power of an Appellate Court to direct evidence to be taken—Ibid. The power to take or order additional evidence given by this section is expressly limited to appellate courts under this Chapter, see Krishna, 33 Mad. 90.

A proceeding under section 125 is neither appellate nor revisional. consequently this section has no application to an order under section 125. Therefore, when a District Magistrate finds that an order directing the furnishing of security is irregular, he should set it aside; he has no jurisdiction to remand the case to the Magistrate for further evidence—Nasiban, 20 Cr.L.J. 221, 49 I.C. 221 (Pat).

Enquiry by Police :—This section does not warrant an Appellate Court sending a case to the Police for investigation, if it had been originally started by a complaint in Court—Maheshri, 1900 A.W.N. 130.

1156. When additional evidence may be taken and when not:—This section gives a discretion to the Appellate Court, and this discretion is not to be exercised against the accused and in favour of the prosecution, unless in exceptional cases and where the merits are clearly against the accused—Varadarajulu, 42 Mad 685 (892). An Appellate Court cannot decide whether it should exercise the discretion under this section unless it has heard the appeal on the merits. Specially in a case involving the consideration of a very difficult question (e.g. a case of sedition) it is almost impossible, before the appeal is heard on the merits, to hold any definite view as to the prima facie guilt of the accused or whether his guilt is grave enough to justify the view that it is desirable to allow additional evidence in order to prevent the offence from going unpunished—Varadarajulu, supra. Additional evidence may be taken under this section only if the Appellate Court thinks it to be necessary, and the necessity for taking such evidence must be apparent from something on the record and cannot be derived from external information—Po Gyi, 3 L.B.R. 114. The mere fact that some fresh evidence has been discovered after the filing of the appeal does not empower the Appellate Court to allow the fresh evidence to be adduced, unless the Court thinks it necessary—Gurumurthi v. Read, 9 M.L.T. 323, 12 Cr.L.J. 40. When the Original Court has taken all the evidence produced by the prosecution which had ample opportunities to do so, and that evidence has failed to sustain the charge, an Appellate Court will not, except in very exceptional circumstances, direct that additional evidence should be taken—Fateh, 5 All. 217. This section does not empower an Appellate Court to take additional evidence in a case where there is no evidence legally capable of sustaining the charge. But where the conviction by the lower Court has been based upon some prima facie evidence which might legally sustain the charge, but which in the opinion of the Appellate Court is not quite satisfactory, the Appellate Court may under this section direct additional evidence to be taken—Wooday Chand, 18 W.R. 31, 9 B.L.R. App 31. Where evidence which should not have been admitted was tendered by the prosecution, and was admitted by the Magistrate, the Appellate Court can discard that evidence, and supply the gap in the prosecution evidence by taking further evidence. Thus, where the report of an excise analyst to the effect that a certain bottle contained cocaine was improperly admitted by the Magistrate, the Sessions Judge on appeal may call in the excise analyst to have him examined as to the contents of the bottle—Bansilal, 52 Bom 686, 29

Cr.L.J. 990 (991). Where the Appellate Court thinks that the evidence of some more witnesses who were not examined in the Lower Court is necessary, it cannot order a retrial on that ground, but should proceed under this section by summoning and examining those witnesses—Ishwar Prasad, 16 A.L.J. 325, 19 Cr.L.J. 485, 45 I.C. 149; Luchmun, 31 Cal. 710 (713). Where the Lower Court has refused to examine certain important witnesses for the defence, and the accused has been prejudiced in his defence by such refusal, the Appellate Court may direct the Lower Court to take the evidence of such witnesses and to certify the same to it—Virasami, 19 Mad. 375; Mahomed v. K. E., 3 P.L.J. 632, 19 Cr.L.J. 902. Similarly, where the prosecution was prepared to adduce evidence necessary to prove the offence, but the Magistrate intervened stating that such evidence was unnecessary, and refused to take it, the case was one in which the Appellate Court could properly call for fresh evidence under this section—Jeremiah v. Vas, 36 Mad. 457 (470), 22 M.L.J. 75, 12 Cr.L.J. 585. But this section does not apply where the prosecution having had ample opportunities to produce evidence has failed to do so—Jeremiah v. Vas, 36 Mad. 457 (467). In other words, this section cannot be utilised for excusing the negligence of the prosecution—Varadarajulu, 42 Mad. 885 (894). An Appellate Court can call for additional evidence by directing the Sessions Judge to bring upon his record the statements of witnesses as given in the Court of the committing Magistrate, under sec. 288, after giving notice to the accused—Nagina, 19 A.L.J. 947, 27 Cr.L.J. 813 (814). An Appellate Court can admit additional evidence in order to ascertain the value of statements made by a defence witness—Subramania, 53 M.L.J. 676, 30 Cr.L.J. 133 (134).

The Appellate Court may take additional evidence to supply a defect in formal proof (e.g., proof as to whether the sanction for prosecution required under sec. 196 was granted by the proper authority), when the conviction for a serious charge such as sedition, which is otherwise sustainable, is likely to be upset for want of such proof—Varadarajulu Naidu, 42 Mad. 885 (889).

Recording reason —Before taking additional evidence the Court must record its reason for so doing—Varadarajulu Naidu, 42 Mad. 885 (890). Dulla v. Emp., 7 Lah. 148, 27 Cr.L.J. 463. But omission to do so is a mere irregularity curable by sec. 531—Karnam, 9 M.L.T. 406, 12 Cr.L.J. 240.

Revision of order allowing additional evidence —The powers of an Appellate Court to take additional evidence should not be unduly restricted. The scope of sec. 428 is prima facie not limited by any consideration save that the Appellate Court should be of opinion that additional evidence is necessary and should record its reasons. Accordingly, if any restriction is to be placed upon the power conferred on the Appellate Court by sec. 428, it certainly cannot be that negligence or inadvertence on the part of the prosecution is to be allowed to effect a miscarriage of justice; on the contrary, the enactment is directed to the attainment of justice.

even at a late stage of the proceedings by the introduction of further materials which the Court considers to be essential to a just decision of the case. Consequently the Court of Revision will not interfere with an order allowing additional evidence, even where the Court of Revision might itself, as an Appellate Court, have declined to admit such evidence. To justify interference, the Revision Court must be satisfied that the Appellate Court committed an error of law which has prejudiced the accused on the merits—Akhtar v. Emp., 6 P.L.T. 431, 26 Cr.L.J. 1171.

1157. Procedure :—This section empowers an Appellate Court to merely call for additional evidence and not to call upon the Lower Court to give its finding upon such evidence. Where the Appellate Court calls for such finding of the Lower Court, the order of the Appellate Court will be set aside—Karnam, 12 Cr.L.J. 240, 9 M.L.T. 406, 10 I.C. 290, Muthu Karappan v. Vellayya Kudumban, 16 Cr.L.J. 79, 1914 M.W.N. 778, 26 I.C. 671. When the subordinate Court is directed to take additional evidence, it shall merely certify the evidence to the Appellate Court and is not entitled to give any finding on such evidence or to retry the case on such fresh evidence, such duty being left to the Appellate Court—Anonymous, 3 B.L.R. 62; and if the Magistrate gives any finding on such evidence, the Appellate Court cannot accept such finding but must form its own conclusion upon the evidence so taken—Muthu Karappan v. Vellayya, supra. But the Magistrate when taking additional evidence under this section can proceed under sec. 195 or 476, if he has reason to believe that any witness has given false evidence—Bukhtear, 15 W.R. 64. This section does not empower an Appellate Court to take evidence regarding the proceedings before a Magistrate, such as to examine the accused as to the truth of an allegation that the Magistrate had refused to examine some witnesses—Subbaya, 12 Mad. 451. After receiving the additional evidence, the Appellate Court can only try the case as an ordinary appeal, and has no power to enhance the punishment—Anonymous, 3 B.L.R. 62.

The accused persons were convicted by the trial Court without any examination under sec. 342, and the Appellate Court directed as follows :—“The Lower Court will examine the accused under sec. 342 and call upon them to adduce any defence evidence, if they choose to give any, and after examination of the defence witnesses, he will re-submit the record to this Court. The appeal will then be heard by me on the merits.” Held that the Appellate Judge’s procedure was erroneous. He appears to have followed the provision of the Civil P. Code rather than of the Crim. P. Code. He should have set aside the convictions and sentences and remanded the case to the first Court for that Court to deal with the case on the merits after compliance with sec. 342, as if it were before that Court again for the first time—Md. Abdus Samad v. K. E., 40 C.L.J. 319, 26 Cr.L.J. 313.

This section does not provide that the accused should be re-examined under sec. 342 after evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution is taken on remand. The examination of the witnesses after remand may be made even in the absence of the accused, and the provisions of sec. 342 do not apply to sec. 428—Mohiuddin v. Emp., 4 Pat 488, 6 P.L.T. 151, 26 Cr.L.J. 811 (813); Narayan v. Emp., 52 Bom. 699, 29 Cr.L.J. 972 (973).

1158. Power of Appellate Court after taking additional evidence:—The Appellate Court cannot consider and determine a new case disclosed by the additional evidence, except in so far as to affirm or modify or set aside the sentence under appeal or to act as otherwise provided by sec. 423 (b). An Appellate Court cannot under this section pass a fresh sentence, which may be subject to further appeal. Under the 1898 Code the Appellate Court is directed to dispose of the appeal finally and not to pass a new judgment, sentence, etc., (as under the old Code of 1861) which may be further appealed against—Q E v Isahak, 27 Cal 372 (overruling Mohesh, 2 W R 13)

The Appellate Court can re-hear the appeal after obtaining the additional evidence. Both under the Criminal Procedure Code and under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act of 1915, the High Court has full jurisdiction and power in criminal revision to direct the Lower Appellate Court to re-hear an appeal after obtaining additional evidence certified by the trial Court—Mahomed v K E., 3 P L J 632, 19 Cr L J 902

1159. No further appeal —An appellant whose appeal is dismissed by an Appellate Court, after it has taken additional evidence under this section, has no further right of appeal. According to sec 430, except in certain cases, judgments and orders passed by an Appellate Court upon appeal are final—Q E. v Isahak, 27 Cal 372, Pooroo, 8 W R. 59, Dhunobur, 15 W.R 33. If additional evidence is taken, it does not entitle a party to appeal from a finding upon such evidence to the High Court upon the merits, treating it in substance as an original judgment—Nantamram, 6 B H C R. 64

1160. Sub-section (3) —Where the Appellate Court, acting under this section, directs the Sessions Judge to bring upon the record under sec 288 the statements of certain witnesses made in the Court of committing Magistrate, those statements cannot be properly brought on the record until notice is given to the accused that it is proposed to use those statements against him, and so it will be necessary for the Sessions Judge to take those proceedings in the presence of the accused or his pleader. This is provided for in clause (3) of this section—Nagina, 19 A L J 947, 27 Cr L.J 813 (815). Under this clause, a Court of Session is authorised to record the additional evidence in the absence of the jury or the assessors, and this is the only instance in which it can do so. But in no other cases can the presence of the jurors be dispensed with; and therefore, where in a trial for murder the Sessions Judge, relying on a statement made by the deceased, convicted the accused, and the necessary evidence to prove that statement was not recorded by the judge until after the assessors had been discharged, it was held that the error vitiated the trial and was not covered by the provisions of sec. 537—Q E. v. Ram Lal, 15 All 136.

429. When the Judges composing the Court of Appeal are equally divided in opinion, the case, with their opinions thereon, shall be laid before another Judge of the same Court, and such Judge, after such hearing (if any) as he thinks fit, shall deliver his opinion, and the judgment or order shall follow such opinion.

1161. Scope of section:—This section applies not only to appeals but to revision-proceedings as well. Therefore, if two learned Judges differ in a Criminal Revision case, section 439 read with sec 429 requires the case to be decided by a third Judge—Dudikula Lalsahed, 40 Mad. 976; Sukdeo Narain, 27 Cal 892 (at p. 910); Pandita v. Rahim-ulla, 27 Cal. 501 (at p. 505), Ganguly v. Watson, 53 Cal. 929. See sec. 439 (1).

The principle of this section applies also to a reference under sec 307. In case of difference between the Judges on a reference under sec. 307, the rule of this section is to be followed—Q. E. v. Dada Ana, 15 Bom 452

The third Judge to whom a case is referred cannot refer the case to a Full Bench. A Division Bench alone can do it; and a third Judge sitting singly is not a Division Bench—Ishan Chandra v. Hridoy Krishna, 29 C.W.N. 475 (483), 26 Cr L.J. 915

"Case"—Where upon a difference of opinion between two Judges, the case is laid before a third Judge, the whole case is referred to the third Judge and not merely the point or points on which the Judges differed, and it is the duty of the Judge to whom the case is referred, to consider all the points involved before he delivers his opinion, and it will be according to the opinion of such Judge that the judgment will follow—Sarat Chandra, 38 Cal. 202, Ganguly v. Watson, 53 Cal. 929, 27 Cr L.J. 1268 (1272). But in another case of the same High Court it has been held that the third Judge cannot differ from the referring Judges on a point on which both the referring Judges are agreed, unless there are strong grounds for doing so—Venkataramnam v. Corporation of Calcutta, 22 C.W.N. 745 (756), 19 Cr.L.J. 753. In other words, it lays down that the third Judge can consider only the points on which the referring Judges have disagreed, and not all the points. To remove this conflict of opinion it was proposed by the Select Committee of 1916 to add the following proviso to this section "Provided that, if either of the Judges composing the Court of appeal so require, the appeal shall be re-heard before them and another Judge or if the Chief Justice so directs, before three other Judges, and the judgment or order shall follow the opinion of the majority of the Judges so re-hearing the case." But the Joint Committee of 1922 deleted this proviso, as it was disapproved of by many Judges and also because the difficulty which the amendment intended to meet was of rare occurrence. A similar proviso was intended to be added to section 378 and it was omitted by the Joint Committee for the same reason. See clauses 98 and 113 of the Report of the Joint Committee of 1922

But there can be no question that where there are two accused, and the Judges are agreed in opinion with regard to one of them but are divided in opinion as regards the other, the case which is laid before the third Judge is only the case of the prisoner with regard to whom the Judges are divided in opinion—Sarat Chandra, 38 Cal. 202, 15 C.W.N. 78, 11 Cr.L.J. 515.

430. Judgments and orders passed by an Appellate Court upon appeal shall be final, except in the cases provided for in section 417 and Chapter XXXII.

Finality of orders on appeal.

See 27 Cal. 372 and 6 B H C R 64 in Note 1159 under sec 428.

1162. A sentence is said to be final when it cannot be set aside or interfered with by any Court or authority, whether on appeal or otherwise—Dular Dat v Nyabat, 12 Cal. 536

Where the Sessions Judge rejected a criminal appeal on the ground that it was barred by limitation, the rejection was final and the Sessions Judge was not competent, on a later representation by the prisoner, to admit the appeal again—Bhimappa, 19 Bom 732, Clegg, 1887 P.R. 24. An order of summary rejection of an appeal is final; it is immaterial whether the order is passed before or after the papers are called for—Emp v Mahomed Yashin, 4 Bom 101. An order passed by a Sessions Judge declining to interfere with a sanction granted by the Lower Court is final and is not open to review or revision except in the manner laid down in Chapter XXXII—Ganesh Ramkrishna, 23 Bom 50. But an order rejecting an appeal summarily for non-appearance of the appellant is an improper order and it is open to the Court to rehear the appeal and deal with it—Anonymous, 2 Weir 471, 7 M H C R App 29, Kunhammad, 46 Mad 382 (403); Ratan Chand v Emp, 5 N L R 76, 9 Cr L J 553.

431. Every appeal under section 417 shall finally

Abatement of appeals abate on the death of the accused, and every other appeal under this Chapter (except an appeal from a sentence of fine) shall finally abate on the death of the appellant.

1163. The Code has made no provision for the continuance of the appeal by the heir or devisee or executor of the deceased convict or by any other person. The appeal abates on the appellant's death—Dongari, 2 Bom 564, Nabi Shah, 19 Bom 714. But an exception is made as regards an appeal from a sentence of fine. "An appeal against a sentence of fine should not abate by reason of the death of the accused, because it is not a matter which affects his person, but one which affects his estate"—Select Committee's Report (1898). See also Danlat Ram v.

The principle of this section applies also to revisions; and therefore where a fine inflicted upon an accused was a heavy one and its recovery from the estate would entail hardship on the widow, it was held that the application for revision filed by the accused did not abate on his death as regards the sentence of fine; and the High Court in revision remitted the fine—Daulat Ram v. Crown, 1919 P.R. 8, 20 Cr.L.J. 214, 49 I.C. 744

Compensation awarded under section 250 is recoverable as if it were a fine, therefore an application for revision against an order of compensation does not abate on the death of the applicant, but can be prosecuted by his legal representatives—Prem Singh v. Bhola, 1908 P.R. 24.

CHAPTER XXXII.

OF REFERENCE AND REVISION.

432. A Presidency Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, refer for the opinion of the High Court any question of law which arises in the hearing of any case pending before him, or may give judgment in any such case subject to the decision of the High Court on such reference and, pending such decision, may either commit the accused to jail, or release him on bail to appear for judgment when called upon.

1164. This section empowers only a Presidency Magistrate to refer a question of law. No other Magistrate has power to make a reference. A District Magistrate cannot refer; he can only bring a case before the High Court by way of revision—Bakul, 9 Cr.L.J. 248, 1 S.L.R. 4; Rahimuddin, 22 S.L.R. 201, 28 Cr.L.J. 978 (979). A Sessions Judge has no power to refer a case to the High Court on a point arising in an appeal pending before him—Mohan Lal, 13 A.L.J. 477, 16 Cr.L.J. 433, 29 I.C. 65.

Under this section there can be a reference to the High Court only on a question of law, and not on a question of fact—Sheikh Ibrahim, Ratanlal 838, Taja, Ratanlal 539. And the High Court, upon a reference under this section, can deal only with the particular points of law referred to it; it cannot deal with the facts of the case, nor any other objection against the proceeding of the Court of the Presidency Magistrate—Molla Fuzla Karim, 33 Cal. 193.

The Magistrate can refer a question which has arisen 'in the hearing of the case'; he cannot make a reference on a question of law where the accused has been merely placed before him and the hearing of the case has not begun—Q. E. v. Nanu, 1 Bom.L.R. 521

433. (1) When a question has been so referred, the High Court shall pass such order thereon as it thinks fit, and shall cause a copy of such order to be sent to the Magistrate by whom the reference was made, who shall dispose of the case conformably to the said order.

Disposal of case according to decision of High Court.

(2) The High Court may direct by whom the costs of such reference shall be paid.

Direction as to costs.

1165. On a reference by a Presidency Magistrate to the High Court as to whether on the facts stated any offence has been committed by an accused person, the prosecution has to make out that the accused has committed the offence, and therefore the counsel for the prosecution has the right to begin—Q. E v Haradhan, 19 Cal 380 (385).

The High Court sitting in appeal cannot review an order passed by it under this section—Canji, Ratanlal 638

434. (1) When any person has, in a trial before a Judge of a High Court consisting of more Judges than one and acting in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction, been convicted of an offence, the Judge, if he thinks fit, may reserve and refer for the decision of a Court consisting of two or more Judges of such Court any question of law which has arisen in the course of the trial of such person, and the determination of which would affect the event of the trial.

Power to reserve questions arising in original jurisdiction of High Court.

(2) If the Judge reserves any such question, the person convicted shall, pending the decision thereon, be remanded to jail, or, if the Judge thinks fit, be admitted to bail; and the High Court shall have power to review the case, or such part of it as may be necessary, and finally determine such question, and thereupon to alter the sentence passed by the Court of original jurisdiction, and to pass such judgment or order as the High Court thinks fit.

Procedure when question reserved.

1166. Reference discretionary :—The words 'may reserve and refer' show that it is in the discretion of the single Judge whether or not he will reserve a point of law for the opinion of the High Court consisting of two or more Judges—Pestonji, 10 B.H.C.R. 75; and this discretion of the single Judge is not reviewable under clause 26 of the Letters Patent—Ibid.

*When reference can be made :—*A reference can be made when the point of law has arisen in the course of the trial; where a point is raised before the accused is called upon to plead, it cannot be referred to the Full Bench, because the point cannot be said to have arisen in the course of the trial—Q. E. v. Dolegobind, 28 Cal 211.

*Right to begin .—*Where, on the application of the prisoner's counsel, a question of law has been reserved for the decision of the Court under this section, the counsel for the prisoner has the right to begin—Q E v Appa Subhana, 8 Bom. 200.

1167. Sub-section (2) :—*High Court's power to review the case :—*The High Court in considering a point of law reserved under this section can review the whole case, if it is of opinion that any evidence has been improperly admitted or rejected, and can affirm or quash the conviction—Q. v. Hurribole, 1 Cal. 207; Naoroji Dadabhai, 9 B.H.C.R. 358; Q E v. O'Lara, 17 Cal. 642; Patrick McGuire, 4 C.W.N. 433; Imp v Pitambar, 2 Bom 61, Emp. v. Narayan, 32 Bom. 111, Fateh Chand, 44 Cal 477

This is the only section which enables the Division or Full Bench of the High Court to review the judgment of a single Judge exercising original criminal jurisdiction. The powers of a single Judge in a matter with which he has jurisdiction to deal are the powers of the Court and cannot be in any way controlled (except as under this section) by a Division or Full Bench of the Court. As no appeal lies, no revision lies—Hale, 1963 P.R. 1, 9 Cr.L.J. 306, 1 I.C. 506. In the absence of any reservation of a question of law by the trying judge, the High Court is precluded from re-opening a question which has been decided by the single Judge presiding at the trial—Emp. v. Narayan, 32 Bom. 111.

The High Court can review the judgment or order of a Judge passed in the exercise of his original jurisdiction. A Division Bench of the High Court has no power to alter or review the order of a High Court pronounced in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction—Durga Charan, 7 All. 672; Fox, 10 Bom. 176; Godai, 5 W.R. 61; Ganesh Ramkrishna, 23 Bom 50; Emp. v. Nagangowda, 19 Bom.L.R. 695.

The Code does not make any provision for reviewing the judgment of subordinate Courts. The High Court can only revise such judgment under the ample powers conferred by section 439—Bhimappa, 19 Bom 732.

435. (1) The High Court or any Sessions Judge or District Magistrate or any Sub-divisional Magistrate empowered by the Local Government in this behalf may call for and examine the record of any proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court situate within the local limits of its or his jurisdiction for the purpose of satisfying itself or himself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed, and as to the regularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court, and may, when calling for such record, direct that the execution of any sentence be suspended and, if the accused is in confinement, that he be released on bail or on his own bond pending the examination of the record.

Explanation.—All Magistrates, whether exercising original or appellate jurisdiction, shall be deemed to be inferior to the Sessions Judge for the purposes of this sub-section and of section 437.

(2) If any Sub-divisional Magistrate acting under sub-section (1) considers that any such finding, sentence or order is illegal or improper, or that any such proceedings are irregular, he shall forward the record, with such remarks thereon as he thinks fit, to the District Magistrate.

(3) Omitted.

(4) If an application under this section has been made either to the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, no further application shall be entertained by the other of them.

Change —The italicised words at the end of sub-section (1) and the Explanation have been added, and sub-section (3) has been omitted, by sec 116 of the Crim Pro Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. Sub-section (3) stood as follows —

“(3) Orders made under sections 143 and 144 and proceedings under Chapter XII and section 176 are not proceedings within the meaning of this section.”

The grounds for the omission of sub-section (3) have been thus stated by Dr. Gour “The intention of this amendment is to preserve to the High Courts revisional jurisdiction in cases disposed of under sections 144, 145, etc. Honourable Members are aware that not only the Chartered High Courts but all the non-chartered High Courts such as the Chief Courts and the Courts of the Judicial Commissioners do, under various local Acts, possess a statutory power of revision in such cases. Now, sir, I ask the House a simple question. If it is a fact that all the Courts, chartered and non-chartered, possess this power, then I say clause (3) of section 435 is superfluous, nay misleading. If it is a fact that they do not possess that power, in that case I ask the House to endorse my opinion that this power is both salutary and necessary. It will not be denied that this power has in fact been exercised under section 107 of the Government of India Act and other Local Acts. If so, this clause conflicts with the express provisions of section 107 of the Government of India Act. It creates utter confusion. If the High Courts have power under section 107 of the Government of India Act to exercise the general power of superintendence over the Subordinate Courts, what object is served by inserting this clause that orders under sections 143, 144 and 145 shall not be open to revision under section 435? I have therefore confidence that this House will vote for my amendment and place the powers of all the High Courts beyond any shadow of doubt, and I hope that the Government out of sheer consistency will accept my amendment.—Legislative Assembly Debates, 8th February 1923, pages 2076—2077.

By reason of the omission of this sub-section, the above orders and proceedings are now subject to revision under this Code. See notes under secs. 143, 144, 145—148, and 176.

Object :—The object of this revisional legislation is to confer upon superior Criminal Courts a kind of paternal or supervisory jurisdiction, in order to correct miscarriage of justice arising from misconception of law, irregularity of procedure, neglect of proper precautions or apparent harshness of treatment, which has resulted on the one hand in some injury to the due maintenance of law and order, or on the other hand in some undeserved hardship to individuals—Nasrullah, 29 Cr.L.J. 446 (447) (All). The Courts enumerated in this section have power to call for the records of subordinate Courts for the purpose of satisfying themselves as to the correctness, legality or propriety of the orders passed by the lower Courts. The object of the legislature in this section is to set right some patent defect or error. In the absence of some well founded suspicion it is inexpedient for the High Court to scrutinise orders of discharge or other orders passed by the lower Courts which upon the face of them bear token of careful consideration and appear good and lawful. This section does not give the High Court a revisional commission either in the direction of stamping with approval the proceedings of a Lower Court or in the direction of questioning about and looking to see if possibly under a fair review there lies some trace of possible error—Rimp. v. D. A.W.N.

1168. The revisional jurisdiction concurrent with the concurrent

District Court and be made :—The and Sessions Judge is

seek his remedy before the lower tribunal and not in the High Court direct. In the matter of applications in criminal revision to the High Court, it is a recognised rule of practice that a previous application to the Lower Court (District Magistrate or Sessions Judge) should be considered an essential step in the procedure, irrespective of whether such lower Court has or has not power to grant the relief claimed; and that failure on the part of the applicant to submit his application to the Lower Court will operate as a bar to the application being entertained by the High Court—Sheriff Ahmed v. Qabul, 43 All 497, 22 Cr.L.J. 715; Q. E. v. Reolah, 14 Cal. 887; Emp v. Abdus Sobhan, 36 Cal. 643; Rash Behari v. Phani Bhuxan, 48 Cal. 534; Abdul Mallab v. Nanda Lal, 50 Cal. 423; Chagan Dayaram, 14 Bom. 331; Jadunandan v. Sheopahal, 27 A.L.J. 514; Mansur v. Emp., 41 All. 587 (591); Gullay v. Bakar, 28 All. 268; Shafaqat v. Wali Ahmed, 30 All. 116; Bepin Bihari, 3 P.L.J. 302, Id. Ishaq, 28 Cr.L.J. 815 (Lah.), Gopabandhu v. Venkatesam, (1923) M.W.N. 837, 18 L.W. 651; Sat Narain v. Emp., 25 O.C. 37. A person invoking the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court is bound, according to the rules of that Court, to apply first to the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate. If the latter considers that a case for revision is made out, he reports the matter to the High Court under section 438, with a view to the High Court exercising its revisional powers under sec. 439. If the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate considers that the application should not be entertained, he rejects it, leaving the aggrieved party to apply to the High Court direct—Abdulwahid v. Abdullah, 45 All. 656 (661, 662). Thus, where the District Magistrate dismisses a complaint under the provisions of sec. 203, the High Court will not entertain an application by the complainant asking for further inquiry under sec. 438, when no application for that object has been made to the Sessions Judge—Gullay v. Bakar, 28 All. 268. But when an application to the High Court for revision has already been heard and the rule granted, the High Court will not afterwards discharge the Rule on the ground that the petitioner ought to have moved the Sessions Court in the first instance, but will proceed to dispose of the Rule on the merits—Abdul Mallab v. Nanda Lal, 50 Cal. 423. So also, the High Court will not allow a point to be raised for the first time before it, when such point was not taken by the petitioner in his revision application presented to the Sessions Judge—Emp v. Bhure Mal, 45 All. 526 (528). The object of requiring an application for revision to be presented first to the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge, is firstly to prevent the time of the High Court from being wasted over frivolous and unsustainable applications; and secondly, the High Court in dealing with the matter may have before it an expression of opinion by a Court of superior jurisdiction such as that of the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate, in case the matter should eventually come to the High Court—Emp v. Mansur, 41 All. 587 (591), Sukhraj v. Emp., 28 Cr.L.J. 475 (All.), Bhure Mal, supra.

Where the petitioners filed an appeal to the District Magistrate, who was sitting as a Court of Appeal, and the appeal having been dismissed, they moved the High Court in revision, held that although it might have been better if the petitioners had followed the usual rule of practice and moved the Sessions Judge before coming to the High Court, still the High Court entertained the revision petition—Muhammad Ishaq, 28 Cr.L.J. 815 (Lah.), Emp v. Mansur, 41 All 587 (592). In spite of the above rule of practice, it is competent to the High Court in the exercise of its discretion to entertain an application for revision, even though no petition has been made to the Sessions Judge, and if the High Court admits the application for revision (even though ex parte), it is not open to any party to call it in question—Emp v. Mansur, supra. But in Sukhray v. Emp, 28 Cr.L.J. 475 (All.), where there was an appeal to the District Magistrate, and the appeal having been dismissed, the accused applied to the High Court in revision, it was held that the applicant not having made a previous application for revision to the Sessions Judge, the revision petition to the High Court must be dismissed.

1169. Call for record :—The powers of a Sessions Judge to call for and examine the records under this section are powers which can be exercised at all times—Anonymous, 2 Weir 538. Records may be called for even after the prisoner has served out his sentence—Q. E. v. Sinha, 7 All. 135. Even after the death of the prisoner pending an appeal before the Lower Appellate Court, the High Court has the right to call for the records and make such order thereon as it may deem to be due to justice—Dongaji, 2 Bom. 564. When records are called for under this section, the inferior Courts must forward the original records, and not merely copies thereof—Padmanabha, Ratanlal 128.

When an order is made by the District Magistrate under this section calling for the records and proceedings pending before a Magistrate with a view to withdrawing the case and transferring it to another Magistrate, the jurisdiction of the former Magistrate is suspended, and he is not therefore entitled to proceed any further in the case, e.g., to allow composition and to acquit the accused under sec. 345, even though the case may not have been actually transferred to some other Magistrate—In re Maruti, 49 Bom 533, 26 Cr L.J. 996.

“Any proceeding” —Under the Code of 1872 the words were ‘judicial proceedings’ and the High Court could call and examine the records of a judicial proceeding only; but now the High Court can call for and examine the record of any proceeding e.g., an order by a Magistrate under section 517—Gangamma, 2 Weir 538 (539).

It is competent to the High Court to call for the record of any proceeding of an inferior Criminal Court and revise the same, whether it is of a preliminary or final nature—Jagan Singh, 1892 A.W.N. 102. Hence, where the District Magistrate passed a preliminary order calling upon a witness who gave evidence before him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for perjury, the High Court was competent to revise the order—T. N. Chadha, 14 A.L.J.—851, 18 Cr.L.J. 46.

1170. Power of revision after prior refusal :—An accused person has no right to come in revision more than once. Where his first application for revision has failed, the Court has a discretionary power not to entertain a second application at all, based on the same point as the first—Emp. v. Kohna Ram, 45 All. 11 (12). When a Magistrate has already dealt with a case in revision and decided that there was no cause for interference, he cannot subsequently direct further inquiry, because such an order would be one reviewing the prior order and is prohibited by sec. 369—Nga Than, 5 Bur L.T. 37, 13 Cr.L.J. 301. Once a criminal revision case has been dismissed by the High Court for default of payment of printing charges, it is a final disposal and it is not competent to the High Court to rehear the case or entertain a fresh application for revision, because there can be no review of the prior order of dismissal—Appayya v Venkatappayya, 44 M.L.J. 27, 23 Cr.L.J. 746, A.L.R. 1923 Mad. 276. So also, if a revision petition is dismissed for default of appearance of the pleader who filed it, the High Court is not competent to restore to its file such a petition—In re Ranga Rao, 23 M.L.J. 371, 13 Cr.L.J. 710. But the Calcutta High Court holds that there being no provision in the Code for dismissing a revision petition for default of appearance, the order of dismissal is no 'judgment' at all within the meaning of sec. 369 and the High Court is not debarred from rehearing the revision petition—Rajjabali v Emp., 46 Cal 60, 20 Cr.L.J. 265.

The Allahabad High Court has laid down that if a matter has once come before the High Court in revision not on the application of the accused but on the motion of the Sessions Judge who has referred the matter to the High Court, and the High Court looks into the matter and comes to the conclusion that there is no ground for revision, the accused is not thereby deprived of his right to apply to the High Court in revision—Emp. v. Kohna Ram, 45 All. 11 (12), 20 A.L.J. 775, 23 Cr.L.J. 496. The Burma Chief Court likewise holds that where a Sessions Judge of his own motion called for proceedings in which a Magistrate had discharged certain accused persons, but finding on record no cause of interference returned the proceedings to the Magistrate without taking further action, and where subsequently the complainant applied to him to have the case re-opened, it was held that the mere fact that the Judge had declined to interfere suo motu on a prior occasion did not preclude him from hearing the complainant, and, if the arguments led him to do so, from altering his view—Tun Myaing v Kauk San, 8 Bur L.T. 243, 16 Cr.L.J. 711, 30 I.C. 999.

1171. Inferior Criminal Court :—Inferior.—The term 'inferior' must be construed to mean 'judicially inferior,' i.e., a Court over which the Court proceeding under sec. 435 has appellate jurisdiction—Nobin v. Russick, 10 Cal 268. 'Inferior' means one who is statutorily incompetent to hold or exercise equal powers; it carries with it the idea of subordination which means 'inferiority in rank'—Pirya Gopal, 9 Bom. 100 (103). The term 'inferior' in this section includes the term 'subordinate' as used in section 436. The reason for the employment of the term 'inferior' in Sections 435 and 437 is that in both these sections the Court of Session and the District Magistrates are combined, and the Magistrates other than the District Magistrate though subordinate to him are not directly subordinate to the Court of Session. It was therefore necessary to employ a term applicable to the relation of the Magistracy both to the supervising authority and to the appellate tribunal—In re Padmanabha, 8 Mad 18.

The District Magistrate is competent under this section to call for and deal with the record of any proceeding before any Magistrate of whatever class in his own district—Opendra v. Dukhni, 12 Cal 473 (F.B.). A first class Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate for the purposes of this section—Waryam v. Amur, 1894 P.R. 10, Q.E. v. Laskari, 7 All. 853 (F.B.); Indar Singh, 30 Cr.L.J. 490, 30 P.L.R. 448. The District Magistrate can call for and examine the record of any first class Magistrate within the district even though the latter has been appointed as an Additional District Magistrate—Abdul Karim, 1908 P.R. 25. In Nawab Ali, 12 Bur.L.T. 56, 51 I.C. 478, 20 Cr.L.J. 494, it was held that a District Magistrate could not call for the record of any proceeding before an Additional District Magistrate. But under the new sub-section (3) of section 10 the Additional District Magistrate is deemed to be inferior to the District Magistrate.

A District Magistrate is not competent to refer the proceedings of a superior Court (Sessions Court) to the High Court—Emp. v. Lobo, 41 Bom. 47; Baldeo Prasad, 46 All. 851 (855); Emp. v. Jamnabai, 28 All. 91; Emp. v. Ganga, 38 All. 378; Zor Singh, 10 All. 148; Sher Singh, 9 All. 362; Hiraman v. Ram Kumar, 18 Cal 186; Karamdi, 23 Cal 280; Mahabirpur, 2 N.L.R. 149; Emp. v. Daulat, 24 A.L.J. 224, 27 Cr.L.J. 327. If, therefore, the District Magistrate considers that there has been a miscarriage of justice in the Sessions Court, he should ask the Public Prosecutor to move the High Court—Q.E. v. Sher Singh, 9 All. 362; Q.E. v. Pirithi, 12 All. 434; Shah Nawaz, 1 S.L.R. 40, 8 Cr.L.J. 161; Angamuthu v. Vanathrian, 23 M.L.J. 732, 13 Cr.L.J. 712; Mahabirpur, 2 N.L.R. 149; Emp. v. Krishnaji, 6 Bom.L.R. 1099. See Note 1199 under sec. 438.

As a Court of revision, the District Magistrate is not inferior to the Sessions Judge. But where he passes an order as a Court of original jurisdiction, he is inferior to the Sessions Judge—Emperor v. Balwant, 24 Cr.L.J. 616 (Oudh); Harkaran v. Harnam, 17 Cr.L.J. 223, 19 Q.C. 108; Opendra v. Dukhni, 12 Cal 473; Najib Khan, 1889 A.W.N. 100. This is now made clear by the Explanation newly added. Even a District Magistrate empowered under sec. 30 is also inferior to the Sessions Judge—Jalloo v. Crown, 1904 P.R. 15. The Explanation further makes it clear that "for the purposes of this section a Magistrate exercising appellate jurisdiction is inferior to the Court of Session. The point was previously open to doubt"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). The District Magistrate sitting as a Court of appeal is an inferior Criminal Court to the Sessions Judge and the latter can refer an appellate judgment of the former to the High Court—Kallu v. Crown, 3 Lah. 23, 23 Cr.L.J. 577; Darbari v. Emp., 23 A.L.J. 894, 26 Cr.L.J. 1282; Emp. v. Mansur, 41 All. 587 (591).

The Court of a Presidency Magistrate is an inferior Criminal Court in respect of the High Court, and the High Court can call for the proceeding of such Court—Malik Pratap v. Khan Mahmed, 36 Cal. 994 (997); Charoobala v. Barendra, 27 Cal. 126 (129). A Municipal Magistrate appointed to deal with offences against the Calcutta Municipal Act is an inferior Court in respect of the High Court—Ram Gopal v. Corporation of Calcutta, 52 Cal. 962, 29 C.W.N. 898, 26 Cr.L.J. 1533.

A single Judge of the High Court acting in the exercise of original criminal jurisdiction is not inferior to the Division or Full Bench of the High Court for the purposes of this section—Press v. K. E., 1909 P.R. 4, 9 Cr.L.J. 378, 1 I.C. 747, but he may be so only for the purposes of sec 434. See notes under sec 434.

'Criminal Court'—The High Court, etc., cannot under the provisions of this section, revise an order passed by any Court other than a Criminal Court. A Magistrate hearing an appeal under sec 86 of the Bombay District Municipalities Act is not a Criminal Court within the meaning of this section—In re Dalsakhram, 9 Bom L.R. 1347. A Collector acting in butwara proceedings and fining a Mukhtar for making false statements in the course of such proceedings, is not a criminal Court, and is not subject to the criminal revisional jurisdiction of the High Court—Dianut Hosein, 10 C.L.R. 14. A Magistrate purporting to act as a Revenue Court is not a criminal Court, and his order cannot be revised by the District Magistrate—Lachhman, 6 O.W.N. 953, 1930 Cr. C 154 (156). A Magistrate acting under section 3 of the E. B. & Assam Disorderly Houses Act is a Criminal Court within the meaning of this section, and the High Court has jurisdiction to revise an order passed under that Act—Rajani Khemlatah v. Pramatha, 37 Cal. 287 (291). The Secretary to the Government of Bengal issuing a warrant under the Goondas Act (Beng. Act I of 1923) as such Secretary is not an officer or Court possessing criminal jurisdiction, and is not an inferior Criminal Court within the meaning of sec 435 of this Code, although under sec 4 (2) of the Goondas Act he is given all the powers of a Presidency Magistrate; therefore the High Court cannot interfere, under sec 439, in the matter of the warrant issued by him—Bhimraj Benia v. Emperor, 51 Cal. 460 (467, 468), 26 Cr.L.J. 20, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 698. The term 'inferior Criminal Court' in this section does not include a Civil or Revenue Court exercising its powers under sec 476. See Note 1254 under sec 476.

In a Bombay case it has been said that even though the proceedings are of a civil nature, still if they are held in a criminal court, they are subject to revision under sec 435 (e.g. proceedings of a Magistrate under sec 2 of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act, or under sec. 458 of this Code). The test is not the nature of the proceeding held by the Court, but the nature of the Court in which that proceeding is held—Emp v. Devappa, 43 Bom. 607 (609).

1172. Orders which are not open to revision:—The proceedings which are open to revision are the proceedings of a Court. Therefore executive orders are not liable to revision under this section. Thus—

(1) The High Court cannot, as a Court of revision, interfere with an extra judicial order passed by a Magistrate—Shere Ali, 1883 A W N 25

(2) The order of a Magistrate directing the observance of Municipal Bye-laws, and prohibiting the slaughter of votive animals in private houses, is not revisable by the High Court—Abdullah v. Nanak Chand, 1885 A W N. 258

(3) The High Court will decline to interfere in revision with an order passed by a District Magistrate whereby he prohibited certain petition writers to carry on their business within the precincts of the District Court—Sukhdeo Prasad, 1902 A W N. 175.

(4) An administrative circular issued by a District Magistrate prohibiting uncertificated pleaders from practising in the Criminal Courts in his district, is not open to revision by the High Court. The proper course for the pleader who has been refused appearance in a particular case by a Magistrate in pursuance of such circular, is to apply for revision of the illegal or improper order of the Magistrate refusing to allow him to appear—Chinnasami v Emp, 19 M L.J. 566, 4 I.C. 876, 11 Cr.L.J. 69.

(5) Proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act are neither civil nor criminal, and therefore an order passed under sec 76 of that Act declaring a person to be a tout can not be revised by the High Court either under sec. 439 Cr. P. Code or under sec 115 C. P. Code, but may be revised by virtue of the wide powers of superintendence under sec. 13 of the Punjab Courts Act or sec 15 of the High Courts Act—Man Singh v. Emp., 1909 P.R 11, 3 I.C 977, In re Kedar Nath, 6 A L J 22, 9 Cr.L.J 22, 1 I.C 143 (144).

(6) An order passed by a Magistrate under sec. 3 of the Sind Frontier Regulation (V of 1872) is an executive order, and not open to revision by the High Court—Jaro, 5 S L.R. 54, 12 Cr.L.J 558, 12 I.C. 646. But an order under sec. 23 of the Sind Frontier Regulation (III of 1892) declaring the forfeiture of a bond entered into by a person under secs 20 and 21 of the Regulation, is revisable by the High Court under sec. 435 Cr. P. Code as the order is a judicial order virtually passed under sec 514 of this Code—Imambux, 7 S L R 194, 15 Cr L J 544 (545).

(7) An order passed by a Magistrate under sec 41 of the Bombay District Police Act (IV of 1890) is an executive order, and the High Court has no jurisdiction to interfere—Satan v. Crown, 15 S.L.R. 126, 23 Cr.L.J. 39, A.I R. 1922 Sind 21. So also, an order passed by a District Magistrate under sec. 44 of the Bombay District Police Act is not a judicial order, but a mere executive order made by him as the head of the Police, and not revisable by the High Court under the present section—Pandurang.

12 Bom. L R. 1029, 8 I.C. 747, 11 Cr.L.J. 705. So again, the High Court has no power to interfere with the District Magistrate's order duly made under sec. 43 of the Bombay District Police Act—Kaji Sultan, Ratanlal 540; nor can the Court of Session call for the records of proceedings taken by a Magistrate under sec. 46 of that Act—In re Haibali, Ratanlal 692.

(8) An order passed by the Collector under the Bengal Alluvial Lands Act (V of 1920) directing that certain huts erected on a disputed char should be sold and the sale proceeds credited to the Treasury, is not a judicial order but an executive one, and not subject to revision by the Criminal Bench of the High Court—Osman v Kader, 33 C W.N. 836, 1929 Cr. C. 480

(9) A Magistrate's order under sec 17 of the Police Act (V of 1861) appointing certain persons as special constables is an order of an executive nature and not an order made in a criminal proceeding, and cannot be made the subject of revision under this section—Parmeshar, 20 O C 229, 18 Cr.L.J. 900 (901)

(10) An order by a District Magistrate for execution of a warrant issued by a Political Agent under sec 7 of the Extradition Act—Gulli Sahu v. Emp, 42 Cal 793 (798, 799)

See also Note 1207 under sec 439

1173. Orders which are open to revision :—The following orders being judicial orders, are open to revision .—

(1) An order passed by a Magistrate under sec 449 of the Calcutta Municipal Act—Abdul Samad v. Corporation of Calcutta, 33 Cal 287; Chuni Lal v. Corporation of Calcutta, 34 Cal. 341

(2) The proceedings of a Magistrate under sec. 113 of the Railways Act -(IX of 1890)—Grey v. N. W. Ry., 1891 P.R. 13

(3) An order by a Magistrate under E. B. and Assam Disorderly Houses Act—Rajani v Pramatha, 37 Cal 287.

(4) An order made by a District Judge under sec 58 of the Forest Act (VII of 1878) on appeal from the order of a Magistrate passed under sec 54 of that Act—Nathu Khan, 4 All 417 (419)

(5) An order purporting to have been made under sec 283 of the Cantonment Code (1899) —Mangi Ram v Emp., 1909 P R 9, 4 I C 611, 11 Cr L J 17

(6) An order passed by a Magistrate under sec 161 (2) of the Bombay District Municipalities Act (III of 1901)—In re Dinbai, 43 Bom 864 (866), 20 Cr L J 702

(7) An order passed by a Magistrate under sec 2 of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act (1859), directing either the return of the advance or specific performance of the contract—Emp v Devappa, 43 Bom 607 (609), 20 Cr.L.J. 316

(8) An order passed by a Magistrate under the Upper Burma Ruby Regulation 1887 is open to appeal or revision under the Cr Pro Code, although under the Regulation no specific provision appears to have been made for appeal or revision—Maung Po Leone v. K E., 2 Rang 321 (323), 26 Cr L J. 289.

(9) An order of a Magistrate acting under sec. 221 of the Madras Local Boards Act (XIV of 1920)—Rangesa Rao v. Swaminatha, 27 L W 320, 29 Cr L J. 389 (390)

(10) An order passed under sec. 7 of the Extradition Act (XV of 1903) is a judicial and not an executive order and can be revised by the High Court under sec. 439, 491 or 561A—Bai Asha, 53 Bom 149, 30 Cr L J. 772

See also Note 1206 under 439.

When an order is passed by a judicial officer in a matter coming within the purview of law and justice and within the scope of the authority of the Courts, the mere fact that the officer passing the order states that he is acting not as a judicial officer but in his executive capacity does not oust the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court—Shiv Nath v Crown, 1908 P R 4, 7 Cr.L.J 202 (204)

Powers of High Court in revision :—See notes under sec 439.

1174. Powers of other Courts in revision :—A Sessions Judge or District Magistrate cannot, after calling for records under this section, take fresh evidence—Sanwalia, 1832 A.W.N. 146; Mulla Ibrahim, 3 Bom L.R 677

The powers of a Sessions Judge under this section may be put in force not only on matters coming before the Judge in Court, but also on matters coming to his knowledge on reliable information—Anonymous, 2 Weir 538

A District Magistrate cannot take cognizance of a case by way of revision against a prisoner who has not appealed. Thus A and B were tried together and convicted of the same offence by a 2nd class Magistrate; A alone appealed but in hearing his appeal the District Magistrate took cognizance of the case against B also and set aside the conviction and sentence of both the accused, and ordered their retrial. Held that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to reverse the conviction and sentence as regards B or to take cognizance of the case against him except by reporting it to the High Court—Sheik Mohudin, Ratanlal 358; Mulla Ibrahim, 3 Bom. L.R. 677.

A Magistrate who calls for and examines the calendar of a case tried by a Subordinate Magistrate, under this section, does not act in a judicial proceeding and therefore cannot order the prosecution of any person under sec. 476, as the matter was not brought before him in a judicial proceeding—Kuppu, 7 Mad. 560; Subraya Vathiyar, 15 M L J. 489. But sec 476 as now amended is not confined to judicial proceedings, and the Court can order prosecution in the course of any proceeding in the proceedings of the inferior Criminal Courts.—(1) the rash issue of process; (2) the dealing with disputed claims of right under colour of a charge of criminal trespass or mischief, and convictions held of the former offence without a finding as to the criminal intent; (3) the indiscreet imposition of fines beyond the means of offenders; (4) the light punishment by inferior Courts of offences requiring severe punishments in cases which ought to have gone up to a superior Court for enhanced punishment; (5) the imposition of heavy fines in addition to imprisonment, with a view, in default of payment, to extend the term of imprisonment beyond the ordinary powers of the Magistrate to inflict, (6) the exaction of excessive bail or excessive security for keeping the peace or for good behaviour, (7) unnecessary delay in the trial of cases—Mad H. C. Rul. 17-12-1884, para 17

Suspension of sentence, Release on bail—By the italicised words added at the end of sub-section (1), "power is given to suspend a sentence or to release an accused on bail pending the examination of the record, thus avoiding the result, should delay occur, that the sentence may have been served before orders are passed"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

1175. Sub-section (4)—The intention of the Legislature in enacting this clause is to prevent the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate from simultaneously exercising their powers of revision, and to prevent them from exercising their powers in such a way as would amount to one of them as it were hearing an appeal from or reviewing an order passed by the other—Debi Din v K E, 4 O C. 119

Under this section, the District Magistrate and Sessions Judge have co-ordinate powers; and therefore after an application for revision has been made to the District Magistrate, no further application can be entertained by the Sessions Judge, even though the Sessions Judge was not asked to revise the order passed by the District Magistrate in revision, but only to call for the record and report the Magistrate's order to the High Court—In re Karpurasundaram, 17 M L J 153; nor can the Sessions Judge act suo motu to call for the records under this section, after an application has been made to the District Magistrate—Waryam, 1912 P R 10, 14 Cr L.J. 134 Where a complaint having been dismissed by the Dy Magistrate under sec 203, a fresh complaint was made before the District Magistrate in revision, who again dismissed the complaint, it was not open to the Sessions Judge to order further inquiry into the complaint—Sheik Siddiq v. Sheikh Chakuri, 17 C W N 451, 17 Cr L J 608. Similarly, the District Magistrate is prohibited by this sub-section from entertaining an application for a direction to commit the accused, after a similar application to the Sessions Judge has been refused, the reason for the prohibition being the avoidance of a conflict between the orders of the two District-authorities having co-ordinate powers in the matter—Kalimuthu v Emp, 26 Mad 477 But where an application for revision preferred to the Sessions Judge has been dismissed for want of prosecution, the District Magistrate is competent to entertain a second application for revision and exercise his powers under this section—Debi Din v K E, 4 O C. 119

Where a District Magistrate called for the record of a case in which the accused had been discharged, and where the complainant subsequently presented an application to the Sessions Judge to have the order of discharge of the accused set aside, and the Sessions Judge sent for the proceedings and after a perusal of them ordered the committal of the accused for trial, it was held that the Sessions Judge's action was not illegal since no application was made to the District Magistrate, and as the District Magistrate's action in calling for the record was not equivalent to entertaining an application—Po Gyi, 8 L.B.R. 361, 17 Cr L.J. 497

436. On examining any record under section 435 or otherwise, the High Court or the Sessions Judge may direct the District Magistrate by himself or by any of the Magistrates subordinate to him to make, and the District Magistrate may himself make or direct any subordinate Magistrate to make, further inquiry into any complaint which has been dismissed under section 203 or sub-section (3) of section 204, or into the case of any person accused of an offence who has been discharged:

Provided that no Court shall make any direction under this section for inquiry into the case of any person who has been discharged, unless such person has had an opportunity of shewing cause why such direction should not be made.

Change :—This is the old section 437, and the old section 436 has been renumbered as sec 437. The reason is that the words "instead of directing a fresh inquiry" occurring in the old section 436 (now 437) refer to the inquiry which can be directed under the old section 437 (now 436), and it is therefore necessary to put the latter section first

The words "person accused of an offence" have been substituted for the words "accused person" occurring in the old section. "There have been different rulings as to whether the expression accused person in this section means any person accused of an offence, and it is now made clear that it does"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). The proviso has been newly added. "We have added a proviso to this section to give effect to the rule laid down by the Courts that a fresh inquiry should not be made into the case of a person who has been discharged unless he has had an opportunity of showing cause"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

1175A. Scope :—This section does not speak of Presidency Magistrates, and the High Court has no power under this section to direct further inquiry into a case of dismissal of complaint or discharge of accused by a Presidency Magistrate—Kedar Nath v. Khetranath, 6 C.L.J.

705; Debi Bux v. Jutmal, 33 Cal 1282; Charubala v. Barendra, 27 Cal. 126. But the High Court can exercise such power under sec. 439; see 36 Cal. 994, 28 Cal. 652 and 26 Cal. 746 cited in Note 682 under sec. 203

A Sessions Judge can revise an order of discharge passed by a Magistrate, in a case instituted under sec. 476, even though he is moved by a private person to do so. There is nothing in this Code to limit the persons who can bring the matter (i.e., the order of discharge) to the notice of the Sessions Judge, and it is immaterial how these facts are brought to his notice—Peary Lal v. Sagar Mal, 49 All 230, 25 A.L.J. 42, 27 Cr L.J. 1130

1176. Who can direct further inquiry :—The mention of the three tribunals together, the High Court, the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate, shows that the Legislature intended them to have the same power with regard to the matter dealt with under this section—Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal 608, Narayana Sawmy, 32 Mad. 220. But though the powers of the three tribunals are co-ordinate, still as a matter of procedure the application should be made at first to the lower tribunal. Thus, where a District Magistrate has dismissed a complaint under sec. 203, the High Court will not entertain an application for revision under this section unless a previous application has been made to the Sessions Judge. The High Court will interfere only as a Court of last resort—Gullay v. Bakar Husain, 28 All. 268; Kali Charan, 1904 A.W.N. 232. So also, where the District Magistrate and the Chief Court have concurrent jurisdiction, an order under this section will be more conveniently made by the District Magistrate than by the Chief Court—Rahim Ali, 1889 P.R. 7.

Since the District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge have co-ordinate powers under this section to direct further inquiry, it follows therefore that where a District Magistrate has directed an inquiry into a case and decided upon it, the Sessions Judge is not competent to order further inquiry under this section—Shakh Siddiq v. Shakh Chakuri, 17 C.W.N. 451, 17 Cr L.J. 608. See Note 1175 under sub-sec (4) to sec. 435. In like manner, when the Sessions Judge has made an order for further inquiry under this section, the District Magistrate cannot make a contrary order, but should submit the matter to the High Court through the medium of the Public Prosecutor—Q. E. v. Prithi, 12 All 434. When a further inquiry has been refused by one of the officers, it should not be ordered by the other, if the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the order of the District Magistrate for further inquiry is wrong, it is open to the Judge to refer the matter to the High Court, under sec. 438, but he has no power to review the order passed by the District Magistrate under this section—Darbari v. Jagoo Lal, 22 Cal 573

A District Magistrate can make or can direct a subordinate Magistrate to make, further inquiry into a case in which an order of discharge may have been passed by himself or by a subordinate Magistrate—Bidhu v. Mafi Sheikh, 28 Cal 102, Munshi, 1902 P.R. 9

A Deputy Magistrate placed in charge of the current duties of the District Magistrate is not thereby invested with the jurisdiction of a District Magistrate under this section—Ramanand v. Koylash, 11 Cal 236

Further inquiry after prior refusal:—When a District Magistrate has once decided under this section that there is no case for further inquiry, he cannot subsequently order further inquiry; such an order would be an order reviewing the earlier one and is prohibited by sec. 369—Ngathan, 5 Bur LT 37, 13 Cr.L.J. 301. So also, where a District Magistrate refuses to direct further inquiry, it is not competent to his successor-in-office, in the face of his predecessor's order, to direct a further inquiry—Ratta Singh v. Kar Singh, 4 C.W.N. 100. But a District Magistrate, who has once declined to order further inquiry on the ground that there was no cause for interference, is competent to order further inquiry on a new information being brought to his notice—Q. E. v. Krishnaji, Ratanlal 522 (523).

1177. Who can be directed to make further inquiry :

—The District Magistrate may be directed to make further inquiry, even though he exercises enhanced powers under section 30 of the Code—Jaloo, 1904 P.R. 15. The District Magistrate may direct a subordinate Magistrate to make the further inquiry under this section. For the purposes of this section, a first class Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate—Q. E. v. Laskari, 7 All. 853, Padmanabha, 8 Mad. 18. The District Magistrate has a discretion in selecting the particular Magistrate who is to make the further inquiry under this section, and this discretion in selection is vested in the District Magistrate and not in the Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge has not the power of directing a particular subordinate Magistrate by name to make the further inquiry—Chundi Churn v. Hem Chandra, 10 Cal 207. But where in case of a Sessions offence, the Sessions Judge directed the further inquiry to be made by a Magistrate specially empowered under sec. 30, because, having formed an opinion on the evidence he considered that the case should be disposed of by a special-power Magistrate rather than that it should be committed to him (Sessions Judge), held that the action of the Sessions Judge was not improper—Tun Win, 4 L.B.R. 233, 7 Cr.L.J. 493 (494) (distinguishing 10 Cal 207).

The further inquiry should ordinarily be made by the same Magistrate who held the first inquiry (Brij Kishore v. Gopal, 11 C.W.N. 316, 319), except in case of death or removal of such Magistrate, in which case it may be conducted by another Magistrate—Q. E. v. Erramreddi, 8 Mad. 296; Q. E. v. Amir Khan, 8 Mad. 336; see also Ram Bharose v. Bhan, 36 All. 129 and Keymer, 36 All. 53. But it is not illegal for the Sessions Judge to direct the further inquiry to be made by a Magistrate other than the Magistrate who had discharged the accused—Tun Win, 4 L.B.R. 233, 7 Cr.L.J. 493 (494). Where the further inquiry involves the taking and weighing of additional evidence, the function will generally be best performed by the same Magistrate who made the previous inquiry; but peculiar or prejudiced views or even the possibility of them, may make it desirable to bring a fresh mind into the facts. Where the further inquiry involves the consideration of the same evidence or of the testimony of the same witnesses, it is usually desirable that the inquiry should be committed to a different Magistrate from the one who has made the first inquiry and has already formed an opinion on the case—Balkrishna, Ratanlal 328 (329). Thus, where the Magistrate who held the first inquiry had already expressed an opinion that it was impossible to affix the guilt to the accused, the High Court directed the further inquiry to be made by another Magistrate—Q. E. v. Vaman, Ratanlal 926. Where the Magistrate who had held the first inquiry had dealt with the case in a most unsatisfactory way, it was held to be a good ground for directing the further inquiry to be made by a different Magistrate—Mad 220. Where there were many before the Magistrate, the High Court should direct the case to be tried by some other Magistrate—Brij Krishan v Gopal, 11 C W N. 316 (320).

But the District Magistrate cannot direct the further inquiry to be held by a Magistrate inferior to the Magistrate who held the first inquiry. Where a case has been tried by a Magistrate specially empowered under section 30, and has ended in a discharge, the District Magistrate should order the further inquiry to be made by the same Magistrate or by another Magistrate equally empowered, but not by a Magistrate who is not empowered under sec 30 and who is therefore in a sense a Court of inferior jurisdiction to the Court which ordered the discharge—Yado v. Emp, 12 N L R 94, 17 Cr.L.J. 245.

When the District Magistrate has sent the case to a subordinate Magistrate for further inquiry under this section, the Sub-divisional Magistrate cannot withdraw the case to his own file from that of the subordinate Magistrate—Santaram, Ratanlal 315. But when a case is sent to the Sub-divisional Magistrate for further inquiry, he can transfer the case to a 2nd class Magistrate subordinate to him—Karuppa, 2 Weir 563.

1178. In what cases can further inquiry be ordered :
—Dismissal of complaint—Further inquiry may be ordered when a complaint is dismissed under sec 203 or 204 (3)—Sahib Kaur v Md. Kasim, 1891 P R 41, Karuppa, 2 Weir 563, Md Salamatulla v Sital, 11 O.C. 261, Makhatambi v. Hassan Ali, 1 N L R 18. But if a complaint was made in respect of one offence and the accused was convicted, further inquiry cannot be directed in respect of another offence for which no charge was made in the complaint—Har Kishore v Jugal, 27 Cal 658. Where a case was taken up not upon a complaint but upon a police-report, a Magistrate's order directing the case to be struck off is not a dismissal of complaint, and cannot be revised by the Sessions Judge—Kamru, Ratanlal 521. No further inquiry can be directed when no complaint was made against a person and no regular process was issued against him—Ambar Ali v. Anjab Ali, 39 Cal 238. Where a complaint has been dismissed under sec 203, the revisional jurisdiction of the District Magistrate may be exercised even though there may have been some irregularity on the part of the officer taking cognizance upon the complaint. This section also contemplates that where a complaint has in fact been dismissed under sec 203, the revisional jurisdiction of the District Magistrate may be invoked irrespective of the consideration whether the dismissal is legal or illegal—Sadhu Charan v. Balai, 3 P.L.J. 346, 19 Cr.L.J. 874. Where a complaint which contained several charges was dismissed in respect of one of the charges, and the complaint was dismissed merely on the report of the President of a Panchayet without giving the complainant any opportunity to substantiate his case, it was held that there should be a further inquiry into the complaint—Purna Chandra v. Ambika, 23 C.W.N. 575. When ordering a further inquiry in respect of a complaint which has been dismissed under sec. 203, the Sessions Judge cannot direct that the accused be summoned, but his power is restricted to making an order for a further inquiry of the same nature as that which has been already made, i.e., a further inquiry under sec. 202—Bechu Mian v. Anwar, 30 C.W.N. 312, 26 Cr.L.J. 305.

This section does not lay down any rule that further inquiry should only be directed when it is found that the judgment of the Magistrate is perverse or foolish. But as a rule of prudence the superior Court should not lightly discard the estimate of the evidence appraised by the Court which heard it, and should not set aside the dismissal of a complaint simply because a different view of the evidence might be taken. Each case has to be decided upon its own merits—Radha Prasad, 28 Cr.L.J. 857 (858) (Pat.).

1179. Discharge of accused :—The District Magistrate may direct further inquiry where the accused has been discharged. But it is not in every case of discharge that a further inquiry may be directed. Where the order of discharge is not perverse or foolish, and where the Magistrate has dealt at length with the evidence and recorded what appear as sound reasons for the discharge, interference under this section is illegal—Nura, 1902 P.L.R. 101, Nasiruddin v. Abdul, 1916 P.W.R. 20, 17 Cr.L.J. 161, Dani, 3 Lah.L.J. 97, 22 Cr.L.J. 199, 60 I.C. 55; Kishan Chand, 21 Cr.L.J. 591 (Lah.), 57 I.C. 91, Khan Zaman v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 1357 (Lah.). Although the word 'improperly' which occurs before the word 'discharged' in sec 437, is omitted in this section, still it is illegal to direct a further inquiry unless the order of discharge was improper, i.e., manifestly perverse or foolish or was based upon a record of evidence which was obviously incomplete—Emp. v. Kira, 1911 P.R. 10, 12 Cr.L.J. 364, Zahur v. Niadar, 9 Lah.L.J. 114, 28 Cr.L.J. 238; Sawan v. Crown, 26 P.L.R. 291, 26 Cr.L.J. 1393; Karam Chand, 24 Cr.L.J. 369 (Lah.); Bahadur, 24 Cr.L.J. 622 (Lah.); Radhe Sham, 20 Cr.L.J. 592 (Lah.); Nabi Baksh v. Crown, 1 Lah. 216; Gopal Das v. Maphi Ram, 26 P.L.R. 353, 26 Cr.L.J. 1508, 7 Lah.L.J. 252; Sheo Charan v. Emp., 21 N.L.R. 88; Yado, 12 N.L.R. 94, 17 Cr.L.J. 245; Kalla, 4 Lah.L.J. 411, 23 Cr.L.J. 693; Mami v. Emp., 27 P.L.R. 397, 27 Cr.L.J. 565. An order of discharge passed by a trial Court after full enquiry and after considering and recording all the evidence produced by the complainant, should not be lightly interfered with—Faiz Muhammad v. Crown, 7 Lah.L.J. 216, 26 P.L.R. 198, 26 Cr.L.J. 1328; Khan Zaman v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 1357 (Lah.). But the Allahabad High Court is of opinion that there is no rule that a Sessions Judge cannot interfere with an order of discharge passed by a Magistrate unless the order is manifestly foolish and perverse. The Sessions Judge can revise the order of discharge passed by a Magistrate, where he disagrees with the finding of the Magistrate and points out certain considerations which in his opinion should have led to a different finding—Peary Lal v. Sagar Mal, 49 All. 230, 27 Cr.L.J. 1130. The word "improperly" which is to be found in sec. 437 has been omitted from this section, and the omission seems to indicate that it was intended by the legislature to confer a very wide discretion, so as to meet not only the cases in which an improper discharge has been made but also those cases in which upon the facts as they stand the discharge is proper, but in the interests of justice and in regard to the peculiar and particular facts of the case it is right that the inquiry should be reopened—Q. E. v. Chotu, 9 All 52 (57, 58) (F.B.).

Where a person has been improperly discharged, no reference to the High Court is necessary, the District Magistrate can himself order a fresh inquiry—Raoji Viskta, Ratanlal 213, Desiba, Ratanlal 938 The intention seems to be to give revisional jurisdiction to the Sessions Court or District Magistrate in cases of improper discharge concurrently with that of the High Court, and thereby to obviate the expense and inconvenience which the necessity to resort to the High Court might in some cases entail—Q. E. v. Balasinnalambi, 14 Mad. 334 (338)

No formal order of discharge is necessary, to enable the District Magistrate to direct further inquiry. When an order is one of discharge in substance, though not in form, the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is competent, upon motion being made by the complainant, to make an order for further inquiry—Nagendra Nath v. Korb, 8 C.W.N. 456 Where after the issue of warrant against certain persons, the Magistrate does not think it proper to proceed further and stops further proceedings, the termination of the proceedings is in effect an order of discharge and is therefore subject to revision under this section—Moul Singh v. Mahabir, 4 C.W.N. 242 Where a person was charged with offences under secs 323 and 307 I P.C., and the Magistrate framed a charge under sec 323 only and said nothing about sec 307, held that this was equivalent to saying that there was no evidence against the accused of an offence under sec 307 I. P. C., and that in effect the accused was discharged of that offence. The Court of revision could therefore order further inquiry in respect of that offence—Sheo Narain v. Radha Mohan, 42 All. 123 (130)

This section applies where the accused has been discharged, i.e., discharged under sec. 209, 253 or 259—Vela v Chidambaram, 33 Mad 85, therefore, no further inquiry can be directed when the accused has been acquitted by a Magistrate—Bayanath v. Gaurikanta, 20 Cal 633; Erramreddi, 8 Mad 296, Panchu v. Umar, 4 C.W.N. 346, Jaliram v. Rajkumar, 5 C.W.N. 72, Bishun Das, 7 C.W.N. 493 Thus, where a complaint in a summons case has been dismissed for default, the order is one under sec. 247 acquitting the accused. Such an order does not fall within the purview of sec. 436—Bindra v. Bhagwant, 25 Cr.L.J.

359 (Oudh). Even if an order of acquittal was passed in a warrant case without any charge having been framed or evidence for the defence taken, still it cannot be a subject of revision under this section—Sayid Khan v K E, 1 A.L.J. 415. If the order is in substance one of acquittal, though the Magistrate styles it an order of discharge, no further inquiry can be ordered—Dodd, 1900 P.L.R. 31; Pothuri Venkataramayya, 17 Cr L J 95 (Mad). Thus, where in a summons case, the Magistrate follows the procedure of a warrant case and discharges the accused, the order of discharge is one of acquittal, although he styles it as an order of discharge, and no order under this section can be passed—Venkataramaiyer, 8 M.L.T. 78, 6 L.C. 385, 11 Cr.L.J. 350. Similarly, after a charge has been framed in a warrant case, the accused can only be acquitted under sec. 258 and not discharged, and if the Magistrate erroneously passes an order of discharge, still there can be no order for further inquiry—Sreeramulu v. Veerasalingam, 38 Mad 585. Where after a full trial the accused persons were discharged, the discharge was for all practical purposes as good as an acquittal, and there should be no order for further inquiry—Sundar v Bharyan, 4 Lah.L.J. 331. The discharge of the accused under sec. 494 (a) upon withdrawal of the case by the Public Prosecutor before the frame of charge does not amount to an acquittal, and further inquiry may be directed—Hata, 30 P.L.R. 58, 30 Cr L J. 233.

No further inquiry can be directed where the proceedings have been stopped under sec. 249 and the accused has been released—Achhru, 1913 P.R. 9, 13 Cr L J 860.

But further inquiry may be directed where the accused has been discharged under sec. 494 (a) upon withdrawal of the case by the Public Prosecutor. Such a discharge is on the same footing as an order of discharge passed on a consideration of the evidence—Hata, 30 P.L.R. 58, 30 Cr.L.J. 233.

No further inquiry can be directed in a case where the accused has been convicted. If in fact in such a case the Sessions Judge thinks that further inquiry is necessary, he must report the matter to the High Court, which Court alone can direct further inquiry in such a case—Valav, Ratanlal 407.

Where the order is neither one of dismissal of complaint nor one of discharge of accused, no order for further inquiry can be passed. Thus, where on the acquittal of an accused, the other accused against whom processes of arrest had been issued surrendered before the Deputy Magistrate, and he passed an order directing that the accused should not be proceeded against and that the warrant and other processes issued against him be withdrawn, the order was neither one of dismissal of complaint nor one of discharge of the accused, and the District Magistrate had therefore no jurisdiction under this section to set aside the order and direct the retrial of the accused—Panchu v. Khoosdel, 12 C.W.N. 68.

1180. No further inquiry where no accusation of 'offence' :—Further inquiry can be directed only in the case of an accused person, the term 'accused' means a person accused of an offence.

and not a person against whom proceedings are taken under Chapter VIII—Imam Mandal, 27 Cal. 662; Dayanath, 33 Cal 8 Therefore section 436 does not enable a Court to order further inquiry to be made in a case of discharge of a person against whom security proceedings were taken under Chapter VIII, because such a person was not in the position of an accused person and could not be said to have committed an 'offence'—Q E. v Imam Mandal, 27 Cal 662, Dayanath, 33 Cal 8; Emp. v Roshan Singh, 46 All. 235; Mid Khan, 1905 P R 42, Maung Than v K. E., 2 Rang. 30 (31), Velu v. Chidambaram, 33 Mad 85; Narain v. Durga, 1911 P.R. 6, 12 Cr L.J. 232, 10 I C 178 (Contra—Q E. v. Mutsaddi, 21 All. 107, K E v. Fyazuddin, 24 All. 148, Kharga v Emp., 36 All 147, Mona Puna, 16 Bom. 661, Baba Yeshwant, 35 Bom. 401, Ebrahim, 2 L B R. 80) The word 'discharged' in section 119 means only 'permitted to depart' and does not mean the discharge of an accused as contemplated by this section, therefore further inquiry cannot be directed in a case of discharge under s 119—Velu v Chidambaram, supra. (Contra—Kharga, 36 All. 147; Manna, 1903 P R 24. Desraj, 52 I C 672, 20 Cr.L J 704) This is now made clear by the present amendment by the use of the words "accused of an offence" The contrary rulings cited above within brackets are now rendered obsolete If a District Magistrate, on examining the record of a security case, is of opinion that the person discharged by the subordinate Magistrate ought to be proceeded against, he can, under sec 438, report the result of his examination of the record to the High Court, which will then pass the necessary orders. But he cannot direct further inquiry under sec. 436—Emp v Roshan Singh, 46 All 235, 22 A L J 129, 25 Cr L J 467; Neur Ahir, 51 All. 408, 30 Cr.L.J. 63 (64).

This section also does not apply to proceedings under sec 133 of the Code, since the person proceeded against under that section is not said to have committed an 'offence' A Sessions Judge or District Magistrate acts without jurisdiction if he directs further inquiry into proceedings under that section—Srinath v Anaddi, 24 Cal 395, Indranath, 25 Cal 425, Prithpal v Emp., 2 O W N 549, 26 Cr L J 1251 The only action which a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate can take in such case will be under sec 438—Prithpal v Emp., 2 O W N 549 Similarly, proceedings under sec 144 do not refer to any offence, and no further inquiry can be directed in a case under that section—Har Kishore v Jugal, 27 Cal 658 So also, this section does not authorise a Magistrate to direct further inquiry into a case under sec 145, as that section has no reference to any offence at all—Chathu v Niranjana, 20 Cal 729, Maung San v Maung Mye, 30 Cr L J 709 The proper procedure in such a case is to make a reference to the High Court under sec 438—Maung San supra. So again, the District Magistrate cannot direct further inquiry into cases under sec 438, since refusal of maintenance is not an 'offence' and the application for maintenance is not a complaint of an offence—Parbati v. Chotey, 17 C P L R. 127, Tokee v Abdul, 5 Cal 536

1181. When further inquiry may be directed :—
Sessions Judge or District Magistrate has jurisdiction to direct inquiry or a re-hearing upon the same materials which were before the subordinate Magistrate, though there is no further evidence forthcoming—Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608; Q. E. v. Balasinnatambi, 14 Mad 334, Dorabji, 10 Bom 131; Q. E. v. Chotu, 9 All. 52 (56) (F.B.); Dayanand v. Emp., 23 A.L.J. 20, 26 Cr.L.J. 736, Sahib Kaur v. Md Kasim, 1891 P.R. 14, Haider Khan v. K. E., 25 Cr.L.J. 66 (Oudh); Po Yin, 3 L.B.R. 97. The expression "further inquiry" does not mean that additional evidence must be forthcoming. Any mistake of law or irregularity in the proceedings will justify the District Magistrate in setting aside an order of discharge—Emp. v. Debidas, 14 C.P.L.R. 161. Further inquiry does not in all cases mean taking of additional evidence, but may mean re-hearing and reconsideration of the evidence already taken—Dulla v. Q. E., 1901 P.R. 2, Sheocharan v. Emp., 21 N.L.R. 88, 26 Cr.L.J. 1537, Begraj, 10 S.L.R. 68, 17 Cr.L.J. 349. But in Harbhaj v. Jowala, 1887 P.R. 63, and Q. E. v. Amir Khan, 8 Mad 336 it has been held that further inquiry means the taking of additional evidence and not a mere re-hearing of the same evidence, which is the same thing as retrial, and therefore where there has been a full inquiry by a competent Court and the accused has been discharged, the Sessions Judge has no power to direct a further inquiry, unless further evidence has been disclosed—Dodd v. Emp., 1900 P.L.R. 31. And the Calcutta High Court has also held that in cases where the trying Magistrate has discussed the evidence carefully and has given sufficient reason for the discharge of the accused, and no fresh evidence is likely to be produced on further inquiry, the superior Court should hesitate before ordering further inquiry, unless there are palpable errors in the decision of the lower Court—Abdul Rashid v. Momtaz, 38 C.L.J. 206, A.I.R. 1924 Cal 229, 25 Cr.L.J. 191, Sulav v. Prafulla, 50 C.L.J. 284, 1929 Cr. C. 467.

The District Magistrate is not competent to direct further inquiry in any and every case falling under this section. This section is limited by the words "on examining the record under sec. 435" and that section lays down that a Court may call for and examine the record for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed and as to the regularity of any proceeding of such inferior Court. And therefore a District Magistrate cannot set aside an order of discharge and direct further inquiry, if he finds no irregularity, illegality or impropriety in the proceedings—Pran Khan v. K. E., 16 C.W.N. 1078, 13 Cr.L.J. 764.

Where a Magistrate has discharged the accused without considering the necessary evidence, the Sessions Judge ought to direct further inquiry in the case—Dhanias v. Clifford, 13 Bom. 376.

Mere lapse of time (e.g. 6 months) is not a sufficient ground for refusal to order further inquiry, if the Court feels that an offence has been committed which should be inquired into—Brijbhukhan v. Jaurao, 23 Cr.L.J. 745 (Nag.). But an order for further inquiry or retrial passed after the lapse of a year and a half from the date of discharge amounts to a travesty of justice—Bishan v. Abdul, 29 Cr.L.J. 895 (896) (Lah.).

The power of ordering further inquiry should be used sparingly and with great circumspection. Therefore where an accused person has been three times subjected to a Magisterial inquiry, it would be an oppression on the accused to send him a fourth time before the Magistrate for inquiry on the same evidence which has been thrice pronounced to be insufficient and untrustworthy—Balkrishna, Ratanlal 328 (330). Where a complaint has been dismissed by the Magistrate after fully considering the police report and the evidence of the complainant and his witnesses and after finding that no offence has been made out, but the Sessions Judge ordered further inquiry, and upset the order of the Magistrate, held that the Judge should not lightly set aside the order of dismissal but should do so only when it is clear that there has been a miscarriage of justice—Jangal v Radha Kishen, 26 Cr L.J. 866. Sessions Judges and District Magistrates should use the powers under this section sparingly and with great caution and circumspection, especially in cases where the questions involved are mere matters of fact—Q E v. Chofu, 9 All. 52 (59) (F B). Alam v Emp., 49 All. 879, 28 Cr.L.J. 601 (602). The Revisional Court ought not to ordinarily interfere with an order of discharge passed by the trying Magistrate, unless it is possible to come to only one conclusion on the evidence, viz that the accused is guilty—Karuppa v Palanisamy, 10 L W 630, 20 Cr L J 817, 53 I C 817, Dani, 3 Lah L J 97, 60 I C. 55, 22 Cr L J 199. Further inquiry cannot be directed on the bare possibility of an offence being disclosed on further evidence being taken. There must be something on record to indicate that such an offence was committed or there must be something to show that further evidence is available which has not been taken and which would support a charge for that offence—In re Arumuga, 43 M.L.J 564. Further inquiry ought not to be directed where there is no prospect of any public advantage from the case being reopened—In re Krishna Pillai, 1923 M W N 56. The powers conferred by this section are not to be exercised promiscuously in all cases wherever the District Magistrate who has not seen the witnesses forms a different opinion of the value of their evidence from that which was formed by the Magistrate who has seen them—Narainah Venkatesh, 18 Cr L J 646, 19 Bom.L.R 350, Dani, supra, Umrao Khan v Emp., 21 A.L.J 194, Udai Raj, 44 All 691, Kallu, 4 Lah L J 411, 23 Cr L J 693. When the circumstances and the evidence are such that two different Courts might take two different views of the evidence, and the order of discharge is neither perverse nor prima facie incorrect, and there is no suggestion that further evidence is forthcoming, no further inquiry should be directed—Alam v Emp., 49 All. 879, 25 A.L.J 703, 28 Cr.L.J 601 (602), Bindeshri v. Emp., 18 A L J 1135, 22 Cr L J 49, Chandan v Kallu 8 A L J 45. A District Magistrate cannot set aside an order of discharge passed by a Subordinate Magistrate and direct further inquiry solely on the ground that the latter has misappreciated the evidence Lakshminarasappa, 31 Mad 133. But see Begraj, 10 S L R 68, 17 Cr L J 349. and Kallu, 4 Lah L J. 411, 23 Cr.L.J 693, A.I.R. 1922 Lah 59.

Further inquiry cannot be directed into an offence (e.g. under sec 19

I.P.C.) if the sanction of the Court in which that offence has been committed is wanting—Meharban v Sitaram, 27 All. 512, 30 Cr.L.J. 874 (875).

A District Magistrate is not authorised to direct further inquiry under this section, when the essence of the matter between the parties is of a civil nature and the question is in reality one which ought to be fought out in a Civil Court—Q E. v. Vithu, 1 Bom L.R. 852.

Effect of order for further inquiry:—An order for further inquiry directed to a subordinate Court means that the case should be taken up again, and that the question of dismissing the complaint or charging the accused, as the case may be, should be again considered, and an appropriate order made as a result of such fresh consideration—In re Narayanaswamy, 32 Mad 220. Where a complaint was dismissed under sec. 203 after an investigation held under sec. 202, the effect of an order for further inquiry is to restore the case to the stage under sec. 202, and the inquiry should be taken up from that point—Radha Prasad, 28 Cr L.J. 857 (859) (Pat.).

1182. Powers of Courts directing further inquiry :

—This section does not authorize a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate to take evidence or direct it to be taken supplementing the evidence given in the Lower Court. He is authorised to direct further inquiry, but not to take evidence or direct evidence to be taken. Under section 428, an Appellate Court dealing with an appeal may direct additional evidence to be taken and itself record such evidence. The High Court under section 439 has all the powers of an Appellate Court and can direct evidence to be taken. But no such powers are given to the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate under the present section—Moni Mohun v Iswar, 6 C.L.J. 251.

The District Magistrate directing further inquiry cannot direct that the accused be put on his trial. All that he can do is to direct further inquiry, leaving it entirely to the inquiring Magistrate to determine whether or not the evidence justifies the accused being charged and put on his trial—Q E. v. Gajan Khan, 2 Bom L.R. 586; Sitaram v Kausilia, 29 Cr L.J. 572 (Pat.). An order for retrial should not be made in the guise of an order for further inquiry—Bhagwanmalee, 2 C.P.L.R. 82.

The Sessions Judge or District Magistrate cannot himself commit the accused for trial at the Sessions, as that would be an order to be made in the course of the further inquiry and could only be made by the person making the further inquiry—In re Narayanaswamy, 32 Mad. 220. When a District Magistrate directs a subordinate Magistrate to make a further inquiry, the whole case is made over to the latter, and the District Magistrate cannot retain seizin of the case in himself. He cannot try the accused or direct process to issue under sec. 204. It is the subordinate Magistrate who has complete jurisdiction to hold the inquiry, to issue process and to try and pass final orders in the case—Ram Baral v. Ram Pratap, 5 P.L.J. 47 (55), 21 Cr.L.J. 594. The District Magistrate directing further inquiry cannot even suggest that the accused be committed to the Sessions, he must leave it to the judgment and discretion of the Sub-Magistrate who is to make the inquiry, and cannot fetter the Sub-Magistrate.

trate's judicial discretion by any suggestion or direction—Q. E. v. Muni-sami, 15 Mad 39. The District Magistrate is wholly wrong in directing a Subordinate Magistrate that he should pass such and such order in a case pending judicially before him—Thakar v. Kirpal, 1918 P.L.R. 53, 19 Cr.L.J. 436, 44 I.C. 964. In making an order for further inquiry it is improper for the Superior Magistrate to write a judgment which is practically a mandate to the Subordinate Magistrate—Yado, 12 N.L.R. 94, 17 Cr.L.J. 245.

The Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate cannot, when directing further inquiry under this section, himself frame a charge or order the Sub-Magistrate to frame the charge and try the accused. He might of course make the inquiry himself and frame a charge in course of it—Narayanawamy, 32 Mad 220.

1183. Powers and duties of the Magistrate making the inquiry:—If the inquiry is directed to be held by a Magistrate other than the officer who held the first inquiry, he should take the evidence de novo, and cannot proceed on the evidence already taken—Ram Dial, 13 Cr.L.J. 255, 9 A.L.J. 310; Hasnu, 6 All 367, Tun Win, 4 L.B.R. 233, 7 Cr.L.J. 493.

The Magistrate making the further inquiry can take further evidence which he had omitted in the first inquiry—Dhana v. Clifford, 13 Bom 376.

The Magistrate is not bound to try the accused for the very offence for which he was originally discharged, but is competent to try him for any other offence which may be established by the evidence—Papadu, 7 Mad. 454.

When further inquiry is directed into a complaint dismissed under sec 203, the Magistrate directed to hold the inquiry cannot at once proceed under sec 204 and summon the accused for trial, but must make an inquiry under sec. 202; and then if upon inquiry he is satisfied that the case is one in which the accused should be put up on trial, he will summon the accused (sec. 204); if on the other hand, he is satisfied upon such inquiry that the case is one in which the accused need not be summoned, he will dismiss the complaint (sec. 203)—Radha Prasad, 28 Cr.L.J. 857 (859) (Pat.), Sitaram v. Kausilia, 29 Cr.L.J. 572 (573) (Pat.). In two other Patna cases it has been held that if the Magistrate directed to hold the inquiry at once summons the accused and proceeds to trial, the procedure is merely irregular and can be cured by sec 537 if no failure of justice has been occasioned—Janakdhari, 8 Pat. 537, 1929 Cr.C. 353 (355) Hema Singh, 9 Pat 155, 1929 Cr.C. 372 (375, 376) (dissenting from Radha Prasad, supra).

A Magistrate holding a further inquiry into a complaint which has been once dismissed under sec 203 can again dismiss the complaint under sec 203—Nibaran v. Sital Chandra 25 C.W.N. 312 (313). But if the Sessions Judge orders a further inquiry into two counter cases, and directs that if one of the cases be found false the other should be tried, the effect of the order is that the cases should be decided in the usual way after trial, and in such circumstances, the Magistrate is not competent to dismiss the case under sec. 203, without holding a regular trial—Brij Kishore v. Gopal, 11 C.W.N. 316 (320).

The Magistrate directed to make the inquiry gets the seisin of the entire case, and has jurisdiction to inquire under sec. 202 as to whether a prima facie case has been made out against the accused, and if he is satisfied that a prima facie case has been made out, he has jurisdiction to issue process to the accused under sec. 204, and to try and dispose of the case himself—Ram Barai v. Ram Pratap, 5 P.L.J. 47 (55), 21 Cr.L.J. 594

The Magistrate who is directed to make further inquiry is not competent to question the propriety of the order directing the inquiry but is bound to carry it out—Q. E. v. Dorabji, 10 Bom 131

1184. Notice to accused:—See the proviso newly added. Although no notice to the accused was necessary under the old section, still it was held in numerous cases that a Court did not exercise a proper discretion if before proceeding under this section he did not give the accused an opportunity, by service of a notice, to show cause against an order directing further inquiry—Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608; Jayaji v. Suphal, 2 C.W.N. 196, Amin Kariadar, 3 C.W.N. 249, Dulla v. Q. E., 1901 P.R. 2, Hari Ram, 1919 P.L.R. 17; Nabi Bakhsh, 1 Lah 216; Kallu, 4 Lah L.J. 411; Rango Tinaji, 5 Bom.L.R. 877; Fazal Din, 1895 P.R. 17, In re Mrs. Raymani, 6 Bom L.R. 479; Mukund, 8 Bom L.R. 694, Abhram, 19 Bom.L.R. 908, 19 Cr.L.J. 101; Rambahal, 4 P.L.W. 220, 19 Cr.L.J. 399; Venkatesalu v. Durvasa, 2 Weir 244; Joy Gopal, 11 C.W.N. 173; Brij Kishore v. Gopal, 11 C.W.N. 316 (319), Abdul Latif, 40 All 416, Umrao v. Emp., 21 A.L.J. 194; Ganapati, 19 A.L.J. 71, Jaswant, 19 A.L.J. 935, Dost Muhammad, 15 A.L.J. 627; Hasnu, 6 All. 367; Kharga, 36 All. 147; Ajudhia, 20 All. 339; Q. E. v. Chotu, 9 All. 52 (59) (F.B.); Bindeshri v. Emp., 18 A.L.J. 1135; Rikh Nath, 24 O.C. 142, 22 Cr.L.J. 655; Sauwal v. Dipchand, 3 S.L.R. 7, 9 Cr.L.J. 446; Vaidyanath, 16 Cr.L.J. 696, 8 Bur L.T. 133; Nga Than, 5 Bur.L.T. 37, 13 Cr.L.J. 301. This is now expressly laid down in the proviso

The opportunity to show cause may be given even after the accused is arrested and brought before the Court—Giridhari v. Emp., 12 C.W.N. 822; Wahed Ali, 32 Cal. 1090, Sahib Kaur v. Mld. Kasim, 1891 P.R. 14; Fazal Din, 1895 P.R. 17.

This proviso applies only where the accused has been discharged, i.e. discharged under secs 209, 253 and 259. No notice would be necessary where further inquiry is directed into a complaint which was dismissed under section 203—Gajraj v. Emp., 47 All 722, 23 A.L.J. 451, 26 Cr.L.J. 1176; Emp. v. Liaqat Hussain, 40 All 133; Appa Rao v. Janakiammal, 49 Mad 918, 26 Cr.L.J. 129 (F.B.); Dhonda, 29 Bom L.R. 713, 28 Cr.L.J. 575 (576); Daya Ram, 2 Luck. 573, 28 Cr.L.J. 650; Nawsher v. Hazratulla, 49 C.L.J. 422, 30 Cr.L.J. 1030, Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal 609; Grish Chunder, 29 Cal. 457; Wahed Ali, 32 Cal. 1090; Fazalbi v. Moonshab, 32 C.L.J. 44; Ajudhia, 20 All 339; Tabarak, 30 All. 52, K.

E. v. Gajankhan, 2 Bom L.R 586; Md. Mutagi, 5 A.L.J. 74; Sheo Narain v. Ram Pratap, 4 P.L.J. 456 (459); Angan v. Ram Pirbhan, 35 All 78. But where the accused person was given an opportunity of being heard before the complaint was dismissed under sec 203, a further inquiry ought not to be directed without giving notice to him. As he was present from the very commencement of the proceedings, it is proper that he should be given an opportunity of being heard before an order is made under this section—Jogesh Chandra v. Nikunja Behari, 27 C.W.N. 552.

When notice is issued under this section, the accused is not legally bound to avail himself of the opportunity given to him to show cause; and he is at liberty either to appear and show cause or to stay away—Kanwar Singh, 1893 P.R. 15.

1185. Recording reasons.—Before making an order under this section a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is bound to record his reasons and to state in what respect the trial Judge's conclusions are unsatisfactory—Sawan v. Crown, 26 P.L.R. 291, 26 Cr L J 1393, Lokhia, 1890 A.W.N. 147; Abinash v. Emp., 13 C.W.N. 76. Nga Than, 5 Bur L.T. 37, 13 Cr.L.J. 301. The wide jurisdiction to set aside an order of discharge cannot be properly exercised without having and assigning solid and sufficient reasons for doing so—Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal 608, Thirukonan Kuppachari, 14 Cr L.J. 572, 1913 M.W.N. 638. The Magistrate should record his reasons for ordering further inquiry, because the High Court in the absence of such reasons cannot exercise supervision over the Magistrate's or Judge's proceedings, and also because it is fair to the person against whom the order is made that the reasons for directing such inquiry should be made explicit to him and that he should have notice of the grounds on which the further inquiry has been directed—Nga Min Dum, U.B.R. (1917) 2nd Qr. 16, 19 Cr.L.J. 14, 42 I.C. 926, Wahed Ali v. Emp., 32 Cal 1090. Where the order of the Sessions Judge for further inquiry does not state any proper grounds, it is liable to be set aside by the High Court—Nagendra v. Korb, 8 C.W.N. 456. But where the order of discharge passed by the trying Magistrate was prima facie improper (e.g. where he discharged the accused without taking any evidence for the prosecution or the defence), the District Magistrate's order for further inquiry without recording reasons was not illegal—Dhandu, 29 Bom L.R. 713, 28 Cr L.J. 575 (576). See also Sitaram v. Kauvilia, 29 Cr.L.J. 572 (573) (Pat.) where the omission to record reasons was excused.

It is not ordinarily desirable that a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge in ordering a further inquiry should make a detailed examination of the evidence and give elaborate reasons, because that might prejudice the trial afterwards, but it is desirable that he should give enough in the shape of reasons to show that his order is proper—Wahed Ali, 32 Cal 1090; Sannul v. Dipchand, 3 S.L.R. 7, 9 Cr L.J. 446. In a Burma case, where in an order for further inquiry the Sessions Judge simply stated "I have translated and considered the whole of the evidence on the record, and the conclusion I have arrived at is that there should be a further inquiry", it was held that it contained ample reasons for the order. It would have been improper for the Judge to comment on the evidence in detail, because such a proceeding would tend to prejudice the accused at the trial—Tun Win, 4 L.B.R. 233, 7 Cr.L.J. 493 (494).

1186. Interference by High Court:—An order of a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate setting aside an order of discharge is liable to be reviewed by the High Court as a Court of Revision. If in any case, the High Court were to find that the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge had set aside an order of discharge on insufficient grounds or that while there were good grounds for setting it aside, the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge had made an order inappropriate to the facts of the case, the High Court would be acting properly in revising the order—Haridas v Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608. Where the order of the Sessions Judge did not stand on any proper grounds for directing a further inquiry, it was set aside by the High Court in revision—Nagendra v. Korb, 8 C.W.N. 456. But where the Sessions Judge after going carefully through the evidence was of opinion that the finding of the trying Magistrate was either perverse or in all probability wrong or manifestly at variance with the evidence which he has recorded, and directed further inquiry after a consideration of all the circumstances, the High Court would not interfere—Zahur v. Niadar, 9 Lah.L.J. 114, 28 Cr.L.J. 238; Karkley v Jagannath, 11 O.L.J. 611, 1 O.W.N. 302, 26 Cr.L.J. 959.

437. When, on examining the record of any case under section 435 or otherwise, the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate considers that such case is triable exclusively by the Court of Session and that an accused person has been improperly discharged by the inferior Court, the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate may cause him to be arrested, and may thereupon, instead of directing a fresh inquiry, order him to be committed for trial upon the matter of which he has been, in the opinion of the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, improperly discharged:

Provided as follows:—

- (a) that the accused has had an opportunity of showing cause to such Judge or Magistrate why the commitment should not be made;
- (b) that, if such Judge or Magistrate thinks that the evidence shows that some other offence has been committed by the accused, such Judge or Magistrate may direct the inferior Court to inquire into such offence.

This is the old section 436. The old section 437 has now been re-numbered as sec. 436. For reason of this transposition see notes under the previous section.

1187. Application of section :—The words ‘or otherwise’ do not mean ‘in any other way whatsoever’ but ‘in any other way provided by the Code’—Nabin v. Russak, 10 Cal 268. The reason for exercising the powers under this section must arise upon materials to be found on the record, and not upon extraneous matter—Lokhia, 1890 A.W.N. 147, Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal 608.

1188. Who can order commitment :—The Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate have co-ordinate powers to order a commitment under this section—Q. E. v. Surendra, 28 Cal 397, Kalu Sandu, Ratanlal 837. A Sessions Judge may take action under this section though the District Magistrate has refused to call for the record and to direct a committal of the case—Gandi Apparaju, 43 Mad 330, 21 Cr L J 91.

The District Magistrate may act of his own motion, quite independent of an order from the Court of Session—Baijoo v. Gangun, 8 W R 61.

The word ‘District Magistrate’ in this section includes a District Magistrate specially empowered under sec 30—Ajjan Singh, 1904 P L R 231. Also, a District Magistrate can, under this section, revise an order of discharge passed by a subordinate Magistrate of the First Class invested with powers under sec 30 of the Code, in a case which is triable exclusively by the Court of Session—Yado, 12 N L R 94, 17 Cr.L J 245.

The Joint Sessions Judge cannot exercise the powers of a Sessions Judge under this chapter, and cannot order a committal to the session in a case discharged by a Magistrate—In re Musa, 9 Bom 164.

Secs 436 and 437 do not apply to Presidency Magistrates, a Presidency Magistrate can himself revive the complaint after he has discharged the accused without any order of the superior authority—Opoorba v. Probod Kumary, 1 C W N 49; Dwarka v. Benumadhab, 28 Cal 652.

1189. “Exclusively triable by Court of Session” —To give jurisdiction to the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, the accused must have been charged with an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session—Ajjan Singh v. Emp, 1904 P L R 234, Kanchan 1 All 413, Tarachand, 7 C L R 168, Bhallu 1897 P R 3. Therefore a Sessions Judge cannot direct commitment or order fresh inquiry in a case where the accused is discharged of an offence within the Magistrate’s jurisdiction—Ramchand, Ratanlal 42, Ma Bakhsh, 1832 A W N. 105, Baijanath v. Gauri Kanta, 20 Cal 633, Kanchan 1 All 413, Nelluri Chenchia 42 Mad 561, Thamanna 15 M L J 373.

If a case is not exclusively triable by the Court of Session the District Magistrate cannot order a commitment under this section, merely because in his opinion the offence could not be adequately punished by a Magistrate—Debi Prasad 1908 A.W.N. 189, 8 Cr L J 47. The words “triable exclusively by a Court of Session” are to be construed strictly and it is not competent to the Sessions Judge to direct a commitment under this section if the offence is not exclusively triable by the Court of Session—Nelluri Chanchia, 42 Mad. 561. This is also the view of the other High Courts. See Ramchand, Ratanlal 42; Bayanath v. Gaurikanta, 20 Cal. 633. But in a Burma case, it has been held that the term "triable exclusively by the Court of Session" means either a case where the District Magistrate considers that the facts constitute an offence which is triable exclusively by the Court of Session, or it might mean a case in which the District Magistrate considers that the sentence which the Magistrate could pass might not be sufficient and therefore it was a case which should be tried by a Court of Session—Tambi, 12 Bur L.T. 62, 19 Cr.L.J. 801, 9 L.B.R. 208.

Where an accused is discharged of an offence exclusively triable by a Court of Session, a Sessions Judge can commit him on a charge not exclusively triable by a Sessions Court if it is intimately connected with a charge exclusively triable by the Sessions Court and forms part of the same transaction. But he has no power to commit for such an offence if it is of an entirely different character. Thus, where an accused is discharged of an offence under sec. 436 I.P. Code, he may be ordered to be committed by the Sessions Judge for trial for an offence under sec. 427 I.P.C. but not for an offence under sec. 380 I.P.C. which is totally different from the category of offences under secs. 427 and 436 I.P.C.—Bijoy Gopal v. Iswar, 53 Cal. 645, 27 Cr.L.J. 1139. Where the accused was charged with two offences, under sections 477A (triable exclusively by the Court of Session) and 408 I.P.C. (not so triable), of which the principal offence was the latter one and the other was merely secondary, and the subordinate Magistrate refused to commit the accused to the Sessions and discharged him, held that the District Magistrate was competent under this section to direct the commitment of the accused even though the primary offence was not triable exclusively by the Court of Session, because the two offences were intimately connected and formed part of the same transaction—Gendhal Chumanbhai v. Emp., 16 Bom. L.R. 80, 15 Cr.L.J. 292. So also, where an accused person appears to have committed culpable homicide, his conviction by a Magistrate of a minor offence does not prevent his trial for murder, etc. The Sessions Judge, if he thinks there is a prima facie case, may call on the accused to shew cause why a commitment should not be ordered, and may thereafter order his commitment under this section if satisfied that there is sufficient cause for it—Ladlia, Ratanlal 337.

1190. "Improperly discharged":—A Sessions Judge may direct a commitment even where the District Magistrate himself discharges the accused—Q. E. v. Laskari, 7 All 853.

The mere fact that a Magistrate has discharged the accused in a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session, without committing him to the Sessions, is not a ground of interference under this section—Sankaraya v. Kerala, 2 Weir 260. The District Magistrate or Sessions Judge, before ordering the committal of the accused to the Sessions Court, must come to a finding, with reference to the evidence that the accused has been improperly discharged—Śrīkrishṇa, 1 P.L.J. 97, 17 Cr.L.J. 330. The mere fact that the charge is in the opinion of the District Magistrate of such an important character that it should be considered by a Court of Session, is not a sufficient reason for interfering with the order of discharge—Śrīkrishṇa, supra.

It is the duty of the Sessions Judge, in considering whether the accused person has been improperly discharged, to consider all the grounds upon which such order of discharge has been passed, including a consideration of the evidence which has not been believed or held to be sufficient to establish a prima facie case. Then only can he pass an order for the commitment of the accused or for further inquiry—Harbans v. Fakir, 7 C.W.N. 77. The Sessions Judge has to consider whether it was open to the Magistrate to come to the conclusion to which he did come on the materials before him. That a different view could be taken on the evidence would not justify the Sessions Judge in ordering commitment; he must come to the conclusion that the finding of the Magistrate is not only wrong but perverse—Ritbhanjan v. Emp., 6 P.L.T. 570, 26 Cr.L.J. 886 (889).

The Sessions Judge can direct the committal of an accused person improperly discharged by the sub-Magistrate, though no express order of discharge has been recorded by that Magistrate—Gandī Apparāṣu, 43 Mad. 330.

The section applies where the accused person has been discharged and not where he has been acquitted—Baija Nath v. Gauri, 20 Cal. 633; Q. E. v. Hanumantha, 23 Mad. 225. Where the Magistrate has in fact discharged the accused though he has used the expression 'acquitted and released,' the Sessions Judge is competent to order a committal under this section—Neetai Dulal, 8 W.R. 41. Where, on a complaint in respect of a sessions offence, the Magistrate finding that no sessions offence had been committed, tried the accused of a non-sessions offence and acquitted him, it was held that this section did not apply, even the acquittal of the accused in respect of the minor offence could not be construed to amount to a discharge in respect of the grave offence, and no order under this section could be passed by the Sessions Judge—Baija Nath v. Gauri, 20 Cal. 633. Where the accused was tried and acquitted by a competent Magistrate on a charge of simple forgery under sec. 465 I. P. Code, but the Sessions Judge by an order under sec. 437 Cr. P. Code directed the commitment of the accused on a charge of forgery of a public document under sec. 467 I. P. Code (a sessions offence) with special bail, it was held the accused should have been charged, held that sec. 437 contemplated a case of discharge, and the accused not having been improperly discharged in respect of an offence under sec. 467 I. P. Code the Sessions Judge had no power to direct his committal—Abdul Hakiri v. Bajrak Ali, 22 C.W.N. 117 (120), 14 Cr.L.J. 1000 (Richardson J.). But in Krishna Reddi v. Subbarama, 21 Cr.L.J. 1000 was held that the acquittal of the accused in respect of a sessions offence was in substance a discharge of the accused in respect of the same offence.

offence, and the Sessions Judge was therefore justified in having made an order for further inquiry in respect of the graver offence and for committal to the Sessions. Similarly, in a Sind case, where a Magistrate of the first class acquitted certain persons who were charged under secs 424 and 506 of the I. P. Code, whereupon the complainant made applications to the Magistrate to frame a charge under sec. 395 I. P. Code, but the Magistrate declined to entertain them, and then the District Magistrate, being moved by the complainant, and acting under sec. 437 Cr. P. Code framed a charge against the accused and committed them to take their trial before the Sessions Court, held that the Magistrate's order was in substance one discharging the accused in respect of an alleged offence under sec. 395 I. P. Code, and the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass the order in question—Khanu v. Emp, 19 S.L.R. 353, 25 Cr.L.J. 1368, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 190 (following 24 Mad. 136).

This section applies not only where the accused has been expressly discharged, but also where he has been impliedly discharged. Thus, where on a complaint for an offence under sec 302 I. P. C. the Magistrate disbelieving the evidence did not frame any charge under sec 302 or 304 I. P. C. but framed only charges under secs. 147, 323, 325. held that the action of the Magistrate amounted to an implied order of discharge in regard to secs 302 and 304 I. P. C., and an order directing committal in regard to sec. 304 can be made by the Sessions Judge—43 Mad 330. But the Oudh Court holds that the word 'discharge' means absolute discharge, and not a partial discharge. Therefore, where the police challan mentioned offences under secs. 147 and 304 I. P. C., but the Magistrate after hearing the evidence for the prosecution framed a charge under secs 147 and 325, the accused could not be said to have been discharged, and the Sessions Judge was not authorised to order commitment for an offence under sec. 304 I. P. C.—Bilodar v. K. E., 3 O.W.N. 201, 27 Cr.L.J. 417, 13 O.L.J. 490.

'By an inferior Court':—For the meaning of 'inferior,' see Note 1171 under sec. 435.

A Subordinate Magistrate of the First Class, invested with powers under sec. 30 is inferior to the District Magistrate, and the latter can revise an improper order of discharge passed by the former in a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session—Yado, 12 N.L.R. 91, 17 Cr.L.J. 245.

1191. Order for commitment:—Under this section the Sessions Judge can himself commit the accused. The words 'order him to be committed' do not mean more than 'pass an order for his committal' and the intervention of a Magistrate for making the commitment is not necessary—Q. E. v. Krishnabhai, 10 Bom 319. There is nothing in this section to shew that when a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge directs a discharged person to be committed for trial, the commitment must be made by the discharging Magistrate—Ibid. But of course it is not wrong to call upon the discharging Magistrate to make the commitment—Q. E. v. Priya Gopal, 9 Bom 100, Q. E. v. Surendra, 28 Cal 397

This section enables the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate to commit the accused person for trial only for the offence with which he was substantially charged in the complaint—Taruck Nath, 19 W R 30 (31). When the accused has been discharged by the subordinate Magistrate of one offence, the Sessions Judge is not competent to direct the accused to be committed for trial for another offence—Sundaram, 2 Weir 549. Thus, where the police charge-sheet on which the subordinate Magistrate took cognisance of a case charged the accused with a minor offence, and the grave offence of rape was not mentioned in it, nor did the prosecution press for the framing by the Magistrate of a charge in respect of that offence, and the Magistrate framed a charge only of the minor offence, it was held that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to direct the subordinate Magistrate to commit the accused to the Sessions for the higher offence—Marappa Goundan, 41 Mad 982, 19 Cr.L.J. 945. If on the evidence it appears that some other offence has been committed by the accused, the proper course is to order an inquiry under proviso (b)

In ordering commitment, the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate should specify the offence for which the accused is to be committed for trial—Joy Kuru v. Man Patuck, 21 W.R. 41. The Sessions Court has no power to commit when there is no legal evidence against the accused—Nowab v. Kokil, 24 W.R. 70. A Sessions Judge, while directing a Magistrate under this section to make a commitment, has no power to direct the Magistrate to take the accused's defence or ask the accused to make a defence—Ghasce, 4 N.W.P. 50.

Order passed after prior refusal.—Where some of the accused persons are discharged, and an application being made to the Sessions Judge for revision of the order of discharge, he summarily rejects the application upon a perusal only of the judgment of the Magistrate, the Sessions Judge is not precluded, upon examining the record when the case of the other accused comes to him for trial, from passing an order of commitment of the persons who have been discharged. The first order was a summary order passed without examining the record, whereas the second order was passed after examination of the whole record of evidence; the first order was not properly speaking a judgment at all. Consequently sec 369 is no bar to the subsequent order. Had the first order been passed after calling for the record and perusing the same, there might have been room for controversy that the Sessions Judge had no power to revise or vary that order under sec 369—Debidas, 33 C.W.N. 974.

1192. Further inquiry, whether can be ordered:—A District Magistrate proceeding under this section is not restricted to ordering commitment of the accused who may have been discharged by a subordinate Magistrate; he can also direct a further inquiry, prior to making an order for commitment—K. E. v. Moniruddin, 18 Cal. 75

Where, after the discharge of an accused person, fresh evidence comes to light, the District Magistrate should not direct a subordinate Magistrate to commit the accused, for it will amount to a committal for trial on the evidence of witnesses whom the accused has not had an opportunity of cross-examining. The proper course for the District Magistrate is to direct a fresh inquiry—Lingappa, 2 Weir 550

When commitment should be ordered and not further inquiry.—Where in a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session the inferior Court has considered the whole of the prosecution evidence and there is no defect of procedure, and the Magistrate discharges the accused because in his opinion the evidence is insufficient or incredible, then if the District Magistrate comes to a different conclusion upon the evidence, his proper course is to make an order of commitment and not to direct further inquiry—Yado, 12 N.L.R. 94, 17 Cr.L.J. 245. Where in a case triable exclusively by the Sessions Court, the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is satisfied that on the evidence taken there is a clear case for committal, and there is no reason for desiring a further consideration by the Magistrate, it would ordinarily be his duty to commit under this section without ordering a further inquiry—Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608.

1193. Proviso (a):—Notice to accused:—It is an essential condition precedent to an order under this section that the accused should have an opportunity of showing cause against his commitment. An order made without issuing such notice is bad in law and not maintainable—Asif Khan v. Faltu, 1888 A.W.N. 236, Dwarkanath, 1 C.L.R. 93; Nonab v. Koki, 24 W.R. 70; Thammanna v. K. E., 15 M.L.J. 373. Where some of the accused were not made parties to the revision petition to the District Magistrate against the order of discharge, and no notice had been ordered to be served upon them, and they had no opportunity of showing cause against the order of commitment made by the District Magistrate, held that the order of commitment made by the District Magistrate was clearly wrong and must be set aside so far as these accused were concerned—In re Mania, 48 Mad. 874, 49 M.L.J. 155, 26 Cr.L.J. 1570. Where, however, a District Magistrate ordered the subordinate Magistrate to make a committal to the Court of Session, without giving the accused any notice, but the committing Magistrate issued a notice before doing so, the defect was cured by sec. 537—Rabha, Ratanlal &c. Also, where no objection was taken to the want of notice and the omission has not occasioned a failure of justice, the High Court will not interfere—Emp. v. Khamir, 7 Cal. 662.

The opportunity to shew cause mentioned in this proviso does not mean any opportunity but that the accused must have a special opportunity. Where the Sessions Judge who was trying a case of false evidence suddenly asked a witness in the course of his examination to explain why he should not be again committed for a trial for murder in respect of an act for which he had been previously discharged, and on answers given by the witness to the above question, ordered his commitment for trial for murder, held that the order was illegal since the accused had not been properly called upon to shew cause—Ratanlal 588.

If a notice is given to the accused under this proviso, he is not under any obligation to appear and shew cause. He may or may not avail himself of the opportunity as he chooses—Kanwar v. Q. E., 1893 P.R. 15.

1194. Interference by High Court.—Under sec. 439, the High Court has power to revise an order of commitment passed under this section by the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate—Rash Behari v. Emp., 12 C.W.N. 117. In the exercise of the powers of revision, the High Court can, on the merits of the case, cancel an order of commitment passed by the Sessions Judge under this section, as for instance, where the order setting aside a discharge and directing commitment is made on insufficient or unreliable evidence—Prithi Chand v. Sampatia, 7 C.W.N. 327, or where there is no prima facie case for commitment—Sheobux v. Emp., 9 C.W.N. 829.

The order of a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate under this section directing commitment can be quashed by the High Court in the exercise of its revisional powers under sec. 439, and not under sec. 215—Kalagana, 27 Mad. 54. Sec. 215 refers only to a commitment actually made, and not to an order directing commitment contemplated by section 437. Therefore the High Court, in considering the order of a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate passed under section 437, may consider the facts as well as the question of law involved and is not limited to points of law only as under sec. 215—Muthia v. Emp., 30 Mad. 224; Rash Behari v. Emp., 12 C.W.N. 117; Tinkouri v. Emp., 1 P.L.T. 153, 21 Cr.L.J. 328, 55 I.C. 600, Munshi Mander v. Karu, 6 P.L.T. 146, 25 Cr.L.J. 1089.

But though the High Court possesses the powers to revise orders of commitment, it should exercise those powers most sparingly, and only where it is manifest that the Sessions Judge's order is improper, e.g., where there is no evidence to prove the offence charged—30 Mad. 224; In re Mania Manika, 48 Mad. 874, 49 M.L.J. 155. It is evident from this section that the fullest and widest discretion has been given to District Magistrates and Sessions Judges, and when an order of commitment has been duly made, the High Court should be most unwilling to interfere except upon strong grounds and under exceptional circumstances—Fattu v. Fattu, 26 All. 564; Mangat Rai, 13 A.L.J. 111, 16 Cr.L.J. 139, 27 I.C. 203.

438. (1) The Sessions Judge or District Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, on examining under section 435 or otherwise the record of any proceeding, report for the orders of the High Court the result of such examination, and, when such report contains a recommendation that a sentence be reversed or altered, may order that the execution of such sentence be suspended, and, if the accused is in confinement, that he be released on bail or on his own bond.

(2) An Additional Sessions Judge shall have and may exercise all the powers of a Sessions Judge under this Chapter in respect of any case which may be transferred to him by or under any general or special order of the Sessions Judge.

Change—The italicised words 'have been added by section 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 "in order to provide for the absence of a Sessions Judge, we think it is necessary to empower him to make a general order authorising the Additional Sessions Judge to exercise all his powers. We have provided for it specifically by this amendment"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

1195. Who can report :—The only Courts which can make a reference to the High Court are the Court of Session and District Magistrate. An Additional Sessions Judge has jurisdiction to exercise the powers of a Sessions Judge only in respect of cases transferred to him by the Sessions Judge—Ramchandra, 1903 A.W.N. 28. In the absence of such transfer, an Additional Sessions Judge has not the powers of a Sessions Judge under this section—Crown v. Abdul Gaffur, 1 L.B.R. 119. A Joint Magistrate cannot exercise the powers of the District Magistrate—Chooramoni, 14 W.R. 25

'If he thinks fit'.—These words indicate that the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge is not bound to refer every case in which he may detect an error—Nidaran, 20 W.R. 40.

1196. When reference may be made :—A District Magistrate should refer all cases in which he considers the order of the Subordinate Court as illegal—Anonymous, 2 Weir 564 (565). When a Sessions Judge considers that the judgment or order is contrary to law, or that the punishment is severe or inadequate, he may report the proceedings to the High Court—Emp. v. Khubi, 1881 A.W.N. 12. Where a District Magistrate is of opinion that a subordinate Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try a particular case, the District Magistrate has no power to quash the proceedings of the Sub-Magistrate but must report the case for proper orders to the High Court—Kandasawmi v. Soli Goundan, 23 Mad. 540. So also, if a Sessions Judge is of opinion that an order of a District Magistrate directing a further inquiry under sec 436 is wrong, a reference to the High Court may be made under this section—Darbari v. Jagoo Lal, 22 Cal. 573. A Sessions Judge cannot, upon examining the monthly criminal return of a Magistrate, order further inquiry under sec 436 into the case of a person who has been convicted. If he thinks any further inquiry necessary, he should refer the case to the High Court under this section—Vasav, Ratanlal 407.

Power of reference after prior refusal:—The fact that a Sessions Judge has once refused to make a reference to the High Court after examination of the case in the ordinary way under sec. 435, does not take away his jurisdiction to make a reference on subsequent facts which come to his knowledge. The words "or otherwise" in this section are wide enough to meet a case where there is clear evidence of some gross miscarriage of justice having occurred, which ought to be brought to the knowledge of the Revisional Court, although in the absence of knowledge of such evidence an application for revision might have been previously rejected—Sitaram, 29 Bom L R 490, 28 Cr L J 896.

1197. When reference is improper:—This section allows a reference only when the Court of Session is of opinion that the judgment or order is contrary to law, or that the punishment is too severe or inadequate, but not on the ground of the insufficiency or incredibility of the evidence—Emp v Khubi, 1881 A W N 12, Emp v. Ukhid Ali, 17 C.P.L.R 36; Shaik Oodla v Burkat, 18 W R. 7.

A case should not be reported on the ground that a conviction is bad on the merits, unless it is very clear that the conviction is wrong and that there can be no reasonable doubt on the matter. A Sessions Judge should not refer a case to the High Court merely because he considers the conviction of the accused to be bad on the ground that the prosecution witnesses had something in common with the complainant and were on bad terms with the accused—Sudaman v Emp., 49 All. 551, 28 Cr L J 399 (400). A necessity for altering a conviction from one section to another for a cognate offence, when the accused has not been prejudiced by any such error, is not a sufficient ground for a reference to the High Court under this section—Emp. v Ishan Chandra, 9 Cal 847.

When a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge has himself the power to make the order which he proposes in his letter of reference, a reference under this section is unnecessary—Bidhu v Moti, 28 Cal. 102. The High Court will not exercise its revisional powers in a case where the Magistrate making the reference has jurisdiction to dispose of the case himself—Rahimдино, 22 S L R 201, 28 Cr L J 978 (979). Thus a case which regularly comes to the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, on the appeal of a prisoner, cannot be referred to the High Court under this section but must be disposed of by the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate himself—Sreekissen, 9 W R 5; Nussurooddin, 11 W R 24, Bega Singh, 1914 P L R 62, 15 Cr L J 485 (487). A report cannot be made in a case where the proceedings are themselves the subject of a revision case or appeal case pending before the District Magistrate, whose duty it is to pass a judicial order on that case himself—In re Palani Gownden, 15 Cr L J 472 (Mad). See also Rahimдино, supra. Where an accused has been discharged by a Magistrate, the District Magistrate, if he is of opinion that the discharge is wrong, may take action under sec 436, if he deems it necessary, but cannot make a reference to the High Court—Shrinivas, Ratanlal 290 (291).

This section authorises the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge to make reports to the High Court in respect of proceedings of inferior Criminal Courts, but not in respect of a proceedings pending before his own Court; nor does it authorise him to transfer the decision of a difficult case pending before him to the High Court—In re Palani Gowden, 15 Cr.L.J. 472; see also 1914 P.L.R. 62, 9 W.R. 5 and 11 W.R. 21 cited above

A reference by the District Magistrate direct to the High Court for enhancement of sentence is irregular and not warranted by law. The proper course for him to adopt would be to instruct the law officers of the Crown in the High Court to file an application for revision asking for enhancement of the sentence—Gulab, 29 Cr.L.J. 235 (236) (Lah.)

Where a Sessions Judge on appeal considers that the conviction and sentence in respect of some of the accused should be altered, and an order under sec. 106 in respect of some of the accused should be set aside, the proper procedure for him is to dispose of the appeal under sec. 423, so far as can be disposed of by him, and to make a reference to the High Court under this section as to necessary matters, and not to let the appeal wait for the reference—Durga Prasad, 1884 A.W.N. 120.

A reference can be made if the District Magistrate is of opinion that there is a case for revision, upon examining the record of the Sub-Magistrate's proceeding, and not merely on the representation of the complainant against the Subordinate Magistrate's decision—Nagoo, Ratanlal 340, nor merely on the report of a Jail Daroga—Kunjai, 1891 A.W.N. 80.

Reference in cases of acquittal—In the case of an acquittal by a Subordinate Magistrate, if the Government does not appeal, the proper course for the District Magistrate, if he is dissatisfied with the order of acquittal, would be to move the Local Government for exercising its powers under sec. 417 and not to make a reference to the High Court under this section. It is not proper and expedient for the High Court as a general rule to exercise its powers of revision in respect of order of acquittal on a reference from the District Magistrate, when the Local Government has not appealed against the order—In re Sheikh Aminuddin, 24 All. 346, Emp v. Madar, 25 All. 128; Crown v. Achhar Singh, 5 Lah. 16 (19), 25 Cr.L.J. 931, Hrishikesh v. Abadhut, 44 Cal. 703; Dabiraddi v. Sakat, 56 Cal. 924, 30 Cr.L.J. 579; Q. E. v. Ranga Row, 15 Mad. 36; Mogal Beg, 42 Mad. 109; Gur Dayal, 12 A.L.J. 255, 15 Cr.L.J. 304, Sinnu Gounden, 38 Mad. 1028; Ganga v. Ramzan, 26 Cr.L.J. 337 (Lah.); K E v. Chandika, 24 O.C. 4.

In a recent Patna case it has been held that the High Court may justly refuse to interfere on a reference by a District Magistrate only where it is clear that the case is one in which the Local Government would be expected to move on account of its special importance to the administration. But the High Court cannot refuse to entertain a reference in those cases of acquittal which are of no public interest (so that the Government would not move) and in which the High Court would interfere under sec. 439 at the instance of a private party—Wazir Kunia.

7 Pat. 579, 30 Cr.L.J. 673 (674). Moreover, a distinction should be drawn between a reference by a District Magistrate and a reference by a Sessions Judge. A District Magistrate has the means of communicating with the Local Government with a view to an appeal under sec. 417, but a Sessions Judge has no such means, and he must either act under sec. 438 or not at all. Further, a Sessions Judge's outlook on the matter is purely judicial. Consequently, a reference made by him ought not to be rejected by the High Court—Wazir Kunjra, supra Reference in Police Proceedings—This section does not empower a District Magistrate to refer to the High Court the proceedings of a Superintendent of Police, as the latter is not a Court subordinate to the Magistrate—Sankal Chand, Ratanlal 133.

Improper form of reference—Where a reference asked the High Court not to quash the entire order (under sec. 145) passed by a Magistrate, but to confirm a part of the order and to quash the rest, the High Court rejected the reference as improper in form—Collector of Howrah v. Santak, 44 C L.J. 593, 28 Cr L J. 210 (212)

1198. Power to refer proceedings of superior Court :

—The powers of the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate under this section are limited by sec 435, which speaks of proceedings of an inferior Criminal Court, and therefore the District Magistrate has no power to question the propriety of an order of the superior Court (Sessions Judge's Court) and to refer the order to the High Court, for the purpose of having it quashed or modified, especially if the order of the Sessions Judge is one which sets aside or modifies the order of the District Magistrate himself—Allah Mahr, 49 All 443, 28 Cr L J. 281 (283); Emp. v. Jamnabai, 28 All. 91; Crown v. Wesawi, 5 Lah. 11 (14), 25 Cr.L.J. 928; Emp. v. Lobo, 41 Bom 47, 18 Bom L R 796, Anonymous, 2 Weir 565; Q E. v. Jahandi, 23 Cal 249; Q E v Karamdi, 23 Cal 250, Hiraman v. Ram Kumar, 18 Cal 186, Mahabirpuri, 2 N L R 149, Emp v. Ganga, 36 All 378, Baldeo Prasad, 46 All 851 (855), Emp. v. Daulat, 24 A L J 224, 27 Cr L J 327, Zor Singh, 10 All 146, Emp. v Fazal Dad, 24 Cr L J 573 (Lah), Ishar Singh, 26 P L R 801, 27 Cr L J 430; Shah Newaz, 1 S L R 40, 8 Cr L J 161, Emp v. Kassim, 17 S L R 268, 26 Cr.L J 177 (179) A fortiori, the District Magistrate has no power to call upon the Sessions Judge to forward the reference to the High Court, and the Sessions Judge can rightly refuse to forward it—Allah Mahr, supra The District Magistrate cannot make a reference to the High Court taking exception to certain remarks made by a Sessions Judge in his judgment, and asking the same to be expunged therefrom—Khudabux, 21 S L R. 48, 27 Cr L J 1253 The District Magistrate cannot ask the Sessions Judge to report a case to the High Court in which the Magistrate thinks that the acquittal on appeal by the Sessions Judge was wrong—Gamani, 1882 A W N 135 It is never intended that a Subordinate Magistrate should have the power of questioning the propriety of an order passed by an Appellate Court, and of reporting it to the High Court, for revision, simply on the ground that he considers that the original sentence was a proper sentence and should not have been reduced—Emp v. Ram Lal, 8 Cal 875. If the District Magistrate thinks that there has been a miscarriage of justice in an appeal heard by the Sessions Judge, or if he is dissatisfied with a sentence passed by the Sessions Judge, he should not report the case to the High Court for orders under sec 438 but should communicate with the Public Prosecutor and invite his attention to it—Shere Singh, 9 All. 362 (363); Baldeo Prasad, 46 All. 851 (855); Shah Nawaz, 1 S.L.R. 40, 8 Cr.L.J. 161; Hiraman v Ram Kumar, 18 Cal. 186, Krishnaji, 6 Bom.L.R. 1099; Fazal Dad, 24 Cr.L.J. 573 (Lah.); Karsan, Ratanlal 601; Bajio, Ratanlal 623; Emp. v. Kassim, 17 S.L.R. 268, 26 Cr.L.J. 177 (178).

1199. Power to refer question of law :—This section empowers the Sessions Judge and District Magistrate, on examining the record of any proceeding under sec. 435, to report to the High Court for order the result of such examination, which means that the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is to report the incorrectness or illegality of the sentence or order and not that he should refer abstract points of law to the High Court—Chouri v. Putai, 5 O.C. 316 This section was not intended to enable the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge to get the opinion of the High Court on a question of law arising in a case pending before him—Paloni Gownden, 15 Cr.L.J. 472 (Mad.); Rahimino, 22 S.L.R. 201, 28 Cr.L.J. 978 He cannot make a reference to the High Court on the ground that he entertains some doubt about the correctness of some rulings of the High Court—Bega Singh, 1914 P.L.R. 62, 15 Cr.L.J. 485 (487) There is no provision of law which enables a Judge to stop a trial already commenced and to refer to the High Court any questions of law arising on the merits in the case—Bapuji, Ratanlal 214 Where a Sessions Judge, after having asked the opinions of the assessors in a case tried before him, made a reference to the High Court on a question whether he had jurisdiction or not, the High Court held that the Sessions Judge ought to have disposed of the question himself and that this section was never intended to be used for the purpose of sending questions to the High Court for opinion—Bhup Singh, 2 All 771; see also Kallu, O.S.C. 71

Where the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate does not really dissent from the actual decision arrived at by the trial Court, a reference to the High Court merely with the object of obtaining a ruling on a question of law ought not to be made—Emp. v. Madho Singh, 47 All 409, 23 A.L.J. 189, 26 Cr.L.J. 865

Power to take evidence :—Neither section 435 nor this section enables the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge to take further evidence with a view to report the case—Mulla Ibrahim, 3 Bom.L.R. 677; Muhajinia v. Ram Charam, 12 A.L.J. 461, 15 Cr.L.J. 575

1200. Contents of the reference :—(1) A Sessions Judge before he refers the case to the High Court is bound to call upon the inferior Court for an explanation of the order passed, and should submit such explanation to the High Court together with the record—Mallamdi v. Taripulla, 8 Cal. 644.

(2) The reasons for the reference should accompany the record—Kunjal, 1891 A.W.N. 80.

(3) The order of reference should set forth the points on which orders are required—Bechan, O.S.C. 64.

(4) The reference should contain a recommendation that the sentence be revised or altered—Emp. v. Mohan Lal, 27 All. 25, and the District Magistrate should also give a brief abstract of the case and the grounds upon which he recommends that the order or sentence he considers to be incorrect should be set aside by the High Court—Keshava, 9 Cr L.J. 502 (Mad.).

But the report should not contain any representation of the complainant protesting against the Subordinate Magistrate's decision—Q. E. v. Nagoo, Ratanlal 340. So also, a representation made by the Inspector of Police to the District Magistrate in the form of a letter, in which the former expressed his view that a case should be retried (together with the grounds for retrial) should not be forwarded to the High Court along with the reference—Brahmadin, 26 A.L.J. 76, 28 Cr L.J. 946 (1947). If the prosecuting Inspector, being dissatisfied with the order of the trial Court, moves the District Magistrate for referring the case to the High Court, the notes of the Inspector should be examined by the District Magistrate, and if there is any portion of them which he considers to be of value, he should embody them in his own order; but it is improper for him to accept en bloc the Inspector's criticisms and to attach them to his letter of reference. And it would be more seriously wanting in propriety if the Inspector's notes contain unbecoming language about the trying Magistrate, and the District Magistrate allows a document containing that language to be forwarded to the High Court—Ram Lal, 51 All 663, 27 A.L.J. 361, 30 Cr L.J. 562 (566).

1201. High Court's power in dealing with reference :—Where a District Magistrate referred a case with a recommendation that the order of the Sub-Magistrate should be set aside on the ground that the latter did not apply his mind to the actual evidence before him and took a grossly biased and distorted view of the case held that the High Court would not rely upon the expression of opinion of the District Magistrate, without satisfying itself upon the evidence and upon the conduct of the proceedings generally that that opinion was right, that is, the High Court would investigate the whole of the facts before it would come to the conclusion whether it ought to interfere in revision—Hrishikesh, 44 Cal 703, 21 C.W.N. 250. Where the trial Court has fully considered the evidence and discharged the accused, the High Court will not interfere, on a reference by the District Magistrate, unless it is shown that the order of the trial Court was either perverse or unreasonable—Emp v Jagdamba, 11 O.L.J. 334, 1 O.W.N. 245, 25 Cr.L.J. 1026.

The power of the High Court to interfere on the merits is undoubted, but this Court will not exercise its power so as virtually to give a right of appeal, and in reporting a case under this section the Sessions Judge must bear in mind this limitation which exists in practice as regards the exercise of the High Court's power of revision—Sudaman v. Emp., 49 All. 551, 28 Cr.L.J. 399 (400)

439. (1) In the case of any proceeding the record of which has been called for by itself or which has been reported for orders, or which otherwise comes to its knowledge, the High Court may, in its discretion, exercise any of the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by sections * 423, 426, 427, and 428 or on a Court by section 338, and may enhance the sentence; and when the Judges composing the Court of Revision are equally divided in opinion, the case shall be disposed of in manner provided by section 429.

(2) No order under this section shall be made to the prejudice of the accused unless he has had an opportunity of being heard either personally or by pleader in his own defence.

(3) Where the sentence dealt with under this section has been passed by a Magistrate acting otherwise than under section 34, the Court shall not inflict a greater punishment for the offence which, in the opinion of such Court, the accused has committed, than might have been inflicted for such offence by a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class.

(4) Nothing in this section applies to an entry made under section 273, or shall be deemed to authorize a High Court to convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction.

(5) Where under this Code an appeal lies and no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision shall be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed.

(6) Notwithstanding anything contained in this section, any convicted person to whom an opportunity has been given under sub-section (2) of showing cause why his sentence should not be enhanced shall, in showing cause, be entitled also to show cause against his conviction.

Change :—This section has been amended by sec. 119 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. In sub-section (1) the figure "195" has been omitted; this is consequential to the amendment made in sec. 195. Sub-section (6) has been newly added. The reasons are stated in proper places.

1202. Scope of section :—The series of sections 435-439 must be read together. Of these, section 435 is the principal section dealing with the grounds upon which revisional jurisdiction may ordinarily be exercised, and sec. 439 must be read along with and subject to the provisions of sec. 435—Har Prasad, 40 Cal 477 (F.B.), Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608. Section 439 must be read along with and subject to section 435, if a case is outside the scope of section 435, section 439 cannot apply to it—Moiram v. Mriyan, 47 Cal 438. Secs 435-438 prescribe the method by which the records of any Criminal case come to the High Court, and the power of the High Court to deal with the record is in Sec. 439. Secs. 435-438 provide the machinery and sec 439 gives the power to dispose of the record—Kamal Kutty v Udayavarma, 36 Mad. 275. The words "the record of which has been called for by itself" refer to sec 435, and the words "which has been reported for orders" refer to sec 438

'Any proceeding' —Under the old Code of 1872, the words used in this section were 'judicial proceeding' instead of the words "any proceeding," and the High Court could call for and revise the record of a judicial proceeding only; but under the Code of 1882 (as well as under the present Code) the High Court can call for and examine the record of 'any proceeding' e.g., an order by a Magistrate under sec 517 below—Gangamma, 2 Weir 538 (539).

High Court should not be moved in the first instance —See Note 1168 under section 435, under heading "To whom application should be made "

1203. Grounds of interference :—The controlling power of revision of the High Court in criminal cases is an extraordinary power and it must be exercised with due regard to the circumstances of each particular case, anxious attention being given to the said circumstances which vary greatly. This discretion ought not to be crystallized, as it would become in course of time, by one Judge attempting to prescribe definite rules with a view to bind other Judges in the exercise of the discretion which the Legislature has committed to them. This discretion, like all other judicial discretions, ought, as far as practicable, to be left untrammelled and free, so as to be fairly exercised according to the exigencies of each case—Emp v Bankatram, 28 Bom 533. No hard and fast limitation should be placed on the exercise of the powers of superintendence of the High Court over the proceedings of inferior Courts. There is no species of injustice which the High Court would be powerless to correct, where its interference is called for—National Bank Ltd. v Kothandarama, 14 M L.T. 200, 14 Cr L J 529, 1913 M W.N. 728; Lakhraj v Debi Pershad, 12 C.W.N. 678. The circumstances which will justify the interference of High Court have not been and cannot be laid down with precision. While the Judges have repeatedly held that only when exceptional grounds exist the High Court ought to interfere, the decided cases shew that no hard and fast rule can be laid down but that when in the interests of justice the High Court's intervention becomes necessary, it ought not to be refused—Ramanathan v. Subrahmanya, 47 Mad. 722 (725).

Section 439 empowers the High Court to revise an order which, in the language of sec 435, is incorrect, illegal or improper. Where a Magistrate passing an order under sec. 449 of the Calcutta Municipal Act (1899) for demolition of a building, has not properly exercised his discretion under that section, or has passed an erroneous order, the High Court can set aside the order in revision—Abdul Samad v. Corporation of Calcutta, 33 Cal. 287 (290, 291); Chuni Lal v. Corporation of Calcutta, 34 Cal. 341 (345). Sections 435 and 439 give the High Court power to control the propriety as well as the legality of a finding, sentence or order of any inferior Criminal Court. If therefore a sentence has been passed or confirmed by a Court which could not legally try the case by reason of the prohibition contained in sec. 556, or should not properly have tried the case, the High Court has a discretion to interfere and set aside the proceedings—Faiz Muhammad, 9 N.L.R. 81, 14 Cr.L.J. 385 (386, 387). When an illegal order is passed and action taken by a Magistrate which involves matters coming within the purview of law and justice and within the scope of authority of the Court, the revisional power of the High Court cannot be ousted by the mere ipso dixit of the Magistrate that he was not acting as a Judicial officer but in his executive capacity; and the High Court can interfere in revision—Shiv Nath v. Emp., 1908 P.R. 4, 7 Cr.L.J. 202 (204).

The High Court can interfere in revision on the ground of misreading of documentary evidence and fundamental errors in principle which vitiate the conduct and disposal of the case—Emp. v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 28 Bom 479.

The High Court will interfere with an order of a Magistrate passed without jurisdiction under a certain Act, even though that Act provides that the conviction under it shall not be open to appeal or revision—Khamiso, 2 S.L.R. 20, 10 Cr.L.J. 233. Thus, although sec 15 of the Extradition Act ousts the jurisdiction of the High Court to inquire into the propriety of a warrant issued under Chapter III of that Act, yet where the order was made clearly without jurisdiction, it is open to revision by the High Court at the instance of the party whose liberty is affected by it—Gulli Sahu, 41 Cal. 400, 18 C.W.N. 869, 14 Cr.L.J. 673; Fuseenally, 7 Bom L.R. 463, 2 Cr.L.J. 439.

The High Court will interfere and reduce the sentence where the Magistrate has passed a heavy sentence for non-judicial reasons which have no bearing on the gravity of the offence committed by the accused (e.g., on the ground that the accused falsely blamed the Court for expressing its opinion and for helping the prosecution), although the passing of a heavy sentence is not by itself a ground of revision at all—Jawad Husain, 2 Luck. 503, 28 Cr.L.J. (674). The High Court can exercise its power of revision even after the expiry of the sentence; and though it is not possible to interfere with the sentence because it has expired, the law does not prevent the High Court from interfering with the conviction—Q. E. v. Sinha, 7 All 135

The High Court has the power and the right to call for the record of a case and make such order thereon as it deems just even though the applicant is dead—Dongaji, 2 Bom 564 [Contra—Khazana v Q. E., 1893 P.R. 6, where it is held that an application for revision abates on the death of the applicant] Sec 431 (as amended in 1898) allows an appeal from a sentence of fine after the death of the appellant, and similarly the High Court can exercise its power of revision, even after the death of the applicant, in a case where compensation has been awarded under section 250, such compensation being in the nature of a fine—Prem Singh v. Bhola, 1908 P.R. 24, see also Daulat Ram, 1919 P.R. 8, 20 Cr.L.J. 214, (cited under sec 431)

The High Court has ample power to interfere, should it see fit to do so, in any case in which the Magistrate has either refused to exercise a discretion vested in him by the law, or has exercised that discretion in an improper manner or on improper grounds—Nizam v Jacob, 19 Cal. 52, Juggut Chunder, 2 Cal 110, c.g. where the Appellate Court did not give the appellant's pleader an opportunity of being fully heard on all the points that arose in the appeal—Basavanappa, 29 Bom L.R. 488, 28 Cr.L.J. 467 (468)

The High Court can in revision reverse the proceedings of a Magistrate on the ground of disqualification of the Magistrate in a particular case, owing to personal or pecuniary interest or bias—Chande v. Emp, 1884 P.R. 40 So also, where the Magistrate acted in his character as Magistrate believing he had power to do so, whereas in fact he had no such power, his act is liable to be set aside in revision upon the application of the party aggrieved—Gunda Singh, 1866 P.R. 21, Crown v. Tokha, 1870 P.R. 4.

The High Court can interfere in revision where the procedure followed by the Magistrate has been improper and faulty, e.g. where the Magistrate based his decision not upon the evidence recorded but on unrecorded evidence taken verbally subsequently on the spot—Sreeputtee, 24 W.R. 14, or where the Magistrate negligently omitted to record the evidence of previous conviction and convicted and sentenced the accused—Crown v. Santu, 1874 P.R. 12, Emp v Yusuf, 1879 P.R. 28, or where the inquiry in the Lower Court has been faulty—Bhawoo v Alulp, 12 Bom 377

The High Court will interfere in revision when there is a material error in the proceedings, which means not an error in decision upon the facts, but some error in law or procedure which affects the decision—Debi Churn, 20 W.R. 40 Thus, where there is a substantial doubt as to the guilt of the accused, it is a material error not to give the accused the benefit of the doubt, and the High Court can interfere and acquit the accused—Ram Jas, 1916 P.L.R. 66, 17 Cr.L.J. 303, Mahabli v Crown, 1915 P.L.R. 188, 18 Cr.L.J. 699, 30 I.C. 747; Fazla, 1875 P.R. 6. Where the Court has taken a wrong view of the facts through an error of law, e.g., where it places the burden of proof on the accused, contrary to the principles laid down in sec. 101 of the Evidence Act, the High Court will interfere.—Q. E. v. Nagesh, Ratanlal 794. Where the evidence for the prosecution was weak and biassed and it was possible that the accused did the act complained of (theft) under a bona fide belief that he had the right to the property, it was an error of law of the Magistrate not to have acquitted him; and in revision the High Court set aside the conviction—Ram Jas, supra; see also Udat Narain v. Rama Nath, 18 Cr.L.J. 732 (733) (Cal.) An improper summing up by the Sessions Judge in which the Judge omitted to charge the jury as to the degree of credit to be given to a particular witness, is an error in law which is a good ground for revision—Elahee Bukhsh, 5 W.R. 80. It is a material error to convict a person of being in possession of stolen property, in the absence of evidence showing dishonest possession on the part of the accused, especially where the theft is not recent—Sohna v Crown, 1875 P.R. 15. Omission to take a very material evidence offered by the accused is a material error which prejudices the accused, and the High Court can interfere—Hari Pershad, 24 W.R. 60. Lavity and indifference on the part of the Sessions Judge in weighing and sifting the evidence is a material error which calls for revision—Emp v. Marli, 2 All 338. A defective investigation by the Magistrate is a material error which justifies interference of the High Court in revision—Reddi Ramaiya, 2 Weir 570.

The High Court will interfere where the order of the Lower Court was passed without recording sufficient evidence. Where the evidence on record was insufficient to support a conviction, the High Court in revision set aside an order of the Sessions Judge summarily rejecting the appeal, and remanded the case for rehearing on the merits—Jsswar Chandra, 10 C.W.N. 446. The High Court will also interfere where the Lower Court has failed to consider important evidence and has accepted certain other evidence without any critical examination—Nizamaddi, 23 C.W.N. 488, 20 Cr.L.J. 551.

The High Court can interfere with an order in a criminal case on the ground that inferences unfavourable to the accused and not warranted by the evidence had been drawn to the prejudice of the accused Nga Shwe, 18 Cr.L.J. 116 (Bur.)

1204. How powers of High Court can be invoked:—

The High Court will interfere either by calling for the record under sec. 435, or when the case has been reported to it for orders under sec. 438, or when the case "otherwise comes to its knowledge" The High Court may interfere in revision upon information in whatever way received—In re Aurokiam, 2 Mad 38. The powers conferred by this section are at all times to be exercised and they may be put in force not merely on matters coming before the Judge in Court, but also on matters coming to his knowledge on reliable information—Anonymous, 2 Weir 538. The High Court can exercise its revisional powers, when a case comes to the knowledge of the Court on an application made by the Government through an official communication instead of through the Law Officers of the Crown—Mata Din, 1897 A.W.N. 144. The High Court has power to interfere in revision on a matter being brought to its notice in any manner whatever, not necessarily by means of an application on the part of the person convicted. It can interfere on information contained in a newspaper or a placard on a wall or an anonymous post-card, if it considers that sufficient grounds have been established to justify its so doing. But where the convicted persons who might have appealed did not appeal or apply in revision because they (being non-co-operators) refused to recognize the authority of any Court established by British authority in India, the High Court should be loath to take action on an application for revision presented by a third party on his own responsibility and without authority from the convicts on whose behalf it was presented—In re Narain Prasad, 45 All 128 (129).

Although the Court has power under sec 439 of the Code to call for cases not only on judicial information but also to deal with a case which "otherwise comes to its knowledge," yet in most circumstances it is a right practice that the Judges should be moved in open Court—Q E v Abdul, Ratanlal 577; Q E v. Abdul Rahuman, 16 Bom. 580.

The High Court may exercise its power of revision upon the petition of a private person occupying the position of a complainant in the case in which revision is sought—In re Auro Kiam, 2 Mad 38, Sukho v Durga, 2 All. 448; Teju, 2 S.L.R. 25, 10 Cr.L.J. 237; Pheku, 4 P.L.J. 435, 20 Cr.L.J. 545. When an order of discharge of an accused person has the effect of operating to the detriment of a third person, such person has the right to apply in revision—G. V Raman, 56 Cal. 1023, 33 C.W.N. 468 (473).

The High Court may also exercise its power on its own initiative—Radha Kishen, 1912 P.L.R. 67, 13 Cr.L.J. 476, Dongaji, 2 Bom. 564. The revisional jurisdiction of the High Court can be exercised suo motu even though the accused does not desire it—Hiranand, 17 S.L.R. 245, 25 Cr.L.J. 134, A.I.R. 1924 Sind 129.

Interference with acquittal—In case of acquittal, the High Court can exercise its powers of revision on the application of a private prosecutor, when there is a material error in the proceeding in the case—Hardeo, 1 All. 139; Teju, 2 S.L.R. 25; Sukho v Durga, 2 All 448; Maung Htin v. Mg Po, 4 Rang 471, 28 Cr.L.J. 219 (221). Any private person may invoke the revisional powers of the High Court under sec 439 to set aside an order of acquittal, or the High Court may of its own motion set aside such an order—Anwar Ali v Chairman, Deoghar Municipality, 6 Pat 83, 28 Cr.L.J. 80 (82). Though as a Court of Appeal the High Court can consider an order of acquittal only on an appeal by the Local Government, yet as a Court of revision it can deal with an original or appellate order of acquittal either when reported under sec.

438 or whenever it may otherwise come to its knowledge, It can do so even on the application of a private prosecutor—Basant Lall, 27 Cal. 320. See also Kangali v. Bama Charan, 38 Cal. 786; Sheik Bajoo v. Raika, 18 C.W.N. 1244, 15 Cr.L.J. 722; Gangadhar v. Reid, 25 C.W.N. 609 23 Cr.L.J. 41; Jitan v. Domoo, 1 P.L.J. 264, 18 Cr.L.J. 151, Ram Chand v. Jai Dial, 1915 P.W.R. 18, 16 Cr.L.J. 657; Tirthidas, 6 S.L.R. 120, 13 Cr.L.J. 771; and Allahrakho, 6 S.L.R. 101, 13 Cr.L.J. 780, where the High Court entertained an application for revision preferred by the private complainant against the order of acquittal. The High Court ought to interfere with an order of acquittal at the instance of a private complainant especially in a case like defamation where the offence is of so personal a nature that the Local Government would seldom be willing to appeal from the acquittal—Sunderabai v. Kishore, 20 Cr.L.J. 708 (Nag); Foujdar v. Kasi, 42 Cal. 612 (616) (per Jenkins C.J.), Asutosh v. Purna Chandra, 50 Cal. 159 (163); so also, in a case of insult—Rakhal v. Kailash, 11 C.L.J. 113, 11 Cr.L.J. 213. The High Court will also interfere where the order of acquittal was passed under sec. 247 for non-appearance of the complainant—Ram Nidh v. Ram Saran, 26 O.C. 282, 25 Cr.L.J. 794. The High Court interfered on the motion of a private person, in a case where the lower Court proceeded on a wrong view of the law, and where the matter was of great importance to the petitioner in his position as the author of a book, which, if the judgment of acquittal was allowed to stand, would be pirated by another who would secure for himself the gains that ought legitimately to go to the petitioner—Venkatrao v. Padmanabha, 53 M.L.J. 529, 28 Cr.L.J. 957 (958).

In some cases, however, it has been held that the High Court has no power to revise an order of acquittal, except at the instance of the Local Government. Where no appeal has been preferred by the Local Government, an application for revision by a private person should be discouraged on public grounds. It has been the settled practice that the High Court will not ordinarily interfere with an order of acquittal at the instance of a private prosecutor, because it is always open to the aggrieved complainant to move the Local Government to appeal under sec. 417—Thandavan v. Periana, 14 Mad. 363; Pahlwan v. Sahib Singh, 19 A.L.J. 382, 22 Cr.L.J. 597, 62 I.C. 869, Jota v. Parshottam, 25 Bom.L.R. 488, 24 Cr.L.J. 734; Binda Prasad v. Ripusudan, 5 N.L.R. 4, 9 Cr.L.J. 211, Miyaji, 3 Bom. 150; Fareedoon Cowasji, 41 Bom. 560 (561); Sheik Sahib, 8 Bom. 197, Heera v. Framji, 15 Bom. 349; Ala Bakhsh, 6 All. 484; Prag Dat, 20 All. 459; Qayyum v. Faiz Ali, 27 All. 359; Municipal Committee v. Mingu, 8 Cal. 895; Karana, 22 Cal. 164; Foujdar v. Kasi, 42 Cal. 612 (616); Gullit Bhagat v. Naran, 2 Pat. 708; Anant v. Hari Charan, 26 Cr.L.J. 516 (Pat); Rameshwar, 53 Bom. 564; Damodar v. Jajharsingh, 23 N.L.R. 99, 26 Cr.L.J. 1348; Sher Khan v. Anwar Khan, 28 Cr.L.J. 523, 23 N.L.R. 40; Janu, Fakir, 15 S.L.R. 171, A.I.R. 1922 Sind 22, 23 Cr.L.J. 343; Bachcha v. Bachcha, 28 O.C. 384, 12 O.L.J. 63, 27 Cr.L.J. 854. Applications against orders of acquittal are not entertained from private petitioners except it be on some very broad ground of the exceptional requirements of public justice—Fareedoon Cowasji, supra; Faujdar v. Kasi Chowdhury, supra, Rameshwar, supra; Sankaralinga v. Narayana, 45 Mad. 913; where there is no matter of public importance involved, nor are the interests of public justice closely concerned, and the petitioners have the opportunity of obtaining full redress in the Civil Courts, the High Court will not interfere with an order of acquittal on the motion of a private complainant—Fardoon Cowasji, 41 Bom. 560 (562); Sher Khan v. Anwar Khan, 23 N.L.R. 40, 28 Cr.L.J. 523 (528). A petition for revision of an order of acquittal, preferred by a private complainant will be rejected, where it appears that the complainant is not anxious so much to secure due administration of justice as to serve his personal grudge—Sher Khan v. Anwar Khan, supra. In cognizable cases the private prosecutor has no position at all, and if the Crown decides to let an offender go, no other aggrieved party can be heard to object that he has not taken his full toll of private vengeance—Siban Rai v. Bhagnant, 5 Pat 25, 6 P.L.T. 833, 27 Cr.L.J. 235 (per Mullick J) (But Macpherson J holds in this case that even in cognizable cases, the private prosecutor, if he has initiated the proceeding, can apply for revision of an order of acquittal). The High Court should not entertain an application by a complainant to revise an order of acquittal, after the Local Government has declined to direct an appeal against it—Graham v. Elsey, 9 Bur L.T. 47, 17 Cr.L.J. 91 (92).

It is not proper and expedient for the High Court as a general rule to exercise its powers of revision against orders of acquittal on a reference from the District Magistrate under sec 438, where the Local Government has not appealed from the order of acquittal—Sheikh Amir-uddin, 24 All 346; Hrishikesh, 44 Cal. 703, Emp v. Madar Baksh, 25 All 128, Ranga Row, 15 Mad 36; Gur Dayal, 12 A.L.J. 255; 15 Cr.L.J. 304, Sinnu Gounden, 38 Mad 1028, Mogal Beg. 42 Mad 109, Crown v. Achhar Singh, 5 Lah. 16 (19). Where no appeal has been preferred by the Local Government against an order of acquittal, the High Court does not ordinarily interfere in revision suo motu to set aside the acquittal—Q. E. v. Maung Aung, 1 Rang 604. The High Court interfered with an order of acquittal where the applicant in revision was not a private individual but a public body, e.g., a municipality. In such a case interference rested on grounds of public importance or public justice. See Ahmedabad Municipality v. Maganlal, 9 Bom L.R. 156, 5 Cr.L.J. 171; Mukund v. Ladu, 3 Bom L.R. 854, Municipal Board v. Vadyadhari, 24 O.C. 57, 22 Cr.L.J. 638, 63 I.C. 334. As to the grounds on which the High Court will revise orders of acquittal, see Note 1219 infra.

An order of discharge is not the same thing as an order of acquittal, and the High Court can revise an order of discharge at the instance of a private prosecutor—Maung Htin v. Mg Po, 4 Rang 471, 28 Cr.L.J. 219 (221). See also Protab v. Khan Mahomed, 36 Cal 994.

1205. When High Court will not interfere—In the exercise of its revisional powers, the High Court will not interfere in revision unless it is satisfied that it is necessary to do so to prevent otherwise irreparable injustice—Umakant, 9 Bom L.R. 706; Narain, Prasad, 20 A.L.J. 909; Kuppuswami, 39 Mad. 561. The High Court will not interfere in revision if no prejudice is shown to have resulted to the accused—Aladya, 1906 P.R. 5; Tha Byaw, 4 L.B.R. 315, 9 Cr.L.J. 15. The High Court will not always interfere even though the order of Court below is wrong in law or the trial in the Court below is illegal (and not merely irregular), Hari Singh, 1913 P.L.R. 313, 14 Cr.L.J. 599 (600); Sakharam, 4 Bom.L.R. 686; Aladya, 1906 P.R. 5. An order that proceeds upon an error of law, but which apart from that error is a proper order in the case, ought not to be set aside in revision—Sri Kishan v Devi Dayal, 2 O.W.N. 823, 26 Cr.L.J. 1619. The High Court will not interfere unless the error in law has led to a failure of justice. It is not the duty of this Court to correct mere mistakes in law which have no more effect than mistakes in grammar or spelling. The power of interference is to be exercised only for the purpose of correcting injustice, not mere illegality—Narsinghdas, 29 Cr.L.J. 86 (87) (Nag). Where a case has been properly disposed of on the merits by the Court below, the High Court will not interfere in revision merely on the ground of some error in procedure, e.g., on the ground that the pleader on behalf of the accused was not heard in the Lower Court—Olayet Khan, 1 Pat. 589, 24 Cr.L.J. 118, 4 P.L.T. 98.

The mere fact that the High Court sitting as a Court of appeal might have come to a different conclusion on facts from what the Magistrate arrived at, is not a sufficient ground for entertaining an application for revision—Damodar v. Jujharsingh, 26 Cr.L.J. 1348 (Nag); Narsingh Das 29 Cr.L.J. 86 (Nag).

The High Court will not interfere when there is no error in law on the face of the record—Sakharam, 4 Bom.L.R. 686. Where a discretion has been exercised by a Court of competent jurisdiction which is not on the face of it arbitrary, the High Court in revision will neither inquire into the reasons nor interfere—Gulli Bhagat v. Narain Singh, 2 Pat. 708 (710).

Where a Magistrate convicts an accused person of an offence falling within his jurisdiction, though the facts found would also constitute a more serious offence not within his jurisdiction, his proceedings are not void ab initio, and the High Court will not ordinarily interfere unless the sentence appears inadequate or unless the accused has been deprived of his right of appeal—Berhamdeo v. K. E., 26 Cr.L.J. 1559 (Pat.); Q. E v Gundaya, 13 Bom. 502, Emp. v. Ayyan, 24 Mad. 675. If the accused has been adequately punished by the trying Magistrate, the High Court will not interfere, even though the proceedings before the Magistrate have been somewhat irregular (e.g., where the accused has been punished under one Act, whereas he ought to have been punished under another Act)—Bishen Singh v. Ismail, 6 Bur.L.J. 81, 28 Cr.L.J. 757 (758).

The revisional powers of the High Court will not be exercised until all the other remedies (e.g., appeal) provided by law have been exhausted—Gulab Singh v. Surat, 1884 A.W.N. 293; Emp. v. Rajcoomar, 3 Cal. 573, Nilambar 2 All. 276. Abdur Rahim, 1905 A.W.N. 143, 2 Cr.

L.J. 335 See Note 1220 under sub-section (5). So also, the High Court will not interfere in revision while an appeal in respect of the same matter is pending before the Appellate Court—In re Alakuri, 44 M.L.J. 366

The High Court will not interfere in revision when the accused has pleaded guilty before the Lower Court, except as to the extent or legality of the sentence—Puttan Lal, 1907 A.W.N. 204; Tha Byaw, 4 L.B.R. 315, 9 Cr.L.J. 15 Cf. sec 412.

The High Court will not interfere in revision when there has been long delay in applying for revision and the delay is not explained or accounted for by the applicant—Jagan Nath, 27 All 468. Ram Narain, 8 All. 514; Ala Bakhsh, 6 All. 484; Puttan Lal, 1907 A.W.N. 204, Avadh Behari v. Dwarka, 1 P.L.J. 165.

The revisional jurisdiction of the High Court will not be exercised in such a way that a right of appeal may practically be given in cases where such right is definitely excluded by the Code—Ahsanullah v. Mansukh, 36 All. 403, Sudaman v. Emp., 49 All 551, 28 Cr.L.J. 399 (400)

The High Court will not allow a revision application when a remedy can be easily obtained from the Civil Court—Loke Nath v. Nidu, 6 C.W.N. 469.

The High Court will not interfere on the motion of a party who is in contempt—Khairat v. Wahed Ali, A.I.R. 1928 Cal 241

1206. Orders which are subject to revision :—(1) Orders of a Presidency Magistrate :—Under secs 423 and 439 the High Court has jurisdiction to set aside an order of discharge or dismissal of complaint passed by a Presidency Magistrate and to direct that the person improperly discharged should be committed for trial or to direct further inquiry into the complaint—Emp v. Varjivandas, 27 Bom 84, Nanda Gopal, 20 C.W.N. 1128, 17 Cr.L.J. 428, Malik Partab v. Khan Mahomed, 36 Cal 994; Dwarka v. Beni Madhab, 28 Cal 652, Colville v. Krishta Kishore, 26 Cal 746 In Charoobala v. Barendra, 27 Cal 126, Kedar v. Kheira, 6 C.L.J. 705 and Debi Bux v. Jutmal, 33 Cal 1282 it has been held that the High Court can interfere with an order of dismissal or discharge passed by a Presidency Magistrate, not under this Code, but under sec. 15 of the Charter Act See Note 682 under sec 203. An order made by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Bombay under the Maintenance Orders Enforcement Act (XVIII of 1921) can be revised by the High Court under sec 107 of the Government of India Act or under clauses 27 and 28 of the Letters Patent, if not under secs 435 and 439 of this Code—Katti v. Katti, 52 Bom 262, 29 Cr.L.J. 513 (514)

(2) Non-appealable orders :—The High Court's power of revision is not limited to orders from which an appeal would lie On the other hand, the High Court ought to rectify cases of injustice or illegality when the person affected is unable to appeal. The High Court in revision can exercise its power of appeal with reference to any particular order, whether appealable or not—Ram Kala v. Ganda, 1885 P.R. 42, Bishen

Das, 1910 P.R. 33, 8 I.C. 1161 (1165), 12 Cr.L.J. 50 (dissenting from Charoobala v. Barendra, 27 Cal 126 and Azim Khan, 1885 P.R. 45)

(3) Order granting bail :—The proceeding in which it has to be determined whether the accused person should be admitted to bail is a judicial proceeding, and is therefore cognizable by the High Court as a Court of Revision—Manikam Mudali, 6 Mad. 63. But where a Sessions Judge, finding that there was no reasonable ground for believing that the accused was guilty, released him on bail under sec. 497, the High Court would not interfere with such order in revision, though it has power to do so—Q v Thimma, 10 M.L.J. 411; Badri Prasad, 5 A.L.J. 419. See notes under sec. 497.

(4) Order refusing to grant copies :—Where the Magistrate refused to grant to the accused the copies of papers which were necessary for his defence, the High Court in revision set aside the conviction on that ground—Sheeb Prasad, 14 W.R. 77

(5) Preliminary or interlocutory order :—It is competent to the High Court to call for the record of any proceeding in an Inferior Criminal Court, and if necessary or expedient, to revise an order passed by such Court, whether of a preliminary or final nature—T. N. Chadha, 14 A.L.J. 851, 18 Cr.L.J. 46, Jagan Singh, 1892 A.W.N. 102; Thakaria v. Purn, 23 Cr.L.J. 429 (Lah.) Thus, where a District Magistrate called upon a witness who gave evidence before him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for perjury, the High Court was competent to revise such order—T. N. Chadha, supra. So also, where a Magistrate, after dismissing a complaint without inquiry, passed an order calling upon the complainant to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for bringing a false complaint, the High Court revised the preliminary order, though no final order directing the prosecution of the complainant had yet been passed—Sheo Balak, 22 Cr.L.J. 81 (All.) See also Note 1215.

(6) Orders under Sections 88, 94, 106, 110, 118, 143, 144, 145-149, 250, 344, 386, 476, 488, 514, 515, 517, 520, 522; see notes under those sections

See also Note 1173 under sec. 435.

1207. Orders which are not open to revision :—(1) Order under Press Act :—An order under sec. 8 Press Act (Act I of 1910) for the deposit of security by the publisher of a newspaper is an executive order and not revisable by the High Court—Aga Syed Jalaluddin, 17 C.W.N. 1245, 15 Cr.L.J. 145, so also an order under sec. 3 (1) of the Press Act—Annie Besant v. Govt. of Madras, 39 Mad. 1085, 18 Cr.L.J. 157; or an order of forfeiture passed under section 12 of that Act—Mahomed Ali, 41 Cal 466 (F.B.), 18 C.W.N. 1, 14 Cr.L.J. 497.

(2) Order under the Extradition Act :—The High Court has no power under this section to interfere in respect of a warrant issued by a Political Agent in a Native State under sec. 7 of the Extradition Act (XV of 1903), either on the ground that there is no prima facie case against the petitioner or on the ground that the circumstances under which the officer was originally moved do not justify him in exercising his power under the said Act—Giyan Chand, 1909 P.R. 3, 3 Cr.L.J. 3. Where a warrant is issued by a Political Agent under sec 7 of the Extradition Act, its execution by the District Magistrate in accordance with the Act is an executive act, and the High Court cannot interfere in revision with such execution. But the High Court can interfere otherwise than by way of revision under sec. 491—Gulli Sahu, 42 Cal 793, 19 C.W.N. 221.

(3) Order of the Local Government sanctioning prosecution under sec. 197 See Note 649 under section 197.

(4) Orders of the High Court itself.—A single Judge of the High Court has no power to revise an order passed by another single Judge in appeal, and to set aside the conviction, even on the ground of discovery of new materials. The only remedy is to refer the matter to the Local Government under Chapter XXIX of this Code—Emp v Kale, 45 All. 143 (145). The judgment of the Division Bench of the High Court as well as the sentence is final, and the Court is functus officio as soon as the judgment is signed by the Judges, and the High Court or any Bench of it has no power to revise the sentence or interfere with it in any way—Gibbons, 14 Cal. 42. So also, a Division Bench cannot revise an order of a single Judge of the High Court—Press v. K. E., 1909 P R 4, 9 Cr. L J 378, 1 I C. 747, Hale v K E, 1909 P R 1, 9 Cr L J 306, 1 I C. 506, Hira, 1909 P R 8, 10 Cr.L.J 314, 3 I C 580 (582), Durga Charan, 7 All 672; Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382. See notes under sec. 369. The only exception is in a case under sec 434. See notes under that section, and 1909 P.R. 1 cited therein.

For other orders which are not open to revision see Note 1172 under sec. 435

1208. Powers of the High Court in revision :—Powers of an Appellate Court :—Sec. 439 enumerates the powers which the High Court may exercise in revision, and it declares that in any proceeding the record of which has been called for by itself or reported for orders or otherwise comes to its knowledge, or on an application made by the complainant, the Court may in its discretion exercise any of the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by certain preceding sections, among others, by sec 423—Emp v Varjivandas, 27 Bom 84, Emp v Marli, 2 All 336, Phcka, 4 P.L.J 435, 20 Cr.L.J 545. The nature of the powers that the High Court has in revision is the same as that which a Court of appeal has in the case of an appeal from any order against which an appeal is allowed by the Code—National Bank v Kothandarama 14 M.L.T. 200, 14 Cr L J 529. But a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate cannot while sitting in revision exercise the powers conferred by the Court on an appellate Court. Appellate powers are in revision conferred by sec. 439 only on the High Court Bajanath v Gauri Kanta, 20 Cal 633. But the High Court sitting as a Court of revision will not exercise the powers of an Appellate Court except on very exceptional grounds—Sheik Sahib, 8 Bom 197. A High Court undoubtedly jurisdiction to entertain a revision on grounds of fact, but it is equally well established that this power should be very sparingly exercised. There is a well-marked distinction between an application in revision and an appeal. It would be futile for the Legislature to grant the right of appeal in some cases and to withhold it in others, if the High Court under the guise of a revision were to allow conclusions of fact based on evidence to be canvassed and attacked on the footing of an appeal. Broadly speaking, the rule is that the High Court will only entertain a revision on fact where either there is no evidence to support the finding or where the finding arrived at is perverse or such as no reasonable man could have arrived at on the evidence produced—Abdul Wahid v. Abdullah, 45 All 656 (661). Specially, in a case where no appeal is allowed by the law, the High Court will not in revision exercise the powers of an Appellate Court except on very exceptional grounds—Mahomed Husan. Ratanlal 244, Umakant, 3 Bom L.R. 706. The revisional jurisdiction of the High Court may be exercised in order to prevent gross and palpable failure of justice, but it should not be exercised in such a way that a right of appeal may practically be given in cases where such right is definitely excluded by the Code—Ahsanulla v. Mansukh Ram, 36 All 403. The High Court must not allow what would virtually be an appeal from the order of the Lower Court, in a non-appealable case—Sheoshankarpratt, 10 N L R 177, 27 I C. 545, 16 Cr.L.J. 161.

Power to alter or revise order or to quash proceeding.—The High Court as a Court of revision has the power conferred on a Court of appeal by sec 423 to alter or reverse an order of the Lower Court—Khepu Nath v. Grish, 16 Cal 730. The High Court has power, under this section read with sec 423 (c) to alter or reverse any order i.e., to set aside any order, and thus to quash the whole proceedings in the lower Court which terminated in the order—Official Liquidator v. Kali Charan, 3 Luck. 267, 29 Cr L J 102 (103). Thus, the High Court can quash the charge and set aside the proceedings against the accused—Amar Nath, 10 Lah L.J. 485, 30 Cr L.J. 162 (163), Bishen Das, 1910 P.R. 33, 8 I.C. 1161, 12 Cr.L.J. 50; Tarak Singh, 29 P L R 237, 28 Cr.L.J. 755 (756); Tahiru v. Jallu, 9 Lah L.J. 440, 28 Cr L J 1040, Gokul v. Devi Prasad, 23 A L.J. 21, 26 Cr.L.J. 748 (749). The High Court can quash the proceeding where there was an utter want of discretion on the part of the Magistrate in instituting the proceedings—Umbica Prasad, 1 C.L.R. 268, or where no advantage would be gained by continuing the proceedings—Chilar Lal, 19 Cr L.J. 730, 16 A.L.J. 734.

Power to alter conviction.—The High Court has also power to alter a conviction for one offence into a conviction for another offence, at the same time maintaining the sentence passed—Joti Prasad, 1887 A.W.N. 95; e.g. where the accused was convicted by a Magistrate for an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session, the Chief Court interfered in revision and altered the conviction into one for an offence triable by a Magistrate—Devi Bulsh, 1869 P.R. 10. The High Court altered a conviction under sec. 186 I P. C. into one under sec. 225B I. P. C., when all the material facts were stated in the complaint and duly deposed to by witnesses, and the accused was not prejudiced by the alteration of the finding—Jamna Das, 9 Lah 214, 28 Cr.L.J. 753 (754).

Power to quash conviction:—The High Court quashed the conviction where it was not supported by any legal evidence, e.g., when the only evidence was the admission of a co-accused—1868 P.R. 14 The High Court can set aside a conviction where it was passed on an erroneous view of the law—Basant Lall, 27 Cal 320 But in setting aside a conviction which is bad in law, the High Court is not necessarily bound to go further into the question whether upon the facts established by the evidence a conviction of some lesser offence might not be recorded—Mansur Hussain, 41 All 587, 20 Cr L.J. 209 But the High Court cannot interfere and set aside a valid conviction and sentence passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction after careful consideration—Ram Doyal, 21 W.R. 47; Sham Singh, 1884 P.R. 36, Q. v. Bchlios, 20 W R 61

The High Court cannot direct the Subordinate Court to refrain from trying an accused person against whom such Court has issued process—Jharu Lal v. Mahanth Madan Das, 2 Pat 257

Power to order retrial—The High Court in revision has power to order a retrial. But the High Court cannot, as a Court of revision, set aside the conviction and sentence passed by a Magistrate of competent jurisdiction, with a view to direct a retrial on the ground that subsequent to the conviction it becomes known that the accused was previously convicted—Sham Singh, 1884 P.R. 36 Where evidence of the previous conviction of the accused for a similar offence was not adduced at the trial, the High Court refused to interfere in revision and to order a retrial to enable the prosecution to supplement the record by producing fresh evidence bearing on the question of punishment—Maidhan, 1905 P.R. 19, Raji, 1874 P.R. 13. It would not be proper to order a retrial and thus to allow the prosecution to shape its case afresh, after the whole matter has been thrashed out and the defects in the prosecution case brought to light in the course of prolonged appellate and revision proceedings—Kedar Nath v. K. E., 29 C.W.N. 408, 41 C.L.J. 172, 26 Cr L.J. 849

Power to order commitment or set aside commitment—The High Court, when acting as a Court of Revision, can order a committal for trial to the Court of Session after reversing the finding and sentence—Maula Bakhsh, 15 All. 205 Where the evidence discloses a more serious offence not within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, the High Court may quash the conviction and sentence for the minor offence and direct a commitment for trial before a tribunal having jurisdiction for the graver offence—Anonymous, 2 Weir 569, 7 M.H.C.R. App. 5, Nishu Kanta 20 C.W.N. 732, 17 Cr.L.J. 202, Moze Ali, 23 C.W.N. 1031, Kesavulu, 2 Weir 569 (570). Where the accused has been improperly discharged, the High Court has power to set aside the order of discharge and to direct that the person improperly discharged be arrested and forthwith committed for trial—Emp. v. Varpuvandas, 27 Bom. 84; Ram Lal, 6 All 40, Ponnusami, 52 Mad 156, 30 Cr.L.J. 184 (185)

The High Court has power under this section to set aside an order of commitment passed by the Sessions Judge under sec. 423 (1) (b)—Ram Samujh v. Emp., 11 O.L.J. 748, 25 Cr.L.J. 1375; Emp v. Lachman, 2 All. 398.

1209. Power to direct further evidence to be taken :

—Under this section the High Court has power to direct further evidence to be taken—Mulla Ibrahim, 3 Bom.L.R. 677; Prasanno, 19 W.R. 56. The High Court under sec. 439 has power as an Appellate Court to direct evidence to be taken. No such powers are given to the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate under sec. 436—Moni Mohan v Iswar, 6 C.L.J. 251. Where a Magistrate omitted to set out in the charges the previous convictions of the accused, the Chief Court in revision directed that the charge should be amended by adding the previous convictions and also directed that evidence with regard to these convictions should be recorded—Kasim v. Emp., 1879 P.R. 19; Emp. v. Yusuf, 1879 P.R. 28.

The High Court has also power under this section to call for additional evidence upon which the High Court can itself come to a conclusion, but this section does not give the High Court power to call for a finding of the Magistrate—Sudalaimuthu v. Enan, 16 Cr.L.J. 767 (Mad)

1210. Power to go into the facts :—

The High Court in revision is not confined to questions of law alone, but can also deal with questions of fact—Kallu Mal, 1894 A.W.N. 207, Shiam Sundar, 20 A.L.J. 276, 23 Cr.L.J. 241, A.I.R. 1922, All 122. If the Judges in revision think it right to consider the whole evidence they have power to do so—Reid v. Richardson, 14 Cal 361; Soma Chatur, Ratanlal 908.

The High Court can go into the facts when the Lower Court has totally misconceived the evidence and come to an obviously wrong conclusion—Q E v. Maganlal, 14 Bom. 115. The High Court in revision does not decide the balance of credibility between two conflicting sets of witnesses or two conflicting issues of fact, but it may be compelled to dissent from a finding of fact which is either perverse or has been arrived at contrary to well-established principles of law—Umed Singh v. Emp, 21 A.L.J. 765. The High Court will interfere where the finding of fact is contrary to the mass of un-rebutted evidence, and there is a clear case of miscarriage of justice—Emp. v. Sarju Prasad, 27 O.C. 290, 11 O.L.J. 330, 25 Cr.L.J. 1066. The High Court can go into the facts of the case, where evidence which is not admissible has been wrongly admitted—Bun Bahadur, 55 I.C. 854, 1 P.L.T. 121; Ramchand, 28 Cr.L.J. 91 (All); or where the evidence has not been considered from the right point of view, e.g. where the evidence of accomplices was regarded as that of ordinary witnesses—Rajoni v. Asan, 2 C.W.N. 672. Where the construction of a document upon which the guilt or innocence of the accused largely depends, is erroneous, the High Court has power to go into the facts fully—Karim Baksh v. K. E., 1905 P.R. 12. The High Court can examine the evidence where the case is not an ordinary one, and it is necessary in the interests of justice to persuade the evidence to see whether the offence of the accused has been established beyond reasonable doubt—Thakur Das, 28 Cr.L.J. 834 (836) (Lah.). Where evidence against the accused is weak, suspicious and inconclusive, the High Court can, on its revision side, examine and discuss the evidence on record and upset the findings of fact of the Lower Courts—Bhagwan Singh v. K. E., 1907 P.W.R. 20. Where the Lower Courts have failed to scrutinize carefully the proof of corroboration of accomplice evidence, the High Court in revision entered into the evidence and set aside the concurrent findings of fact of both the Lower Courts—Manna v. Emp., 9 I.C. 232, 12 Cr.L.J. 35, 1911 P.W.R. 3. The High Court, as a Court of Revision, has power to re-examine the evidence if there are prima facie good grounds for doing so, especially where the accused has been given a non-appealable sentence and has no means of vindicating his character except in revision—Tikekar v. Piareylal, 45 I.C. 1002, 19 Cr.L.J. 666 (Nag.). See also Abdul Wahid v. Abdullah, 45 All. 656 cited under Note 1208 ante.

Where the judgment of the Appellate Court is a meagre one and shows that the Appellate Court has not gone thoroughly into the questions dealt with at the trial by the first Court, the High Court will in revision investigate the original trial to see whether the nature of the procedure and the decision arrived at were such as to leave no doubt that the accused had a fair trial and that the decision was given according to law—Alay Ahmed, 20 Cr.L.J. 270 (All.), 50 I.C. 978.

But though the High Court has power to revise findings of fact arrived at by the Lower Courts and the law imposes no limits to this jurisdiction, (Chagan Dayaram, 14 Bom. 331, Nobin v. Rassick, 10 Cal. 1047) still it is not bound to do so, if it does not think fit, and will not exercise such a discretionary power unless there appears on the face of the judgment or order complained of or on the record some ground to induce the Court to think that the evidence ought to be examined in order to see whether there has been any failure of justice—Keshab v. Akhil, 22 Cal. 998, or any material departure from legal principles—Ram Lal, 51 Lall 663, 30 Cr.L.J. 562 (564). The High Court is always averse to interfering on facts by way of revision as it would tend to remove the difference specially laid down by the statute between appeal and revision—Hafiz Khan v. Emp., 1 O.W.N. 878. It is unusual in revision to disturb a finding of fact unless it is so manifestly erroneous that a miscarriage of justice would result from its being uncorrected—Emp. v. Buranshabab, 6 Bom.L.R. 1096, Chagan Dayaram, 14 Bom. 331, Dutt Chand v. Emp., 18 Cr.L.J. 437 (441) (Cal.), Shidoo, 29 Cr.L.J. 936 (938) (Sind), Bankatram, 28 Bom. 533, Ratanlal 244, Mid. Zabur v. K. E., 9 O.L.J. 488, Hiranand v. Emp., 17 S.L.R. 245, 25 Cr.L.J. 134. Ordinarily, the High Court will not in revision go behind the concurrent findings of the Courts below on a question of fact—Maruthayee v. Appavu, 24 Cr.L.J. 476, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 237, 31 M.L.T. 388, Tabu v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 303, 6 Lah.L.J. 326. It is the settled practice of the High Court to accept the findings of the Lower Appellate Court as correct, unless such findings are based on no legal evidence or are manifestly erroneous—Lukman, 21 S.L.R. 107, 27 Cr.L.J. 1233 (1234), Allahbux, 23

S.L.R. 216, 30 Cr.L.J. 548. When the Appellate Court has dealt with the evidence carefully and has not omitted to consider any relevant or important portion of the evidence, the High Court will not interfere in revision with the finding of fact of the lower Appellate Court—Gajo Singh v. Emp., 4 P.L.T. 265. The uniform practice of the High Court is not to exercise its power of upsetting a finding of fact, except for some extraordinary reason, and the circumstance that the High Court itself, after examining the evidence, might have come to a different conclusion is not such a reason—Maganlal, 14 Bom. 115; Thakur Das, 28 Cr.L.J. 834 (836) (Lah.). The High Court can interfere with regard to finding of fact, only on very exceptional grounds, such as a misstatement of evidence by the Lower Court, or the misconstruction of documents, or placing by that Court on the accused the onus of proof contrary to the law of evidence—Emp. v. Ganesh, 12 Bom.L.R. 21; or where there has been a conviction of a clearly innocent person—Emp. v. Nandeyappa, 8 Bom.L.R. 851. When the High Court sets aside a conviction as being bad in law, it is not necessarily bound to go further into the question whether on the facts established by the evidence a conviction of some lesser offence might or might not be recorded—Mansur Husain, 41 All 587.

1211. Power to allow composition :—The High Court as a Court of Revision has power to give effect to the compounding of offences which the parties have agreed to after conviction—Nidhan v. K. E., 1904 P.L.R. 252, Emp. v. Ram Pyari, 32 All 153; Emp. v. Shiboo, 45 All 17, Lalla v. K. E., 17 O.C. 92, Bhayaalal, 30 Cr.L.J. 960 (Nag.); Ram Sarup, 13 O.C. 161, 7 I.C. 539. This is now expressly provided by the new sub-section (5A) of section 345 added by the Amendment Act of 1923. In Adhar v. Subodh, 18 C.W.N. 1212, Akhoy v. Rameshwar, 43 Cal 1143, Andhi v. Emp., 3 P.L.T. 458, S. Rangayya v. S. Ramayya, 39 Mad 604, Nga v. K. E., 11 A.L.J. 13; Emp. v. Lala, 15 A.L.J. 467 and Crown v. Harnam, 1918 P.R. 35 it was held that the High Court had no power to allow composition in revision. These cases are no longer good law. The High Court may in revision grant permission to compound the offence and acquit the accused where such permission was wrongly withheld by the lower Court—Titan v. Chintan, 55 Cal 1190, 30 Cr.L.J. 494 (485); Singheswar v. Ali Hasan, 1929 Cr. C. 272 (Pat.).

1212. Power to order restoration of property :—The High Court in its revisional jurisdiction has the power under section 423 (d) of making any amendment or any consequential or incidental order that may be just and proper. An accused person may upon his acquittal by the High Court in revision be restored to possession of the property of which he has been deprived in favour of the complainant—Manki v. Bhagwanti, 27 All. 415. The High Court may in the exercise of its revisional powers pass an order under sec 517 to refund the money received by false pretences—Nga Than, 15 Cr.L.J. 555 (Bur.).

1213. Power to consider case of non-appealing accused :—Where two or more persons have been convicted by the Sessions Judge and one of them has appealed, the High Court has power under sec 430 to deal with the case of the accused persons not appealing against their conviction, while considering and trying the appeal preferred by the other accused; clause (5) of this section does not in any way affect the jurisdiction of the High Court to deal with the case of the non-appealing accused—Braja Rakhal, 5 C.W.N. 330; Mir Mouze v. K. E., 31 C.L.J. 305, Ratan Singh, 1893 A.W.N. 51, Raghu v. K. E., 5 P.L.J. 430; Bichintz, 1916 P.W.R. 7, 17 Cr.L.J. 97; Allah Ditta v. Crown, 25 Cr.L.J. 435 (Lah); Champa Pasin, 29 Cr.L.J. 325 (334) (Pat.). Where four persons were convicted and three of them were awarded non-appealable sentences, and on appeal by the other the conviction of all of them is found to be wrong, the High Court has power under this section to deal with and set aside the conviction even as regards those who have not appealed—Karam Ali, 1891 A.W.N. 149, Bhola, 39 All. 549; Mir Mouze, 31 C.L.J. 305. Similarly, where there are several convicted persons and one only of them has applied for revision, the High Court has power to deal with the convictions of all offenders who were tried together and convicted, though only one person has applied for revision—Mangi Ram, 11 Cr.L.J. 17, 4 I.C. 611, 1909 P.R. 9. Sangli Nadan, 12 I.C. 215, 12 Cr.L.J. 495, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 170. Tulsi, 29 Cr.L.J. 259 (260).

1214. Power to expunge remarks from Lower Court's judgment—In a Bombay case, a Sessions Judge in convicting the accused passed certain remarks about the complainant, a police officer, as a result of which he was dismissed from service. He thereupon applied to the High Court to delete the remarks from the judgment of the Sessions Judge. It was held, dismissing the application, that it would be an extraordinary exercise of the powers of the High Court, to expunge from the Lower Court's judgment the remarks complained of—Shidramayya, 19 Bom.L.R. 912, 19 Cr.L.J. 97, 43 I.C. 321. In an Allahabad case it was held that the High Court could not do so even under section 423 (d) read with section 439 because the 'amendment' mentioned in section 423 (d) means an amendment of the main order, and the incidental or consequential order means an order incidental to and consequential upon the main order; that is, the High Court could make an amendment or pass an incidental or consequential order only when there was an appeal or revision-petition against the main order, but where the main order passed by the Lower Court had not been appealed against, the High Court could not entertain an application merely for expunging certain remarks made by the Lower Court in its judgment—Emp v. Dunn, 44 All. 401 (405). But where there has been an appeal or revision petition against the order of the Lower Court, the High Court in dealing with the whole evidence of the case and considering the judgment can expunge any improper remarks made in it by the Court below. This will be evident from 2 C.W.N. cclvi; Lachcha, 1 O.L.J. 141, 15 Cr.L.J. 420, and Thomas Pellako, 14 I.C. 643, 5 Bur.L.T. 20. In Makaya v. Kin Lat, 11 I.C. 1000, 4 Bur.L.T. 173 the Chief Court held that it had power to expunge the objectionable passage from the Lower Court's though it refused to do so.

But section 561A (newly added by the Amendment Act of 1923) g:

inherent power to the High Court to make any order to secure the ends of justice, and thus to expunge any objectionable remarks from the Lower Court's judgment, irrespective of the fact whether there has or has not been an appeal or revision petition against the main order. Thus, in Amar Nath v. Crown, 5 Lah. 476 (481), 26 Cr.L.J. 463, where a Sessions Judge made certain unwarranted remarks about the testimony of a Police witness, and that witness applied to the High Court in revision to expunge those remarks from the judgment of the Sessions Judge, the High Court directed those remarks to be expunged, although there was no revision petition in the main case in which that witness gave his evidence. So also, where one of two accused tried together by a Magistrate was acquitted, and the Sessions Judge, in an appeal preferred by the other accused against his conviction, passed certain remarks about the acquitted person impugning the correctness of the acquittal, and that person applied to the High Court to expunge those remarks, the High Court ordered the remarks to be expunged, although no revision petition was made in the main case—Abdul Aziz v. Emp., 25 Cr.L.J. 1245 (Lah.). The Bombay and Allahabad cases cited above (19 Bom.L.R. 912 and 44 All. 401) must be deemed as overruled by sec. 561A. See also Benarsi Das v. Crown, 6 Lah. 166, 26 P.L.R. 315, 26 Cr.L.J. 1326, where the High Court expunged certain remarks in a Magistrate's judgment about a person who was not a party or a witness in the proceedings. See also Notes under sec. 381A.

1215. Power to interfere in a pending case :—Under section 435, the High Court can call for and examine the records of any proceeding of an inferior Criminal Court not only to satisfy itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order of such Court, but also as to the regularity of any proceedings of that Court; and for that purpose it has power to interfere at any stage of the proceedings in a pending trial. Thus, it can interfere when the proceedings before the inferior Court have not proceeded any further beyond the issue of summons—Ramanathan v. Subrahmanya, 47 Mad. 722 (725), 47 M.L.J. 373, 25 Cr.L.J. 1009, Q. E. v. Nageshappa, 20 Bom. 543 (545). But where the trial has not proceeded beyond the stage of examination of only two witnesses, so that there has not been any finding, sentence or order, nor there is any allegation of the proceedings being irregular, the High Court will not interfere—Sheo Saran v. Jitendra, 28 Cr.L.J. 814 (Oudh). The High Court can interfere with a case while it is still pending in the subordinate Court, and can quash the proceedings if the materials before the Magistrate disclose no offence and no useful purpose would be served by continuing the proceedings—Hari Charan v. Girish Chandra, 38 Cal. 68 (74), 13 C.L.J. 43, 11 Cr.L.J. 525, Emp. v. Krishna Rao, 6 N.L.J. 119. The High Court can interfere at as early a stage as when the accused has been summoned to show cause why sanction (under sec. 195) should not be granted for his prosecution—Q. E. v. Jagan Singh, 1892 A.W.N. 102; Chadha v. Emp., 14 A.L.J. 851, 18 Cr.L.J. 46. The High Court can interfere with the proceedings of a Magistrate while they are in the interlocutory stage pending investigation.

and may suspend such proceedings, even without having the record before it—Abdool Kadir, 20 W.R. 23. The High Court can, pending trial, interfere with the interlocutory order of a Magistrate refusing to summon certain witnesses for the defence—Rovel Singh, 1901 P.L.R. 130. The High Court can interfere pending trial when the Subordinate Magistrate improperly declines to take any evidence or to allow cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and arbitrarily follows a procedure of his own—Durga Dutt, 10 A.L.J. 144, 13 Cr.L.J. 443 (444). Where the Magistrate has decided that no evidence for the prosecution is necessary to prove the offence, the High Court can interfere at an interlocutory stage in order to determine whether it is necessary for the prosecution to adduce evidence of the offence—Lurindaram v Karachi Municipality, 8 S.L.R. 238, 16 Cr.L.J. 255, 28 I.C. 111. If a charge is framed where no charge should have been framed, the proceeding of the Magistrate becomes irregular, and the High Court has power to interfere, under this section as well as under section 561A, during the pendency of the case to prevent the abuse of the process of the Court and to secure the ends of justice by setting aside the charge—Gokul Prasad v. Devi Prasad, 23 A.L.J. 21, 26 Cr.L.J. 748 (749). The High Court has power to examine the proceedings of the lower Court at the stage when a charge is framed, and, if necessary, to set aside the charge and quash the proceedings if no offence appears to have been committed—Tarak Singh, 29 P.L.R. 237, 28 Cr.L.J. 755 (756); Harendra v. Jotish, 40 C.L.J. 283, 26 Cr.L.J. 545 (547), Amar Nath, 10 Lah.L.J. 485, 30 Cr.L.J. 162 (163), Bishen Das, 1910 P.R. 33, 8 I.C. 1161 (1165), 12 Cr.L.J. 50; Tahiru v. Jallu, 9 Lah.L.J. 440, 28 Cr.L.J. 1040. Where the trial was a vexatious and protracted one, and material injury was thereby likely to be caused to the accused the High Court interfered during the pendency of the trial and set aside the charge in order to prevent further harassment of the accused—In re Kuppaswami, 39 Mad 561, 28 M.L.J. 505, 16 Cr.L.J. 477, Chandi v. Abdur Rahaman, 22 Cal 131, Shripad, 52 Bom. 151, 29 Cr.L.J. 317 (318), Choa Lal v Anant, 25 Cal 233 (234). Where the notice and the preliminary order of a Magistrate under sec 112 were defective and could not form the basis of a proceeding under sec 110, the High Court interfered and set aside the proceedings so far taken by the Magistrate—1910 P.W.R. 18, 11 Cr.L.J. 388.

But though the High Court has power to interfere with pending proceedings at any stage, it will not do so except only under rare and exceptional circumstances—Choa Lal v Anant Pershad, 25 Cal 233, Inamulla, 2 A.L.J. 673, 2 Cr.L.J. 790, Salamatrai, 9 Cr.L.J. 270, 1 S.L.R. 30, In re Kuppaswami, 39 Mad 561, 16 Cr.L.J. 477, Mahomed v Muhammad Idris, 26 Cr.L.J. 1101 (Sund); Madhab v Emp, 26 Cr.L.J. 1093 (Nag). It is only in exceptional instances that the High Court will interfere with the action of a subordinate Court in respect of any pending case, especially when such a case has reached the stage where a charge has been drawn and only the defence of the accused remains to be heard. No hard and fast rule can be laid down on the subject, because the interference of the High Court should be regulated by the particular circumstances of each case; but speaking generally, it is inadvisable to interfere in a pending case, unless there is some manifest and patent injustice apparent on the face of the proceeding and calling for prompt redress—Jagat Chandra v. Q. E., 26 Cal. 786 (790); Manilal v. Kamberali, 22 S.L.R. 79, 28 Cr.L.J. 644. The High Court will allow the proceedings in the Subordinate Court to go on and take their course and will not interfere with a pending proceeding, even though it is irregularly conducted, unless there is exceptional ground for interference—Choa Lal v. Anant, 25 Cal. 233 (234); In re Sami Goundan, 20 L.W. 937, 26 Cr.L.J. 421 422). It is impossible as well as undesirable to lay down any hard and fast rule to determine whether any particular case is of such an exceptional nature as to call for the interference of the High Court during its pendency; but one safe practical test would be this, namely that a bare statement of the facts of the case without any elaborate argument should be sufficient to convince the High Court that it is a fit one for its interference at an intermediate stage. If it is contended by the accused that the offence charged against him is a civil wrong rather than a criminal trespass, obviously that question cannot be determined by the High Court on the bare facts of the case without a lengthy or elaborate argument, and this Court cannot therefore intervene during the pendency of the case and set aside the charge—Choa Lal v. Anant, 25 Cal. 233 (235). The High Court will not interrupt the course of a trial by interfering with a decision of a Magistrate that he has jurisdiction in a case. If the High Court has to decide in the midst of the trial held in a Magistrate's Court as to whether he has jurisdiction or not, it would be interfering in a most improper manner on a point which may conclusively have to be decided on appeal—Kashi Ram v. Dikshit, 1 Luck. 48, 3 O.W.N. 104, 27 Cr.L.J. 191. The High Court will rarely interfere in the midst of a trial and order commitment, unless it is shown that the failure on the part of the Magistrate to commit is extremely improper—Bilodar v. K. E., 13 O.L.J. 490, 3 O.W.N. 201, 27 Cr.L.J. 417 (418). The High Court will interfere with a pending trial only when it is satisfied that an interference is necessary and that any delay in the rectification of the error will cause waste of time or a miscarriage of justice—Sobha Ram, 1904 P.R. 8.

1216. Power to enhance sentence :—This is a power which is not conferred by sec. 423, and the High Court can exercise this power not as an Appellate Court but only in revision. Thus, in an appeal against a conviction by a prisoner, the High Court dismissed the appeal as an Appellate Court, but enhanced the sentence as a Court of Revision—Mehar Ali, 11 Cal. 530. The effect of secs. 423 and 439 read together is that the High Court when hearing an appeal against a conviction may alter the finding under sec. 423, and then as a Court of Revision may enhance the sentence under this section so as to make the sentence appropriate to the altered finding—Bali Reddi, 37 Mad. 110 (123). A District Magistrate or Sessions Judge or the Government Pleader may draw the attention of the High Court to a sentence with a view to its being enhanced. The High Court may also of its own motion send for the record and take action with a like object. But it is not for a private complainant to apply to the High Court for this purpose. If he considers a sentence unduly lenient, he should draw the attention of the Government to the fact—In re Nagji Dula, 43 Bom 358 (360), 26 Bom.L.R. 182, 25 Cr L J 966; Lakhi v Raju, 19 S.L.R. 64; Nga San v Nga Ye, 5 Bur.L.J. 1, 27 Cr.L.J. 818. The Calcutta High Court is of opinion that a private complainant may make an application to the High Court for enhancement of sentence where a grossly inadequate sentence has been passed which deserves to be enhanced, and the High Court has power to issue a Rule on such application, but it is a safe practice not to interfere on such applications made on behalf of private complainants. But if a rule has been issued, the High Court should go into the facts and ascertain whether the sentence should be enhanced—Pramatha v. Ganga Charan, 33 C W N 395 (398). In this case, the High Court, after considering the facts, enhanced the sentence, even though the Crown did not appear in support of the Rule. But in another case, where a Rule was issued on the application of a private complainant, but the Crown did not appear, the High Court refused to enhance the sentence (although it was considered to be inadequate and discharged the Rule). "Had the application been made at the instance of the Crown, I should have been more inclined to enhance the sentence"—Ali Akabbar v Kasem 33 C W N. 605 (608), 1929 Cr C. 439 (virtually dissenting from 33 C W N 395).

Where an accused's revision petition against his conviction has been dismissed, the High Court can entertain a second revision petition from the complainant or a reference from a District Magistrate (sec. 438) for enhancement of the sentence. The disposal of the first revision petition is no bar to the disposal of the second revision petition or reference, though arising out of the same original trial, because the Judges disposing of the revision petition filed by a convicted person against the propriety of his conviction cannot be said to be adjudicating on the question of enhancing the sentence, so that the matter of the second proceeding cannot be said to be of the nature of res judicata so as to violate sec 369. It cannot be accepted as a sound principle that once the High Court has passed any order in a criminal revision, it is junctus officio and is precluded from entertaining any further revision petition or reference or from proceeding suo motu, in respect of another aspect of the case—In re Sayed Anif, 26 Cr L J. 583 (585, 586), Jorabhai 50 Bom 783, 27 Cr L J 1173 (1175).

Generally the cases in which the powers of the High Court to enhance the sentence have been exercised are those in which the records have been called for by the High Court or which have been reported to it, or which otherwise comes to its knowledge on a perusal of the returns from the subordinate Courts. But when the case comes to the knowledge of the High Court by an appeal being filed by the accused against his conviction, it is not desirable, if the appeal is admitted, to issue a notice at the same time for enhancement of the sentence. It is incongruous that the Court should in the same breath admit the appeal, and should call upon the accused to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced. The proper procedure is to deal first with the appeal, and then to consider whether a notice to enhance the sentence should issue—Mangal Naran, 49 Bom. 450, 27 Bom L.R. 355, 26 Cr L.J. 958 (969).

And conversely, when a Sessions Judge has reported a conviction to the High Court for the purpose of enhancing the sentence, and the High Court rejected the reference, it is not precluded from entertaining a subsequent revision petition presented by the accused against his conviction—Kohna Ram, 45 All. 11, 23 Cr L.J. 496

The High Court has power to enhance a sentence so as to alter its nature—Ram Kuria, 6 All. 622. Thus, where a Sessions Judge convicted the accused of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and sentenced him to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, the High Court in revision altered the conviction to one of murder and sentenced him to transportation for life—Gulam Muhammad, 1871 P.R. 11. Where the Sessions Judge convicted the accused of murder but sentenced him to transportation for life, and the murder appeared to be singularly brutal, the High Court in revision enhanced the sentence of transportation to a sentence of death—Dwarka v Emp, 4 O W N 977, 28 Cr.L.J. 980 (982)

An application by a private complainant for enhancement of sentence will not be entertained by the High Court except in extreme cases, e.g. where the sentence passed by the Magistrate is wholly inadequate—Debi Singh v Ram Charan, 30 Cr L.J. 219 (All.), Khuda Baksh v Feroz Din 30 Cr L.J. 300 (Lah)

An enhancement of sentence is a serious proceeding, and the High Court will not interfere as a Court of Revision in order to enhance the sentence if the sentence passed by the Lower Court involves substantial punishment, and should interfere only if the sentence is manifestly inadequate—Chuni Lal, 1889 P.R. 7, Saif Ali, 1898 P.R. 17, Dhana Lal, 29 Cr.L.J. 764 (760) (Lah.), Sitaram v Emp., 12 O L J 421, 2 O W N 550, 26 Cr.L.J. 1364, Ghura, 6 O W N 43, 30 Cr L.J. 544; 10 SLR 207. And for this purpose the High Court should see whether there is matter on the record of the case showing that the sentence passed is clearly inadequate to the offence—Emp. v. Mahadeo, 26 Cr L.J. 821 (824) (Nag) Hurnath, 20 W.R. 22. The High Court will be reluctant to enhance the sentence passed by the Sessions Court except on very serious grounds. It will not enhance the sentence when the Public Prosecutor in the Sessions Court has allowed that Court to pass the sentence it did without any serious attempt to modify it—Kassim, 17 SLR 268, 26 Cr L.J. 177. The mere fact that the High Court would have inflicted a heavier punishment if the case had come before it for trial is not a proper ground for enhancement of sentence, specially if the sentence passed by the Magistrate is a substantial one—Khana, 29 Cr L.J. 276 (Lah.); Budha, 1919 P.R. 7, 20 Cr.L.J. 212, 49 I.C. 772, Sitaram v Emp., (supra), Kassim supra. If a public servant is proved to have taken bribes, exemplary punishment should be awarded. Where, in such a case, the sentence inflicted by the lower Court was inadequate, the High Court would enhance the sentence—Jehangir, 29 Bom.L.R. 996, 28 Cr.L.J. 1012 (1018). But the High Court will not interfere in a case where a sentence has been passed by the Magistrate on a consideration of all the circumstances of the case and no question of principle is involved, even though the sentence appears to be lenient. Even in cases of communal disturbance, the Government should refrain from appealing to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court for enhancement of sentence, unless violence has been done to some general principle which requires immediate and authoritative interference—Nasrullah, 29 Cr.L.J. 446 (447) (All)

Where the fact of previous conviction was brought to the notice of the Magistrate at the commencement of the trial, but he paid no attention to it, the High Court would interfere to enhance the sentence, but if the previous conviction was not a recent one but took place nearly 3 years prior to the present offence, and there was nothing against the accused during the period that intervened, the High Court would not think it necessary to enhance the sentence—Prem, 27 A L J. 397, 30 Cr L.J. 529 (530). But where the fact of previous conviction which was known to the prosecution was not at all brought to the notice of the Magistrate through the negligence of the prosecution, the High Court would not interfere to enhance the sentence. To permit the prosecution to plead their own negligence and to harass the accused with further proceedings directed towards the enhancement of the sentence would be to put a premium on the negligence of the prosecution—Bashir 30 Cr.L.J. 505 (506) (All); Gul, 1902 P.R. 21, 1902 P.L.R. 144; Hyoth Mastan, 2 Weir 574. A fortiori, the High Court would not interfere to enhance the sentence, where the previous conviction was not known to the prosecution at the time of the trial, but was discovered after the conviction—Maidhan, 1905 P.R. 19, 2 Cr.L.J. 228; Nur Mahammad, 1905 P.R. 43, 3 Cr L.J. 341; Sham Singh, 1884 P.R. 36.

The High Court does not generally interfere in revision to enhance the sentence when the convicted person has undergone the full term of his imprisonment or has paid the fine imposed upon him, even though the order of the Court below is clearly wrong in law—Hari Singh, 1913 P.W.R. 29, 14 Cr L.J. 599 (600), 1909 P.W.R. 44, Jagat Singh, 1 Lah 453, 21 Cr L.J. 557. The High Court is slow to interfere in cases where interference would involve the imprisonment of persons already discharged from jail—Chuni Lal, 1889 P.R. 7. But the test in each case is, whether the sentence inflicted by the trying Court involves substantial punishment. The High Court will not interfere if adequate punishment has been inflicted, but if the sentence is manifestly inadequate, it is competent to the High Court to impose an additional punishment, even though the accused has served out the whole of the imprisonment inflicted by the lower Court—Chuni Lal, supra, Shankar Narayan, 28 Bom L.R. 300, 27 Cr.L.J. 557 (558); Jagat Singh, supra, Shahzad Ahamad, 30 Cr L.J. 240 (241) (Lah). Where the Magistrate's order was proper on the materials before him, the sentence should not be enhanced in revision on the ground of previous conviction being disclosed, it is not fair to the accused to reverse the conviction and direct him to be committed to the Sessions, after he has undergone the full term of imprisonment inflicted by the Magistrate, merely because his previous convictions were not known at the time of his trial by the Magistrate—Crown v. Usman, 17 Cr.L.J. 3, 9 S.L.R. 93. The High Court will not interfere to enhance the sentence, after a long period has elapsed—Nasrullah, 29 Cr.L.J. 446 (447) (All).

The power of enhancement conferred on the High Court under sec 439 is limited only by clause (3) of this section. This clause does not regard the difference in the powers of the trying Magistrate under sec. 32, but lays down that in cases of sentences passed by Magistrates not empowered under sec. 34, the limit of enhancement shall be the sentence that might have been inflicted by a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class. Therefore the High Court has power to enhance the sentence of imprisonment to two years—Crown v. Kamal, 9 S.L.R. 82, 16 Cr.L.J. 712, 30 I.C. 1000. The High Court has the power to inflict any punishment which might have been inflicted for the offence by a first class Magistrate, and is not limited to the powers of the trying Magistrate—Jagat Singh, 1 Lah 453, 21 Cr.L.J. 557. The words 'enhance the sentence' presuppose that a sentence has been imposed by the Lower Court. Therefore where no sentence has been passed by the trying Magistrate but the accused has been released on probation under sec 562, the High Court cannot substitute a sentence of imprisonment or whipping in revision—Nur Khan, 48 I.C. 979, 20 Cr.L.J. 99 (Oudh), Ghasite, 37 All 31, 12 A.L.J. 1244, 16 Cr.L.J. 43.

Lastly, the power of enhancement of sentence can be exercised under this section where the sentence passed by the Magistrate is a legal one. A retrospective sentence of imprisonment for the period already passed by the accused in the lock-up is not a legal sentence—Asghar Ali, 1919 P.R. 27, 20 Cr.L.J. 684, 52 I.C. 604.

1217. Procedure if two Judges differ :—If two learned Judges of the High Court differ in a Criminal Revision case, sec. 439 read with sec 429 requires the case to be decided by a third Judge, and precludes any further appeal under the Letters Patent or any reference to a Full Bench under the rules of the Court—Dudikula Lal Sahib, 40 Mad 976. But where an application is made to the High Court not under sec. 435, Cr. P. Code, but under sec 107 of the Government of India Act, section 439 of the Code cannot apply, and consequently sec. 429 (which is referred to in sec. 439) is also not applicable; and therefore if in such a case there is a difference of opinion between the Judges, the provisions of sec. 36 of the Letters Patent will apply, and the decision of the senior Judge will prevail—Moiram v. Mrijan, 47 Cal 438, 21 Cr.L.J. 25, 24 C.W.N. 97.

1218. Sub-section (2) —Notice to accused :—The language of this sub-section is mandatory and it is clearly enacted as an exception to section 440. An order of enhancement of sentence is an order to the prejudice of the accused, and if such an order is passed without giving the accused an opportunity of being heard, it is more than an irregularity and the order so passed is without jurisdiction—In re Soma Naidu, 47 Mad. 428 (432); K. E. v. Romesh Chandra, 22 C.W.N. 169, Natha, Ratanlal 179. Where a case comes to the knowledge of the High Court by an appeal having been filed against a conviction, it is not desirable, if the appeal is admitted, to issue a notice at the same time to enhance the sentence. It seems to be absolutely incongruous that the High Court in the same breath should admit the appeal of the accused, and issue notice calling upon him to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced. The notice should issue after the appeal has been dismissed after being dealt with on the merits—Mangal Naran v Emp., 49 Bom. 450, 27 Bom. L.R. 355, 26 Cr.L.J. 968. Where notice has been issued to the accused to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced, and at the hearing neither the accused nor his counsel is present, the High Court cannot pass an order enhancing the sentence—Parasram v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 543 (Oudh).

Where a complainant applied to the High Court under sec 439 to revise an order of a first class Magistrate ordering payment of compensation (under sec 250) to the accused, the High Court refused to pass any order where it appeared that the accused was dead and could not therefore be served with notice—Govinda v Keshavrao, Ratanlal 634.

A High Court may issue a warrant of arrest without previous notice to the accused, because a warrant of arrest is not an order to the prejudice of the accused within the meaning of this sub-section—Nga E. Mounq, 8 Bur L.T. 288, 16 Cr.L.J. 670, 30 I.C. 654.

If the High Court makes an order to the prejudice of the accused without issuing notice to him and giving him an opportunity of being heard, the order is a nullity, and the High Court has power to vacate that order and rehear the matter in the presence of both sides—Ramesh Pada v. Kadambini, 55 Cal 417, 31 C.W.N. 960, 28 Cr.L.J. 831 (832).

1219. Sub-section (4)—Interference with orders of acquittal :—As to the powers of the High Court to revise orders of acquittal at the instance of a private prosecutor, or on a reference under sec 438, see Note 1204 ante.

When the Government has not appealed, the High Court will not interfere with an order of acquittal except in extreme cases and under exceptional circumstances, whether it is moved by the District Magistrate or by a private party—Mogal Beg, 42 Mad 109, Jota v Parshottam, 25 Bom L.R. 488, 24 Cr.L.J. 734, Khem Chand v Lalu, 3 Bur L.J. 323, 26 Cr.L.J. 511. The High Court will not move in such a case unless there was some glaring defect either in the procedure or in the view of the law taken by the Court below and there has been a flagrant miscarriage of justice—Kamikka Pershad, 2 Luck 650, 28 Cr.L.J. 788 (790); Basirulla v Asadulla, 33 C.W.N. 576.

Though the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere in revision with an acquittal, it shall ordinarily exercise this jurisdiction sparingly and only in serious cases where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice, to prevent a gross miscarriage of justice—Nand Ram v Khazan, 19 A.L.J. 589, 22 Cr.L.J. 337, Foujdar v Kasi, 42 Cal 612 (616); Pramatha v. P. C. Lahiri, 47 Cal 818 (827), Natesa v Emp., 28 M.L.J. 690, Vellayanambalam v Solai, 39 Mad 505, Rameshwar, 53 Bom. 564;

Parakanakkan v. Amir, 20 L.W. 327, 26 Cr.L.J. 249; Sankarlinga v. Narayana, 45 Mad. 913; Pahelwan v. Sahib, Singh, 19 A.L.J. 392, 22 Cr.L.J. 597; 6 All. 484, Fareedoon Cawasji, 41 Bom. 560 (562), Mehr v. Nur Md., 26 P.L.R. 644, 26 Cr.L.J. 1596; Panchan v. Upendra, 49 All. 254, 27 Cr.L.J. 1407; Siban Rai v. Bhagwant, 5 Pat. 25, 27 Cr.L.J. 235, 6 P.L.T. 833, Kamikka Pershad, 2 Luck. 680, 28 Cr.L.J. 788 (790); Sher Khan v. Anwar Khan, 23 N.L.R. 40, 28 Cr.L.J. 523 (528); Binda Prasad v. Ripusudan, 5 N.L.R. 4, 9 Cr.L.J. 211, 1 I.C. 238. The High Court will interfere with an order of acquittal only where there has been an error in law, or where the trial has been illegal or so radically and incurably irregular as in fact to have occasioned a failure of justice—Sher Khan v. Anwar Khan, supra. Thus, the High Court will interfere where a Magistrate acquitted the accused disregarding the uncontradicted evidence and facts admitted which proved the guilt of the accused, and acted illegally in trying a warrant case as a summons case—Sabathi v. Kuppusami, 15 M.L.J. 225. Where the trying Magistrate, in his judgment of acquittal, while laying great stress on all considerations that might affect the credibility of the witnesses for the prosecution, omitted to consider what might be advanced in their favour, and also failed to appreciate the corroborative value of an important witness for the prosecution, the High Court set aside the order of acquittal and directed a retrial—Shank Bazu v. Raika Singh, 18 C.W.N. 1244. An order of acquittal will be set aside in revision where the acquittal is the result of an alleged composition which turns out to be invalid—Harnam v. Sam Das, 24 Cr.L.J. 120, e.g., where the Magistrate acquitted the accused by allowing the parties to compromise a non-compoundable case—Zahiruddin v. Nasiruddin, 24 Cr.L.J. 186 (Oudh). The High Court will not hesitate to interfere where the acquittal is based on a manifest error in law appearing on the face of the judgment—Ahmedabad Municipality v. Mangalal, 9 Bom.L.R. 150, 5 Cr.L.J. 171; Nanhi Bahu v. Dhunde, 6 A.L.J. 758, Hardeo, 1 All. 139. The High Court will in revision set aside an order of acquittal and order a retrial, where in a serious case of rioting in connection with the possession of land, the Magistrate did not come to any finding on the question of possession—Surendra v. Janaki, 53 Cal. 471, 27 Cr.L.J. 975. The High Court will interfere where the order of acquittal was not passed on the merits, but was made on account of the death of the complainant, and the complainant's son was not allowed to continue the proceeding—Jutan v. Damoo Sahu, 1 P.L.J. 264, 20 C.W.N. 862, 18 Cr.L.J. 151. Where the case was posted for an unusual hour (namely 7 A.M.), and the complaint was dismissed and the accused acquitted for non-appearance of the complainant at that time, the High Court interfered and ordered a retrial, otherwise an offender would escape punishment through sheer accident—Subbiah v. Inukolobath, 27 Cr.L.J. 1391 (Mad.). An order of acquittal passed by the Lower Court will be set aside where the judgment of that Court is very summary and contains no discussion of the case or distinct findings on the questions involved—Nabin Chandra v. Rajendra, 18 Cr.L.J. 519 (Cal.). The High Court will exercise its power to set aside an acquittal, where there has been no trial, or where there has been a denial of the right of fair trial

—Siban Rai v. Bhagwant, 5 Pat 25, 6 P.L.T. 833, 27 Cr.L.J. 235. Where there were grave irregularities in procedure and the trial was conducted in an atmosphere of prejudice, the High Court interfered with an order of acquittal—Gangadhar v. Reid, 25 C.W.N. 609 (Khoreal shooting case), 23 Cr.L.J. 41. The High Court will interfere in certain exceptional circumstances where a matter of public importance is involved—Municipal Board v. Vadyadhari, 24 O.C 57, 22 Cr.L.J. 638, 63 I.C. 334; see also Ahmedabad Municipality v. Maganlal, supra. An application for revision against an order of acquittal may appropriately be allowed, when legal points alone are involved—Crown v. Thamman, 1918 P.R. 8. But the mere fact that the High Court if it were sitting as a Court of Appeal would have come to a different conclusion of fact is no ground for exercising revisional jurisdiction upon a petition against an order of acquittal—Vellayanambalam v. Solai, 39 Mad. 505, Mellor v. Muthia, 20 Cr.L.J. 101, 35 M.L.J. 518, Binda Prasad v. Ripusudan, 5 N.L.R. 4, 1 I.C. 238, 9 Cr.L.J. 211, Damodar v. Juharsingh, 26 Cr.L.J. 1348 (Nag). The High Court should not interfere with an order of acquittal when the question is merely as to the appreciation of doubtful evidence, and there is no patent error or defect in the order of acquittal passed by the Lower Court resulting in grave injustice—Vellayanambalam v. Solai, 39 Mad. 505; Mellor v. Muthia, 35 M.L.J. 518, 48 I.C. 981. When the acquittal of an accused is based on a finding of fact, the High Court will not interfere in revision—Crown v. Harphul, 7 Lah.L.J. 42, 26 P.L.R. 38, 26 Cr.L.J. 689. Where the trial Court has acquitted the accused after giving due weight to all the evidence on the record, the High Court will not interfere—Mehr Nur Md v. Nur Md, 7 Lah.L.J. 367, 26 P.L.R. 644, 26 Cr.L.J. 1596. Where the Magistrate took one view of the oral evidence and the Sessions Judge took the opposite view, and there was no legal point or question of jurisdiction involved, held that there was no ground for interference with the order of acquittal—Khem Chand v. Lalu, 3 Bur.L.J. 323, 26 Cr.L.J. 511. A mere error of procedure is not by itself a good ground for setting aside an acquittal, thus, a mere error of improper admission of evidence which was not essential to a result which might have been come to wholly independent of it, is not a ground of interference—Ganga Singh v. Rambhajan, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 165, 25 Cr.L.J. 1266 (Pat); so also, an omission by the Appellate Court to serve the notice of appeal on the complainant or on the officer appointed under sec. 422 is not a ground for setting aside the order of acquittal passed by the Appellate Court—Parakanakkan v. Amir, 20 L.W. 327, 26 Cr.L.J. 249. The High Court will not interfere in revision with an order of acquittal passed by a Magistrate of competent jurisdiction who has taken a correct view of the law, e.g., an order of acquittal passed by a Magistrate on a prosecution for an alleged offence under sec. 225B I. P. Code, irregularly instituted on a report sent in by a Munsif which was treated as a complaint—Emp v. Madho Singh, 47 All. 409, 23 A.L.J. 189, 26 Cr.L.J. 865.

The above remarks equally apply to cases of revision against an order of discharge under sec 253; and the High Court would be unwilling or very reluctant to interfere with an order of discharge based on a consideration of all the prosecution evidence, when no evidence has been shut out and there is no illegality or irregularity in the procedure adopted by the trying Court, even if the High Court should on the materials on the record consider that it was a fit case for the framing of a charge and putting the accused on his defence—Mellor v Muthia Chetty, 35 M L J 518, 20 Cr.L.J. 101, 48 I C. 981.

Converting acquittal into conviction:—The High Court may interfere with an order of acquittal, when such interference is urgently demanded in the interests of justice (see supra); but it cannot convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction. Thus, it cannot set aside the order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge on appeal, and restore the order of conviction of the trial Court—Rameshwar, 53 Bom 564, 30 Cr.L.J. 1062 (1064), 31 Bom.L.R. 529. After reversing the order of acquittal, the proper order of the High Court must be one remanding the case to the lower Court and directing the retrial of the accused person—Rameshwar v Govind, 23 A L.J. 433, 26 Cr L.J. 970; Q E v. Balwant, 9 All 134; Har Piari v. Nathe Lal, 22 Cr L.J. 97 (All.), 59 I C 401; Nand Ram v Khazan, 19 A.L.J. 589, 22 Cr.L.J. 337; Ma Nyen v. Maung Chit, 7 Rang 538, 1929 Cr. C. 497. Though the High Court, in exercising revisional powers against orders of acquittal, can go into the questions of fact, still it cannot then and there convict but can only order a retrial—Virumal v Sadhu, 1908 P.L.R. 157, 8 Cr.L.J. 462. But the High Court will not order a retrial, when such order would be tantamount to converting an acquittal into conviction. Where owing to non-recording of evidence or improper recording of inadmissible evidence the High Court reverses an order of acquittal, it can direct a retrial; but in a case where there is no erroneous recording or shutting out of evidence, if the High Court were to set aside the acquittal and order a retrial on the same evidence, it would be the same thing as sending the case to a Magistrate with directions to convict; in other words, it would be for all practical purposes converting an acquittal into conviction—Ma Nyen v. Mg. Chit, 7 Rang. 538, 1929 Cr. C. 497.

The High Court, as a Court of Appeal, is not debarred from converting a finding of acquittal into one of conviction, because sec. 439 (2) limits the powers of the High Court when acting as a Court of Revision, and not as a Court of Appeal. An Appellate Court has no such restriction under sec. 423, cl (a). But as a Court of Revision the High Court cannot convert an acquittal into conviction—Bali Reddi, 37 Mad. 119 (122, 123); Q. E. v. Jabanulla, 23 Cal. 975 (979).

The only way of securing conviction in a case of acquittal is by an appeal by the Local Government against the order of acquittal—Erip v. Sheo Darshan, 44 All. 332 (333), 23 Cr.L.J. 202.

An order under sec. 471 is not an order of conviction. Therefore where the accused was acquitted by the Lower Court on the ground that he was insane, the passing of an order under sec. 471 by the High Court in revision does not amount to an alteration of an order of acquittal into one of conviction within the meaning of this sub-section—Mahammad, 42 M L J 72, 23 Cr.L J 71, A I R. 1922 Mad. 54.

The High Court is precluded from converting the finding of acquittal into one of conviction, in the absence of a Government appeal. But the High Court can convict the accused person of an offence under another section of the Penal Code upon which he has not been acquitted by the Lower Court. Thus, in a trial for an offence under sec. 302 I. P. C., the trial Court acquitted the accused under sec. 302 I. P. C. but convicted him under sec. 323 I. P. Code. Held that the High Court can in revision convict the accused of an offence under sec. 325 I. P. Code, in as much as the trial Court had not considered the applicability of sec. 325 I. P. C. and there was no acquittal under sec. 325 I. P. Code—Dulli v Manghi, 24 A L J. 414, 27 Cr.L J. 564.

*Conviction of one offence and acquittal of another:—*It was held in some cases that the word 'acquittal' in this sub-section meant a complete acquittal on all the facts and allegations charged, and not an acquittal in respect of one charge and conviction in respect of another; therefore, where the accused was convicted by the Magistrate of one offence and acquitted of another, in the same trial, the High Court had power in revision to convert the acquittal into conviction—Bhola v. Emp., 1904 P R 12, 1 Cr L J 942. Thus, where the accused was charged under sec. 302 I P Code but was convicted under sec. 304 I. P. C., it was held that the High Court was competent to alter the conviction under sec. 304 I P C into a conviction under sec. 302 I. P. C.—Fazal Khan v. Emp., 8 Lah 136, 28 Cr.L J 508 (following Bhola, 1904 P R. 12). It was explained in a Madras case that sub-section (4) of sec. 439 refers to a case where the trial has ended in a complete acquittal, and not to a case where the trial has ended in a conviction but the Court has wrongly applied the law or has wrongly found some fact not proved and has in consequence held that the conviction should be under some section of the I P Code other than the section properly applicable—Bali Reddi, 37 Mad 119 (123), followed in Emp v Shahu, 20 S L R. 352, 27 Cr.L.J. 1121 (1122). In a Patna case, where the accused was convicted by a Magistrate under sec. 205 I. P. C., but the Sessions Judge on appeal altered the conviction into one under sec. 419 I. P. C., the High Court being of opinion that the former offence had been committed and not the latter, altered the conviction into one under sec. 205 I. P. Code. The High Court remarked that the substitution of the conviction under sec. 419 for one under sec. 205 by the Sessions Judge did not amount to an acquittal of the accused with regard to the offence under the latter section and that sec. 439 (4) Cr. P. Code was no bar to the High Court re-altering the conviction under sec. 419 into one under sec. 205 I P. C.—Ganpat Lal v. Emp., 6 Pat 217, 28 Cr.L J. 529 (531). Where the accused was charged under secs. 148 and 326 I. P. C. but the Magistrate convicted him under sec. 148 and acquitted him under sec. 326, the High Court converted the acquittal into conviction under sec. 326 I. P. C., at the same time maintaining the conviction under sec. 148 I. P. C.—Wazir Kunjra, 7 Pat. 579, 30 Cr.L.J. 673 (675). But the Bombay High Court dissented from this view. Thus, where the accused was convicted by a Magistrate under sec. 326 I. P. C. but the Sessions Judge on appeal altered the conviction into one under sec. 323, held that the order of the Sessions Judge was to be taken as an acquittal of the offence under sec. 326 I. P. C., and the High Court could not restore the conviction under sec. 326, because it would amount to converting a finding of acquittal into one of conviction—Emp. v. Shivaputraya, 48 Bom 510 (511), 26 Bom L.R. 438, 26 Cr.L.J. 830 (dissenting from Bhola v. Emp., 1 Cr.L.J. 842, 1904 P.R. 12). The Allahabad High Court also held that an order of acquittal could not be converted into an order of conviction, even though the acquittal was a partial acquittal. Thus, where the accused was charged with both murder and culpable homicide, and the Sessions Judge acquitted him on the charge of murder but convicted him of culpable homicide, the High Court in revision refused to convict the accused of murder—Sheo Darshan, 44 All. 332 (333), 20 A.L.J. 190, 23 Cr.L.J. 202. In a very recent Madras case, where the accused was charged with murder (sec. 302 I. P. C.) but the Sessions Judge convicted him under the second part of sec. 304 I. P. C., held that the High Court had no power to convict the accused of murder. The order of the Sessions Judge amounted to an order of acquittal in respect of the charge of murder, and the High Court has no power to do what is tantamount to converting a finding of acquittal into one of conviction. The finding of acquittal referred to in sec. 439 (4) does not necessarily mean complete acquittal. The wording of the section says nothing about the acquittal being partial or complete. It includes cases where there has been an acquittal in respect of a particular offence, and a conviction in respect of another—In re Subba Chukh, 50 Mad. 259, 52 M.L.J. 707, 28 Cr.L.J. 397 (dissenting from Bali Reddi, 37 Mad. 119). These conflicting views have been recently considered in a case coming before the Judicial Committee, and they have laid down that if the accused is charged with murder (sec. 302 I. P. C.) but is convicted by the Sessions Judge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder (sec. 304 I. P. C.), it amounts to an acquittal in respect of the charge of murder under sec. 302 (although the Sessions Judge has not recorded an express finding of acquittal on this charge of murder), and the High Court cannot in revision convict the accused under sec. 302, for that would be tantamount to converting a finding of acquittal into one of conviction, and that the 'acquittal' mentioned in sec. 439 (4) does not contemplate only a complete acquittal in respect of all charges and offences but includes a case where the accused has been acquitted of the charge of murder but convicted of the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Kishan Singh, 50 All. 722 (P.C.), 33 C.W.N. 1 (3, 5, 6), 26 A.L.J. 1099, 30 Bom L.R. 1572, 29 P.L.R. 575, 55 M.L.J. 786, 29 Cr.L.J. 828 (approving 44 All. 332, and 48 Bom 510, and overruling the view of 37 Mad 119). The contrary view taken in 8 Lah 136, 1904 P.R. 12, 20 S.L.R. 352, 48 Mad. 774, 6 Pat 217 and 7 Pat. 579 is overruled.

The Rangoon High Court holds that where a man charged with murder has been convicted by the Sessions Judge for a minor offence, the question whether the High Court can convict the man of murder (of which he has been acquitted by the Sessions Judge) depends on whether the High Court is dealing with the case both as an Appellate and a Revisional Court, or whether it is merely acting in its revisional capacity. If the High Court is acting both as an Appellate and a Revisional Court, it can convict the appellant of murder and sentence him to death (On Shire v. Emp., 1 Rang. 436, 25 Cr L.J. 247) But if it is acting solely as a Court of revision, it cannot convert the acquittal of murder into conviction—Emp. v. Kan Thein, 4 Rang. 140, 5 Bur.L.J. 80, 27 Cr L.J. 1393.

Where the accused was convicted by a Magistrate under secs. 420 and 507 I. P. Code but on appeal the Sessions Judge held that secs. 420 and 507 were not the proper sections applicable on the facts and altered the conviction to one under sections 385 and 508 I P C, the High Court can convict the accused under secs. 420 and 511 I P Code (attempt to cheat). Such an order would not amount to an alteration of acquittal into conviction, because the Sessions Judge has not considered whether the accused was guilty of an attempt to cheat and has not recorded any finding of acquittal on such a charge, and the prohibition in this clause did not apply to this case. The case is one in which it was difficult to say what the offence committed by the accused was, on the facts proved. In such a case it was doubtful whether the alteration of one section into another by the Sessions Judge could be said to be a case of 'acquittal' under the former section, within the meaning of this clause—In re Doraisamy, 48 Mad. 774, 48 M.L.J. 190, 26 Cr L.J. 755, A I R 1925 Mad 480.

1220. Sub-section (5)—No revision where right of appeal exists :—Under this sub-section, the High Court is precluded from exercising the powers of revision at the instance of the accused who had a right of appeal but did not exercise it—Nandeyappa, 8 Bom L R 851, 4 Cr.LJ 446; Dinonath v Rajcoomar, 3 Cal 537, Bhagwan Singh, 1907 P R 20, 6 Cr.L.J. 263; Emp. v Nilambar, 2 All 276; Gurdit Singh, 1904 P L R 1; In re Saravayya, 44 M L J. 366, Laxman Rangu, 35 Bom 253, Jumo v Emp., 8 S L R 229, Harbhagwandas, 14 S L R 173, 22 Cr L J 313, 60 I C 1001. And therefore it is impossible for an appeal filed beyond limitation to be treated as an application for revision as far as criminal procedure goes—Gertmal v Shewa Ram, 20 S.L R 90, 27 Cr L J 780 (781). Where the accused who had a right of appeal to the Sessions Judge did not appeal but came in revision before the High Court, this Court would be precluded from hearing the applicant, and in such a case the High Court cannot even interfere sue motu, for that would be an evasion of the statute, which the Court cannot permit—Nuran v Emp., 18 S L R. 262, 25 Cr L J 1362, Jumo v. Emp., 8 S.L.R 229, 19 Cr L J 252. Thus, in an application by an accused person for revision of an order of a Magistrate refusing to allow a private vakil to appeal on his behalf, it was held that the case was not one for interference in revision because the accused could have appealed from his conviction and made it a ground of appeal that he was improperly deprived of legal assistance at the trial—In re Saravayya, 44 M.L.J. 366,

A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 494 Where a complaint is made by a Court under sec. 476, the accused has a right of appeal to a superior Court and it is not competent to the High Court to quash the proceedings in revision—Abdul Karim, 10 P.L.T. 16f, 30 Cr.L.J. 765 (766). But there is no inflexible rule that where the accused has a right of appeal and does not exercise it, the High Court cannot exercise its revisional powers under this section; but such powers should be sparingly used and in very exceptional circumstances—Ala Baksh, 6 All 484. Ordinarily when an accused has a right of appeal but has not exercised the same, the High Court will not permit him to apply in revision instead. But where the effect of not allowing the revision is to make him suffer long periods of imprisonment when under the law a sentence of only a few months could be imposed on him, the High Court will interfere under the general powers of revision—In re Pavanar, 20 L.W. 914, 26 Cr.L.J. 747. In as much as this sub-section directs that where an appeal lies and no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision shall be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed, it is clearly desirable that District Magistrates should not place difficulties in the way of persons entitled to appeal by calling for the proceedings and taking action upon them within the period allowed for appeal—Lakanav, 10 Bur.L.T. 166, 18 Cr.L.J. 355.

No appeal after revision:—Where a case has been heard in revision and orders have been passed after the High Court fully went into the facts of the case, the Court cannot afterwards hear an appeal in the same case—1890 A.W.N. 225

Revision after appeal:—Although the High Court is competent to interfere in revision as well as to interfere on appeal, still it could not have been the intention of the Legislature that a person, who had appealed and had the opportunity of advancing any objection he desired to take to the proceedings of the Lower Court, should again have the opportunity of raising any points of law he may have omitted to raise in the appeal, by an application for revision—Venkatachalam, 2 Weir 573. But the High Court after it has acted as a Court of Appeal, may act as a Court of revision on special grounds, e.g., to correct an error which cannot be set right by appeal. For instance, if a man should be found guilty of murder and sentenced to 7 years' transportation, then if the prisoner should appeal on the facts the High Court might uphold the finding of guilty of murder on appeal, and afterwards as a Court of revision might set aside the sentence of 7 years' transportation and pass a legal sentence for murder—Gora Chand, 5 W.R. 45.

1221. Sub-section (6):—By virtue of this new clause, an accused person, who has been called upon to show cause why a sentence passed upon him should not be enhanced, will have the right of showing not only that the sentence should not be enhanced but that the whole conviction is wrong. This amendment enables the High Court not only to refuse an enhancement of sentence but also to set aside a conviction if the High Court finds that not only the sentence but the conviction also is equally unjustifiable.

The object of the amendment has been thus stated: "Under the Code as it stands, the High Court has been given the power to enhance the sentence in case of persons who have been convicted by Lower Courts. Now, suppose the accused person takes the conviction and he does not care to appeal. Rather than undergo the expense of going to the High Court and appealing against the sentence, he suffers the sentence and keeps quiet. But the police are not satisfied with the sentence imposed by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge who tried the case. They say, he should have been given a longer sentence or a longer punishment, and therefore they drag the poor man to the High Court. When he appears before the High Court, it stands to reason that he should be able to say 'Well, I have been wrongly convicted, but you want to impose a heavier penalty now. I was content to let things alone, but here the police won't leave me alone, they have dragged me to the High Court, now let me establish my innocence, the case is not proved against me, the evidence is false, I want to establish that.' Sir, there are Judges and Judges. Here the luck of the accused depends upon the particular Judge who hears the particular case * * * We must not leave it to the sweet will and discretion of particular Judges to say whether they will hear that point or not. If the man is able to satisfy the revising authority that the man is entitled to acquittal, it is only right that the High Court should do so"—Legislative Assembly Debates, 8th February 1923, page 2081

Prior to this amendment, in cases that came up before the High Court for enhancement of sentence, it was the practice to accept the conviction as conclusive, and to consider the question of enhancement of sentence on that basis; see Emp v. Chinto, 32 Bom 162, 7 Cr.L.J. 119, 10 Bom L.R. 93. But this is no longer correct; the amendment is intended to give the accused person, who has been brought to the bar of the High Court to answer why a sentence passed upon him should not be enhanced, the right of showing by argument a fortiori not only that the sentence should not be enhanced but that the conviction itself is wrong and should be set aside—Emp v. Mahadeo, 26 Cr L J 821 (Nag), Jorabhai, 50 Bom 783, 27 Cr L J 1173 (1174). The effect of the enactment of this sub-section is that the High Court when adjudicating upon an application for enhancement of sentence, is converted into a Court of Appeal against conviction and the accused is entitled to show that his conviction was unjustified—Emp. v Tej Ram, 27 P L R 112, 27 Cr L J 380 (381). An accused person when showing cause why his sentence should not be enhanced, is entitled to show that the whole trial was illegal (e.g. as contravening the provisions of sec 234), though the question of illegality was not raised at the trial—Emp. v Manant 49 Bom 892, 27 Bom L R 1343, 27 Cr L J 305.

But where a High Court has given a finding on appeal as to the guilt of the accused person, and subsequently a notice is served upon that person to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced, he is not at liberty under sec 439 (6) to re-open the question of the correctness of his conviction because of the inherent incapacity of a Bench of the High Court to reconsider a decision given by another Bench (secs. 369 and 430)—forabhai, 50 Bom. 783, 28 Bom L.R. 1051, 27 Cr.L.J. 1173 (1175). Similarly, where an accused has filed a petition against his conviction and that petition has been dismissed by the High Court (whether in limine or on the merits) and then proceedings are taken against him before the High Court for enhancement of the sentence, the accused would be precluded from re-agitating the question of the legality of the conviction, because the High Court cannot decide again what it has decided once—In re Sayed Anif, 26 Cr.L.J. 583 (586) (Mad.), Sher Singh, 8 Lah 521, 28 Cr.L.J. 266, Dhanna Lal, 10 Lah 241, 30 Cr.L.J. 815 (818).

Power of accused to challenge findings of fact.—Where an accused has been convicted by a Magistrate, and that conviction has been confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge, and then a notice is issued to the accused to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced, the accused is entitled under this sub-section to show that his conviction is wrong, and in doing so he is entitled to challenge the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court. It is not correct to say that he can show cause against his conviction only on points of law. In showing cause the accused is entitled to argue that the estimate of evidence made by the Courts below is erroneous and that the conviction is against the weight of evidence upon the record; and the High Court can go into the evidence to find whether the conviction can be sustained—Badan Singh, 30 Cr.L.J. 933 (935, 936) (All). The Lahore High Court is also of opinion that where an accused person, whose conviction has been confirmed on appeal, applies in revision, and a notice is also issued to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced, it is competent to him to show from the whole record that he ought to have been acquitted, and he cannot be restricted with any considerations that the application is in revision only and not an appeal. The High Court can therefore go through the facts and consider the whole evidence—Kala, 30 P.L.R. 437, 30 Cr.L.J. 699 (700). But the Sind Court is of opinion that while this subsection gives the accused the right to show cause against his conviction, he cannot claim the right to attack the findings of fact, if he has appealed to the lower Appellate Court and that appeal has been dismissed. If he had not appealed but had remained content on account of the light sentence inflicted on him by the trial Court, and then a notice is issued why his sentence should not be enhanced, he should not be denied the opportunity of challenging the findings of fact, while showing cause against his conviction under this sub-section. But he cannot claim the same privilege if he had appealed and lost, and the High Court will not disturb the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court—Lulman, 21 S.L.R. 107, 27 Cr.L.J. 1233 (1234). If he has exercised his right of appeal and the appeal has been dismissed, he cannot, in showing cause under this sub-section, challenge the findings of fact of the Lower Appellate Court, but he can, as in an ordinary revision application, only show cause to the extent that the conviction was based in no legal evidence or was manifestly erroneous—Shidoo, 29 Cr.L.J. 936 (937) (Sind). And this principle applies whether the appeal was dismissed on the merits or was dismissed summarily, because the summary dismissal amounts to an order confirming the findings of fact and law of the trial Court—Shidoo, supra.

Conviction on plea of guilty:—If a person has been convicted on his plea of guilty he cannot in showing cause against his conviction, question the legality of his conviction or go behind his plea of guilty. He can only question the extent or legality of the sentence (e.g., whether the Court was entitled in law to pass such sentence) or he can possibly show that there was some defect in the proceedings or that the fact to which he confessed by his plea of guilty did not amount to an offence or the offence of which he has been convicted—Jnanendra, 33 C.W.N. 599 (604, 605), 49 C.L.J. 432, 30 Cr.L.J. 1038.

1222. Miscellaneous.—Limitation—According to the practice of the Calcutta High Court an application for revision in criminal cases must be presented within 60 days from the date of the order complained of, exclusive of the time necessary for obtaining copies. This is not, however, an inflexible rule, and in exceptional circumstances the rule may be departed from—Khetra Mohan v Darpa Narain, 43 Cal 1029. Although there is no law of limitation applicable to revision applications, still it is the settled practice of the Allahabad High Court not to admit them unless they are made within a reasonable time after the order complained of. An application for revision preferred 5 months after the order complained of was passed was therefore rejected—Emp. v Ram Narain, 27 Cr.L.J. 1021 (All.).

Finding of fact.—It is the practice of the High Court (Allahabad) in revision, unless very strong ground for an opposite conclusion is found to exist, to take the findings of the Lower Appellate Court and not of the first Court, as the facts of the case—Raghubar Dayal, 18 Cr.L.J. 435 (All.).

New plea in revision.—An accused cannot be heard to urge a new plea entirely inconsistent with the one already raised by him during the trial, unless he could establish that the case for the prosecution would not be believed and there is an element of doubt in it, in which case the benefit of doubt must be given to the accused—Raghubar Dayal, 18 Cr.L.J. 435 (All.).

Loss of record.—The loss of a record after conviction is no ground for the acquittal of the accused in revision. In serious cases where the accused has been convicted and sentenced to a substantial punishment, it may be that a retrial may be ordered—18 Cr.L.J. 737 (Pat.).

Rule to shew cause.—A rule which is issued by the High Court in revision should be read with the judgments which were before the Court at the time it was granted, and should be read reasonably in favour of the accused—Rakhai Nokari, 2 C.W.N. 81.

How to shew cause.—A Magistrate who is called upon by the High Court to show cause against a rule issued by the High Court must ask the Legal Remembrancer to appear for him, and must not address the Registrar of the High Court by letter—Hurro Soondery, 4 Cal. 20.

Duty of Magistrate showing cause :—Though it is open to a Magistrate called upon to shew cause to submit his remarks in answer to the ground urged by the petitioner who obtained the rule, it is not open to him to submit observations with a view to supplement or add to his judgment—Aladhu Sudan v. Sasti, 7 C.W.N. 859.

Costs :—If a criminal revision is dismissed, the High Court cannot grant costs to the other party. The Code has made provisions for granting of costs in certain specific instances (vide sections 149, 433, 438, 526 and 545), but has made no provision for granting costs of revision; and so the High Court cannot, even by invoking its inherent powers, grant costs in cases of revision. It can grant costs only in those cases where the Code makes express provision, but not in other cases, the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius applies—Sankaralinga v. Narayana, 45 Mad. 913 (919) (F.B.). Even where the revision petition is brought by a private complainant against an order of acquittal, and the petition fails, the High Court cannot award costs to the other party (accused), although it is quite reasonable that he should be granted costs—Ibid.

440. No party has any right to be heard either personally or by pleader before any Court when exercising its powers of revision :
 Optional with Court to hear parties.

Provided that the Court may, if it thinks fit, when exercising such powers, hear any party either personally or by pleader, and that nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect section 439, sub-section (2).

1223. Scope of section :—The rule in this section is the general rule provided by the Legislature, and it must be taken as a legislative recision of the general principle that persons are entitled to be heard before any order affecting them to their prejudice can be made—Nobin v. Russick, 10 Cal 268. Under this section, it is open to the High Court to determine the question raised by a Rule without hearing the counsel or pleader for or against the Rule—Bibhuti v. Dasmoni, 10 C.L.J. 80. The High Court can deal with the question whether the District Magistrate has properly exercised his power under sec 437, without giving notice to the accused or allowing him an opportunity of being heard—Nobin v. Russick, 10 Cal 268.

The provisions of this section apply only to revision, and do not apply to the summary rejection of an appeal under sec 421—Raj Kumar v. Tinowri, 12 C.W.N 248. This section does not apply to sec. 439 (2); that is, if an order is passed to the prejudice of the accused, he must be heard either personally or by pleader.

1224. No right to be heard :—The revisional power of the High Court is exercised at its own discretion and no petitioner has a right to be heard—In re Ranga Rao, 23 M L J 371; Sripat v. Gahbar, 25 A.L.J. 1010, 29 Cr.L.J. 88 (89). And the fact that the pleader of a party was not heard when the High Court was exercising revisional powers is not a ground for a second application for revision or for review—Sripat Narain v. Gahbar, supra. The accused is not entitled to be heard when an order under sec. 436 is made directing a further inquiry into a summary rejection of complaint—Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal 608 (see also the other cases cited in Note 1184 under sec 436). The High Court refused to hear counsel who appeared to support a petition for the revision of an acquittal—Thandavan v. Perianna, 14 Mad 363. Where an accused person applied in revision to the High Court, and pending the revision he was let off on bail and thereafter he absconded, held that the High Court would not hear his pleader in the revision application—Har Narain v. Emp, 24 Cr.L.J. 240 (All.). In a reference under sec 438 a counsel is not entitled to appear against the report—Reg v. Devama, 1 Bom 64. A private prosecutor cannot be allowed to appear on a reference to the High Court under sec. 438. If he is heard at all, he can be heard only with the permission of the Court—Sudderuddin v. Ram Joy, 14 W R 51.

But by virtue of the discretionary power given by the proviso, the High Court always hears counsel in matters of importance—Haradhan, 19 Cal 380, Ram Nihore, 8 A L J 237, 10 I C 740, 12 Cr L.J 231. Whether the matter is a matter of importance must be left to the discretion of the Judge hearing the matter of revision—Sripat v. Gahbar, supra. Where a complaint has been dismissed under sec. 203, and the complainant applies in revision, the High Court may, in its discretion, hear the complainant on the subject of his complaint, but to this limited extent, viz, in order to see in effect what his case is about. If, for instance, that case on investigation should tend to show that there has been any denial of natural justice or that some gross and palpable error has been committed in the Court below, then the High Court would direct a rule to issue in order to hear what is to be said on the other side—Shamdasani, 31 Bom L R 1144, 1929 Cr. C 555 (556).

441. When the record of any proceeding of any Presidency Magistrate is called for by the High Court under section 435, the Magistrate may submit with the record a statement setting forth the grounds of his decision or order and any facts which he thinks material to the issue; and the Court shall consider such statement before overruling or setting aside the said decision or order.

1225. A statement filed under this section takes away any irregularity in the proceedings of a Magistrate caused by the omission to record reasons before referring a case under sec. 202 or dismissing a complaint under sec. 203—Rengammal v. Krishnamachari, 5 M L T. 79.

A statement submitted by a Presidency Magistrate under this section must be regarded as a completion of the record and possesses a conclusive character as against affidavits—Bhawoo v. Malji, 12 Bom. 377.

This section is not enacted to enable Presidency Magistrates to give fresh reasons for their decision contradictory to those already given, but to enable them to supply reasons where in the exercise of their privilege under sec 370 they have given no reasons at all—Swarnammal v. Muni-swami, 1929 M.W.N. 893, 1930 Cr C. 120. This section does not abrogate the terms of section 263 or 370. It merely allows the Presidency Magistrate to supplement the reasons which have been already stated under sections 263 and 370. It does not apply where no reasons whatever have been recorded by the Presidency Magistrate. A Bench of Presidency Magistrates imposing a sentence of imprisonment for an offence must record their reasons for the conviction. The omission to do so in a case where no record of the evidence was taken is a grave irregularity. But having regard to the reasons for conviction disclosed in the record submitted by the Presidency Magistrate under this section, the High Court in this case did not set aside the order of the Bench on the ground of the irregularity—In re Dervish Hossain, 46 Mad. 253.

442. When a case is revised under this Chapter by the High Court, it shall, in manner

 High Court's order to be certified to lower Court or Magistrate. hereinbefore provided by section

425 certify its decision or order to the Court by which the finding, sentence or order revised was recorded or passed, and the Court or Magistrate to which the decision or order is so certified shall thereupon make such orders as are conformable to the decision so certified; and, if necessary, the record shall be amended in accordance therewith.

1226. Scope of section :—This section deals with every case which is revised under this Chapter by a High Court, in other words, it applies to all revisions, whether under sec 435 or sec 439; and it provides that it shall certify its decision or order to the Lower Court, but it contains no such provision that it will certify its decision to itself. This shows that the High Court cannot revise any judgment passed by itself—Press v. K E, 1909 P.R. 4, 11 C 747, 9 Cr L J 378

PART VIII.

SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO CASES IN WHICH EUROPEAN AND INDIAN BRITISH SUBJECTS ARE CONCERNED.

This Chapter has been added by sec 27 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923.

"The procedure for the trial of cases in which racial considerations are involved is included in a new chapter which takes the place of the old Chapter XXXIII of the Code

"As regards the new Chapter XXXIII it will be observed that it applies to offences punishable with imprisonment which are alleged to have been committed outside a presidency-town. The first step to be taken to secure that such a case shall be tried under the provisions of the Chapter is a claim to be made by the accused person before the Magistrate. Unless such a claim is made at one of the stages indicated for the trial of a summons-case or of a warrant case, or for the inquiry preliminary to commitment, the provisions of the Chapter will not apply. The Magistrate then makes such inquiry as he thinks necessary. As a guide to the Magistrate in coming to a finding as to whether the case should be tried under the provisions of the Chapter or not, it is provided that if the complainant and the accused persons or any of them are respectively European and Indian British subjects or Indian and European British subjects, he shall find that the case should be tried under the provisions of the Chapter. For other cases with which both European British subjects and Indian British subjects are connected the Magistrate must be satisfied that it is expedient for the ends of justice that the case shall be so tried. This, it is observed, is the same criterion as that now contained in clause (e) of sub-section (1) of section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure relating to the powers of a High Court to transfer Criminal cases. If the Magistrate rejects the claim, the person has a right of appeal to the Sessions Judge whose decision is final, and if the claim is rejected by the Magistrate, the Magistrate is required to stay the proceedings until the expiration of the period allowed for the presentation of the appeal, or, if an appeal is presented, until it has been decided. The period allowed for the presentation of an appeal is fixed by Article 156A of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, at seven days. The persons who will be included within the term "complainant" for the purpose of these provisions are then defined by the proposed section 444. Incidentally public servants and officers and servants of companies, associations or bodies to which the Local Government by general or special order may declare the provisions of the section to apply, will not be included within the definition merely because they have made a complaint or given information in their official or "quasi" official capacity. The procedure in summons-cases punishable with imprisonment is then laid down. For warrant-cases which would normally be tried under the provisions of Chapter XXI of the Code, if it is found that the case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter a Magistrate is required, if he does not discharge the accused, to commit the case for trial to the Court of Session, whether the case is or is not exclusively triable by that Court. Normally in the Court of Session the case will then be tried by a jury of mixed nationality, the majority of the jurors being either Indians or Europeans and Americans according as the accused person is an Indian or an European subject of His Majesty."—Statement of Objects and Reasons, Para 11.

443. (1) Where, in the course of the trial outside a presidency-town of any offence punishable with imprisonment, the accused person, at any time before he is committed for trial under section 213 or is asked to show cause under section 242 or enters on his defence under section 256, as the case may be, claims that the case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, the Magistrate inquiring into or trying the case, after making such inquiry as he thinks necessary, and after allowing the accused person reasonable time within which to adduce evidence in support of his claim, shall, if he is satisfied—

- Determination regarding applicability of this Chapter.*
- (a) that the complainant and the accused persons or any of them are respectively European and Indian British subjects or Indian and European British subjects, or
 - (b) that in view of the connection with the case of both an European British subject and an Indian British subject, it is expedient for the ends of justice that the case should be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, record a finding that the case is a case which ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, or, if he is not so satisfied, record a finding that it is not such a case.

(2) Where the Magistrate rejects the claim, the person by whom it was made may appeal to the Sessions Judge, and the decision of the Sessions Judge thereon shall be final and shall not be questioned in any Court in appeal or revision.

(3) Where the Magistrate rejects the claim, he shall stay the proceedings until the expiration of the period allowed for the presentation of the appeal or, if an appeal is presented, until it has been decided.

This section has been framed on the lines recommended in Para 27 of the Racial Distinctions Committee Report 1226A. The old law has been materially altered, and the mere fact that the accused is an European British subject does not ipso facto entitle him to a right of any special procedure and does not specially restrict a Magistrate or a Court of Session in his or its power of punishment; nor is it necessary that the Magistrate should be a Justice of the Peace in order to have power to try the case—Barnsfield v Emp, 31 Cr L.J. 918 (1920) (Lah.).

No special procedure is prescribed where both the complainant and the accused are European British subjects—Barnsfield, supra

The mere fact of the accused person being an European British subject does not entitle him to the benefit of Chapter XXXIII. He must claim before the committing Magistrate to be tried under the special procedure, and the Magistrate must find that the necessary ingredients are present. If any such claim is made prior to commitment, but there is no finding by the Magistrate, the question cannot be raised in the Sessions Court. If a claim is made and the Magistrate finds favourably to the accused, the order is final and the Sessions Court cannot go behind it. If the finding of the Magistrate is adverse, the party should appeal, and the decision of the Sessions Judge would be final. The intention of the legislature is clear that the point should not be raised in the 1st Court—Hay v. Emp, 28 O C 230, 2 O W N 469, 26 Cr L J 1217

A claim to be tried under the provisions of Chapter XXXIII is different from a claim to be tried as an European British subject under sec 528A. So far as the former claim is concerned, the question of the status of the claimant does not always arise, as is evident from the provisions of clause (b) of sec 443. In a claim to be tried as an European or Indian British subject (under sec 528A), the claimant must prove his own status, but in a claim to be tried under the provisions of Ch XXXIII the claimant may or may not have to do so—Emp, 52 Cal 347, 29 C W N 447, 26 Cr L J 401.

This chapter does not apply to Presidency Towns. There is no provision in the Code for enabling a person to put forward a claim to be tried under Chapter XXXIII either before a Magistrate holding an inquiry or trial in a Presidency Town, or before the High Court during the trial of a case. It is unreasonable to suppose that the Legislature even intended that when there was no knowing whether there would be a conviction or an acquittal (and both are open to appeal under sec. 449) an inquiry might be asked for and the Court required to decide on the question as to whether if tried outside a presidency-town the case would have been triable under the provisions of Chapter XXXIII. The only object of such an inquiry is that the result of it may be availed of for the purposes of an appeal by the accused in the case of a conviction and by the Crown in the case of an acquittal. The proper time to raise the question is when leave to appeal is applied for under sec. 449 (c)—Martindale v. Emp., (supra).

Proof of status:—A statement in an affidavit by the accused's wife that she heard from their grand-parents while they were all living together that the accused's grandfather was born in England of English parents, though not controverted by the Crown by a counter-affidavit, is merely hearsay evidence and is not sufficient to establish the status of the accused as an European British subject—Thomas v. Emp., 53 Cal. 746, 27 Cr.L.J. 1304 (1306). In an application for leave to appeal under sec. 449 (c), the affidavit of the accused as to his nationality was held to be admissible—Gallagher v. Emp., 54 Cal. 52, 28 Cr.L.J. 481 (482).

444. For the purposes of section 443, "complainant" means any person making a complaint, or in relation to any case of which cognizance is taken under clause (b) of section 190, sub-section (1), any person who has given information relating to the commission of the offence within the meaning of section 154:

Definition of "complainant."
 Provided that a Public Prosecutor, a public servant, a member, officer or servant of any local authority, a railway servant as defined in section 3 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, or an officer or servant of any company, association or other body to which the Local Government may, by general or special order published in the local official Gazette, declare the provisions of this section to apply, shall not, by reason only of the fact that he has made a complaint of, or given information of, an offence in his capacity as such Public Prosecutor, public servant, railway servant, member, officer or servant, be deemed to be a complainant within the meaning of this section, nor shall a police officer be so deemed by reason only of the fact that a report under section 173 relating to a case has been made by or through him.

This section has been added by the Bill, and did not exist in the Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee

1226B. The proviso lays down that the word "complainant" does not include a person who, although he is an European British subject, is merely an instrument which sets the Court in motion. Thus, where a public servant (who is an European British subject) makes a complaint, under the orders of the Government, as a public servant, this Chapter does not apply—Emp. v. Zahir Haider, 7 P L T 367, 27 Cr L J 1041 (1059). The proviso is intended to exclude from the definition of "complainant" such persons as public prosecutors or public servants who make complaints or lodge informations before the police in their official capacity, irrespective of whether or not they have personal knowledge of the facts or a personal interest in the case, i.e. the definition excludes not only those public servants who file complaints as mere automatons of the Government but also those public servants who file complaints as mere automatons and at the same time have personal knowledge of the facts of, and a personal interest, in the case—Mrs. Burchell v. Emp., 20 S L R 178, 27 Cr. L J 770 (771)

445. (1) Where a Magistrate or a Sessions Judge decides under section 443 that a case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter and the case is a summons case, the Magistrate trying the same shall direct that the case be referred to a Bench of two Magistrates and shall send a copy of such order to the District Magistrate who shall forthwith provide for the constitution of a Bench of two Magistrates of the first class, of whom one shall be an European and the other an Indian, for the trial of the case.

(2) Where the Magistrates constituting the Bench by which a case is tried under this section differ in opinion, the case together with their opinions thereon shall be laid before the Sessions Judge, who may examine any party or recall and examine any witness who has already given evidence in the case, and may call for and take any further evidence, and shall thereafter pass such judgment, sentence or order in the case as he thinks fit and as is according to law.

(3) Any person convicted by a Bench under this section shall have the same right of appeal as if he had been convicted by a Magistrate of the first class, and any person convicted by a Sessions Judge under sub-section (2) shall have the same right of appeal to the High Court as if he had been convicted by the Sessions Judge at a trial held by the Sessions Judge under this Code.

(4) In any case in which it is impracticable to constitute a Bench in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1) in any district, the District Magistrate shall transfer the case for trial by a like Bench to such other district as the High Court may, by general or special order, direct.

(5) Notwithstanding anything contained in this section, the Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, direct that all summons-cases tried under the provisions of this chapter in any district specified in the notification shall be tried as if they were warrant-cases in accordance with the provisions hereinafter in this Chapter laid down for the trial of warrant-cases.

Sub-sections (1) to (4) of this section embody the recommendations contained in para 28 of the Racial Distinctions Committee Report

As regards sub-section (5), the reason is thus stated by the framers of the Bill "The Local Government and High Courts were consulted on these proposals of the Committee (i.e., as regards the new section 445); from the opinions received it is clear that in many areas in India these proposals will be impracticable, and it is considered that in any case the adoption of the procedure proposed for similar warrant cases (sec 446), namely, commitment to and trial in a Court of Session by jury, would not be more expensive than the proposals of the Committee. Accordingly, it is proposed (in analogy with the powers given to Local Governments by sec 269) to permit Local Governments to direct that in particular districts such cases shall be triable according to the provisions laid down for the trial of similar warrant cases" — Statement of Objects and Reasons, Para 6

446. (1) Where a Magistrate or a Sessions Judge decides under section 443 that a Procedure in warrant cases case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter and the case is a warrant-case, the Magistrate inquiring into or trying the case shall, if he does not discharge the accused under section 209 or section 253, as the case may be, commit the case for trial to the Court of Session, whether the case is or is not exclusively triable by that Court.

(2) Where an accused is committed to the Court of Session under sub-section (1), the Court shall proceed to try the case as if the accused had required to be tried in accordance with the provisions of section 275, and the provisions of that section and the other provisions of Chapter XXIII, so far as they are applicable, shall apply accordingly :

Provided that where the trial before the Court of Session would in the ordinary course be with the aid of assessors, and the accused, or all of them jointly, require to be tried in accordance with the provisions of sec. 284A, the trial shall be held with the aid of assessors all of whom shall, in the case of European British subjects, be persons who are Europeans or Americans, or, in the case of Indian British subjects, be Indians.

This section embodies the recommendation of the Racial Distinctions Committee contained in Para. 27 of their Report.

1227. Where the complainant is an Indian, and one of the accused persons is an European British subject, and the Magistrate decides that the case ought to be tried under the provisions of this chapter, and the case is a warrant case, the Magistrate must commit the case to the Sessions. He cannot, after making the above decision, assume jurisdiction in respect of the Indian accused persons by discharging the European accused—Banarsi Das v Emp, 51 All 483, 27 A L.J. 188, 30 Cr L J. 218.

Trial to be by jury.—When an European British Subject is committed to the Court of Session under the provisions of section 446 (2) the trial must be in accordance with section 275, that is to say, the accused must be tried by a jury, the majority of whom shall, if before the first juror is called and accepted the accused so requires, consist of persons who are Europeans or Americans. But when the trial before the Court of Session would in the ordinary course be with the aid of assessors, the accused has the right under the proviso to sec. 446, to be tried with the aid of assessors, all of whom shall be of the category within which the accused comes. By "ordinary course" is here meant the course which would be followed in the absence of a claim by the accused to be tried with under the provisions of Chapter XXXIII or in the absence of a Notification by the Local Government under the provisions of section Bray v. Crown, 5 Lah. 515 (517, 518).

447. If at any stage of an inquiry or trial under this Court to inform accused persons of their rights in certain cases.

Code it appears to the Magistrate that the case is or might be held to be a case which ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, he shall forthwith inform the accused person of his rights under this Chapter.

The omission by the Magistrate to inform the accused of his rights to be tried under this chapter is curable by the provisions of sec 534—Zagriya v. Emp., 3 Rang 220, 4 Bur.L.J 44.

448. For the purpose of the trial in Rangoon of any person under the provisions of this Chapter, references to the Sessions Judge shall be construed as references to the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon.

References to Sessions Judge to be construed as references to High Court in Rangoon.

Special provisions relating to appeal.

449. (1) Where—

(a) a case is tried by jury in a High Court or Court of Session under the provisions of this Chapter, or

(b) a case which would otherwise have been tried under the provisions of this Chapter is under this Code committed to or transferred to the High Court and is tried by jury in the High Court, or

(c) a case is tried by jury in the High Court in a Presidency-town and the High Court grants leave to appeal on the ground that the case would, if it had been tried outside a presidency-town, have been triable under the provisions of this chapter, then, notwithstanding anything contained in section 418 or section 423, sub-section (2), or in the Letters Patent of any High Court, an appeal may lie to the High Court on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Letters Patent of any High Court, the Local Government may direct the Public Prosecutor to present an appeal to the High Court from an original order of acquittal passed by the High Court in any such trial as is referred to in sub-section (1).

(3) An appeal under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall, where the High Court consists of more than one Judge, be heard by two Judges of the High Court.

See Para. 7 (b) and (c) of the Statement of Objects and Reasons.

1227A. Appeal :—*Matter of fact, matter of law :—*The accused, on appearing before the committing Magistrate, asserted his right to be tried as an European British subject, and the Magistrate, being satisfied that he was one, passed an order that he was to be dealt with under sec. 443. In the trial before the Sessions Judge, the prosecution did not take any steps to have the Magistrate's order set aside, but had him charged and tried in the ordinary way. On appeal from the conviction, held that under this section, the appeal lay on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law, and the accused could question the legality of the conviction, even though there might not be any foundation for his claim to be tried under this chapter—Singleton v. Emp., 29 C.W.N. 260, 41 C.L.J. 87, 26 Cr.L.J. 662. This section lays down that in cases tried by jury, an appeal lies to the High Court on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law, therefore, in a case tried under this chapter, the finding of a jury on a question of fact is not final, and therefore, to justify an interference by the High Court under sec. 307, the finding of the jury need not be manifestly wrong or perverse—Crown v. Bimal Parshad, 6 Lah. 98, 26 P.L.R. 263, 26 Cr.L.J. 1241.

Leave to appeal :—It is desirable that an application for leave to appeal under clause (c) should be made to the Judge who tried the case. The right of appeal depends upon extraneous circumstances which have nothing to do with the guilt of the accused, and the trying Judge is better qualified than any one else to decide whether these circumstances exist or not—Martindale v. Emp., 52 Cal. 347, 29 C.W.N. 447, 26 Cr. L.J. 401. But in another Calcutta case it has been held that, since no appeal would lie against the decision of the Single Judge refusing leave to appeal, it is better in the interests of justice that the application for leave to appeal should be heard by a Division Bench—Turner v. Emp., 52 Cal. 636, 29 C.W.N. 458, 41 C.L.J. 325, 26 Cr.L.J. 835.

Application for leave to appeal should be made with notice to Crown, but once the leave is granted without such notice, it cannot be revoked on the ground of want of such notice—Martindale v. Emp., (supra).

This section gives the right of appeal against the decision of a High Court in three classes of cases. The first class are the cases tried by jury in a High Court under the provisions of this chapter and can only apply to High Courts outside a Presidency Town. The second class of cases are those which would otherwise be tried under the provisions of this chapter but are committed or transferred to the High Court and tried by jury in the High Court. In these two classes of cases, an absolute right of appeal is given. But in classes of cases referred to in clause (c) the right of appeal is dependent on the condition of granting of leave to appeal. The necessity for this condition appears to be due to the fact that in cases which come under clause (b) the question whether Chapter XXXIII is applicable or not has been decided before the case is committed or transferred to the High Court. But in cases which come under clause (c) this question has not arisen, and it is to be decided by the High Court before leave to appeal is granted, and if that is decided in accused's favour, he is entitled as of right to an appeal—Turner v Emp., (supra).

Limitation :—An appeal to the High Court (Division Bench) from an order passed by a Judge presiding at the criminal sessions of the High Court, under clause (c) of this section is governed by Article 155 of the Limitation Act, and if that appeal is barred, an application for leave to appeal is also barred; and consequently an application for the determination of the status of the accused as to his being an European British subject under sec. 449 (c) read with sec. 443 is necessarily out of time—Thomas v Emp., 53 Cal. 746, 27 Cr.L.J. 1304 (1305).

Practice :—Under the Rules of the Calcutta High Court, a vakil could not appear for a party in an appeal from a trial held on the criminal sessions of the High Court—Satya Narain v. Emp., 55 Cal. 858, 32 C.W.N. 319 (328).

Sections 453, 454, 455 and 459 are now re-enacted as sections 528A, 528B, 528C, and 528D, respectively. Sections 456-458 are incorporated in secs. 491 and 491A, section 460 is included in section 284A, sub-section (2), Section 462 is now merged in section 326. The remaining sections (450, 451, 452, 461) are omitted.

1227B. Under the old Code, an European British subject had a right to claim to be tried by jury; that right was a substantive right and not a mere matter of procedure, and therefore where the commitment was made prior to the coming into force of the Amendment of 1923, but the trial in the Sessions Court was held after its coming into force, held that the accused's right to be tried by jury was not lost, and he was not to be tried by the Judge with the aid of assessors—Emp. v. Fitzmaurice, 6 Lah. 262, 26 P.L.R. 415, 27 Cr.L.J. 421.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

LUNATICS.

464. (1) When a Magistrate holding an inquiry or a trial has reason to believe that the accused is of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence, the Magistrate shall inquire into the fact of such unsoundness, and shall cause such person to be examined by the Civil Surgeon of the district or such other medical officer as the Local Government directs, and thereupon shall examine such Surgeon or other officer as a witness, and shall reduce the examination to writing.

Procedure in case of accused being lunatic.

(1A) Pending such examination and inquiry the Magistrate may deal with the accused in accordance with the provisions of Section 466.

(2) If such Magistrate is of opinion that the accused is of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence, he shall record a finding to that effect and shall postpone further proceedings in the case.

Change —Sub-section (1A) and the italicised words in sub-section (2) have been added by sec. 120 of the Cr P Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. "The first amendment is consequential on the amendment in section 466. The second requires the Magistrate to record a finding if he is of opinion that the accused is of unsound mind and incapable of making a defence"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

1228. Application of section :—The provisions of this Chapter are incidental provisions for dealing with exceptional classes of persons. This Chapter is not to be so construed as to override the rules of general procedure, except in so far as the special provision contained in it is clearly incompatible with the general provisions—1894 P.R. 11. When a charge of an offence to which Chapter XVIII applies is made before a Magistrate, he ought in the first place to make an inquiry into the truth of the charge; it is only when he is satisfied after such inquiry that there is a prima facie case against the accused that he can make the inquiry prescribed by this section into the question of the unsoundness of mind of the accused person—Ibid

The question involved in this section is whether the accused is of unsound mind at the time of the trial, and therefore incapable of making his defence, and this question should not be confused with the question raised under sec. 84 I P C as to whether the accused was or was not of unsound mind at the time when he committed the offence with which he is charged—Chadani Lal, 1900 A W N 47. The question whether the accused was of unsound mind at the time of the alleged offence is an entirely separate one to be inquired into in an entirely separate manner (see secs 469-471)—Santokh v Emp, 7 Lah 315, 27 Cr.L.J. 552. See Bahadur, 9 Lah 371 cited under sec 469. When an issue is raised as to the soundness of the mind of the accused person, the Court is bound to inquire, before it begins to record evidence, whether the accused is or is not incapacitated by unsoundness of mind from making his defence. If it fails to do so, the subsequent inquiry about the soundness or unsoundness of mind does not cure the defect—Jhabbu, 42 All 137.

Examination by Civil Surgeon:—A Magistrate cannot consign a lunatic to an asylum or jail on his own unprofessional opinion. He must have before him the deliberate statements of the Medical Officer reduced into writing—Emp. v. Milan, 1 Bur. 87.

A mere certificate of a Medical Officer of the District that the prisoner is of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence is not sufficient evidence of the prisoner's insanity. The Medical Officer should be called as a witness and carefully examined—Ram Rutton, 9 W.R. 23, 2 Weir 580.

When the evidence of the Medical Officer cannot be considered as decisive on the point of the prisoner's state of mind, evidence must be let in regarding his ordinary habits and behaviour, and his demeanour both before and after the commission of the alleged offence—Vaimbilce, 5 Cal. 826.

Postponement of further proceedings:—Where the Magistrate is of opinion that the accused is of unsound mind and therefore incapable of making his defence, he cannot try the accused—2 Weir 581. Nor can he legally acquit him. But he is bound to postpone further proceedings in the case, and either release him on security or detain him in custody and report the case to the Government (sec. 466)—2 Weir 581; Romon Audheekharee, 10 W.R. 37; 1882 A.W.N. 106; 1900 A.W.N. 47, 1 W.R. 11. If on examination, the accused person appears to be insane and unable to understand questions and to return intelligible replies, the Magistrate should act under secs. 464 and 466 of the Code and not under section 341—Ratanlal 832.

465. (1) If any person committed for trial before a Court of Session or a High Court appears to the Court at his trial to be of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence, the jury or the Court with the aid of assessors, shall, in the first instance, try the fact of such unsoundness and incapacity, and if the jury or Court, as the case may be, is satisfied of the fact, the Judge shall record a finding to that effect and shall postpone further proceedings in the case, and the jury, if any, shall be discharged.

Procedure in case of person committed before Court of Session or High Court being lunatic.

(2) The trial of the fact of the unsoundness of mind and incapacity of the accused shall be deemed to be part of his trial before the Court.

Change :—The italicised words at the end of sub-section (1) have been added by section 121 of Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. "This amendment provides for the discharge of the jury in the event of the Court of Session or the High Court being satisfied that the accused is of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

1229. Fact of insanity must be tried :—The provisions of this section are mandatory, and their non-compliance vitiates the trial. Where a Sessions Judge's mind is in doubt as to the mental state of the accused at the time of trial, it is incumbent upon him to hold an inquiry on the question whether the accused is capable of making his defence when he comes before him on commitment, and to take the opinion of the assessors on that question and to come to a decision before proceeding further with the trial—Santokh v. Emp., 7 Lah. 315, 27 Cr.L.J. 552.

The question of unsoundness of mind must be tried by the judge and jury, and not by the judge himself personally—Bheekoo, 19 W R. 15. Where, after a trial has been once adjourned on account of the prisoner's insanity, the Zillah Surgeon reports that the prisoner is capable of making his defence, the judge should find with the aid of assessors whether the prisoner is capable of making his defence, and cannot act merely on the letter of the Zillah Surgeon—2 Weir 582.

Again, the question of the unsoundness of mind must be tried in the first instance. The issue as to the unsoundness of mind of the accused is a preliminary issue, and must be submitted to the jury first before proceeding with the trial—Doorjodhun, 19 W R 26, Jhabbu, 42 All 137; Radhanath v. Emp., 27 Cr L.J. 896. Evidence must be led on the point as to whether the accused is of unsound mind or can stand his trial and understand the proceedings. It is not enough to merely put to the jury the question of the insanity of the accused—Radhanath, supra. If this procedure is not followed, the trial must be set aside, and the Sessions Judge must hold the trial before a fresh jury—Radhanath, supra. Where in the course of his examination under sec 364, the accused said that he was not in his senses when he tried to rob, it was held that the Court of Session should have acted under this section and tried the fact whether on the date the accused was called upon to plead he was or was not of unsound mind and capable or incapable of making his defence—Jagdeo v. Emp., 15 A L.J 239. When the accused committed to the Sessions appears to be of unsound mind, the Sessions Judge is bound to try the fact of insanity first, and should not try it along with the trial for the offence—1905 A W N 2.

If in a case committed to the Sessions, objection is taken on behalf of the accused that he is of unsound mind, and the Civil Surgeon when examined as a witness on behalf of the accused states that the accused is a person of unsound mind and therefore not in a fit state to understand the proceedings and to stand his trial, the onus lies on the prosecution to prove that the accused is of sound mind. In such a case, it is improper for the Sessions Judge to charge the jury that it is for the defence to satisfy the Court that he is of unsound mind. But such a charge to the jury, though improper, does not amount to a misdirection so as to make the verdict of the jury on this joint unacceptable, specially if the verdict is unanimous—Shib Das v. Emp., 51 Cal. 584 (586, 587).

In a trial at the Sessions, if a plea is taken on the prisoner's behalf under this section, that he is of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, it is for the Crown to establish the soundness and capacity of the accused. The inquiry as to the soundness or unsoundness of the mind of the accused is a preliminary inquiry which is conducted for the satisfaction of the Court, and in that view the prosecution ought to commence and give their evidence—Emp. v. Gopi Mohan Saha, 51 Cal 827 (828), 26 Cr.L.J. 276 (Day Murder Case).

Where a Court entertains doubts as to the sanity of the accused, the Court should not merely put questions to the accused but should try the fact of such unsoundness of mind by examining the Civil Surgeon or some other medical officer, and by taking such evidence as might have been procurable from the village at which the accused resides, with the view of ascertaining whether the accused had at any time prior to the commission of the crime exhibited symptoms of sanity—Hira Punja, 1 B.H.C.R. 33

Where the Sessions Judge did not comply with the provisions of this section, but convicted the accused, held that the trial was vitiated, and the High Court set aside the conviction and ordered the Sessions Judge to hold an inquiry under this section before retrial on the charge—Pala Singh v. K E, 1905 P.R. 54, 3 Cr.L.J. 80; Santokh v. Emp., 7 Lah. 315, 27 Cr.L.J. 552 Where on a reference for confirmation of a sentence of death, the High Court entertained doubts as to the accused's sanity, the case would be referred to the Sessions Judge for further inquiry—Arzoo Bebee, 2 W.R. 33

1230. Postponement of trial.—Where the prisoner is found to be insane, the Sessions Judge should postpone the trial and proceed under sections 466 and 467, instead of proceeding with the trial and acquitting the accused—Ram Rutton, 9 W.R. 23, Noor Khan, 1 W.R. 11, 3 W.R. 70; Moorali, 3 W.R. 57.

A Sessions Judge has no power to stay proceedings and direct an inquiry to be made into the state of the accused's mind, where it appears to him problematic whether the accused is capable of making his defence. The proper procedure to be followed is that prescribed by secs 465 and 466—2 Weir 582

1231. Sub-section (2).—The preliminary inquiry held under this section is not a trial in the sense of ascertaining whether the accused is guilty or not of the offence charged—3 P.L.J. 291.

466. (1) Whenever an accused person is found to be of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, the Magistrate or Court as the case may be, whether the case is one in which bail may be taken or not,

Release of lunatic pending investigation or trial may release him on sufficient security being given that he shall be properly taken care of and shall be prevented from doing injury to himself or to any other person, and for his appearance when required before the Magistrate or Court or such officer as the Magistrate or Court appoints in this behalf.

(2) If the case is one in which bail may not be taken, or if sufficient security is not given, the Magistrate or Court shall report the case to the Local Government, remanding the accused to custody pending orders, and the Local Government may order the accused to be confined in a lunatic asylum, jail or other suitable place of safe custody, and the Magistrate or Court shall give effect to such order.

(2) If the case is one in which, in the opinion of the Magistrate or Court, bail should not be taken or if sufficient security is not given, the Magistrate or Court, as the case may be, shall order the accused to be detained in safe custody in such place and manner as he or it may think fit, and shall report the action taken to the Local Government.

Provided that no order for the detention of the accused in a lunatic asylum shall be made otherwise than in accordance with such rules as the Local Government may have made under the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912.

Change :—This section has been amended, as shown by the italicised words, by sec 122 of the Cr. P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 "This section is so amended as to allow bail to be granted at the discretion of the Court, in any case in which the accused is a lunatic, and the amendment also permits the accused to be kept in custody The object in view is to delegate the power of the Local Government, and to do away with the existing distinction in procedure between bailable and non-bailable cases"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

1232. Where a Magistrate or Sessions Judge, instead of proceeding under this section, tries the accused and acquits him on the ground of insanity, the order of acquittal is illegal—1882 A W N. 106; Romon Audheekharee, 10 W.R. 37; 9 W.R. 23; Shah Mahomed, 3 W.R. 70

When the accused is confined in a lunatic asylum or jail or some other place of safe custody according to the order of the Government, the Magistrate's power over the accused ceases from such confinement, and he cannot release him on security later on. He can deal with the accused only if the accused is sent back to him under sec. 473 on a certificate that the accused is capable of making his defence—Joy Hari, 2 Cal 356 But under the present section as amended, the Court itself will have power to detain the insane accused in a place of safe custody, and in such a case it will not cease to have control over the accused, but will be able to release him afterwards on sufficient security being given.

467. (1) Whenever an inquiry or a trial is postponed under Section 464 or Section 465, the Magistrate or Court, as the case may be, may, at any time, resume the inquiry or trial and require the accused to appear or be brought before such Magistrate or Court.

(2) When the accused has been released under S. 466, and the sureties for his appearance produce him to the officer whom the Magistrate or Court appoints in this behalf, the certificate of such officer that the accused is capable of making his defence shall be receivable in evidence.

When a trial is postponed under sec. 465 on the ground of insanity of the accused, it should not be resumed at the point at which it was previously stopped, but should be commenced de novo, when the Court finds him capable of making his defence—2 Weir 582.

468. (1) If, when the accused appears or is again brought before the Magistrate or the Court, as the case may be, the Magistrate or Court considers him capable of making his defence, the inquiry or trial shall proceed.

(2) If the Magistrate or Court considers the accused to be still incapable of making his defence, the Magistrate or Court shall again act according to the provisions of sec. 464 or sec. 465, as the case may be, and, if the accused is found to be of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, shall deal with such accused in accordance with the provisions of section 466.

Change :—The italicised words at the end of the section have been added by section 123 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. This amendment is consequential to the amendment of sec. 466.

The inquiry or trial should commence de novo. See 2 Weir 582 cited under sec. 467.

469. When the accused appears to be of sound mind at the time of inquiry or trial, and the Magistrate is satisfied from the evidence given before him that there is reason to believe that the accused committed an act which, if he had been of sound mind, would have been an offence, and that he was, at the time when the act was committed, by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that it was wrong or contrary to law, the Magistrate shall proceed with the case, and if the accused ought to be committed to the Court of Session or High Court, send him for trial before the Court of Session or High Court, as the case may be.

1232A. "The Magistrate shall proceed with the case" etc. —Where the Magistrate is of opinion that the accused is of sound mind at the time of trial but was of unsound mind at the time of committing the offence, the Magistrate cannot discharge the accused on that ground, but should proceed under secs. 470 and 471—2 Weir 582. A Magistrate can commit an accused to the Sessions, whom he finds to be sane at the time of the preliminary investigation, although at the time of committing the offence he was insane—Ram Rutton, 9 W.R. 23. This section must not be confused with secs. 464-465. If the committing Magistrate finds that the accused is sane at the time of the preliminary inquiry, but was insane at the time of committing the offence, he has no alternative but to proceed in accordance with this section, and it is not incumbent upon him to order a medical inquiry, or to try the issue of insanity. It is only when the case falls under secs. 464-465, that is, when the accused is insane at the time of the inquiry or trial, that the issue of insanity has to be tried before the trial for the offence is proceeded with—Bahadur, 9 Lah. 371, 29 Cr. L.J. 204 (206, 207).

Whenever a Magistrate acting under this section shall send for trial before the Court of Session an accused person regarding whose sanity at the time of committing the offence he entertains any doubt, he shall at the same time inform the jail authorities of the supposed state of the accused, in order that he may be placed under careful surveillance prior to his trial before the Court of Session—Bom. H. C. Cr. Cir., p. 18.

If the accused was sane at the time of committing the offence and is sane at the time of the trial, and is convicted, but subsequently becomes insane in jail, the Local Government will take steps to in-into his mental condition. This is a matter for the Local Government and not for the Court—Bahadur, supra.

Presumption.—The law presumes every person who has attained the age of discretion to be sane, unless the contrary is proved; and where a lunatic has lucid intervals, the law presumes the offence to have been committed during such interval, unless it is proved that the act was committed during mental derangement—Ratanlal 172

470. Whenever any person is acquitted upon the ground that, at the time at which he is alleged to have committed an offence, he was, by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of the act alleged as constituting the offence, or that it was wrong or contrary to law, the finding shall state specifically whether he committed the act or not.

1233. Acquittal on ground of lunacy :—The fact of unsoundness of mind must be clearly and distinctly proved before any jury is justified in pronouncing a verdict of acquittal under sec 84 I P. C. It is not because a man commits a horrible murder or because he commits it while labouring under strong passions and feelings that therefore the world is to assume that he must have been insane when he committed the deed. Every man is presumed to be sane and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crimes until the contrary is proved—Q. v. Nobin Chunder, 20 W R 70 (71), Ratanlal 172. Where the prisoner killed his brother-in-law apparently without any enmity or quarrel, and the only motive given out by the prisoner was that he might be hanged by the authorities and go to heaven, it was held that the opinion of a medical witness as to the state of the accused's mind would be necessary—2 Weir 583

If the Magistrate finds that the accused is of sound mind at the time of trial, but was suffering from temporary insanity while he committed the offence, he should not discharge the accused, but acquit him and proceed under this section and sec 471—Lanka Chinna, 2 Weir 583, Katty Kishan, 17 C.P.L.R. 113 (125), 1 Cr. L.J. 854

471. (1) Whenever the finding states that the accused person committed the act alleged, the Magistrate or Court before whom or which the trial has been held, shall, if such act would, but for the incapacity found, have constituted an offence, order such person to be detained in safe custody in such place and manner as the Magistrate or Court thinks fit, and shall report the action taken to the Local Government :

Person acquitted on such ground to be kept in safe custody.

Provided that no order for the detention of the accused in a lunatic asylum shall be made otherwise than in accordance with such rules as the Local Government may have made under the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912.

(2) The Local Government may empower the officer in charge of the jail in which a person is confined under the provisions of section 466 or this section, to discharge all or any of the functions of the Inspector-General of Prisons under section 473 or section 474.

Power of Local Government to relieve Inspector-General of certain functions.

1234. Change.—The word finding has been substituted for the word 'judgment,' and the word 'detained' for the word 'kept', the words "and shall report the action taken to the Local Government" and the proviso have been added by sec 124 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

Previously the words at the end of sub-section (1) were "and shall report the case for the orders of the Local Government," so that the Court could not itself send the accused to a lunatic asylum or jail but had to report the case to the Local Government, and the latter gave orders for sending the accused to an asylum or jail. See 43 Bom. 134. But those words have been omitted by the Repealing and Amending Act X of 1914, and its effect is that Magistrates and Courts are no longer required to report cases for the order of the Local Government but are themselves competent to direct the detention of the accused in an asylum or jail or some other place prescribed for the reception of criminal lunatics—Emp. v Nga E, 8 Bur.L.T 286, 16 Cr L J 670, 30 I C 654; Emp v Maiku, 22 O C 269, 21 Cr. L J 46, 54 I C 254. But it does not deprive the power of the Government to detain the accused in some other place of custody, under the provisions of the Indian Lunacy Act (IV of 1912). The Government have powers, in spite of this section, to decide the future fate of the lunatic—Emp v Imam Hasan, 25 Bom. L R 286, 26 Cr. L J 348

1235. Application of section—This section should be applied not only where the accused are insane persons, but also where the accused persons, though not insane, labour under defects which render their trial impossible. Thus, where a deaf and dumb person, who is unable to understand the proceedings of the trial, is found guilty of murder, the proper course to be taken is to treat him as a lunatic and to proceed under section 471—Crown v Dost Mahammad, 1911 P.R. 13, 12 Cr L J 613, 12 I C 989, following Gahna, 1889 P R 37. This section does not compel the Court to send the accused to the lunatic asylum; all that is necessary is to see that such safe-guards are taken as would keep him from mischief—In re Mahammad, 42 M.L J 72, 23 Cr L J 71, A I.R 1922 Mad. 54

Where the Court below while acquitting an accused on the ground of insanity omitted to pass orders under section 471, the High Court in revision can pass the necessary orders. The passing of an order under sec. 471 by the High Court, after an acquittal by the Court below, does not amount to an alteration of a finding of acquittal into one of conviction within the meaning of sec. 439 (4)—In re Mahammad, supra.

The words "detained in safe custody" do not mean detained in the custody of friends or relatives; that is, the Magistrate cannot direct that the person acquitted under this section should be kept in the safe custody of his friends or relatives. This is evident from the language of sec. 471. All that the Magistrate can do is to detain the accused in a place of safe custody and report the matter to the Local Government, and it is the Local Government who can deliver the accused to any friend or relative under sec. 475—Srish Chandra, 56 Cal. 208, 48 C.L.J. 148, 29 Cr.L.J. 847 (848); Anonymous, 2 Weir 580.

Safe Custody :—e.g. a Mental Hospital; see Karma Urang, 32 C.W.N. 342 (345).

472. [Repealed by the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912.]

473. If such person is detained under the provisions of section 466, and in the case of a person detained in a jail, the Inspector-General of Prisons, or, in the case of a person detained in a lunatic asylum, the visitors of such asylum or any two of them shall certify that, in his or their opinion, such person is capable of making his defence, he shall be taken before the Magistrate or Court, as the case may be, at such time as the Magistrate or Court appoints, and the Magistrate or Court shall deal with such person under the provisions of section 468; and the certificate of such Inspector-General or visitors as aforesaid shall be receivable as evidence.

Procedure where lunatic prisoner is reported capable of making his defence.

The word 'detained' has been substituted for 'confined,' and the italicised words added, by section 125 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

474. (1) If such person is detained under the provisions of section 466 or section

Procedure where lunatic detained under Section 466 or 471 is declared fit to be released.

471, and such Inspector-General or visitors shall certify that, in his or their judgment, he may be released without danger of his doing injury to himself or to any other person, the Local Government may thereupon order him to be released or to be detained in custody, or to be transferred to a public lunatic asylum if he has not been already sent to such an asylum; and in case it orders him to be transferred to an asylum, may appoint a Commission, consisting of a judicial and two medical officers.

(2) Such Commission shall make formal inquiry into the state of mind of such person, taking such evidence as is necessary, and shall report to the Local Government, which may order his release or detention as it thinks fit.

The word 'detained' has been substituted for 'confined,' and the word 'released' for 'discharged,' by sec. 126 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

475. (1) Whenever any relative or friend of any person detained under the provisions of section 466 or section 471 desires that he shall be delivered to his care and custody, the Local Government may, upon the application of such relative or friend and on his giving security to the satisfaction of such Local Government that the person delivered shall—

Delivery of lunatic to care of relative or friend.

- (a) be properly taken care of and prevented from doing injury to himself or to any other person, and
- (b) be produced for the inspection of such officer, and at such times and places, as the Local Government may direct, and
- (c) in the case of a person detained under section 466, be produced when required before such Magistrate or Court, order such person to be delivered to such relative or friend.

(2) If the person so delivered is accused of any offence the trial of which has been postponed by reason of his being of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, and the inspecting officer referred to in sub-section (1), clause (b), certifies at any time to the Magistrate or Court that such person is capable of making his defence, such Magistrate or Court shall call upon the relative or friend to whom such accused was delivered to produce him before the Magistrate or Court; and, upon such production, the Magistrate or Court shall proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 468, and the certificate of the inspecting officer shall be receivable as evidence.

Change .—The whole section has been re-drafted by sec. 127 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. Clause (c) and sub-section (2) are entirely new. Clause (b) was formerly sub-section (2)

"The new sub-section (2) simplifies the procedure under which a person accused of an offence, whose trial has been postponed by reason of his unsoundness of mind, is again produced before the Court on the certificate of the inspecting officer as to his recovery"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

CHAPTER XXXV.

PROCEEDINGS IN CASE OF CERTAIN OFFENCES AFFECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

476.(1) When any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court is of opinion that there is ground for inquiring into any offence referred to in Section 195 and committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, such Court, after making any preliminary inquiry that may be necessary, may send the case for inquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate of the first class, and may send the accused in custody, or take suffi-

476. (1) When any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court is, whether on application made to it in this behalf or otherwise, of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into any offence referred to in Section 195, sub-section (1), clause (b) or clause (c), which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court, such Court may, after such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks

necessary, record a finding to that effect and make a complaint thereof in writing signed by the presiding officer of the Court, and shall forward the same to a Magistrate of the first class having jurisdiction, and may take sufficient security for the appearance of the accused before such Magistrate, or, if the alleged offence is nonbailable, may, if it thinks necessary so to do, send the accused in custody to such Magistrate, and may bind over any person to appear and give evidence before such Magistrate :

Provided that, where the Court making the complaint is a High Court, the complaint may be signed by such officer of the Court as the Court may appoint.

*For the purposes of this sub-section, a * * Presidency Magistrate shall be deemed to be a Magistrate of the first class.*

(2) Such Magistrate shall thereupon proceed according to law, and as if upon complaint made and recorded under Section 200, and may, if he is authorised under Section 192 to transfer cases, transfer the inquiry or trial to some other competent Magistrate.

(3) Where it is brought to the notice of such Magistrate, or any other Magistrate to whom the case may have been transferred, that an appeal is pending against the decision arrived at in the judicial proceeding out of which the matter has arisen, he may, if he thinks fit, at any stage adjourn the hearing of the case until such appeal is decided.

Change —The whole section has been redrafted by section 128 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923, but no important change has been introduced. Sub-section (3) is new. "The changes that we have made are not of great importance. We have provided that a Court can act on application made to it or suo motu and after such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary. For the words "committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding" we have substituted the phraseology used in clause (b) of section 195. We have substituted "may make a complaint" for "shall make a complaint" and, in view of the criticism of the words "nearest first-class Magistrate" we have provided that a complaint should be sent to a first-class Magistrate having jurisdiction. In order to give effect to our decision that proceedings under section 476, etc., should be subject to revision, we have introduced words which will make it necessary for the Court to record an order"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922). The proviso to subsection (1) has been added recently by the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act II of 1926. For reasons, see Note 1240. From the third para of subsection (1) the word 'chief' has been omitted by the same Amendment Act, for reason of this omission see Note 1250.

1236. Object and scope of Section.—It is easy to imagine the inconvenience which might be caused if a Munsiff or a Subordinate Judge or a Judge were to appear before a Magistrate and make a complaint on oath under sec. 195 in order to lay the foundation for a prosecution, and this section has been enacted to obviate the difficulty. The Legislature thought it desirable that the procedure to be followed in cases of complaint by a Court should be different from that which has to be observed by an ordinary complainant—Ishri Prasad v. Sham Lal, 7 All 871. Under Section 195, it is open to the Court, before which the offence was committed, to prefer a complaint for the prosecution of the offender, and sec. 476 prescribes the procedure as to how that complaint may be preferred—In re Lakshmidas, 32 Bom 184, 31 Mad 140, 32 Mad 49; Ishri Prasad v. Sham Lal, 7 All 871. The language of this section indicates that when a Court is acting under sec. 195, a complaint in the strict sense of the Code is not required, and the procedure herein laid down constitutes the complaint mentioned in sec. 195 ante—Ishri v. Sham Lal, 7 All 871. The order of a Court under sec. 476 is in the nature of a complaint under sec. 195—Kisan Kohalee, 9 C.P.L.R. 26.

Proceedings taken by a Court under this section operate of themselves to set a prosecution in motion without the necessity of any other complaint, the Court itself being the complainant—Nageswara, 2 Weir 589.

The words in sub-section (2) of this section "and as if upon complaint made and recorded under sec 200," have been introduced into the Code in 1898 in order to give legislative effect to the Full Bench ruling in 7 All. 871 in which it was held that the order of the Court under this section was a complaint within the meaning of sec. 195—Bhup Kunwar, 26 All. 249. That one of the functions of sec. 476 is to provide the machinery by which a Court is enabled without inconvenience to make a complaint is made very clear by these words introduced in the present section—31 Mad. 140 (per Miller J.). Under sub-section (1) as now amended the Court will have to frame a complaint in writing.

1237. Section 476 is supplementary to sec. 195.—The words 'offences referred to in sec. 195' mean not merely the offences covered by the sections of the I. P. C. mentioned in section 195, but they mean the offences covered by those sections and committed under the qualifying circumstances mentioned in section 195. That is, section 476 must be read along with section 195, and the qualifications mentioned in sec. 195 are to be treated as incorporated in the provisions of section 476—Jadunandan v Emp, 37 Cal 250 (256), Govinda Iyer v. Erip., 42 Mad 540. Thus, an offence under sec 467 I P C. does not come within the purview of section 195 unless it is committed by a 'party to the proceeding'; and therefore a Court is not competent to pass an order under sec 476 directing the prosecution of a person who is not a party to the proceeding, for an offence under sec. 467 I. P. C.—Ramalingam v. Subramayya, 40 Mad 100, 18 M L T 488; 1917 P.R 10 [Nor is a complaint under this section necessary in order to proceed against such person—21 C.W.N. 950.] So also, where certain documents were put in Court in a pending suit, but not given in evidence, the Court is not competent to order the prosecution of the party, who had put in the documents, for forgery—Abdul Khadar v Meera Saheb, 15 Mad. 224, Adhar v. Ablakh, 1895 A.W N 145, 1920 P L R 3. So again, if an offence referred to in sec 195 (b), e g false charge, is not committed in or in relation to a proceeding in Court, but is committed before the police, it is not competent to a Court to direct a prosecution under sec 476—Jadunandan v. Emp. 37 Cal. 250 (256).

But a different view has been taken in the following cases. Thus in Aiyakannu, 32 Mad 49, Sankaran Nair J has held that section 476 must be construed as entirely self-contained, and the power given to the Court under this Chapter to take action regarding the offences specified in sec 195 is not restricted by the qualifying circumstances mentioned in sec. 195. And therefore it is competent to a Court to order prosecution for forgery of a person who was not a party to the proceeding in Court—In re Devan, 18 Bom 581; In re Keshav, 14 Bom L R 968, 13 Cr.L.J 848; 20 Cr L J. 630 (Pat); Ejaz Ali, 24 O C. 367, 23 Cr. L.J. 228, A L.R. 1922 Oudh 220. It is competent to a Court to proceed under sec. 476 against a party who has filed a forged document, whether such document has been actually given in evidence or not—1897 P.R. 12; Akhil Chandra v. Q. E., 22 Cal. 1004. The words 'referred to in sec. 195' are merely words descriptive of the class of offences with which a particular Court can deal. They do not mean that sec. 195 governs sec. 476 to any extent other than this—Emp. v. Khushali, 40 All. 116; Ganga Ram v. Emp., 40 All. 24; Narayanshaligram v. Emp., 20 Cr. L.J. 426 (Nag.). Sec. 476 is a self-contained section, and the reference made to sec. 195 is only for the purpose of avoiding the enumeration of the sections of the Penal Code mentioned in section 195—Raj Kumar v. K. E., 1 P.L.J. 298, 18 Cr. L.J. 135.

But the intention of the Legislature in making the present amendments is to make this section not independent of, but supplementary to, section 195. In submitting the Report of the Joint Committee before the Council of State in September 1922, the Hon'ble Mr. Moncrieff Smith said: "One of the most weighty changes introduced by this measure (i.e., the Amendment Bill) is in respect of prosecutions for offences committed before or in relation to proceedings of the Court. . . . A glance at any commentary on the Code will give some indication of the difficulties that have arisen in putting sections 195 and 476 into operation. After a long and careful thought, Government have decided on a line of action which, I may say, has met with general approval. The two sections as they stand (under the old Code) provide an alternative procedure for the Courts in dealing with them. Sanction is given to proceedings under sec. 195 or action is directed by the Courts under sec. 476. The sanction proceedings are now omitted, and the two sections will in future supplement each other Section 195 will contain the prohibition of prosecution except upon complaint by the Court, section 476 will lay down the procedure to be followed. It has been suggested that it will be better to bring the two sections together. That is a matter to be considered when the consolidation of the Code will be undertaken"—Council of State Debates, September 13, 1922. See also Dwarka v. Makund, 24 A.L.J. 122, 26 Cr. L.J. 1506.

"The recent amendments in sections 195 and 476 have resulted in connecting the two sections more closely together. Section 476 gives the Court power with respect to any offence referred to in section 195. The offence referred to in section 195 (c) is not merely an offence under certain sections, but such an offence when committed by a party to the proceeding"—per Brown J. in Guruswamy v. Ebrahim, 2 Rang 374 (381, 382), 26 Cr. L.J. 295. "By the recent amendment of the Cr. P. Code, the words 'offence referred to in section 195 (c)' in sec. 476 must be read in conjunction with the wording of section 195 (c). The only offence which sec. 195 (c) bars from the cognizance of the Magistrate without a complaint by the Courts is when such offence is "alleged to have been committed by a party to any proceeding before that Court" and it is not right to divorce these words or take only a part of the section in endeavouring to discover what the offence referred to in section 195 is"—per Robinson C.J. in Ibid (p. 380). Therefore, the Court has jurisdiction to file a complaint only against parties to the suit—Shree Pwe v. Ma Me Hmoke, 3 Rang. 48, 3 Bur. L.J. 344, 26 Cr. L.J. 500. So also, where there is no evidence to suggest that a forged document was produced or given in evidence in a Court, a complaint under sec. 476 Cr. P. Code by the Court is not justified—Bahir-uddy v. Emp., 28 C.W.N. 880, 25 Cr. L.J. 1095.

1238. Civil, Criminal and Revenue Court :—As to what are Courts, and what are not, see Note 622 under sec. 195.

An Income Tax Collector is a Revenue Court within the meaning of this section—Nataraja, 36 Mad 72, 1905 P.R. 44, Panamchand, 38 Bom. 642. Contra—Kalidas, 8 Bom. L.R. 477. A Collector or Deputy Collector holding an inquiry for the purpose of determining who should be called upon to pay the stamp duty of an insufficiently stamped document is not a Court, as he is not holding a judicial enquiry—Kedarnath, 7 C.W.N. 795. A certificate officer acting under the powers conferred upon him by secs. 57, 58 and 66 of the Behar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act 1914, is, while acting in that capacity, a 'Court,' and where such officer inquires into the question of an alleged payment where a certificate has been issued, the proceeding before him is a judicial proceeding—4 P.L.J. 475. A Commissioner sitting as an election tribunal is a Civil Court—Ram Nath v. Emp., 46 All 611 (613), but see Bilas Singh v. K. E., 23 A.L.J. 845, 47 All. 934. A Judge receiving and dealing with a petition under sec. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act (for deposit of mortgage money) is a Court, and he can therefore start a prosecution under this section against the person depositing the money, if the mortgage-deed is found to be forged—Chamari, 4 Pat. 24, 6 P.L.T. 225, 26 Cr.L.J. 170. An Assistant Collector concerned in mutation proceeding is acting as a Revenue Court—Lachman, 6 O.W.N. 953.

A Revenue Officer preparing a record of rights but not authorised to take evidence on oath is not a Court—Hanumantha, 39 Mad. 414. An officer acting in an executive, and not in a judicial capacity cannot exercise the powers conferred under this section—15 A.L.J. 654. See Note 1244 below under heading "Proceeding in Court."

A District Registrar (before whom a forged document was produced for registration) is not a Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court within the meaning of this section, but in his capacity as District Magistrate he can take cognizance of the offence (sec. 471, I P C) under sec. 190 (1) (c) of this Code—Cheta Mahto, 2 Pat 459, 26 Cr L J 1482.

Power after transfer.—A Magistrate, who after trying a case has been transferred from the charge of the particular Court in which the case was tried to some other duty in the same district, is not competent to make an order under this section in respect of a case which he tried as the presiding officer of that Court—Chunni Lal v. Harbans, 1 A.L.J. 315, Emp. v. Baldeo, 46 All 851 (854). In such an event, the only officer who can order the prosecution is his successor-in-office in that Court—Emp. v. Baldeo, 46 All 851 (855). A Joint Magistrate after dismissing the complaint in a case became the District Magistrate, then ordered the prosecution of the complainant for perjury under sec.

I. P. C. It was held that the order of the Joint Magistrate as a District Magistrate was bad and should be set aside—Mallu Khan v. K. E., 1 A.L.J. 388.

1239. What Court can take action.—See pp. 528-530

The words "in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court" show that the Court which can take action under this section is only the Court before which, or in relation to whose proceeding, the offence has been committed. Under the old section also, the words "committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding" indicated that it was the Judge alone who tried the case who could take action for prosecution, and it was not competent for another Judge who had not tried the case to exercise the powers under this section—Begu Singh v. Emp., 34 Cal. 551 (555) (F.B.). Therefore, where an offence was committed before a Provincial Small Cause Court, neither the District Judge nor the High Court could take action for directing the offender's prosecution—In re Ram Prosad, 37 Cal 13 (21) But where a person gave false evidence before the committing Magistrate and that evidence, on account of his inability to attend the Sessions Court owing to illness, was read out as evidence at the sessions trial, the Sessions Judge would be competent to direct the prosecution of that person for giving false evidence, as the offence was brought under the notice of the Sessions Judge in the trial before him—Attar Singh, 1916 P.R. 29, 18 Cr L J 337

Transfer of proceedings taken under this section:—Section 476 is self contained and exhaustive, and the intention of the Legislature is that the power of making a complaint should not be exercised by any Court except the Court before which the offence has been committed or the Court to which appeals from that Court ordinarily lie. Therefore, while proceedings under this section are going on in a Civil Court before which the offence has been committed, it is not in the power of the District Judge under sec 24 C. P. Code, to transfer the proceedings from the Civil Court to another Civil Court—Rameshwar v. Rajdhari, 49 All 460, 25 A.L.J 433, A.I.R. 1927 All 469 (470) The order of transfer is invalid, and the original Civil Court should conclude the proceedings—Ibid

Transfer of Case:—Where a case which has been partly heard by one Court is transferred to another Court, the former Court is not deprived of its jurisdiction to take proceedings against a witness in respect of a perjury committed before it, nor is that jurisdiction taken away by the circumstance that the second Court may have formed a different view as to the veracity of the witness—44 All. 642. But where a criminal case is transferred or withdrawn from the Court of one Magistrate to that of another, and the second Magistrate dismisses the complaint as false, under sec. 203, it is the second Magistrate who can take action under sec. 476 for prosecution of the complainant for the offence under sec 211 I. P. Code, the Magistrate in whose Court the complaint was originally filed is not competent to proceed under sec. 476—Tarakeshwar v. Emp., 53 Cal. 488, 30 C.W.N. 504, 27 Cr.L.J. 648, Amanat Ali

33 C.W.N. 1058 (1061), 1029 Cr. C. 360. The principle is, that the Court which tries a case on the merits rather than the Court before which the case is originally instituted, even though process may be issued by it, is the proper Court to make a complaint under sec. 476—Amanat Ali, supra; Cf. Jiban v. Benoy, 6 C.W.N. 35, Puluram v. Md. Kasem, 3 C.W.N. 33. See p. 529

Where a suit was at first filed at S, but a new Court having been established at SH, the suit was transferred to the latter Court, because the cause of action arose within the limits of that Court, held that the Court at SH and not the Court at S had jurisdiction to take action under sec. 476 in respect of the offence of perjury committed in that suit. The only Court which can exercise the power conferred by sec. 476 is the Court which has jurisdiction over the suit in which the alleged offence has been committed, whether such suit was instituted in such Court or came to its file by transfer from any other Court or otherwise—Gerimal v. Shewa Ram, 20 S.L.R. 90, 27 Cr. L.J. 760

Power of successor-in-office to act under this section—The power to direct prosecution is conferred on the "Court" and not on the particular officer who fills the judicial office at a particular time, and therefore the successor-in-office is competent to make an order under this section in respect of an offence committed before his predecessor-in-office—In re Nawal Singh, 34 All. 393, 19 A.L.J. 819, In re Lakshmidas, 32 Bom. 184 (189), Runga, 29 Mad. 331, Daulat, 14 N.L.R. 16, 18 Cr.L.J. 1015, 1919 M.W.N. 112, 4 Lah. 58, Behram v. Emp., 7 Lah. 108, 27 Cr.L.J. 776; 4 Bur.L.T. 246; Shwe Pwe v. Ma Me Hmoke, 3 Rang. 48, 3 Bur. L.J. 344. But in Begu Singh v. Emp., 34 Cal. 551 (F.B.); Kartik Ram v. Emp., 35 Cal. 114, Krishna Gobinda, 9 C.W.N. 859 (860); Dauli, 2 I.C. 812, 10 Cr. L.J. 158, 1909 P.R. 6, Ramakrishna, 2 Weir 597, and 17 Cr.L.J. 40, it has been held that a succeeding Magistrate has no jurisdiction to institute proceedings under this section, where an offence was neither 'committed before him nor was brought under his notice in the course of a judicial proceeding' (see the words of the old section). These words have now been replaced by the more general words 'committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court' and in this view of the law, the ruling in 34 Cal. 551, etc. is no longer correct. Moreover, the new section 559 expressly lays down that all the powers of a Judge or Magistrate may be exercised by his successor-in-office.

Where proceedings under this section have been commenced by a particular officer, it is competent for his successor-in-office to continue the proceedings—Bahadur v. Eradatullah, 37 Cal. 642 (648) (F.B.), 7 A.L.J. 991. If an officer orders a preliminary inquiry, but before he can hold that inquiry, is transferred, his successor would be competent to hold the inquiry, and, as a result of that inquiry, to direct a prosecution—Begu Singh, 34 Cal. 551 (562). But where the preliminary inquiry has been commenced by the proper officer who issued the notice, and after his transfer, is continued by another officer who is not the successor of the former officer but to whom the District Judge makes over the case for disposal, the latter officer is not competent to complete the inquiry and pass an order under this section—Muhammad Munir Khan, 10 P.L.R. 1911, 12 Cr L.J. 68, 9 I.C. 389 (390).

Power of superior (Appellate) Court to take action:—See secs 476A, 476B. An Appellate Court can make a complaint only when the case in which the offence has been committed is before that Court in appeal, or when the original Court has omitted to make a complaint (sec. 476A) or when the original Court has refused to make a complaint and the order of refusal is appealed from to the Appellate Court (sec. 476B). But when proceedings for making a complaint are already going on before the original Court, the Appellate Court cannot step in and deal with the matter—Rajdhari v Rameshwar, 49 All. 460, 25 A.L.J. 433, A I R 1927 All. 469 (470).

1240. Power of High Court:—The old section did not apply to proceedings in High Court or Courts in Presidency towns; consequently, it was not competent to the High Court, acting under this section, to direct the prosecution of a person for the offence of forgery or abetment of forgery brought to its notice in the course of hearing an appeal in a Probate case—19 Cr.L.J. 638 (Cal.); see also 9 Bom L R 1160. This ruling is no longer correct in view of the second para (newly added) of sub-section (1).

A High Court sitting to exercise the revisional powers under this Code can lay a complaint under sec. 476—Emp v. Syed Khan, 3 Rang 303, 27 Cr.L.J. 4.

The proviso newly added in 1926 lays down that a complaint by a High Court need not be signed by the Judge himself but may be signed by an officer of the Court. "The Lahore High Court (see 6 Lah. 34 below) has represented that it is a needless waste of time of the Judges of a High Court that they should be required to sign all complaints under sec 476. The proposed change enables any officer of such a Court whom the Court may appoint to sign the complaint"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India, 1925, Part V, p. 215). Before this proviso was added it was held by the Lahore High Court that the procedure of the new section 476 in its application to High Court was open to serious objections; it was inconsistent with the dignity of a High Court Judge that he should have to make and sign a complaint which was to be inquired into by one of his subordinates, and that he should be treated and recorded as a complainant throughout the proceedings; nor was it fair to the accused that he should be arraigned in a case instituted on a complaint made by a Judge of the highest tribunal and was to be tried by a judicial officer who was subordinate to the complainant. There could be little doubt that by reason of the circumstance that the complaint was preferred by a High Court Judge, the accused person was likely to entertain an apprehension, not altogether without justification, that his conviction was a foregone conclusion—Emp v. Qadir Baksh, 6 Lah 34, 26 P.L.R 158, 27 Cr.L.J. 98, A I R. 1925 Lah 312. The proviso has been added in deference to these remarks.

The usual practice of the High Court in making a complaint is to give a direction that the judgment in the suit out of which the matter arises shall be treated as a complaint, in which case a copy of this judgment signed by the Judge will be sent by the Registrar to the Magistrate. But as sec. 476 requires a finding and a complaint, the better course is to make a separate order containing the requisite finding, setting out in detail specific matters extracted from the proceedings, and directing a complaint to be made in respect thereof, this being followed by a complaint which conforms to the term of the previous order—Ramjan v. Moolji, 56 Cal 932, 33 C.W.N. 329 (332), 30 Cr.L.J. 974.

A Judge of the High Court can grant a direction to prosecute, under sec. 476, although the matter out of which the action arose was heard by another Judge of the Court, because any Judge of the High Court has power to exercise the powers of the High Court. But as a matter of convenience the prosecution must be directed by the same Judge, unless it becomes impracticable by reason of that Judge ceasing to hold office—Bai Kasturbai v. Vanmalidas, 49 Bom. 710, 27 Bom. L.R. 616, 26 Cr.L.J. 1189.

1241. Duty of Court—Whether the Court acts on its own motion or on the application of a party, the responsibility for directing the prosecution rests entirely on the Court, and the power given by this section should be exercised with great care and caution—Begu Singh, 34 Cal 551 (558), Jadunandan, 37 Cal 260 (258). It is not in every instance in which a party fails to prove his case that the Judge who has decided against him is justified in exercising the powers conferred by this section. Judges should bear in mind that criminal prosecutions are frequently suggested by successful litigants merely to prevent an appeal in the civil suit, and they should be careful not to lend themselves to such suggestions too readily. The Judges should also recollect that when they proceed under this section, the responsibility for the prosecution rests upon them entirely—Bayoo, 1 Cal 450. As prosecutions ending in failures are to be deprecated as being calculated to do harm rather than good, they ought not to be undertaken without considerable circumspection and care. The offences contemplated by this section are offences against public justice, whence it follows that they ought to be pressed primarily in the interests of public justice, and never as a means of satisfying a private grudge—In re Ram Prasad 37 Cal 13 (20), 13 C.W.N. 1038, 10 Cr.L.J. 454. In cases under the old section, it has been held that proceedings should not be taken under this section where the case is at best doubtful. There must be a reasonable foundation for the charge in respect of which prosecution is directed, before the criminal law is set in motion—Jadu Nandan v. Emp., 37 Cal 250 (258), 14 C.W.N. 330. It has also been said that before a Court is justified in directing a prosecution under section 476, there must be some direct evidence fixing the offence upon the persons whom it is sought to charge, either in the preliminary inquiry or in the earlier proceedings out of which the inquiry arises. It is not sufficient that the evidence in the case may induce some sort of suspicion that these persons have been guilty of an offence, but there must be distinct evidence of the commission of an offence by such persons—Khepunath v. Girish, 16 Cal 730 (740), 21 Cr L.J. 601 (Lab.). In a Nagpur case also it has been held that the words “ground for inquiring” (in the old section) mean that there must be a reasonable prospect of a conviction, in order to justify a Court in taking action—Abdul Husen, 9 N.L.R. 184, 15 Cr.L.J. 33 (35). But the wording of the section has now been changed. The Madras High Court holds that under the present section it is not the duty of the Court to see that there is a reasonable probability of the prosecution ending in a conviction, though the Court acting under this section should not act capriciously or without proper grounds—Seshamma v. Venkamma, 22 L.W. 863, 27 Cr.L.J. 280 (283). Under sections 195 and 476, all that a Court has to see is that a prima facie case has been made out upon the evidence before it for inquiring further into the question whether any of the offences punishable as set out in sec. 195 has or has not been made out. The Court has not to see that the case must necessarily lead to conviction. The Court can take action if a suspicion is raised as to the commission of an offence—Kidha Singh, 13 A.L.J. 1111, 16 Cr.L.J. 817, 31 I.C. 993 (994) (dissenting from Jadunandan, 37 Cal 250). Moreover, the Court taking action under this section must be prima facie satisfied that the offence has been committed by some definite individual or individuals against whom proceedings in the Criminal Court are to be taken—Mahommed, 23 Cal 532. It must come to a finding as to which of the individuals sent for trial has committed the offence—Amar Nath v. Mam Raj, 2 Lah. 63, 22 Cr.L.J. 329. Where a District Judge being of opinion that the forgery of a document produced before him was committed either by the plaintiff or by the defendant, sent both of them to a first class Magistrate so that the guilty party might be proceeded against, it was held that the order was illegal and must be set aside in revision—1905 P.L.R. 163, Amar Nath, supra.

“Is of opinion” —There must be an opinion, as distinguished from a mere surmise or assumption, that is, the Court should act on evidence and not perversely—Karri Venkanna, 31 M.L.J. 440, 17 Cr.L.J. 515; but it is not possible to fix the quantity or nature of the material on which the Court’s opinion is to be formed, or to restrict the exercise of the general discretion which the Legislature has conferred on the Court—Ibid. The opinion must be the opinion of the Court taking action under this section and not the opinion of any superior Court—In re Alamdar, 23 All 249. The Court must form its own opinion and should not take opinion from others. Where the High Court directed the Sessions Judge to take action under this section, held that it was the duty of the Sessions Judge to apply his mind to the matter on the merits and then only decide whether a prosecution was necessary or not—Ghansam v. Emp., 21 A.L.J. 930. Where a Munsiff in making an order under this section purported to act not of his own accord but at the direction of the District Judge, it was held that the order of the Munsiff was bad, in as much as it was only nominally his, while the opinion was the opinion of the District Judge—6 A.L.J. 924. Contra—In 20 Cr.L.J. 274 (Pat.) it was held that the proceedings were not vitiated by the mere fact that the District Judge had directed the Munsiff to institute the proceedings

'Expedient in the interests of justice':—It is not necessary that the Judge should expressly record that it is expedient in the interests of justice to make an inquiry and complaint. When the Judge's order shows that in his opinion the accused has given false evidence before him, that order by itself carries the implication that the Judge must have felt that the ends of justice require that an inquiry before a Magistrate should take place—Bhuban Chandra, 31 C.W.N. 828, 28 Cr L J 783 (784)

If the Court is satisfied that it is expedient in the interests of justice to make a complaint, it has jurisdiction to do so, inspite of the fact that in the Appellate Court the parties agreed to compromise the matter or to get it decided by a reference to arbitration or in accordance with the statement of a referee—Narain Das, 49 All. 792, 28 Cr L J. 549 (551), 25 A L J 559.

'Whether on application or otherwise' —A complaint under sec 476 may be made by a Court either on application or otherwise. It is immaterial whether the application is made by a person who was not a party in the original suit—Harekrishna, 8 Pat 736

1242. Power to take action in a pending case or appeal :—It has been held in some cases that proceedings under this section should not be taken until after the close of the case in which the false evidence was given or forged document was used as genuine etc. Thus, it is improper for a Magistrate to order the prosecution of a witness for perjury, while the proceedings in which the witness has given his deposition are pending before him—Emp v. Rustumji, 4 Bom L R 778, 21 Cr L J. 29 (Pat.), Kalu v. Tikaram, 26 Cr.L J. 1350 (Nag) Such a hasty proceeding, as placing a witness on his trial as an accused immediately after he has given his evidence, and before the close of the case, is bad, because the necessary result of such a step would be to frighten the remaining witnesses and seriously affect the case of the party who called him as witness—Sikandar Lal, 10 Lah 778, 30 Cr L J 129 (131), Bhogilal, Ratanlal 477, Kashinath, 8 B H C R. 126; 21 Cr L J. 29, Nadershah, 9 S L R 176, 17 Cr L J 77 But it should not be accepted as an invariable rule that no proceedings should be taken under sec 476 till the conclusion of the case. In most cases it would be improper to take action under this section before the close of the original case, in exceptional cases (e g in cases of bare-faced perjury) the Court can at once send the witness to a Magistrate. At any rate the action of the Court in taking proceedings under sec 476 during the pendency of the case would be improper or premature, but not illegal or without jurisdiction, and does not constitute any material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction—K E v Karri Venkanna, 31 M.L J 440 (F B), 17 Cr L J 515 (522) The object of this section would be entirely frustrated if the proceedings were invariably allowed to be delayed pending the disposal of the civil litigation which might be indefinitely protracted even up to a final decision on appeal to the Privy Council—Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 26 Bom. 785 (791), followed in Lakhmichand v. Emp., 21 S.L.R. 43, 27 Cr.L.J. 1249 (1250). If there is a delay in the disposal of the suit in which the offence has been committed, there is no reason why the Court should delay proceedings under this section until the suit is disposed of, which disposal may not occur until months or years later—In re Perumalla, 44 M.L.J. 74, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 228, 23 Cr.L.J. 712.

Since an appeal is a continuation of the trial, proceedings under this section should not be taken during the pendency of the appeal in the case in which the petitioner is alleged to have given false evidence or produced a fabricated document—Gandan Singh, 3 Cr.L.J. 303, 3 C.L.J. 302, 16 Bom 729, 6 Cal 308; Attar Singh, 1916 P.R. 29, 18 Cr.L.J. 337 (338); Harnam Singh v. Alri, 7 Lah L.J. 73, 26 Cr.L.J. 1169. If the same question of fact is in issue in the appeal it is undesirable to allow proceedings to be taken under sec. 476 during the pendency of the appeal. But where a second appeal has been preferred to the High Court, in which no question of fact is in issue, but only a question of law, it is not improper to take action under this section during the pendency of the second appeal—Rajkumar, 1 P.L.J. 298, 18 Cr.L.J. 135 (136). The new sub-section (3) now provides that if a proceeding has already been taken, it may be adjourned till the decision of the appeal.

1243. "In or in relation to a proceeding in that court" :—Under the old law, the offences which fell under this section were those which were "committed before the Court or were brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding." The wording of the present section is different, and follows the language of clause (b) of sec. 195. Where an offence committed in a case instituted before a 2nd class Magistrate was brought to the notice of the District Magistrate through a report from a Forest Ranger (who was the prosecutor in the case before the 2nd class Magistrate) it was held under the old section that the District Magistrate was not competent to act under this section as the offence was not brought to his notice in the course of a judicial proceeding—Subbaraya, 18 Mad 487. Under the present law, the District Magistrate would be competent to take action under sec. 476A.

During the trial of a case by a jury, a certain person informed the Sessions Judge that he had seen the foreman of the jury talking to one of the accused. Thereupon the Judge held an inquiry, and that person made the same statement before the Judge, who afterwards found the statement to be false and took action against that person under this section. Held that the action of the Judge was not without jurisdiction—Bhuban Chandra, 31 C.W.N. 828, 28 Cr.L.J. 783 (784).

Where an affidavit containing a false statement was filed by a person before a Munsif of Court, it was held under the old section that the Judge could not direct the prosecution of that person, because the offence of perjury was not committed before the Judge himself—15 A.L.J. 517. But this is no longer correct, and the above case would be covered by the present section which contemplates an offence committed 'in relation to a proceeding in the Court.' See also Rameshwar Lal, 49 All. 898, 25 A.L.J. 555, 28 Cr.L.J. 668 (670), where it has been held that a document produced before the Munsarim of the Court may be said to be a document produced in Court, and the Judge can take action under sec. 476 in respect of an offence committed in relation to the document. The old section was wide enough to enable a Court to take action in respect of an offence committed in another forum (even in another province) and on some previous occasion, provided it was brought to the notice of the Court in the course of a judicial proceeding—Girwar v. K. E., 9 Cr.L.J. 219, 1 I.C. 306, 6 A.L.J. 392; Khushali, 40 All. 116; Raj Kumar, 1 P.L.J. 298, 18 Cr.L.J. 135 (136); Kampla Prasad, 33 All. 396. See also 43 Cal. 542. The present section is confined to offences committed 'in relation to a proceeding in that court'.

Where the offence is not committed in or in relation to a proceeding in Court, this section does not apply. Thus, if a false charge is made before the Police, a Court cannot direct prosecution—Nandkishore v. Emp., 5 P.L.T. 300, Dharmadas v. K. E., 7 C.L.J. 373, Abdul Rahman v. Emp., 7 C.L.J. 371, Haibat Khan v. Emp., 33 Cal. 30, Jadunandan v. Emp., 37 Cal. 250 (256), but if the person making the false charge before the police, subsequently makes a false complaint before a Magistrate in respect to the same matter, he commits an offence before a Court, and the Court can take action under this section—Jadunandan, supra. In fact, in such a case, the complaint of the Court under sec. 476 is essential—Murugan v. Gutha Ramu, 53 M.L.J. 455, 28 Cr.L.J. 849 (850). Compare also the cases cited in Note 620 under sec. 195. So also, if the Magistrate himself makes an inquiry into the truth or falsity of the charge made before the police and finds the charge to be false, he may proceed under sec. 476—Haibat Khan, supra.

"Offence referred to in sec. 195"—As the offences contemplated by this section are offences described in section 195 ante, a Magistrate cannot direct a prosecution for an offence under section 421 I. P. C. because this offence is not mentioned in sec. 195—18 A.L.J. 50.

For the offences referred to in sec. 195 (b) (c) see fuller notes under that section.

If the offence referred to in clause (c) of sec. 195 is committed by a person who is not a party to the proceeding, no complaint of the Court is necessary. See Note 629 under sec. 195.

Where the offence committed by the accused is one which falls under the enumeration of clauses (b) and (c) of sec. 195 (e.g. an offence under sec. 471 I. P. C.), the Court cannot reduce the charge to a different offence not requiring complaint (e.g. one under sec. 474 I. P. C.) to avoid the necessity of proceeding under sec. 476 of this Code—Ibrahim, 29 Cr.L.J. 849 (850); for if this were allowed to be done, then the provision of sec. 195 might just as well be wiped out—Prafulla v. Harendra, 44 Cal. 970.

The jurisdiction to make a complaint under this section is limited to the offences mentioned in clauses (b) and (c) of sec. 195. Section 476 mitted need not be of a judicial character, the Public Prosecutor again moved the Court for taking the same action against the same person, held that the petitioner could be proceeded against. The dropping of the previous proceeding was no bar to the institution of the present proceeding—Chamari v Public Prosecutor, 4 Pat. 24, 6 P.L.T. 225, 26 Cr L.J. 170.

1245. Preliminary inquiry :—*Where not necessary :—*The words "such preliminary inquiry as it thinks necessary" show that a preliminary inquiry is not always indispensable—Durpa Narain v. Bepin, 15 C.W.N. 691 (692); In re Jyabhai, 7 Bom.L.R. 84. This section does not make it imperative on a Court to hold a preliminary inquiry before taking action under this section. To justify the Court in initiating a prosecution, it is necessary only to hold that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into an offence referred to in sec. 195—Emp. v Qadir Buksh, 6 Lah. 34, 26 P.L.R. 158, 27 Cr L.J. 98; Baperam v. Gouri, 20 Cal 474; Matabadal, 15 All. 392; 34 All. 267. It is for the Court acting in the matter to determine in the exercise of its discretion, whether or not to make a preliminary inquiry—Ch Md Izaharul Huq, 20 Cal. 349, Baperam v. Gouri, 20 Cal 474. And an order under this section will not be set aside on account of omission to make a preliminary inquiry, unless the accused has been prejudiced by reason of such omission—Durpa Narayan v. Bepin Behari, 15 C.W.N. 691 (693). Where a Munsiff sent a case under this section to the nearest first class Magistrate without making any inquiry, and where there was nothing to show that any inquiry the Munsiff could have made would have put the Magistrate in a better position, the omission to hold a preliminary inquiry was not bad—5 All 62. If in the course of a proceeding, either civil or criminal, the Judge or Magistrate finds clear grounds for believing that either the parties or their witnesses have committed perjury, he is justified in directing criminal proceedings against such persons, without any further inquiry than that which he had already held in his Court—Mutty Lal, 6 Cal 308. In a prosecution for making a false charge under Sec. 211 I. P. C., it is not always necessary that there should be a preliminary inquiry under this section—Surjya Hariani, 6 C.W.N. 295. A preliminary inquiry is not necessary in all cases, if there are materials on record on which a definite charge can be grounded—Ratanlal 895. Where an order was made under this section directing the prosecution of a witness under Sec 193 I. P. C., on the very day or the day after the witness's cross-examination had been finished, and upon a clear statement by the witness and after an opportunity having been given him to explain the inconsistency in his statements and in the cross-examination, it was held that it was not incumbent on the Magistrate to institute a fresh inquiry or to give any notice to the accused—4 P.L.W. 44, 19 Cr.L.J. 169. The successor-in-office of the officer before whom the offence was committed, can pass an order under this section upon considering the evidence on record and hearing the parties, without holding any preliminary investigation—Durpa Narain v. Bepin, 15 C.W.N. 691 (693).

Where necessary :—Where a Magistrate dismissed a complaint without calling evidence, he should make an inquiry before charging the complainant with the offence of making a false charge—16 W.R. 44. Where a Subordinate Judge acting upon the report of a bailiff ordered the prosecution of persons who obstructed him in executing a warrant of attachment, without making an inquiry of his own, it was held that the Subordinate Judge would have done well if he had complied with the requirements of this section—Ratanlal 701. Where in a civil suit, settled without any evidence being gone into, by confession of judgment, the Court had grounds for supposing that an offence of false personation under Sec. 205 I. P. C. had been committed before it, the Court before directing a prosecution would be competent to hold a preliminary inquiry to satisfy itself whether a prima facie case has been made out for directing the prosecution—Shashi Kumar, 19 Cal. 345. The Court directed the prosecution of a person under sec 174 I. P. C. for the disobedience of summons to attend the Court and give evidence, and that person appeared and denied the service of summons on him, held that before prosecution a preliminary inquiry should be held as to the service of summons, and the said person should be given an opportunity to cross-examine the persons who had deposed to the service of summons on him—19 A.L.J. 56

1246. Procedure in preliminary inquiry :—The preliminary inquiry is a judicial proceeding, and oath can be administered to the suspected person—8 Bom. L.R. 589; or to any person examined as a witness in the preliminary inquiry, and if such witness gives false evidence, he may be prosecuted for an offence under sec. 193 I.P.C.—Abdullah, 37 Cal. 52 (55), 14 C.W.N. 132 (134).

The inquiry must be on evidence; one mode of making inquiry is certainly to take evidence—Abdullah, 37 Cal. 52, Raghubar v. Kokil, 17 Cal. 872. But it is not necessary to go minutely into the evidence or to see whether there is sufficient evidence to support a conviction. It is sufficient if the evidence discloses a reasonable foundation for a criminal charge—2 Weir 587. The law does not require a minute or detailed or exhaustive inquiry, but only such preliminary inquiry as may be necessary to make out a prima facie case. The extent of the preliminary inquiry is left to the discretion of the Court—Chamari v. Public Prosecutor, 4 Pat 484, A.L.R. 1925 Pat 677, Bhuban Chandra, 31 C W N 828, 28 Cr L.J. 783 (784), 5 All 62. The object of the preliminary inquiry is merely to decide whether an offence of the kind contemplated appears to have been committed, and whether it is expedient in the interests of justice it should be further inquired into. The nature, method and extent of the inquiry are entirely at the discretion of the Court. The inquiry need not take the form of a full-dress trial, so as to satisfy the Court that an offence has actually been committed. Nothing more is necessary than to find that an offence appears to have been committed and a long discussion or a decision on the merits is as undesirable as it is unnecessary—In re Raja Rao, 50 Mad. 660, 27 Cr L.J. 1149 (1150), 51 M.L.J. 331. The authority which is called upon to take action under this section need not, and should not, decide the question of the guilt or innocence of the party against whom proceedings are to be instituted—Jadunandan v. Emp., 37 Cal. 250 (258). The section does not say that before a Court orders a prosecution, it must try the whole case and be absolutely satisfied that the accused cannot by any possibility escape a conviction—Abdul Husen v. Emp., 9 N.L.R. 84, 15 Cr. L.J. 33 (35). The Code does not contain any provision as to the manner in which the evidence in the inquiry should be recorded, but for future reference the Court should make a summary of the statement of the witnesses examined—42 Cal 240

It is not necessary that the preliminary inquiry should be conducted in the presence of the accused. All that the Court making the inquiry has to do is to satisfy itself that there are prima facie grounds for sending the case for investigation to a Magistrate—Chota Sadoo v. Bhoobun, 9 W R. 3. The accused has no right to cross-examine any witness in the preliminary inquiry—18 Bom L.R. 284; Abdul Ghaffoor v. Razu, 34 All. 267, In re Raja Rao, supra; but see contra—Ganeshwar v. Emp., 6 P.L.J. 146, 22 Cr.L.J. 458, 19 A.L.J. 56; and Perumalla Venkata Subbiah, 44 M L J 74, A.I.R 1923 Mad 228, 23 Cr. L.J. 712

The person proceeded against under this section is in the position of an accused person, and cannot be examined on oath as a witness in the course of the preliminary inquiry. He can only be examined in accordance with the provisions of section 342—Maung Po v. Muta Kurpen, 10 Bur L.T. 32, 17 Cr L J 316 (317); Sami Sastri, 2 Weir 598 (599) The person proceeded against in the preliminary inquiry can be called upon to produce a necessary document in his possession (sec 94)—Damri Ram, 19 Cr. L J 217, 43 I.C. 793 (794)

Who can hold the inquiry—The preliminary inquiry must be conducted by the officer who directs prosecution under this section, and cannot be delegated to any other officer—20 Cr.L.J 245 (Pat.). It is for the complaining Court to make any inquiry that is necessary, and then to make a complaint. This section does not contemplate that the Court should send the case to a Magistrate for preliminary inquiry, asking the Magistrate to make the inquiry and to prosecute if he is satisfied that the offence has been committed. It is the complaining Court that must be satisfied that there is a prima facie case against the person sent to the Magistrate—Chamari v. Public Prosecutor, 4 Pat 24, 6 P.L.T. 225, 26 Cr.L.J 170; Shabir Hasan, 26 A.L.J. 46, 28 Cr.L.J. 986 (987)

It is not necessary that the whole of the preliminary inquiry ought to be conducted by the Court directing the prosecution. He can apply to the District Magistrate as the Head of the Police, for the assistance of the C. I. D., and the fact that he takes the assistance of the District Magistrate does not make him functus officio and deprive him of his jurisdiction to pass an order under this section—Waman, 43 Bom. 300. The complaining Court may order the inquiry to be made by the Police, but in that case, when the police papers arrive, the Court has to determine whether it is necessary to take action—Shabir Hasan, supra.

The preliminary inquiry should not be unduly protracted Action under this section should be prompt and expeditious. Where the Court passed the order for prosecution of the offender, nearly a year after the offence was brought to its notice, the High Court expressed disapproval of the undue protraction of the proceeding—Bahadur v. Eradatullah, 37 Cal 642 (649) (F.B.).

"May take sufficient security . . . custody to such Magistrate":—
 "The object of this is not to make it compulsory on the Magistrate to send the accused in custody even in non-bailable cases. I want to leave a discretion to the Magistrate to come to a conclusion that it is necessary for him to do so. Otherwise he may take security for his appearance."— per Mr. Rangachariar (Legislative Assembly Debates, 8th February, 1923, page 2087)

1247. Notice to accused :—This section nowhere says that notice shall be given to the person intended to be proceeded against, and the want of notice is at best a mere irregularity in procedure—10 A.L.J. 247; 2 Bur.L.J. 153; U.B.R. (1915) 3rd Qr 83 For a proceeding under this section, neither notice to show cause why the party should not be sent before a Magistrate, nor a preliminary inquiry is indispensable—In re Jyabhai, 7 Bom. L.R. 84, Durpa Narain v. Bepin, 15 C.W.N. 691 (692). But although as a matter of strict law, no notice would be necessary to the accused before taking proceedings under this section, still it is but right that he should have notice—Bai Kasturbai v. Vanmalidas, 49 Bom 710, 27 Bom.L.R. 616 If a preliminary inquiry is started, it must be a real inquiry and not merely a formal one, and the accused must be given ample opportunity to show cause why he should not be prosecuted—1 P.L.T. 342, 21 Cr.L.J. 29 (Pat.); 21 Cr.L.J. 158 (Pat.), 1 P.L.J. 135; 10 A.L.J. 247; U.B.R. (1915) 3rd Qr 83; 4 P.L.J. 475; 25 Cr.L.J. 488 (All.), 2 Weir 587; Perumalla, 44 M.L.J. 74, 23 Cr.L.J. 712. Where the prosecution has been ordered by a Court on evidence given by witnesses whom the accused had no opportunity to cross-examine, and whose evidence had thus not been tested, the Court acts with material irregularity in directing a criminal prosecution in the matter without giving the petitioner any chance to know and meet the case against him—In re Perumalla, 44 M.L.J. 74, 23 Cr.L.J. 712, A.I.R. 1923 Mad 228 When a Magistrate dismisses a complaint and takes action under this section against the complainant for preferring a false charge, he should give the complainant an opportunity of showing the truth or bona fide character of his complaint—Yendava, 7 Mad. 189, 21 M.L.J. 795, 5 C.W.N. 106, Karimdad, 6 Cal 496, Girish Chunder, 7 Cal. 87 So also, where a Civil Court directed the prosecution of the defendant in a civil suit for fabricating false evidence, without calling upon the defendant to shew cause, it was held that the Court acted wrongly in ordering the prosecution without giving the person concerned an opportunity to shew cause against such order—Thakur Das, 17 O.C. 25, 15 Cr.L.J. 217. But the proceedings would not be irregular merely because the accused was not given an opportunity of substantiating his case—, 7 Cal. 208; 7 Mad. 292; 4 All. 182.

1248. Order under this section :—An order under this section must specify the person alleged to have committed the offence. Where a District Judge, being of opinion that the forgery of a document produced before him was committed either by the plaintiff or by the defendant, and sent both of them to the nearest first class Magistrate so that the guilty party might be proceeded against, it was held that the order was illegal and must be set aside in revision—1905 P.L.R. 163. A finding has to be recorded in respect of each individual accused specifically—Shabir Hasan, 26 A.L.J. 46, 28 Cr.L.J. 936 (987).

The order must specify the offence committed—8 S.L.R. 179. The complaint must set forth the offence, the precise facts on which it is based, and the evidence available for proving it—Ram Prosad v. Emp. 49 All. 752, 25 A.L.J. 639, 28 Cr.L.J. 543. A District Magistrate passed an order directing prosecution for perjury or in the alternative for an offence under Sec. 182 I. P. C. It was held that the option of that kind was not an order at all and therefore not valid—25 All. 234. If the offence is perjury, the Court directing the prosecution should specify the false statement in regard to which the prosecution is directed, and should not leave it to the Magistrate to fish about and find it; if the offence is in respect of a forged document, the Court should mention the forged portion of the document. Omission to specify these particulars amounts to a material irregularity calling for interference by the High Court in revision—38 All. 695; Kalyanji v. Ram Deen, 48 Mad. 395, 48 M.L.J. 290; 4 P.L.W. 44; 19 Cr.L.J. 169; Kalisadhan v. Nani Lal, 52 Cal. 478, 26 Cr.L.J. 1307. It is preferable that a Court making a complaint for perjury should quote the passages in the witness' evidence which form the basis of the complaint—Dwarka v. Makund, 24 A.L.J. 122, 26 Cr.L.J. 1506.

A mere clerical mistake in stating the offence does not make the complaint illegal, e.g., where the Magistrate in his complaint wrote by mistake "sec. 477 I. P. C." instead of sec. 465 I. P. C.—Bal Makund, 9 Lah. 678, 29 Cr.L.J. 652 (655).

An order under this section should disclose the materials upon which it is based; such an order is a judicial order; if it does not show the basis upon which it is passed, it is liable to be set aside in revision by the High Court—1 P.L.T. 717. The complaining Court must hold such inquiry that its order when sent to the Magistrate will amount to a complaint under sec. 200. For that purpose the complaining Court must decide upon and name the witnesses to be examined by the Magistrate; otherwise the complaint is liable to be dismissed on the ground that there are no witnesses. The Court must not leave it to the Magistrate to inquire and find out for himself who the witnesses may be—Kalyanji v. Ram Deen, 48 Mad. 395, 48 M.L.J. 290, 26 Cr.L.J. 801.

A Magistrate is competent under sec. 250 to order the complainant to pay compensation to the accused and also to direct the prosecution of the complainant under this section for bringing a false charge—Adikhan v. Alagan, 21 Mad. 237; Tuni Reddi, 27 Mad. 59; Beni Madhab v. Kumad, 30 Cal. 123; Allabur, 10 S.L.R. 162. (Contra—Bachu v Jagdam, 26 Cal. 181; Shib Nath v. Saraf, 22 Cal. 586). See page 719 ante. But the two orders must be simultaneous, where the Magistrate ordered the complainant to pay compensation to the accused under Sec 250, and three weeks later he passed an order under this section directing the issue of notice to the complainant to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for an offence under Sec 211 I. P. C., it was held that this latter order was not proper under the circumstances—Lalji Hari, 20 Cr. L.J. 226 (Pat.).

An order under this section which merely directs the prosecution of the accused, but omits to direct the accused to be taken before the First Class Magistrate, was held to be at most an irregularity cured by section 537 (b) of this Code—37 Mad 317. But it would not be so now, because clause (b) of section 537 which cured irregularities under section 476 has been omitted by the Amendment Act of 1923

A Magistrate passed the following order. "Whereas D instituted a false case before the S. I. of Police, I therefore sanction the prosecution of D under sec. 211 I. P. C. and send the proceeding to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for favour of disposal. The prosecution is sanctioned under sec. 476 Cr. P. Code." Held that the order could not be treated as a complaint in proper form under this section. The proceeding against D based on such a complaint must be quashed—Durjodhan v Emp, 52 Cal. 666, 26 Cr.L.J. 1459, A.L.R. 1925 Cal. 1226

Recording Reasons:—This section merely states that the Judge should record a finding; it does not state that the finding should be supported by reasons, or that it should contain issues for decision—Lakhmichand, 21 S.L.R. 43, 27 Cr.L.J. 1249 (1250).

Second Complaint.—Where a previous application by a party asking the Court to make a complaint was dismissed for non-prosecution, the Court is not thereby precluded from itself making a complaint, if it is expedient in the interests of justice—Harekrishna, 8 Pat 736

1249. Effect of reversal of the order directing prosecution :—If an order under section 476 (1) directing an inquiry by a Magistrate of the First Class is set aside, it is just and proper that proceedings under sub-section (2) before that Magistrate must also cease; the Magistrate cannot proceed with the inquiry any further—6 L.B.R. 49. Thus, where in a suit on a registered bond alleged to have been executed by the defendant, the Munsiff held that the bond was genuine, and directed the prosecution of the defendant, who had denied the execution of the bond, for an offence under section 193 I. P. C. and sent the defendant to the nearest First Class Magistrate to be tried for the offence, but on appeal the judgment of the Munsiff was reversed by the Sub-Judge who held that the bond was not genuine and that the defendant had not executed it, it was held that the result of the judgment of the Appellate Court must be taken to be that the order for the prosecution of the defendant was not maintainable and that the inquiry into the case of the defendant by the First Class Magistrate must be stopped and should proceed no further; and that if the defendant had been convicted by the Magistrate, the conviction would be set aside by the High Court, although the defendant did not move the High Court to quash the proceeding taken against him—Kanullah, 12 C.W.N. 1. But where a Magistrate dismissed a complaint and directed the prosecution of the complainant under this section, and the Sessions Judge directed further inquiry setting aside the order of dismissal, but passed no order in respect of the order of prosecution, it was held that the order of prosecution remained good until it was quashed and the Magistrate to whom the case was sent was competent to continue the inquiry—21 M.L.J. 795. If an order directing prosecution is set aside by the High Court as not being in proper form, it does not debar the Court from instituting fresh proceedings by making a complaint in proper form—Durjodhan v. Emp, 52 Cal. 666, 26 Cr.L.J. 1459.

1250. First Class Magistrate:—Under the old section, the Court before which an offence was committed had to send the case for inquiry or trial to the nearest First Class Magistrate; and it was not necessary that such Magistrate should be a Magistrate having jurisdiction over the offence. The order making the transfer was of itself sufficient to confer jurisdiction on such Magistrate—Nagappa, 16 Mad. 461, 20 Cr. L.J. 202 (Pat). The power to send the case to the nearest Magistrate of the First Class was quite irrespective of the local jurisdiction of the Magistrate to whom the offender was forwarded; section 177 in no way curtailed the power under this section—Ratanlal 89. See also 43 Cal. 542 where the High Court sent the case to the nearest first class Magistrate who had no local jurisdiction over the case. But in a Sind case, it was held that the word 'nearest' was merely directory; it did not confer jurisdiction, and the Magistrate to whom an accused had to be sent under this section must be a Magistrate having local jurisdiction over the offence—1 S.L.R. 84. To remove this conflict of opinion, it has now been expressly laid down that the Magistrate to whom the accused is to be sent must be a Magistrate having jurisdiction, thus adopting the view of the Sind case.

If a High Court or Chief Presidency Magistrate takes action under this section, he shall send the case to a Presidency Magistrate, see para 3 of sub-section (1). In this para as originally framed by the Amendment Act of 1923, the words were "Chief Presidency Magistrate;" but the word 'Chief' has been omitted by the Cr.P.C. Amendment Act II of 1926. "This amendment proposes to make all Presidency Magistrates Magistrates of the first class for the purpose of sec. 476 (1). At present, if a Chief Presidency Magistrate wishes to take action, it is necessary for him to send the case to the first class Magistrate outside the Presidency town, because the other Presidency Magistrates are not first class Magistrates for the purpose of this section"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India, 1925, Part V, p. 215). Such a difficulty arose in the case of Emp. v. Mackay, 53 Cal. 350 (F.B.), 30 C.W.N. 276, 27 Cr.L.J. 385. In this case the accused gave false evidence before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, whereupon he drew up a complaint for an offence under sec. 193 1. P. Code. This complaint he preferred in his own Court (i.e.

to himself), because the other Presidency Magistrates were not first class Magistrates; then he transferred the complaint under sec. 192 Cr. P. Code to the Third Presidency Magistrate. The Full Bench decided that the procedure adopted by the Chief Presidency Magistrate in making the complaint to himself was irregular, though not absolutely illegal. The present amendment, however, has removed this difficulty.

This section authorises the Court to send the accused to the First Class Magistrate; it does not permit the Court to commit him to the Sessions—3 Bom. L.R. 185

The Court should specify the Magistrate to whom the case is sent; an order that the case be sent to the Magisterial authorities for investigation is not sufficient—Nurpat, 4 N.W.P. 66.

1251. Power of Magistrate to whom case is sent:— The Magistrate to whom the case is sent under this section must proceed according to law, and dispose of the case—Amruta, 7 B.H.C.R. 29; Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 26 Bom 785; Arjan Paramanik, 31 Cal 664. He cannot stop the inquiry and refuse to take cognizance of the offence—Q. E. v. Rachappa, 13 Bom 109, and cannot return the case to the Court which sent it—12 W.R. 41

The Magistrate receiving a case under section 476 cannot act under section 202. The latter section enables a Magistrate who is not satisfied as to the truth of the complaint to postpone the issue of process and to direct a local investigation. Now, section 476 presupposes that the Court (Civil, Criminal or Revenue) making the reference to the Magistrate must be of opinion that there is ground for inquiry into the offence in respect of which the case is sent to the Magistrate. This shows that section 476 precludes the application of section 202, and that there can be no room for the investigation which is contemplated by that section—21 Cr L.J. 310 (Nag.).

The expression 'proceed according to law' in sub-section (2) requires the Magistrate receiving the reference to proceed under Chapters XVIII to XXI of the Code according to the nature of the offence supposed to have been committed. Chapter XVII has of course no application, in as much as the accused must necessarily appear before the Magistrate as a consequence of the reference itself—21 Cr L.J. 310

The Magistrate to whom a case has been sent is competent to discharge the accused person, if in his opinion the evidence against the accused is insufficient—Rachappa, 13 Bom 109 (113). He has power to dismiss the complaint under sec. 203—Gopal Barik, 34 Cal 42 (46). If the Magistrate passes an order of discharge, the Sessions Judge can order further inquiry under sec. 436—Peary Lal v Sagar Mal, 49 All. 230, 27 Cr L.J. 1130.

If the complaint under this section is made without jurisdiction, the Magistrate to whom the case is sent is competent to dismiss the complaint—Kulandai v Ramasami, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 431, 12 I.C. 644. The Magistrate while dismissing the case and acquitting the accused cannot direct compensation to be paid to the accused. Thus, wh decree-holder complained to the Civil Court of obstruction by the judgment-debtor under this section, and after the trial and acquittal of the accused the Magistrate directed the decree-holder to pay compensation, it was held that the order was not valid, since the decree-holder was not the complainant. The real complainant was the Civil Court which directed the prosecution of the accused—14 Bom.L.R. 1166.

The Magistrate is competent to proceed against persons not named in the order of the Court directing the prosecution under this section. The Code provides for taking cognizance of offences and not of offenders, and a Magistrate who has legally taken cognizance of an offence on an order under section 476 has jurisdiction to proceed against any one who may be proved by the evidence to be concerned in the offence, whether he was mentioned in the order or not—21 C.W.N. 950; 1917 P.R. 34; Waman, 43 Bom. 300.

1252. Limit of time for taking action :—This section does not limit the time within which action should be taken, and there is no legal necessity to proceed under this section immediately after the original trial or proceedings in which the offence complained of is said to have been committed—19 A.L.J. 819, Waman, 43 Bom. 300, 7 S.L.R. 187; Attar Singh, 1916 P.R. 29, 18 Cr.L.J. 337 (339); 19 Cr.L.J. 981, 5 O.L.J. 622, 20 Cr.L.J. 724 (Pat.); Seshamma v. Venkamma, 22 L.W. 863, 27 Cr.L.J. 280 (282), Tilak Panday, 37 All. 344, 13 A.L.J. 466, Lakshmidas, 32 Bom. 184 (190, 191). But still it is desirable that an order under this section should be made either at the close of the proceeding or so shortly thereafter that it may be reasonably said that the order is a part of the proceeding—In re Rahimadulla, 31 Mad. 140, 20 Cr.L.J. 184, 20 Cr.L.J. 286; 1916 P.W.R. 53; Maung Ba Hla, 18 Cr.L.J. 331 (332) (Bur.), Aiyakannu v. Emp., 32 Mad. 49, 42 Mad. 422. If the Court thinks that action should be taken under this section, it ought to pass such order at or immediately after the termination of the original trial (and should not delay it by several months)—Begu Singh, 34 Cal. 551 (556) (F.B.), Bhim Lal v. Bisu, 40 Cal. 444, 17 C.W.N. 290, Kashi Shukul, 38 All. 695; Subbaraya, 15 M.L.J. 489, 2 Weir. 601 a, 3 Cr.L.J. 118. But no hard and fast rule can be laid down that delay is a ground for setting aside an order for prosecution. It may, under certain circumstances, be almost a sufficient ground in itself, but in other cases it may be no ground at all. It is possible to imagine a case in which the commission of an alleged offence may not have actually come to light for many months or even years after it had been committed. But a prosecution for false complaint under sec 211 I. P. C. should be ordered as soon as the complaint is dismissed as false, and not many months afterwards, because the facts justifying the prosecution are known to the Court at the time when the complaint is dismissed—Emp. v. Baldeo Prosad, 46 All. 851 (852). A delay of three months was considered too long—Maung Ba, 18 Cr.L.J. 331 (332). In 20 Cr.L.J. 226 (Pat.) a delay of three weeks was held to be too much under the circumstances of the case. In fact, each case would depend upon its own circumstances, so that no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to within what time a complaint should be made under sec. 476, and in view of the amendment made in this section and the enactment of the two new sections 476A and 476B it is no longer necessary that the proceeding under sec. 476 should be taken immediately after the termination of the original proceeding. But, of course a complaint made after the lapse of a considerable time would be open to the objection that it was made after an undue delay—Seshamma v. Venkamma, 22 L.W. 863, 27 Cr.L.J. 280 (282).

Where an appeal is preferred against the original case, the Court is justified in waiting till the disposal of the appeal, before directing a prosecution under this section—Attar Singh, 18 Cr L J 337 (338), 1916 P.R. 29; Gendan Singh, 3 C L.J. 302, Shri Nana Maharaj, 16 Bom. 729, 6 Cal 308, 4 Lah. 58. See sub-section (3).

Where proceedings for directing a prosecution are commenced in the course of a judicial proceeding or so soon thereafter as to make the former substantially a continuation of the latter, the final order directing the prosecution will not be vitiated by the fact that it was passed more than a year afterwards—1919 M.W.N. 112. But the Court will set aside an order directing a prosecution if it is passed so long after the offence that the delay is oppressive or scandalous—Ibid.

1253. Revision:—Power of Sessions Judge—A Sessions Judge has no power to interfere with an order under section 476, nor with a complaint under section 195 made by a Magistrate—Ankanna, 23 Mad. 205 (206), Gopal Barik, 34 Cal. 42 (45). If the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the order should be set aside, he should refer the matter to the High Court—Kanhu v. Natabar, 15 Cr L.J. 1 (Cal), Arjun v. Bira, 15 Cr L.J. 16 (17). It is the High Court which alone has the power to interfere with an order under sec. 476; a Sessions Judge has no such power—Gopal Barik, supra.

Power of High Court:—In Eranpoli Athan, 26 Mad 98, it was held that the effect of the words “as if upon complaint made and recorded under section 200” was that the order under this section was merely a complaint and not an order, and, as such, was not subject to revision by the High Court. Whereas in various other cases it was laid down that these words did not mean that the proceedings of the Court directing prosecution were to be taken merely as a complaint and not as an order; the order of prosecution was therefore subject to revision—Ottupura Narayanan, 33 Mad 48 (F.B.), Srinivasalu, 21 Mad 124; In re Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 26 Bom 785, Nusserwanji Ratanlal 895; Gopal Barik, 34 Cal. 42 (46), 20 Cal. 349, Mathura Das, 16 All. 80. The decision in 26 Mad 98 (supra) must be deemed as overruled by the Full Bench case of 33 Mad 48. In Q. E. v. Narakka, 13 Mad. 144, it was held that the High Court had no power to interfere on appeal with a complaint duly made by a Court under sec. 476, but the Judges indicated that they were of opinion that it sufficient cause were shown they might have interfered on revision. Further, it is the intention of the Legislature that an order under this section is subject to revision. This will be evident from the amendment made in 1923 to the effect that the Court shall record a finding. "In order to give effect to our decision that proceedings under sec. 476 should be subject to revision we have introduced words which will make it necessary for the Court to record an order"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

1254. When High Court will interfere and when not :—Orders purporting to be made under this section are open to revision by the High Court when they have been made during proceedings held entirely without jurisdiction—Suryanarayana, 29 Mad 100. When the Lower Court has proceeded upon merely fanciful grounds or grounds so obviously wrong that it could not be said to have formed a serious judicial opinion at all, then the High Court will interfere and set aside the order of the Court below—In re Alamdar, 23 All 249; In re Parshotamdas, 25 Bom L.R. 282; 10 N.L.R. 177; Abdul Husen, 9 N.L.R. 184, 15 Cr L.J. 33 (34), but where the Lower Court has arrived at a judicial opinion on substantial grounds, and the order shows that the Court has acted with circumspection and mature deliberation, the order should not be interfered with merely because the High Court disagrees with that opinion—In re Alamdar, 23 All 249; 4 A.L.J. 803; Abdul Husen, supra, Daulat, 14 N.L.R. 16, 18 Cr.L.J. 1015 (1016), where the undisputed and indisputable facts speak for themselves, and on those facts a responsible officer of the Government after obviously careful consideration, has sought to prosecute the petitioner in order to vindicate public justice, and the conditions laid down in secs 195 and 476 have been observed, mere technicalities should not be permitted to interfere with the course of justice—In re Ram Prasad, 37 Cal. 13 (21). The question whether a complaint should be made under sec 476 is almost invariably a matter of discretion, and the High Court is always loath to interfere except in extraordinary cases—Ranjit Narain v. Ram Bahadur, 5 Pat 262, 7 P.L.T. 114. If the trial Court or the Court to which it is subordinate thinks that no complaint should be made, then it is not desirable that the High Court should interfere—Somabhai v. Aditbhai, 48 Bom 401, 26 Bom.L.R. 289. Revision should be granted if there be some error of law, some irregularity, some abuse or failure to exercise jurisdiction, and not simply because the Revisional Court has formed a different opinion from that of the Court below about the case—Ganda Singh v. Bisali, 1902 P.R. 18. Where an order was made on insufficient grounds and no further action was taken by the Court for more than a year, it was held that this was a case in which the revisional powers of the High Court might properly be exercised and the order set aside—Zalim Singh, 1901 A.W.N. 177.

Formerly, when sec. 195 enabled a private person to obtain sanction to institute a prosecution, and when no appeal was provided for from an order by a Magistrate under sec. 476, it was sometimes desirable for the High Court to interfere in revision, because sanction was frequently used merely as a means of blackmail, and orders under sec. 476 were passed occasionally by inexperienced Magistrates. Now, after the change effected in 1923, the choice of instituting a prosecution is not placed in the hands of private persons, but is left to the Court, and the person who is the subject of the complaint has a definite right of appeal to a superior Court. This being the situation, it does not seem to be the function of the High Court, unless the circumstances are altogether outside the ordinary, to examine in revision the merits of the complaint with a view to discovering whether it is likely to result in a conviction. Moreover, when a Magistrate presiding over a Court and a responsible Court of Appeal are agreed that a prosecution is necessary in the interests of justice and in accordance with public policy, it would be extremely difficult for the High Court to interfere in revision and to declare that the prosecution is not in the interests of public policy—Behram v. Emp., 7 Lah. 108, 27 Cr.L.J. 776

Revision of proceedings of Civil and Revenue Courts:—When a Munsif or Sub-Judge or District Judge takes proceedings under this section, he acts as a Civil Court, and the proceedings cannot be interfered with by a Criminal Bench of the High Court in Revision under sec. 439. The power of revision under sections 435-439 is confined to the records of inferior criminal Courts. When an order is passed by a Civil Court making or refusing to make a complaint under this section, the High Court can interfere only under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code—Emp. v. Har Prasad, 40 Cal. 477, 17 C.W.N. 647, 14 Cr.L.J. 197, In re Bhup Kanwar, 26 All. 249, Salig Ram v. Ramji, 28 All. 554; Kashi Shukul, 38 All. 695; Banwari Lal v. Jhunka, 24 A.L.J. 217, 27 Cr.L.J. 278, Ram Narain, 27 Cr.L.J. 1021 (All.), Kali Prasad v. Bhuban, 8 C.W.N. 73; Babu Lal, 21 Cr.L.J. 270, 16 N.L.R. 23, Nga San v. Sookaram, 17 Cr.L.J. 82; Maung Po v. Mutu Kurpen, 10 Bur. L.T. 32, 17 Cr.L.J. 316 (317); Ko Maung v. Ma, 10 Bur.L.T. 13, 18 Cr.L.J. 121; Bismilla v. Shakir Ali, 4 Luck. 155, Karimulla v. Rameshwar, 51 All. 344; In re Chennanagoud, 26 Mad. 139; Abdul Haq v. Sheo Ram, 49 All. 536, 24 O.C. 367, Nawab Ali v. Madhuri, 3 O.W.N. 905, 28 Cr.L.J. 16, Thakur Das v. Emp., 17 O.C. 25 (31), 15 Cr.L.J. 217 (219). If the Civil Court (e.g. Munsif) refuses to institute a prosecution under this section, and this order of refusal is upheld by the Civil Appellate Court (e.g. Subordinate Judge), the High Court cannot interfere with the appellate order under sec. 439 of this Code but can do so only under sec. 115 of the Civil Pro. Code—Nawab Ali v. Madhuri, supra. An order of the Small Cause Court under sec. 476 of this Code directing a prosecution for perjury can be interfered with only under sec. 25 of the Pro. Small Cause Courts Act—Valab Das v. Maung Ba Than, 1 Rang. 372

Similarly, the High Court has no power in revision to interfere with an order passed by a Revenue Court under this section, the application for revision should be filed before the Board of Revenue—Abdool Raoof, 4 A.L.J. 701, 6 Cr.L.J. 350, 1902 A.W.N. 202, 39 All. 91, 15 Cr.L.J. 2 (Oudh); 36 Mad. 72 (per Sundara Ayyar J.)

In a Bombay case, however, the High Court, in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under secs. 435 and 439, interfered with an order ultra vires, but that does not prevent the Sessions Judge from making a complaint on his own initiative—Gulab v Emp, 26 Cr.L.J. 923 (924) (All.).

Sec. 476A must be distinguished from sec. 476B. If the subordinate Court has neither made a complaint nor rejected an application for the making of a complaint under sec. 476, then the superior Court can take action and make a complaint under sec. 476A. But where the subordinate Court has rejected an application for the making of a complaint, then the procedure which is contemplated by this Code is by way of an appeal to the superior Court under sec. 476B—Chandra Kumar v. Mathuriya, 52 Cal. 1009, 29 C.W.N. 1035, 26 Cr.L.J. 1569 (1570).

The word "rejected" means rejected on the merits; merely to allow the application to be withdrawn without consideration of the merits does not amount to rejection—Vasudevmal, 23 S.L.R. 37, 29 Cr.L.J. 1051.

476B. Any person on whose application any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court has refused to make a complaint under section 476 or section 476A, or against whom such a complaint has been made, may appeal to the Court to which such former Court is subordinate within the meaning of section 195 sub-section (3), and the superior Court may thereupon, after notice to the parties concerned, direct the withdrawal of the complaint or, as the case may be, itself make the complaint which the subordinate Court might have made under section 476, and if it makes such complaint, the provisions of that section shall apply accordingly.

This section has been newly added by section 128 of the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. Under the old law, when an application was made to a Munsiff asking him to take action under sec. 476, and the Munsiff refused to do so, it was held that no appeal lay to the District Judge against the order of the Munsiff—12 A.L.J. 684. This ruling is now rendered obsolete by the present section.

1257. Scope:—This section applies where a complaint has been made under sec. 476, which again refers to offences under clauses (b) and (c) of sec. 195. An offence under sec. 174 or 182 I. P. Code falls under clause (a) of sec. 195 and is therefore not an offence for which the Court can make a complaint under sec. 476. So, an order of a Magistrate or District Judge (as a public servant) making a complaint for an offence under sec. 174 or 182 I. P. Code is not appealable under sec. 476B—P. J. Money v. Emp, 6 Rang. 529, 29 Cr.L.J. 912; Brijendra, 28 Cr.L.J. 547 (All.). But the Appellate Court can withdraw the complaint under sec. 195 (5)—Brijendra, supra.

The right of appeal under this section does not survive on the death of the appellant before hearing, the appeal abates—Nihal v. Ramji, 47 All. 359, 26 Cr.L.J. 1008, A I.R. 1925 All. 620.

To which Court appeal will lie:—The appeal will lie to the Court to which the trial Court is subordinate. For the meaning of the term 'subordinate' see Note 631 under sec. 195

This section indicates with sufficient clearness that the Court to which the appeal lies is one to which the Court making or filing the complaint is subordinate; in other words, if it is a Civil Court which has made an order under sec 476, the appeal against such an order must lie to and be heard by the authority or tribunal to which such Civil Court is subordinate. Thus, if the order is made by a Munsif, the appeal would lie to the District Judge (i.e. the Appellate Court exercising Civil appellate jurisdiction) and the procedure of the appeal will be governed by the provisions of the Civil P. Code (and not of the Criminal Procedure Code)—Nasaruddin v. Emp., 53 Cal. 827, 28 Cr L.J. 92 (93).

Procedure in appeal:—In Hamid Ali v Madhusudan, 54 Cal. 355, 31 C W N. 281, A I.R. 1927 Cal 284, there was a difference of opinion among the Judges as to the procedure governing an appeal under sec 476B, Cr P. Code, from the order of a subordinate Civil Court (Sub-Judge) to a superior Civil Court (District Judge), Duval J., held that the appeal must be dealt with as a miscellaneous Civil appeal regulated by the procedure of O. XLI, Civil P Code; but Chotzner J was of opinion that the appeal must be dealt with as an ordinary Criminal appeal governed by the procedure of secs 422-424 Cr P Code. The opinion of Duval J has been followed in Mahendra v. Emp, 49 C L J 374, 1929 Cr. C. 54 (55)

The Appellate Court has no power to take any additional evidence under sec 428, for that section applies only to an appeal under Ch XXXI, and not to an appeal under sec 476B—Sam Vannia v Periaswami, 51 Mad. 603, 29 Cr.L.J. 445

If the Appellate Court accepts an appeal against an order refusing to make a complaint, it should itself make the complaint; an order directing the subordinate Court to file a complaint is illegal—Manir Ahmed v Jogesh, 55 Cal 1277, A I.R. 1929 Cal. 195.

Limitation —For the purposes of limitation, an appeal under this section is an "appeal under the Criminal Procedure Code" within the meaning of Articles 154 and 155, and not an "appeal under the Civil Procedure Code" under Article 152 or 156. See Chandra Kumar v. Mathuriya, 52 Cal. 1009, 29 C W N 1035, 26 Cr L.J 1569, Rajani v. Bistoo, 46 C.L.J. 40, 28 Cr L.J 840 (841); Sheo Prosad v Sheo Bans, 24 A.L.J 368, A.I.R. 1926 All 211 (212)

Transfer of appeal—An appeal made to the District Judge may be transferred by him to the Additional District Judge, and as the latter is competent to discharge any of the functions of a District Judge, under sec. 8 of the Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), the Additional Judge can make a complaint under this section—Narain Das, 49 All 792, 28 Cr. L.J. 549 (552) See also Karimulla v Rameshwar, 51 All 344, A I R. 1929 All. 774. In an Oudh case, it has been held that that under the provision of sec. 40 of the Oudh Courts Act, an appeal made under this section to a District Judge from the order of a Munsif refusing to make complaint cannot be transferred to a Subordinate Judge—Bismilla v Shakir Ali, 4 Luck. 155, 30 Cr.L.J. 382 (384).

Notice of appeal.—In an appeal against a refusal to make a complaint, the party entitled to receive notice is the accused person. But in an appeal against an order making a complaint, the party entitled to receive notice is the Crown, and not the person on whose application the complaint was made—Labha Mal v Wasawa, 29 P.L.R. 128, 29 Cr.L.J. 72.

Duty of Appellate Court.—The Appellate Court, in the case of appeals under this section, should reconsider the entire matter on the merits, and while allowing reasonable weight to the opinion of the Court below, should nevertheless reconsider the question of the propriety of the order appealed against, upon a complete review of the entire facts. If the Appellate Court is not satisfied that a prima facie case has been made out, the order appealed against must be set aside—Ram Charan v. Emp., 23 A L J 515, 26 Cr.L.J. 1126; Jagabandhu v. Abdul, 33 C.W.N. 945. Where the Court below has refused to make a complaint under sec 476, the superior Court in reversing the order of the Court below must give sufficient reasons for such reversal—Kalishadhan v. Nani Lal, 52 Cal 478, 26 Cr.L.J. 1307.

Where the subordinate Court (Munsif) refused to make a complaint under sec 476 on the ground that he had no jurisdiction, as the offence was not committed in relation to any proceeding in his Court, and the Appellate Court made a complaint under sec. 476B, without deciding whether the Munsif had jurisdiction or not to make the complaint, held that the complaint made by the Appellate Court was illegal and must be set aside. For, it is quite clear that if the Munsif had really no jurisdiction to make the complaint, the Appellate Court also had no power to make the complaint and ought to dismiss the appeal. For this reason, it was incumbent on the Appellate Court first of all to decide whether the Munsif had no jurisdiction—Kanai v. Makhani, 55 Cal. 836, 29 Cr.L.J. 483 (484).

Second Appeal from order under this section.—If the original Court has made or refused to make a complaint under sec 476, but on appeal the Appellate Court withdraws or makes a complaint under sec. 476B, no further appeal lies. Sec. 476B does not provide for a second appeal to the High Court from an order passed by the Appellate Court under sec 476B itself. It only contemplates an appeal from an order passed by the original Court under sec. 476, or from an order passed by a superior Court under sec. 476A—Mo On Khin v. N. K. M. Firm, 5 Rang 523, 29 Cr.L.J. 937 (938); Moldeen v. Miyassa, 51 Mad. 777, 55 M.L.J. 444, 29 Cr.L.J. 786; Somabhai v. Aditbhai, 43 Bom. 401

If a second appeal is made to the High Court, that Court may treat it as an application for revision—Kanai Lal v. Makhan Lal, 55 Cal. 836, 29 Cr.L.J. 483 (484).

Revision of order under this section:—The High Court will not ordinarily interfere in revision with an order of withdrawal of complaint passed under this section, except in extraordinary cases. The question whether a complaint should be made under sec. 476 is almost invariably a matter of discretion, and if the trial Court or the Court to which it is subordinate thinks that no complaint should be made or that the complaint should be withdrawn, then it would not be desirable that the High Court should interfere—Somabhai v. Adibhai, 48 Bom. 401 (403, 404), 26 Bom.L.R. 289, 25 Cr.L.J. 1123, A.L.R. 1924 Bom. 347. If an order under sec. 476B is passed by a Civil Appellate Court, the application for revision is governed by sec. 115, C. P. Code and not by sec. 439 Cr P. Code. See 49 All 536 cited in Note 1255 under sec 476 as to the High Courts power of revision under sec. 115 C. P. Code.

477. (Repealed).

Section 477 which has now been repealed by sec. 129 of the Cr. P.C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923, ran as follows:—

"477. (1) Subject to the provisions of section 444, a Court of Session may charge a person for any offence referred to in section 195 and committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, and may commit, or admit to bail and try, such person upon its own charge.

(2) Such Court may direct the Magistrate to cause the attendance of any witnesses for the purposes of the trial."

The reason of omitting this section has thus been stated by the Joint Committee (1922). "Section 477 is inconsistent with section 476 as proposed by the Bill because the latter section made it obligatory on the Court to make a complaint and send it to a first-class Magistrate. This defect has been removed by one of the amendments we have made in section 476, but we are doubtful whether section 477 should stand. We considered a proposal to enable a Court of Session to try a case committed to it after a complaint had been made by itself, but we do not think it desirable that a Court which has instituted the proceedings should dispose of the case and we have therefore repealed section 477."

478. (1) When any such offence is committed

Power of Civil and Revenue Courts to complete inquiry and commit to High Court or Court of Session.

before any Civil or Revenue Court, or brought under the notice of any Civil or Revenue Court in the course of a judicial proceeding, and the case is triable exclusively by the High Court or Court of Session, or such Civil or Revenue Court thinks that it ought to be tried by the High Court or Court of Session, such Civil or Revenue Court may, instead of sending the case under section 476 to a Magistrate for inquiry, itself complete the inquiry, and commit or hold to bail the accused person to take his trial before the High Court or Court of Session, as the case may be.

(2) For the purposes of an inquiry under this section the Civil or Revenue Court may * * exercise all the powers of a Magistrate; and its proceedings in such inquiry shall be conducted as nearly as may be in accordance with the provisions of Chapter XVIII and of Chapter XXXIII in cases where that Chapter applies, and shall be deemed to have been held by a Magistrate.

Change :—In sub-section (2), the words "subject to the provisions of section 443" have been omitted after the word "may," and the italicised words have been added, by section 28 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923. As a result of this Amendment, this section has been made applicable to European British subjects.

1258. Sections 476 and 478 —If a Sessions offence has been committed, the Civil Court taking proceedings under sec 476, has the option either to continue the proceedings under that section and send the case to a first class Magistrate, or to hold an inquiry under Ch. XVIII and pass an order of commitment under sec. 478. And if the Civil Court in the exercise of this option elects to proceed under sec. 478, the accused cannot object on the ground that the Civil Court has by proceeding under sec 478 deprived him of his right of appeal (there being no appeal from an order under sec 478) which he would have had (under sec. 476B) if the Court had proceeded under sec 476—Rameshwar Lal, 49 All 898, 25 A L J 555, 28 Cr L J 668 (669). The procedure of this section is only alternative to that prescribed in section 476 as indicated by the words "instead of sending the case under section 476" But this section does not give any power to a Court on failure of one to adopt the other method of procedure; and therefore if the accused has been sent by the Civil Court to a First Class Magistrate under section 476, and has been discharged by the Magistrate, the Civil Court has no power to revive the case against the accused and adopt the procedure prescribed by this section—Raoji Moreshwar, Ratanlal 959 (960). In the Allahabad case (49 All 898) the Court acted under sec 478 before sending the case to a Magistrate.

Section 476 merely lays down the procedure that may be followed in certain cases, and does not confer any new jurisdiction on a Court. That section does not by itself give to the Civil Court the powers of commitment in the cases referred to in that section, and that is why section 478 has been enacted—Imp v Popat, 4 Bom. 487.

An order passed under sec 476 is open to appeal (see sec 476B), but there is no right of appeal against an order under sec 478—Rameshwar Lal, supra.

1259. Scope :—The power of a Civil Court to commit is limited to cases which are triable exclusively by the Court of Session or which ought to be tried by such Court, and to such cases only when the offence charged has been committed before the Civil Court or brought under its notice—Popat, 4 Bom 287. The Court has power to commit under this section, even if some of the offences imputed to the accused are triable exclusively by the Court of Session, and the others are not so triable—Rameshwar Lal, supra.

An Assistant Collector concerned in mutation proceeds is acting as a Revenue Court—Lachman Prosad, 6 O.W.N. 953.

This section, like section 476, must be taken as supplementary to section 195. The expression "any such offence" means an offence referred to under section 195 and committed under the circumstances mentioned in section 195. And therefore a Civil Court cannot direct a committal for offences under sections 463 and 471 I.P.C. unless the documents have been given in evidence, as mentioned in clause (c) of section 195. If the documents have been merely put in Court but not given in evidence, section 195 cannot apply and section 478 also will not apply—Abdul Khadar v. Meera Saheb, 15 Mad. 224. But in In re Devji, 18 Bom. 581, Akhil Chandra v. Q. E., 22 Cal 1004 and Khushali, 40 All. 116 it has been held that the words "any such offence" in this section simply mean an offence referred to in section 195 and not an offence qualified by the circumstances mentioned in section 195. But this view is no longer correct. See this subject fully discussed in Note 1237 under section 476.

Procedure :—Sub-section (2) lays down that the procedure of Chapter XVIII must be followed as nearly as possible. Where the Court recorded very brief statements of the accused, and passed a commitment order without examining the witnesses in the presence of the accused and without explaining the charge, held that the Court not having followed the procedure as laid down in Ch XVIII, the order was illegal—Babu Prasad, 40 All 32. A Civil Court has no power to order a commitment merely on proceedings held in the civil suit, without holding the preliminary inquiry required by this section—Rangatoonee, 22 W.R. 52.

If an Assistant Sessions Judge before whom a false deposition is given transfers the case to himself as District Magistrate under sec. 190(c) for inquiry, he virtually takes action under sec. 478—Emp. v. Rashid, 9 Bom L.R. 212, 5 Cr.L.J. 202.

No appeal :—There is no appeal from an order passed under this section. "It is not for me to speculate why no right of appeal has been given against an order passed under sec 478. The fact remains that there is no right of appeal against such order"—Rameshwar Lal, 49 All. 898, 28 Cr.L.J. 668 (669).

1260. Revision :—Though certain Magisterial powers have been given to the Civil Court under this section for the purpose of investigating cases of contempt of Court, it still remains, while exercising those powers, a Civil Court, and is not an 'inferior Criminal Court' within the meaning of section 435. It is not therefore competent to the Sessions Judge to revise the proceeding of the Civil Court—Ramachandra v. Subramania, 5 M.L.J. 226. In Salig Ram v. Ramji Lal, 28 All 554 (561), Knox J. has expressed an opinion (obiter) that the express language of sub-section (2) of this section shows that the Civil Court is converted into a Criminal Court for the time.

479. When any such commitment is made by a Civil or Revenue Court, the Court shall send the charge with the order of commitment and the record of the case to the Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or other Magistrate authorized to commit for trial, and such Magistrate shall bring the case before the High Court or Court of Session, as the case may be, together with the witnesses for the prosecution and defence.

480. (1) When any such offence as is described in section 175, section 178, section 179, section 180 or section 228 of the Indian Penal Code is committed in the view or presence of any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court, the Court may cause the offender * * * to be detained in custody and at any time before the rising of the Court on the same day may, if it thinks fit, take cognizance of the offence and sentence the offender to fine not exceeding two hundred rupees, and in default of payment, to simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, unless such fine be sooner paid.

(2) Nothing in Section 29A or in Chapter XXXIII shall be deemed to apply to proceedings under this section.

Change —The words "whether he is an European British Subject or not" have been omitted in sub-section (1), and the words "section 29A or in Chapter XXXIII" in sub-section (2) have been substituted for the words "section 443 or 444," by section 29 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923.

1261. Scope and application of Section.—This section and the next deal with what is known in English law as direct contempt, that is, contempt committed in the view or presence of the Court. The High Court has got greater powers (not by virtue of this Code or the Penal Code but by virtue of the common law of England) to punish for contempts committed out of Court, e.g., comments in newspapers on proceedings pending in the High Court—Surendra Nath Banerjee, 10 Cal 109 (P.C.) See also In re Claridge, 14 Bom L.R. 231, 13 Cr.L.J. 461; In re Amrita Bazar Patrika, 45 Cal 169 (F.B.), 21 C.W.N. 177; 19 Cr.L.J. 530, Weston v Editor, Bengalee, 15 C.W.N. 771; In Banks, 26 C.L.J. 401; 19 Cr.L.J. 449; In re Satyabodha, 24 Bom.

928, 23 Cr.L.J. 644; In re Taylor, 26 C.L.J. 245, 19 Cr.L.J. 402, 44 I.C. 930

As to the power of the High Court to punish for contempts of subordinate Courts, see the Contempt of Courts Act XII of 1926, recently enacted. See also Balakrishna, 46 Bom. 592, 24 Bom L.R. 16; In re Venkat Rao, 21 M.L.J. 832 (F.B.); and In re M. K. Gandhi, 22 Bom L.R. 368, 21 Cr.L.J. 835, 58 I.C. 915 (F.B.). The rulings in Moti Lal Ghosh, 41 Cal 173 (A. B. Patrika case) and in 17 C.W.N. 1285 (where it was held that the High Court had no power to punish for contempts of mofussil Courts) are no longer good law in view of the above new Act.

This section empowers a Magistrate to deal with the accused only when he is shown to have committed one of the offences enumerated in this section—In re Davuluri Veerayya, 5 M.L.T. 286.

The offence of contempt must be committed during a judicial proceeding, in order to come under this section. An inquiry by a Magistrate into a case of breach of the peace in order to ascertain whether he should make a report to his official superior and to satisfy himself whether he should act under section 108, is not a judicial proceeding, and a person behaving insolently to the Magistrate in such proceeding cannot be proceeded against under this section—2 Weir 605.

A Tahsildar or a Naib-Tahsildar has to perform various miscellaneous duties, most of which are of a non-judicial character, and the mere fact that on a particular day he has to try a case does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that he is doing judicial business during the whole of that day. If it appears that at the time when the incident took place, he was engaged in conversation with two persons who were sitting in his room, it is doubtful whether it can be said that he was sitting in any stage of a judicial proceeding, and it is therefore doubtful whether he can take summary action under this section—Dalip Singh v. Crown, 2 Lah. 308 (312), 23 Cr.L.J. 9.

The offence must be committed in the view and presence of the Court, to attract the provisions of this section. The plaintiff in a suit was directed to appear with certain account books on a specified date and to give his deposition before a Small Cause Court, failing which the suit was to be decided against him. The plaintiff did not appear as directed and the Munsiff called upon him to show cause why he should not be fined for disobedience. Cause was shown by a petition but there was no appearance, and he was fined for contempt of Court. It was held that the case did not come under this section, as there was no offence committed in the view or presence of the Court, and the order was therefore without jurisdiction—Chagmal v. K. E., 23 C.W.N. 389, 20 Cr.L.J. 373.

The provisions of this section must be applied then and there, or at any rate before the rising of the Court in whose view or presence a contempt has been committed, if it considers that it can be properly and adequately dealt with under this section. Therefore, where a Magistrate in whose presence a contempt was committed, after taking cognizance of the matter, postponed passing final orders in order to afford the accused an opportunity of showing cause why such order should not be passed, and eventually fined him several days after, it was held that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was irregular, and that the proper procedure would have been to detain the accused and to deal with the matter at once or before rising—11 All. 361. But rising for a short time in the middle of the day (for luncheon) does not amount to 'rising of the Court' for the day—Emp. v Venkat Rao, 46 Bom. 973 (1979), 24 Bom L R. 386

Where the Court deals with the offence of contempt of Court under this section, it cannot pass the sentence prescribed by sec. 228 I.P.C. but should under this section limit the punishment to Rs 200 or with imprisonment in default for 30 days—2 Weir 603. If it considers the fine of Rs. 200 too light a sentence for the offence, it ought to refer the case under section 482 to some competent Magistrate—Buham Khan, 10 W R. 47; 6 M.H.C.R. App 16

A substantive sentence of imprisonment cannot be passed under this section in a case under section 228 I P C—10 W R 47. The imprisonment will be only in default of fine

1262. Contempt.—An application for transfer of a case from a particular Court on the ground of probable miscarriage of justice is not a contempt of that Court—Sirdar Buksh, 1869 P R 34, Emp v. Venkat Rao, 24 Bom L R 386, 46 Bom 973 (1976). Even if in such an application the accused uses certain unhappy remarks concerning the Magistrate from whose Court the case is sought to be transferred, it cannot be presumed that the accused intended to insult that Court—38 All. 284; 1898 A W.N. 145. A refusal by a witness to affix his thumb-mark to the record of his deposition is not an offence under sec. 180 I.P.C.—Crown v. Fateh Ali, 1912 P.R. 8. A witness on being asked the name of his grandfather replied that he did not remember it. Held that it did not amount to a refusal to answer a question (sec 179 I P C) and he could not be proceeded against under sec 480 Cr P C—Kallu v Emp, 27 Cr. L J 252 (Lah). But a refusal by an accused to sign a statement under sec 364 of this Code is punishable under sec 180 I P C—39 All. 399, (contra—Sirsapa, 4 Bom 15; 3 L B R 199). Walking with creaking shoes near the Court-room does not ipso facto lead to the conclusion that the accused intended to insult or interrupt the Court in its work—In re Davuluri Veerayya, 5 M L T 286. Courts should not be unduly sensitive about their dignity, and a mere audible remark by the accused which interrupted the proceedings of a Court is not enough to sustain a conviction unless the accused intended to interrupt the Court—29 M L J 274, Dalip Singh v Crown, 2 Lah 308 (312). In the absence of any intention to insult the Court and of any interruption to the Court, a person accused of a scuffle in the verandah of a Court is not guilty of an offence under sec 228 I P C.—20 Cr L J 777 (All). Prevarication by a witness may, though it does not necessarily, amount to contempt of Court—Reg v. Jaimal, 10 B.H.C.R 69. See also 15 W R 5, Auba, 4 B H C R. 6; Pandu, 4 B H C.R 7. Where a witness refused to answer the questions put to him in his examination-in-chief and cross-examination unless an application made by him for stay of proceedings was granted, held, that this conduct amounted to contempt—1918 P.R. 14. An accused person who during the hearing of a case makes an impertinent threat to a witness in the box commits an offence under sec. 228 I.P.C.—45 All 272. An irrelevant question put by a pleader to a witness cannot amount to contempt, though a persistence in vexatious or irrelevant questions after warning might amount to contempt—Azeemoola, 1867 P.R. 44. But every little insistence on the part of a pleader in the conduct of his case should not be turned into an occasion for a criminal trial, unless the pleader's conduct is so clearly vexatious as to lead to an inference that his intention is to interrupt or insult the Court—Dattatraya, 6 Bom L.R. 541; 15 W.R. 62; Surendra Nath Banerjee, 10 C.W.N. 1062. Any trivial incident such as laugh or hesitation in speaking is not a contempt—4 M.H.C.R. 146. A witness who having a document in his possession will not produce it, is guilty of contempt, and can be dealt with under this section—Premchand Dowlatram, 12 Bom. 63. An accused who in the course of his statement under section 342 calls the Judge a 'prejudiced Judge' and being called upon by the Judge to withdraw the remarks refuses to do so, is guilty of contempt, and can be proceeded against under this section—Emp. v. Venkat Rao, 46 Bom. 973, 24 Bom.L.R. 386, 23 Cr.L.J. 325.

A comment on a pending case, if it has or may have the effect of prejudicing the fair trial of an accused person, amounts to a contempt of Court—In re Claridge, 14 Bom L.R. 231, 13 Cr.L.J. 461. An article in a newspaper reflecting on a party to a suit, more especially when he is under cross-examination, is a contempt of Court—Veston v Editor, Bengalee, 15 C.W.N. 771. But such contempts can be punished only by the High Court. See Note 1261 above.

1263. Appeal:—A summary order under this section by a Sessions Judge for an offence under section 228 I.P.C. imposing a fine on a person for intentional insult to the Judge when sitting in a stage of judicial proceeding, amounts to a trial, though by a summary mode, and is therefore, appealable—K. Chappu Menon, 4 M.H.C.R. 146. A Sessions Judge cannot refuse to hear an appeal against an order under this section, because in his opinion the matter is a mere trifle. He is bound to hear the appeal and come to a finding whether the conviction is legal or not—Ratanlal 978.

481. (1) In every such case the Court shall record the facts constituting the offence, with the statement (if any) made by the offender, as well as the finding and sentence.

(2) If the offence is under section 228 of the Indian Penal Code, the record shall show the nature and stage of the judicial proceeding in which the Court interrupted or insulted was sitting, and the nature of the interruption or insult.

1264. Record :—The procedure prescribed by sec. 480 for punishing a contempt committed in facie curiae is of a summary character, and the Court taking action under that section is therefore required to record certain particulars mentioned in sec. 481. When the guilt or innocence of a person depends upon the exact words used by him, it is the duty of the Magistrate to record them with a reasonable degree of precision, and his omission to record the nature of the insult constitutes a great defect in the procedure—Dalip Singh v. Crown, 2 Lah 308 (311). A Criminal Court inflicting a fine for contempt of Court should specifically record its reasons, and the facts constituting the contempt, with any statements the offender may make, as well as the finding and sentence—Panchanada, 4 M.H.C.R. 229. The directions contained in this section are mandatory, and the omission to record the particulars as directed by the section is fatal to the proceedings—Surendra Nath Banerjee, 10 C.W. N. 1062. No person can be punished for contempt unless the specific offence charged against him be distinctly stated and an opportunity given him of answering the charge. The omission to record the statement of a legal practitioner charged for contempt is a fatal defect to the prosecution—Krishna Chandra v Emp, 37 C.L.J 535, 24 Cr L J 798.

Subsection (2) lays down that where a person is charged with an offence under section 228 I.P.C., the record convicting him must show the stage of the judicial proceeding interrupted, and the nature of the interruption, and the evidence must establish that such interruption was intentional; omission to do so is a vital irregularity in procedure not curable by sec 537, and the conviction is not proper—Jattu Mal, 29 P.L.R 653, 29 Cr.L.J. 880, In re Kukati, 15 Cr.L.J 621 (Mad) ; Khushal Singh v Emp., 1886 P.R. 36

482. (1) If the Court in any case considers that a person accused of any of the offences referred to in Section 480 and committed in its view or presence should be imprisoned otherwise than in default of payment of fine, or that a fine exceeding two hundred rupees should be imposed upon him, or such Court is for any other reason of opinion that the case should not be disposed of under Section 480, such Court, after recording the facts constituting the offence and the statement of the accused as hereinbefore provided, may forward the case to a Magistrate having jurisdiction to try the same, and may require security to be given for the appearance of such accused.

before such Magistrate, or if sufficient security is not given, shall forward such person in custody to such Magistrate.

(2) The Magistrate, to whom any case is forwarded under this section, shall proceed to hear the complaint against the accused person in manner hereinbefore provided.

1265. Scope:—Under section 480 the Magistrate can award a fine up to Rs. 200, or a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine. If, however, the Magistrate considers that a substantive sentence of imprisonment or a heavier fine is demanded by the circumstances of the case, he ought to forward the case to another Magistrate under this section—6 M.H.C.R. App. 16, Buham Khan, 10 W.R. 47.

Section 482 need not be read along with section 480, and section 482 does not require a Magistrate to draw up proceedings on the same day that the offence is committed—Bepin Chandra Pal v Emp, 35 Cal 161.

Procedure—If a Court considers a substantive sentence of imprisonment necessary, it should record a statement of the facts constituting the contempt and the statement of the accused, and forward the case to another Magistrate—Rutton Sahoo, 11 W.R. 49.

A Barrister in the course of the trial of a case in which he was the complainant, used insulting language to the Sub-Magistrate. The Magistrate then recorded proceedings required by this section but failed to take any statement from the accused explanatory of his conduct, as the accused left the Court at once. It was held that the omission to take such statement was not fatal to the proceedings, and the case ought not to be dismissed on that ground—2 Weir 604.

483. When the Local Government so directs, any

Registrar or any Sub-Registrar appointed under the Indian Registration Act, 1908, shall be deemed to be a Civil Court within the meaning of Sections 480 and 482.

When Registrar or Sub-Registrar to be deemed a Civil Court within Ss. 480 and 482.

1266. A Registrar or Sub-Registrar may be deemed to be a Court only for the purposes of secs. 480 and 482; and it cannot be implied that he is to be deemed a Court for ordinary purposes. A provision that a particular officer may for a particular purpose be deemed a Court does not warrant the extension of that provision so as by inference to produce a group of rules in conflict with the general system. A provision such as that contained in this section is an excrescence on the general system; such an exceptional provision should not be drawn out into all its logical consequences—Q. E. v. Talja, 12 Bom. 36

484. When any Court has under Section 480 or Section 482 adjudged an offender to punishment or forwarded him to a Magistrate for trial for refusing or omitting to do anything which he was lawfully required to do, or for any intentional insult or interruption, the Court may, in its discretion, discharge the offender or remit the punishment on his submission to the order or requisition of such Court, or on apology being made to its satisfaction.

1267. Discharge on submission or apology :—Too much notice should not be taken of a hasty language used by rustic litigants during a moment of excitement, without any serious intention of insulting the Court. If the offender offers an apology or adopts a submissive attitude, an admonition by the Court, or at the most a petty fine, would be sufficient—Jit Singh v Crown, 1912 P.W.R. 23

Power of High Court to interfere —A pleader was tried and punished for contempt by a Munsiff for having used certain words which the latter thought to be derogatory to his position. The pleader gave an assurance that the words in question had no reference to the Court, but the Munsiff declined to accept the assurance. The District Judge refused to interfere on appeal by the pleader. The High Court on revision directed the Munsiff to consider whether it was not a case in which he himself should take action under section 484 of the Code. Upon the Munsiff declining to do so because the pleader had not withdrawn the words in question, the High Court held that the assurance given by the pleader should be taken as sufficient, and remitted the punishment—Ram Bali v. K. E., 11 A.L.J. 955, 14 Cr.L.J. 687.

485. If any witness or person called to produce a document or thing before a Criminal Court refuses to answer such questions as are put to him or to produce any document or thing in his possession or power which the Court requires him to produce, and does not offer any reasonable excuse for such refusal, such Court may, for reasons to be recorded in writing, sentence him to simple imprisonment, or by warrant under the hand of the presiding Magistrate or Judge commit him to the custody of an officer of the Court for any term not exceeding seven days, unless in the meantime such person consents to be examined and to answer, or to produce the document or thing. In the event of his persisting in his refusal, he may be dealt with according to the provisions of section 480 or section 482, and, in the case of a Court established by Royal Charter, shall be deemed guilty of a contempt.

1268. Witness :—A complainant is not a witness and therefore not punishable under this section—In re Ganesh, 13 Bom. 600.

A witness cannot be punished for not answering a question which is irrelevant to the real issue or which he is not legally bound to answer—In re Ganesh, 13 Bom. 600. Where the question is asked with a view to criminal proceedings being taken against the witness, he is not legally bound to answer it and he cannot be punished for refusing to answer—Hari Lakshman, 10 Bom. 185.

'Any term not exceeding 7 days' :—It is advisable, but not necessary, to limit the period of detention in custody to a fixed time—1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 23

An application for the release of the accused should be made to the committing Judge—Ibid.

486. (1) Any person sentenced by any Court under section 480 or section 485 may, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, appeal to the Court to which decrees or orders made in such Court are ordinarily appealable.

(2) The provisions of Chapter XXXI shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to appeals under this section, and the Appellate Court may alter or reverse the finding, or reduce or reverse the sentence appealed against.

(3) An appeal from such conviction by a Court of Small Causes in a presidency-town shall lie to the High Court, and an appeal from such conviction by any other Court of Small Causes shall lie to the Court of Session for the sessions division within which such Court is situate.

(4) An appeal from such conviction by any officer as Registrar or Sub-Registrar appointed as aforesaid may, when such officer is also Judge of a Civil Court, be made to the Court to which it would, under the preceding portion of this section, be made if such conviction were a decree by such officer in his capacity as such Judge, and in other cases may be made to the District Judge or, in the presidency towns, to the High Court.

See 4 M.H.C.R. 146 and Ratanlal 978 cited in Note 1263 under section 480, under heading "Appeal."

487. (1) Except as provided in Sections * * 480 and 485, no Judge of a Criminal Court or Magistrate, other than a Judge of a High Court, shall try any person for any offence referred to in Section 195, when such offence is committed before himself or in contempt of his authority, or is brought under his notice as such Judge or Magistrate in the course of a judicial proceeding.

(2) Nothing in Section 476 or Section 482 shall prevent a Magistrate empowered to commit to the Court of Session or High Court from himself committing any case to such Court.

Change :—The word "477" has been omitted in Sub-section (1) by section 130 of the Cr. P. C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. This is consequential to the repeal of sec 477.

1269. General rule—A Magistrate cannot convict a person for contempt of Court committed in respect of his own authority. A commitment to another Magistrate is necessary in all such cases—Ratanlal 64; Emp. v. Kashmiri, 1 All. 625, Q. E. v. Seshayya, 13 Mad. 24. The Court before which an offence was committed, and by which the preliminary inquiry was held under sec. 476, should not be the Court to try the case—Taraproshad, 15 W.R. 88. The fundamental rule in the administration of justice is that no man can be a Judge in a case wherein he is interested—Chander Seekur, 12 W.R. 18

Thus, where a Sessions Judge has directed the trial of a person for the offence of giving false evidence committed before him in the course of a judicial proceeding of a criminal nature, he cannot try the case himself.—Q. E. v. Mahdum, 14 All 354. If the facts alleged to constitute the offence came to the knowledge of the Magistrate in the course of judicial proceedings, he has no jurisdiction himself to try the case Emp v. Kunwar Bahadur, 23 O C 138, 21 Cr L J 696. A Magistrate whose summons was disobeyed has no jurisdiction to try the offence of disobedience of summons—2 Weir 612, 16 A L J 432, Pahalwan, 27 Cr.L.J. 1344 (All). A Magistrate who issued an order under section 144 of this Code cannot himself try the disobedience of that order—Ranchod Dayal, 10 B H C.R. 424; Q. E. v. Abdulla, 24 Mad 262, Ratanlal 904. A Magistrate, who makes an order under sec 133 for the removal of a nuisance, cannot himself try and convict the person to whom such order was directed and who has disobeyed it—Emp v Hira Lal, 1883 A.W.N. 222. If the Magistrate holds a trial for an offence committed in contempt of his authority, the whole proceedings of the trial are invalid, and a with according to the provisions of section 480 or section 482, and, in the case of a Court established by Royal Charter, shall be deemed guilty of a contempt.

1268. Witness:—A complainant is not a witness and therefore not punishable under this section—In re Ganesh, 13 Bom. 600.

A witness cannot be punished for not answering a question which is irrelevant to the real issue or which he is not legally bound to answer—In re Ganesh, 13 Bom. 600. Where the question is asked with a view to criminal proceedings being taken against the witness, he is not legally bound to answer it and he cannot be punished for refusing to answer—Hari Lakshman, 10 Bom. 185.

'Any term not exceeding 7 days'—It is advisable, but not necessary, to limit the period of detention in custody to a fixed time—1 Ind. Jur N. S. 23.

An application for the release of the accused should be made to the committing Judge—Ibid.

486. (1) Any person sentenced by any Court under section 480 or section 485 may, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, appeal to the Court to which decrees or orders made in such Court are ordinarily appealable.

Appeals from convictions in contempt cases.

(2) The provisions of Chapter XXXI shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to appeals under this section, and the Appellate Court may alter or reverse the finding, or reduce or reverse the sentence appealed against.

(3) An appeal from such conviction by a Court of Small Causes in a presidency-town shall lie to the High Court, and an appeal from such conviction by any other Court of Small Causes shall lie to the Court of Session for the sessions division within which such Court is situate.

(4) An appeal from such conviction by any officer as Registrar or Sub-Registrar appointed as aforesaid may, when such officer is also Judge of a Civil Court, be made to the Court to which it would, under the preceding portion of this section, be made if such conviction were a decree by such officer in his capacity as such Judge, and in other cases may be made to the District Judge or, in the presidency towns, to the High Court.

viction but only against the severity of the sentence—Hukhtalwe, 2 L.B.R. 302 Where a District Magistrate procured the initiation of a number of prosecutions against the same person, and one of them which resulted in conviction came before him in appeal, the High Court considering that it was not altogether proper that he should hear the appeal, ordered its transfer to the Sessions Judge—24 W.R. 58 The Nagpur Court also holds that the word "try" as used in this section includes the hearing of an appeal—Krishnapra v Emp., 25 Cr.L.J. 713.

Judicial Proceeding.—The proceeding of a Magistrate granting or revoking or refusing a sanction under sec 195 is a judicial proceeding. Therefore a Magistrate who has declined to revoke a sanction granted to a person on a charge of forgery, is precluded from himself trying the case—Q. E. v Seshadri, 20 Mad 383

1271. "As such Judge or Magistrate"—These ambiguous words have given rise to two sets of conflicting rulings. On the one hand, it may be asked, does this expression mean that the Judge or Magistrate is precluded from trying the case only when the offence was committed before him or brought to his notice while acting in his capacity as Judge or Magistrate? In other words, does this section empower the Magistrate or Judge to try an offence which was committed before him or brought under his notice in another capacity? In Q. E. v Sarat Chandra, 16 Cal 766 (F.B.), it has been held that a Sessions Judge may as Sessions Judge try the accused for an offence which was committed before him in another capacity as District Judge, that is, the prohibition is restricted to a 'Judge' of a criminal Court, and that being so, a strict construction must be placed upon the words 'as such Judge' and it must be held that they do not include a Judge of a Civil Court or a District Judge. The same view has been taken in Gaspur, 6 Bom. 479 (481), Banka Behari, 7 C.W.N. 708; U.B.R. (1897-1901) 127, Rajit, 18 Bom. 380. Thus, it is held that a Magistrate is not debarred from trying an accused person for disobedience of summons issued by him in his capacity as Mamlatdar—Q. E. v Rajit Das, 18 Bom. 380. Where sanction is given by a Deputy Collector and Magistrate in his capacity as Revenue Officer, he is not debarred from trying the case himself as a Deputy Magistrate—2 Weir 613.

But if this view be adopted, does not this section run counter to the fundamental principle of law that no man ought to be a Judge in a case in which he is interested? The prohibition in this section is a personal one, the mischief to be prevented being that the same person should not decide a matter which he may have already prejudged. It does not refer to the office of the Magistrate or Judge before whom an offence of the class described in the section is committed, but refers to the person of the Judge or Magistrate—Anonymous, 1 Mad 305. An officer before whom, while acting in a particular capacity, an offence has been committed, punishable under sec 328 I.P.C., cannot in another capacity take up and try the offence—an offence committed against himself. If he could do so, it would be in violation of that fundamental rule in the administration of justice that no man can be a Judge in a case wherein he is interested—Chander Seelur, 12 W.R. 18. When a Judge on the Civil side has already formed an opinion that a document has been forged or a perjury has been committed, he should not try the case as a Sessions Judge, and it is proper for the High Court to transfer the case to another Judge, as a means of relieving the former Judge from a position which he himself would desire to avoid—In re Arunachella, 5 M.H.C.R. 212. In Q. E. v. Gaspar, 6 Bom. 479 (481), it has been said that it is desirable that a trial should not be held before an officer who has already prejudged the guilt of the accused, and on this ground the case should be transferred; but in the case of an offence exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions, great inconvenience would be caused if the case has to be transferred; and if the accused is perfectly willing to be tried by the Sessions Judge, no transfer is necessary.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

OF THE MAINTENANCE OF WIVES AND CHILDREN.

Sir James Fitz James Stephen describes this chapter as "a mode of preventing vagrancy or at least of preventing its consequences." The object of maintenance proceedings is not to punish a parent for his past neglect, but to prevent vagrancy by compelling those who can do so to support those who are unable to support themselves and who have a moral claim to support—Sardar Md. v. Nur Md., 1917 P.R. 22. The scope of this chapter is limited and the Magistrate may not, except as herein provided, usurp the jurisdiction in matrimonial disputes possessed by the Civil Courts—16 Bom. 269.

488. (1) If any person having sufficient means neglects or refuses to maintain his wife or his legitimate or illegitimate child unable to maintain itself, the District Magistrate, a Presidency Magistrate, a Sub-divisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class may, upon proof of such neglect or refusal, order such person to make a monthly allowance for the maintenance of his wife or such child at such monthly rate not exceeding one hundred rupees in the whole, as such Magistrate thinks fit, and to pay the same to such person as the Magistrate from time to time directs.

(2) Such allowance shall be payable from the date of the order, or, if so ordered, from the date of the application for maintenance.

(3) If any person so ordered fails without sufficient cause to comply with the order, any such Magistrate may, for every breach of the order, issue a warrant for levying the amount due in manner hereinbefore provided for levying fines, and may sentence such person, for the whole or any part of each month's allowance remaining unpaid after the execution of the warrant, to imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month or until payment if sooner made :

Enforcement of order. Provided that, if such person offers to maintain his wife on condition of her living with him, and she refuses to live with him, such Magistrate may consider any grounds of refusal stated by her, and may make an order under this section notwithstanding such offer if he is satisfied that there is just ground for so doing :

Provided, further, that no warrant shall be issued for the recovery of any amount due under this section unless application be made to the Court to levy such amount within a period of one year from the date on which it became due.

(4) No wife shall be entitled to receive an allowance from her husband under this section if she is living in adultery, or if, without any sufficient reason, she refuses to live with her husband, or if they are living separately by mutual consent.

(5) On proof that any wife in whose favour an order has been made under this section is living in adultery, or that without sufficient reason she refuses to live with her husband, or that they are living separately by mutual consent, the Magistrate shall cancel the order.

(6) All evidence under this Chapter shall be taken in the presence of the husband or father, as the case may be, or, when his personal attendance is dispensed with, in the presence of his pleader, and shall be recorded in the manner prescribed in the case of summons-cases :

Provided that, if the Magistrate is satisfied that he is wilfully avoiding service, or wilfully neglects to attend the Court, the Magistrate may proceed to hear and determine the case ex parte. Any order so made may be set aside for good cause shown on application made within three months from the date thereof. .

(7) (Omitted.)

(7) The Court in dealing with applications under this section shall have power to make such order as to costs as may be just.

(8) Proceedings under this section may be taken against any person in any district where he resides or is, or where he last resided with his wife, or, as the case may be, the mother of the illegitimate child.

This section has been amended by section 131 of the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923, and the changes introduced are the following.—First, in sub-section (1), the words 'one hundred' have been substituted for 'fifty', in order to suit modern conditions in life. Secondly, in sub-section (2) the words 'fails without sufficient cause' have been substituted for the words 'willfully neglects' owing to the difficulties which have been felt in the interpretation of the word 'willfully' (Statement of Objects and Reasons, 1914). Thirdly, a proviso has been added to sub-section (3) to provide a period of limitation for the recovery of outstanding arrears. Fourthly, sub-section (7) has been omitted; it ran thus: "The accused may tender himself as a witness and in such case shall be examined as such." This is now expressly provided by sub-section (2) of sec. 340. The old sub-sections (8) and (9) have been re-numbered as (7) and (8). Fifthly, in the present sub-section (8) the words "any person" have been substituted for the words "the accused" in order to make it clear that the person proceeded against under this section is not in the position of an accused person.

1272. Section not affected by personal law :—The right to maintenance conferred by this section is a Statutory right, which the Legislature has created irrespective of the nationality or creed of the parties, the only condition precedent to the possession of that right, in the case of a wife, being the existence of the conjugal relation—In re Din Mahomed, 5 All. 226. Thus, a mulla wife is not, under the Muhammadan Law of the Shia sect, entitled to maintenance; but this disability arising from her personal law is different from her statutory right to maintenance under this Code. In other words, she is entitled to maintenance under this section, irrespective of the fact that she is not entitled to maintenance under her personal law—Laddan Sahiba v. Mirza Kama, 8 Cal. 736. The right of illegitimate children to be maintained by their actual father is a statutory right, and the duty is created by express enactment independent of the personal law of the parties—19 Mad. 461. There is no text of Hindu law under which an illegitimate son of a Hindu by a woman who is not a Hindu can claim maintenance; but under this section such illegitimate child is entitled to claim maintenance from his putative father—Lingappa v. Esudason, 27 Mad. 13. Apart from the Hindu Law, maintenance is awardable in such cases on general principles; the defendant having begotten the child is bound to provide for its maintenance—Ghana Kanta v. Gereli, 32 Cal. 479. The father of an illegitimate child cannot get rid of his statutory obligation under this Code to maintain that child by pleading that he is a Buddhist monk. The Criminal Procedure Code must override his personal law if it conflicts with it—(1922) U.B.R. 2nd Qr. 138.

On the other hand, the provision in the Cr. P. Code does not take away any right conferred by the Hindu Law. Thus, under this Code, the illegitimate daughters are entitled to claim maintenance only from their father, but under the Hindu law, they can claim maintenance not only from their father but also from his co-parceners who took his property by survivorship—Natarajan v. Muthia, 22 L.W. 650, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 261.

1273. Who can be ordered—An undivided son living with his father can be ordered to maintain his wife under this section—Ramasami, 13 Mad. 17. The mere fact that the defendant is 16 years of age only and studying at school will not by itself be a sufficient cause for his being relieved of the liability imposed by this section of providing for his illegitimate child—4 N.W.P. 123.

The order may be passed only against the father or husband, as the case may be. This section does not authorise a Magistrate to order the father-in-law to pay maintenance to his daughter-in-law—Crown v. Miran, 1903 P.R. 26, 1914 P.L.R. 115, Ghulam Md v Ghulam Fatima, 30 Cr.L.J. 135 (Lah.).

'Of sufficient means':—Before an order is passed under this section it must be proved that the person ordered has sufficient means to support his wife and children—1882 A.W.N. 179. If he has sufficient means, he is not relieved of the obligation to maintain his wife on the ground that the wife has means of earning money by her own labour—1887 A.W.N. 107; or that the wife has relations able and willing to maintain her—2 Weir 615, 16 Cr.L.J. 80 (Mad.), or that the wife has sufficient earning of her own (including her husband's earnings)—10 Bur L.R. 166.

A Magistrate is not justified in absolutely refusing to order maintenance to be paid to the wife on the ground that the husband is a man of slender means—2 Weir 617. In such a case, only a small amount will be ordered. So also, the fact that the father is a professional beggar does not relieve him from his obligation to maintain his illegitimate child. If a man is capable of labour, and the Magistrate is satisfied that the child is his child, he should order the payment of a reasonable sum—2 Weir 616. The word 'means' in this section does not signify only visible means, such as real property or definite employment. If a man is healthy and able-bodied he must be held to have the means to support his wife; and he cannot be relieved of this obligation on the ground that he is only 19 years old and unemployed—In re Kandasamy, 50 M.L.J. 44, 27 Cr.L.J. 350. So also, the mere fact that the husband is a young boy c 16 is not a ground for granting merely nominal maintenance. He must make serious endeavour to find work, and must pay sufficient maintenance to his wife—Ma E. Sin v. Mg Hla, 4 Bur.L.J. 258, 27 Cr.L.J. 725. In a Burma case it has been held that in the case of a Pongyi or Buddhist priest, the presumption is that he possesses no property except such as is necessary for his religious life and which is held under conditions which do not make it available for other purposes; and a woman who allows herself to be seduced by a member of the priesthood cannot obtain any maintenance for her child; she ought to have known beforehand that a priest has no money—1 Bur.L.J. 97. But in another Burma case it has been held that a Buddhist monk cannot get rid of his statutory obligation under this Code to maintain his illegitimate child. If he is an able-bodied man, the presumption is that he has sufficient means to maintain himself and his child, and it is for him to prove the contrary. If he cannot pay the maintenance ordered if he remains a monk, it is his duty to throw off the yellow robe and work—(1922) U.B.R. 2nd Qr. 138.

The onus is on the husband or father to show that he has no sufficient means to support his wife and children. An able-bodied man who is suffering from no physical infirmity will be presumed to have sufficient means to support himself and his family—1911 U.B.R. 1st Qr. 96.

1274. Neglect or refusal to maintain:—The first essential for proceedings under this section is that the person proceeded against should have neglected or refused to maintain his wife or children. If there is no evidence as to the neglect or refusal, an order for maintenance passed by the Magistrate is bad in law—Intazar v. Samidan, 27 O.C. 271, 1 O.W.N. 150, 26 Cr.L.J. 128, 16 W.R. 62, Gulabdas Bhaidas, 16 Bom. 269. Where the evidence was that since the separation had taken place, the husband was regularly paying Rs. 92 for the maintenance of his wife and children, it was held that the Magistrate was wrong in having entertained the petition at all—Graham v. Graham, 4 Bur.L.J. 11, 26 Cr.L.J. 831.

The neglect or refusal to maintain wife and children may be expressed or implied. The Court may infer the neglect or refusal from the conduct of the husband—9 Bom.L.R. 359. To give jurisdiction to a Magistrate, it is not necessary to prove express refusal to maintain; if the husband or father does not in fact maintain his wife or children, he is said to 'neglect or refuse' to maintain them—Emp. v. Ho Han, 8 Bur.L.R. 96. Where the father has denied his paternity, that is a fact from which the Court can infer neglect to maintain—6 S.L.R. 208. But where the husband is willing to maintain his wife and the wife is willing to live with her husband, i.e., where both parties are willing to live together, the fact that the wife deposes that though she is willing to live with her husband, the latter refuses to maintain her, will not lead the Court to infer that the husband is unwilling to maintain his wife—1914 P.W.R. 46. When there is no proof of refusal or neglect to maintain the wife, the husband ought not to be ordered to pay maintenance on the ground that he has been guilty of cruelty to her—181d

This section is based on the principle that there is a continuing obligation upon a father, who has sufficient means, to support his child. If a man who is bound to maintain his child continuously does not do so, he is deemed to have neglected to maintain, and proof of actual refusal to maintain is not necessary. The fact that the child is not in a starving condition is no answer to an application for maintenance—Ma Hnin v. Maung Myat, L.B.R. (1900-1902) 189; Baran v. Ma Chan, 2 Rang. 682, 26 Cr.L.J. 535; Emp v. Ha Han Bya, 8 Bur. L.R. 96.

The fact that a lump sum has been paid to the wife in final settlement of all her claims is no answer to an application for maintenance, if in fact the money has been spent or lost or does not yield a sufficient income—Mt Le v. Nga Paw Din, 1905 U.B.R. (Cr. P C) 45, Ma Hnin v. Maung Myat, L.B.R. (1900-1902) 189. But where the father has given certain property to the mother for the maintenance of the child, which yields sufficient monthly income and furnishes means of support, he cannot be said to have neglected to maintain his child and an order cannot be made under this section—Maung Mya v Ma Bok, U.B.R. (1897-1901) 108; 2 Weir 648.

A father's neglect to sue for the custody of a girl who has chosen to live with her mother who is living in adultery, cannot be deemed to be a neglect on his part to maintain the daughter—Parvathi v. Ramaswami, 2 Weir 630 (631). Where the father is entitled to the custody of children, and the mother who takes them away does not allow them to return to him, there is no such neglect or refusal to maintain them as is contemplated by this section—2 Weir 632. Where the children who were being properly maintained while in the custody of their father, were dissuaded by their mother from his custody and went away to live with their mother, the refusal of the father to maintain them unless they returned to his custody, was not a refusal to maintain within the meaning of this section—Ma Shwe v. Mg Po Chat, 8 L.B.R. 105, 16 Cr.L.J. 217, 27 I.C. 841.

Before passing an order under this section, the Magistrate ought to ascertain whether the husband has been called upon to maintain his wife. Where the husband has not been called upon to do so, and the wife was living with her father who refused to allow her to live with her husband without a money payment from him, the Magistrate cannot make an order for maintenance—2 W.R. 30.

The neglect or refusal must be present neglect or refusal. Where a wife, subsequent to her application for maintenance, came to live with her husband and compromised her claim, but prayed for an order of the Magistrate to the effect that if her husband failed to maintain her in future, he should pay her a certain allowance, it was held that the Magistrate could not pass such order but must dismiss the application, as no present refusal or neglect was established—2 Weir 630.

1275. Right of wife to maintenance—To justify an order under this section, it must be shown that the complainant is wife of the defendant—Gulabdas, 16 Bom. 269. The condition to a right of maintenance, in the case of a wife, is the existence of a conjugal relation—In re Din Mahomed, 5 All 226. It is only on proof of the relationship of husband and wife that an order for maintenance should be made; but where such relationship has ceased to exist, an order already made may be stayed—Sobhan v. Subraton, 5 Cal. 558. No order for maintenance can be passed under this section as against the husband, in favour of the wife, where there is no proof that the latter is the lawfully married wife of the former, according to his personal law—7 Bur. L.T. 71; 7 L.B.R. 270. Among Jats, Karoo marriage is a valid marriage, and the woman is entitled to maintenance—4 N.W.P. 128. A muta wife is entitled to maintenance under this section, though she is not entitled under the Mahomedan law—Luddun Saheba v. Mirza, 8 Cal 736

Effect of divorce:—A Muhammadan wife is entitled to maintenance up to the date of divorce—Shah Abu v. Ulfat Bibi, 19 All. 50. Even after divorce, she is entitled to maintenance during the iddat—Ghulam v. Niaz, 1905 P.R. 5, 2 Cr.L.J. 40; 2 Weir 617; 20 M.L.J. 12. But an order for maintenance subsequent to the expiration of the iddat is illegal, unless pregnancy is alleged—2 Weir 617; 1888 A.W.N. 116; 13 Bur.L.T. 43; Mariam v. Kadir, 6 O.W.N. 942, 1929 Cr. C. 625

When a husband pleads non-liability to maintain his wife on the ground of his having divorced her, the Magistrate is bound to entertain and enquire into such plea, and determine on such evidence as may be adduced before him whether the plea is a valid one. Unless the relation of husband and wife exists between them, the Magistrate has no authority to pass an order for maintenance as between husband and wife. If he finds the plea established, he cannot order maintenance—Shah Abu v. Ulfat, 19 All. 50; 1894 P.R. 21; 2 Weir 620; 1915 U.B.R. 1st Qr. 53. Where a Magistrate makes an order under this section, the order becomes functus officio on a subsequent divorce of the wife by the husband—Emp v. Jodi, 17 O.C. 260, 15 Cr.L.J. 646

1276. Right of children to maintenance:—The child must be born; no order can be passed under this section for the maintenance of a foetus, when it is believed that a woman is pregnant. Until it is born, it can hardly be regarded as a child—3 N.W.P. 70; 2 Weir 618

The word 'child' in this section simply means son or daughter. Reference to age is purposely omitted, the object being that any son or daughter is entitled to maintenance so long as he or she is unable to maintain himself or herself—1910 P.W.R. 28. In 37 Mad 565 and 23 Cr.L.J. 167, it has been held that the word "child" means one who has not attained majority.

The defendant may be ordered to pay maintenance for his own children, whether legitimate or illegitimate, but not for the child of another person, e.g. for a daughter of his wife by her first husband—Abdul Rahim v. Amir Begum, 7 Lah. 365, 27 Cr.L.J. 610

Legitimate children:—A child born during the continuance of the form of marriage known as Sambandhan and prevalent among the Nayar community in Malabar, is entitled to maintenance under this section—

Venkatakrishna v. Chimmukuttee, 22 Mad. 246, 22 Mad. 247 (foot-note). Children of a Nikah wife are legitimate and entitled to maintenance—18 W.R. 28

Illegitimate children:—An order under this section may be passed for the maintenance of legitimate as well as illegitimate children. The basis of an application for the maintenance of a child under this section is the paternity of the child irrespective of its legitimacy or illegitimacy—Nur Mahomed v. Bismulla, 16 Cal. 781. But before an order for the maintenance of illegitimate children is passed, it must be proved that the man against whom the woman proceeds was the father of the children—Hira Lal v. Saheb Jan, 18 All. 107. Where maintenance is claimed for an illegitimate child from an alleged father, it is not enough that the defendant may have been the father, but the Magistrate must be able to find that in all reasonability no one else can have been the father—2 Weir 621. The Magistrate is not justified in holding that the child is the child of the defendant on the ground of the similarity of the features and the name of the child with those of the defendant—Nur Mahomed v. Bismulla, 16 Cal. 781.

Children in custody of mother—Where a mother has the custody of a child and has to maintain it, she is entitled to claim maintenance on its account—Vaithilinga, 2 Weir 630. And the father cannot refuse to maintain his children on the ground that they are living with their mother. If he wants to have them in his custody, he must enforce his right, if any, in the Civil Court—Murugesu v. Sodiamma, 8 Bur.L.T. 134, 16 Cr.L.J. 656; Mi Saw v. S., 7 I.C. 460, (1910) U.B.R. 1. Under the Mahomedan law, the mother is the lawful guardian of her minor daughter, and is entitled to her custody; consequently the daughter living with her mother can claim maintenance from her father; and the order cannot be refused on the ground that the father is willing to maintain her daughter if her custody is given to him—Sarfraz v. Miran, 9 Lah 313, 29 Cr.L.J. 1052 (1053). A divorced wife is under the Mahomedan law, as well as under the Marumakatayam law, entitled to the custody of her children, and the father is not thereby relieved of his liability to maintain them—Emp v. Ayshabas, 1 Cr.L.J. 599, 6 Bom.L.R. 536; Kariyadan v. Kayat Beeran, 19 Mad 461; In re Parathy, 25 M.L.J. 355, 14 Cr.L.J. 597 (598). But where a child has left its father and has chosen to live with its mother who is leading a life of adultery since she left her husband, the father cannot be directed to pay an allowance to the child under this section—Parvathi v. Ramaswami, 2 Weir 630 (631). See also 2 Weir 632 and 8 L.B.R. 105 cited in Note 1274 ante.

Children in custody of guardian If the father is entitled to the custody of his children as their lawful guardian, he cannot be compelled to pay for their maintenance, if they live separately from him. But if another person is appointed guardian of the children, then the father is liable to maintain them while they are living with such guardian—Sardar Muhammad v. Nur Muhammad, 1917 P.R. 22, 18 Cr.L.J. 811 (815).

Offer to maintain children:—It, at the trial, the father makes an offer to maintain his children on condition that they live with him, the offer is not sufficient to oust the Magistrate of his jurisdiction, if as a matter of fact the father has paid nothing for the maintenance of his children for several years—Kent v. Kent, 49 Mad. 891, 49 M.L.J. 335, 26 Cr.L.J. 1597; Kambu Ammal v. Ranganathan, 1924 M W N. 465, 25 Cr.L.J. 94. If in fact the father has neglected or refused to maintain his children in the past, the Magistrate can make an order for the payment of monthly allowance for the maintenance of the children, inspite of his offer to maintain the children. Otherwise in those cases where the children are very young, a man, knowing full well that no mother would part with such children, has simply to make an ostensible offer to keep the children with him, and he can thus defeat an application for maintenance. The Magistrate will be entitled to consider the circumstances in which the offer was made, and whether it is right and proper that the children, if not in the custody of the father, should be handed over to him—David Sasson v. Emp, 49 Bom 362, 27 Bom.L.R. 359, 26 Cr.L.J. 975; 1905 U.B.R. (Cr.P.C.) 39. If the children are too young (e.g., daughters aged 5 to 10), it is in their interests that they should remain with their mother: and a separate maintenance will be granted to them, in spite of the father's offer to maintain them—In re Bai Manek, 52 Bom. 763, 29 Cr.L.J. 1049 (1050). But the Punjab Chief Court has held that if the father offers to maintain his children on condition that they should live with him, the Magistrate should refrain from passing an order against him—Sardar Muhammad v. Nur Muhd., 1917 P.R. 22, 18 Cr.L.J. 811 (815); Ralla v. Atti, 1914 P.L.R. 115, 15 Cr.L.J. 529; Sultan v. Mahtab, 27 P.L.R. 233, 27 Cr.L.J. 1310; Man Singh v. Dharman, 1894 P.R. 18. The Chief Court further holds that although past neglect by a father to support his children may be a cogent factor in deciding that at the time of the application the father is neglecting or refusing to maintain his children, still it should not be considered as sufficient by itself to hold that the offer is not made in good faith. If a father offers to maintain his children on condition that they live with him, the Magistrate should refrain from passing an order for maintenance until the father has had an opportunity of proving that his offer is made in good faith—Sardar Muhammad, supra.

Effect of agreement:—Obligation to maintain a child is a statutory obligation and the parties cannot contract themselves out of it—L.B.R. (1900-1902) 126. The father cannot divest himself of his liability to maintain his child, by an agreement with his wife—2 Weir 648. The language of this section is inconsistent with the capacity of a wife to make a contract absolving her husband from his statutory liability—U.B.R. (1905) 45. But it has been held in 2 Weir 631, that where the mother of the illegitimate children renounced on their behalf all future claims of maintenance by a document on payment of a certain sum by the father, the Magistrate was not competent to pass any further order for maintenance unless there was proof of fraud in the execution of the document, or unless it was proved that there was a valid subsequent oral agreement in supersession of the document. A compromise by the lawful guardian of a minor acting bona fide for his benefit cannot be set aside even at his instance, except upon proof of fraud—2 Weir 630.

But there can be no doubt that when a compromise made by the guardian of a minor does not appear to be for his benefit, and it is very likely that he would be materially injured by a manifestly inadequate adjustment of his maintenance-claim under the section, the compromise will not bind the minor nor any one acting as guardian after the mother's death—Hildephonsus v Malone, 1885 P R 13

1277. 'Unable to maintain itself' —The words 'unable to maintain itself' refer to the child and not to the wife—10 Bur L.R. 166.

The father is bound to maintain the child if it is unable to maintain itself, even though its mother may be able to maintain it. The question as to the means of the mother is not to be taken into account; the true criterion is the inability of the child to support itself—7 Bur.L.T. 34. The fact that the child belongs to a well-to-do tarwad does not relieve the father from his liability to maintain it. The inability referred to in this section relates to the absence of sufficient maturity of physical and mental development in the child rendering it in consequence unable to earn its living by its own efforts, and does not refer to inability through poverty or absence of all means—In re Parathi, 25 M.L.J. 355, 14 Cr L.J. 597 (598). But in 39 Mad 957 and Kartyadan v. Kayat Beeran, 19 Mad. 461 it has been held that this section has no application to cases where the children are being maintained by a tarward which is bound by law to maintain them. The words 'unable to maintain itself' cannot be confined to the tender age of the child but have also reference to its financial position. Therefore where there are enough funds to support the child in the tarwad to which it belongs, it cannot be said to be unable to maintain itself—37 M.L.J. 361. The offspring of a sambandham marriage are entitled to maintenance from their tavazhi, and if the tavazhi or tarwad has sufficient means to maintain them, they are not entitled to an order of maintenance under this section—In re Bharata Aiyar, 46 M.L.J. 324.

A child who is deaf and dumb and unable to maintain itself is entitled to maintenance even though it may have attained majority—In re Todd, 5 N.W.P. 237. A minor girl earning her living by prostitution will still be considered as 'unable to maintain herself' because prostitution is not to be treated as a profession by which a girl can maintain herself for the purpose of this section—37 Mad 565. But a minor married girl, whose husband is willing to maintain her, cannot be regarded as a person unable to maintain herself, and her father cannot be ordered to maintain her—2 Weir 650. But if in spite of her marriage the girl still remains unable to maintain herself either because her husband is too poor to maintain her or for any other good reason, the father's liability to maintain the child would still exist—Meenakshi v Karupanna, 48 Mad. 503, 48 M.L.J. 183, 26 Cr L.J. 732. The child is entitled to get maintenance until it is able to maintain itself; the Magistrate is not justified in ordering maintenance 'till the child attains the age of 14'; a Magistrate has no power to fix an arbitrary age limit up to which the child will get maintenance—2 P.L.T. 109. Where a boy is aged 17 or 18 and is able to work and earn his living, he cannot be said to be 'unable to maintain himself,' and he cannot compel his father to educate him in a college and thus better his prospects—1 Bur.L.J. 123. But a boy of 11 years must be deemed to be a child 'unable to maintain itself,' and is entitled to maintenance, it would be contrary to public policy to encourage child labour by holding that a boy of 11 years should contribute towards his own support by work, when he should be in school—Baran Shanta v. Ma Chan, 2 Rang 682, 26 Cr.L.J. 535.

1278. Order for maintenance :—The only order that can be passed under this section is either an order allowing maintenance or an order dismissing the application for maintenance. He cannot pass any other order. Where a claim for maintenance is compromised by the consent of parties, the Magistrate is not competent to pass an order in accordance with the terms of the compromise. He can only dismiss the petition and strike it off the file. To pass a decree in terms of the compromise would be to assume the functions of the Civil Court—2 Weir 629; 2 Weir 630.

Under this section, the Magistrate can award maintenance only and nothing else, e.g. a house to live in—Makhan v. Harnamo, 29 Cr.L.J. 909 (910) (Lah).

The order under this section must not be conditional and must not have reference to any future circumstances. When the wife, after compromising the claim for maintenance, prayed for an order by the Magistrate that if her husband failed to support her in future, he should pay her a monthly allowance, it was held that the Magistrate could not pass an order of this nature, he must dismiss the application—In re Kupru Mudali, 2 Weir 630. An order directing the husband to take away his wife with him, and maintain her, and in the event of his failing to do so or turning her out, to pay a fixed sum to her for maintenance, is a conditional order and hence illegal—Natha Singh v. Harnam, 7 Lah 313, 27 Cr.L.J. 556. An order for maintenance passed on condition that the woman must reside in her husband's house is illegal—Emp. v. Jamiet, 1917 P.R. 14, 18 Cr.L.J. 528.

Who can order :—Only the Magistrates enumerated in this section can inquire into the case and pass an order for maintenance. An inquiry under this section cannot be delegated by a First Class Magistrate to a Magistrate of a lower rank—2 Weir 617. A First Class Magistrate cannot refer an application under this section to a Subordinate Magistrate of lower grade and act upon his report—Sardaran v. Amir, 1905 P.R. 29; Venkata v. Paramma, 11 Mad 109.

Monthly allowance :—The law empowers a Magistrate only to direct payment of a monthly maintenance. An agreement between a husband and wife whereby the husband agreed that he would furnish his wife with certain ornaments, build a house for her, deliver to her annually a certain amount of grain, and pay her a certain sum in cash, is not an agreement which can be made the basis of an order under this section, and therefore cannot be enforced under its provisions—6 Mad 283; 21 Cr.L.J. 612 (Lah). The payment ordered must be a monthly payment. An order for the payment of a certain sum annually for the value of clothes is not legal—2 Weir 627. But where a razinama entered into between the parties contains an agreement for the payment of a certain sum annually for value of clothes, the wife is entitled to ask the Court to give effect to the general intention of the parties as disclosed by the razinama, by allotting in the monthly allowance the value of the clothes agreed to be paid annually—2 Weir 634.

The payment of maintenance must be in money, an order for payment of maintenance in grain is not in accordance with this Code—2 Weir 626; 2 Weir 627; 1911 P R 19; 1887 P.R 3, Atru v. Mabon, 25 Cr. L.J. 1271 (Lah). So also, an order directing a mixed payment in kind and cash is contrary to the terms of this section—Mukta v Dattu Mahadev, 26 Bom.L.R 186

An order under this section fixing the duration of the period for which the maintenance is to be paid, is illegal—2 Weir 634

1279. Amount of maintenance—In determining the amount of maintenance, no luxury should be allowed, but only the necessities of life should be considered according to the station in life of the applicant and the means of the respondent—4 Bur L.T. 269. The maximum amount which can be awarded for the maintenance of each person is now Rs 100; under the old law it was Rs. 50. The words 'in the whole' mean that a sum of money not exceeding Rs. 100 should be ordered to be paid, and no other payment either in the shape of school fees or medical expenses etc., should be ordered to be paid. The words do not mean that when a woman makes an application for herself and for her children, she can only be awarded Rs 100 for the maintenance of herself and of her children whatever be the number. The Magistrate can order a sum not exceeding Rs 100 to be paid for the wife and for each of the children unable to maintain itself—Kent v. Kent, 49 Mad 891, 49 M.L.J 335, 26 Cr.L.J 1597 (But see Palmerino v. Palmerino, 28 Bom.L.R 1299, 28 Cr.L.J 49 (50) where an order awarding a total sum of Rs 150 for the wife and child was held to be in excess of the Magistrate's jurisdiction). Where a wife applied for maintenance of herself and her four children and the Magistrate ordered the husband to pay Rs. 50 (under the old section) for maintenance of the wife and Rs. 10 for each child, every month, it was held that the order was legal. The husband was liable to maintain his wife and each of his children, and the Magistrate might order him to pay as much as Rs. 50 for each of them, if each child was living with a different person. And the fact that all the children were at the time in the custody of the mother could not affect the question of what should be paid to each child—4 Bur L.T 139

A prospective order, providing for increase being made in the amount awarded for the child's maintenance hereafter as the child grows older, is not justified by law—2 N.W.P. 454. A Magistrate cannot, under this section, make an order for maintenance at a progressively increasing rate. He may, however, under sec. 489, from time to time alter the rate of monthly allowance granted under this section, as the child grows older—12 Cal 535; Ramayee, 14 Mad. 398.

The Magistrate shall order the amount to be paid to the wife or child as the case may be. An order for the payment of the amount of maintenance at the Taluk Kutchery is not authorised by law—2 Weir 627.

Order should specify amount payable to each person:—An order under this section awarded Rs. 42 for the maintenance of the wife and son; but nothing was said as to what portion was to be for the wife and what portion for the son. At the time the wife applied for enforcement of the order, the son was over 19 years of age and earning sufficient for him to live on. The Magistrate altered (under sec. 489) the monthly allowance into Rs. 25 payable to the wife only. It was held that as regards the son the foundation of the order was taken away when he was able to maintain himself, and it became spent so far as he was concerned and was not enforceable, and that the Magistrate in the original order not having allotted any particular portion to the wife, the order could not be partially enforced in favour of the wife, but that she should make a fresh application for maintenance for herself alone—9 L.B.R. 49.

Sub-section (2).—The maintenance allowance is payable only from the date of the order (or at most from the date of the application). A direction to pay maintenance from a date prior to such date is opposed to this section—2 Weir 635, Abdul Rahim v. Amir Begum, 7 Lah 365, 27 Cr L J 610, Omree v. Elahi, 1870 P R 5. But where an order for such retrospective payment was made with the consent of the parties, the High Court did not interfere—2 Weir 635.

1280. Sub-section (3)—Enforcement of order.—In this sub-section, the words "fails without sufficient cause" have been substituted for the words "willfully neglects," because of difficulties which have arisen in the interpretation of the word 'willfully.' Under the old law it was held that before an order for imprisonment could be made on default of payment of maintenance, strict proof was necessary that the non-payment was due to wilful neglect on the part of the defendant, and mere omission to pay the arrears was not sufficient—Sidheswar v. Gyanada, 22 Cal. 291; 5 O.C. 316; Bhiku v. Zahuran, 23 Cal. 291. Under the present law, no such proof is necessary; the simple fact of non-payment without sufficient cause is sufficient to bring this sub-section into operation.

When execution of a maintenance order is applied for and the counter-petitioner files a counter-petition setting out certain grounds on which he contends that the order should not be executed, the Court is bound to consider the sufficiency of the cause alleged by him, and to refuse the execution if the Court is satisfied that the cause is sufficient and to grant execution if the Court is not satisfied with the cause alleged. The Legislature has used the expression "sufficient cause" obviously intending that the Magistrate before whom the matter comes up should be in a position to use his judicial discretion having regard to all the circumstances, and that such judicial discretion should not be fettered or limited by any definite rules. The expression 'sufficient cause' is wide enough to include all possible considerations that may be submitted to the Magistrate in the circumstances of the case—Teetharappa v Meenakshi, 48 M.L.J. 491, 26 Cr.L.J. 953.

Under this section, the Magistrate can imprison the person proceeded against after default is made; but he cannot take security from that person in anticipation of default—24 W.R. 72

Warrant:—A warrant in respect of the breach of the order is a condition precedent to the inflicting of imprisonment—Q. E. v. Narain, 9 All 240. A Police officer when executing a warrant for the levy of the amount of maintenance recoverable under this section, can break open an inner door of the house of the person against whom it is executed—Ratanlal 431

The law contemplates only a single warrant of commitment regarding the arrears due at the time of issue. Where six months' arrears are due, a separate warrant of commitment for each month's arrears is bad in law—Bhiku v Zahuran, 25 Cal 291. The levy of accumulated arrears of maintenance by a single warrant and in one proceeding is not illegal—7 M.H.C.R. App. 38; 6 M.H.C.R. App. 22

Second proviso —The second proviso (newly added) to this subsection provides a period of limitation (one year from the date of default) within which the application is to be made for the issue of the warrant for realisation of the outstanding arrears

Under this proviso, the Court's power extends to the recovery of arrears falling due for a period of one year next before the date of application, but it does not follow that that power should be fully exercised, and the petitioner may ask for the recovery of arrears for less than a year—Kanagammal, 50 Mad 663, 28 Cr.L.J. 271 (272).

1281. Imprisonment —The imprisonment may be awarded only after default is made. Where it was provided in the order of maintenance itself that in case of the defendant failing to pay the monthly allowance, he should be imprisoned for a term of 16 days for every breach of the order, it was held that the order was in anticipation of the procedure to take place on a wilful default, if such should occur, and was therefore illegal—5 M.H.C.R. App. 34. Imprisonment is a means of enforcing payment, and an order for imprisonment can be passed only after there has been negligence to pay the amount of maintenance—Sidheswar v Gyanada, 22 Cal 291

Release on payment.—The imprisonment awarded under this section is not a punishment for contempt of the Court's order, nor is it an absolute sentence. It is passed only for the unpaid portion of maintenance, or in other words, it is owing to default of payment unrealised portion of the maintenance. Therefore, the impri older, is not justified by law—2 N.W.P. 454. A Magistrate cannot, under this section, make an order for maintenance at a progressively increasing rate. He may, however, under sec. 489, from time to time alter the rate of monthly allowance granted under this section, as the child grows older—12 Cal. 535; Ramayee, 14 Mad. 398.

The Magistrate shall order the amount to be paid to the wife or child as the case may be. An order for the payment of the amount of maintenance at the Taluk Kutchery is not authorised by law—2 Weir 627.

Order should specify amount payable to each person.—An order under this section awarded Rs. 42 for the maintenance of the wife and son; but nothing was said as to what portion was to be for the wife and what portion for the son. At the time the wife applied for enforcement of the order, the son was over 19 years of age and earning sufficient for him to live on. The Magistrate altered (under sec. 489) the monthly allowance into Rs. 25 payable to the wife only. It was held that as regards the son the foundation of the order was taken away when he was able to maintain himself, and it became spent so far as he was concerned and was not enforceable, and that the Magistrate in the original order not having allotted any particular portion to the wife, the order could not be partially enforced in favour of the wife, but that she should make a fresh application for maintenance for herself alone—9 L.B.R. 49.

Sub-section (2).—The maintenance allowance is payable only from the date of the order (or at most from the date of the application). A direction to pay maintenance from a date prior to such date is opposed to this section—2 Weir 635; Abdul Rahim v. Amir Begum, 7 Lah. 365, 27 Cr.L.J. 610; Omree v. Elahi, 1870 P.R. 5. But where an order for such retrospective payment was made with the consent of the parties, the High Court did not interfere—2 Weir 635.

1280. Sub-section (3)—Enforcement of order:—In this sub-section, the words “fails without sufficient cause” have been substituted for the words “wilfully neglects,” because of difficulties which have arisen in the interpretation of the word “wilfully.” Under the old law it was held that before an order for imprisonment could be made on default of payment of maintenance, strict proof was necessary that the non-payment was due to wilful neglect on the part of the defendant, and mere omission to pay the arrears was not sufficient—Sidheswar v. Gyanada, 22 Cal. 291; 5 O.C. 316; Bhiku v. Zahuran, 25 Cal. 291. Under the present law, no such proof is necessary; the simple fact of non-payment without sufficient cause is sufficient to bring this sub-section into operation.

When execution of a maintenance order is applied for and the counter-petitioner files a counter-petition setting out certain grounds on which he contends that the order should not be executed, the Court is bound to consider the sufficiency of the cause alleged by him, and to refuse the execution if the Court is satisfied that the cause is sufficient and to grant execution if the Court is not satisfied with the cause alleged. The Legislature has used the expression “sufficient cause” obviously in-

But the defendant's inability to pay is not a ground for the Magistrate's refusal to enforce the order for maintenance. If the allowance granted is too excessive, he may revise the rate of maintenance on further inquiry, and the order will take effect from the date of such inquiry—2 Weir 636.

1283. Offer to maintain wife:—Where the husband offers to receive his wife to live with him, an order for maintenance should not be made except on proof of adultery or cruelty on the part of the husband—Makhan v. Harnamo, 29 Cr L J 909 (910) (Lah). Where the husband offers to maintain his wife and the wife states that she is willing to live with him, the Magistrate cannot make an order under this section, unless the complainant (wife) satisfies him that notwithstanding such offer there is a just ground for making such order—Hakimi v. Mouze, 1 C.L.J. 214.

The offer to maintain must be a bona fide offer, and not made with the object of escaping obligation—13 Cr.L.J. 55. If it is found that the husband had formerly turned his wife out of his house, his subsequent offer to keep her in his house cannot be taken to be bona fide; and he cannot escape his liability to maintain her under this section merely by such an offer, because he may break his promise as soon as she gets home—Aishan v. Sher Muhammad, 22 Cr L J 149 (Lah), 59 I C 853.

The offer must be to maintain wife as wife. It has been however held in In re Gulabdas, 16 Bom 269 that where the husband offered to keep the complainant in his house, not as wife but as a servant or dependant, the offer was a sufficient offer within the meaning of this section. But this decision does not seem to be just. The Madras High Court rightly lays down that an offer to maintain wife must be one to maintain her with the consideration due to her position as wife—Mannathia, 17 Mad. 260; 2 Weir 641. And therefore where a Hindu husband having two wives offered to maintain his first wife in his own house, adding that he would not live with her, but would supply grain for her to cook her own food and eat it separately in the house, such an offer was not a sufficient offer within the meaning of this section—Marakkal v. Kandappa, 6 Mad. 371, Sakrulla v. Fatma, 25 Cr.L.J. 453 (Nag.). The offer must be an offer by the husband to maintain the wife in his own house. An offer of maintenance in a separate residence even though the residence be one befitting the status of the wife is not sufficient. The wife is entitled to be kept in the house where her husband lives, and so she may refuse the offer of her husband to provide her with a separate house, and may claim maintenance. In re Bai Manek. 52 Bom 763, 29 Cr L J 1049 (1050).

1284. Grounds of wife's refusal to live with husband:—An order for separate maintenance in favour of the wife may be made under this section if the wife has some just ground for living apart from her husband—Bai Parvati, v. Ghanchi, 44 Bom 972 (975). Inability of husband and wife to agree to live together is not a ground for ordering separate maintenance for wife—6 W R 59. A Magistrate cannot pass an order for maintenance, where the husband has neither ill-treated his wife nor has refused or neglected to maintain her but she of her own accord and without any just ground left her husband's house and protection and refuses to live him unless he gives her a separate house—Tota v. Durgi, 30 P.L.R. 367, 30 Cr.L.J. 861 (862). When the wife voluntarily leaves her husband's house without sufficient justification, she is not entitled to any order under this section, unless the husband refuses to maintain her, or turns her out or ill-treats her, so as to make it impossible for her to live with her husband—5 Bom L.R. 614

If the husband is willing to maintain his wife, but the wife refuses to live with him, the Magistrate should make an inquiry as to why she is not willing to go and live with her husband. The omission of the inquiry vitiates the proceedings—Sultan v. Mahtab, 27 P.L.R. 233, 27 Cr.L.J. 1319; Saddayya v. Ambamma, 9 Cr.L.J. 501, 2 I.C. 153

The following are proper grounds for the wife's refusal to live with her husband:—

(1) Cruelty—If the husband so ill-treats his wife (e.g., drives her out with blows) that she is compelled to leave his house, she is justified in refusing to live with her husband and in claiming maintenance—Rajpati v. Deoli, 46 All. 877 (878); Kalviya v. Hira, 27 A.L.J. 1208, 1929 Cr. C. 593; and the fact that the parties belong to a low class makes no difference—Kalviya, supra. Under the Code of 1882, cruelty was the only ground on which a wife was justified in living separately from her husband and demanding maintenance. But the words "that he habitually treated his wife with cruelty" which occurred in the Code of 1882 have been substituted by the words "that there is just ground for so doing." This alteration gives the Magistrate larger discretion in giving maintenance. The present Code does not restrict the payment of maintenance, when the wife is living separately, only to cases of cruelty—4 Bur. L.T. 269. There are other grounds on which the wife may live separately and claim maintenance:—

(2) If a Christian husband reverts to Hinduism and marries a second (Hindu) wife, the Christian wife may refuse to live with her husband, and apply for maintenance—4 M.H.C.R. App. 3

(3) Adultery on the part of the husband, although not punishable under the I. P. C., may nevertheless constitute sufficient cause for the wife living separately from her husband and enable her to claim maintenance under this section—Gantapalli v. Gantapalli, 20 Mad 470 (472); Malcolm De Castro, 13 All. 348. Where the husband is living with a mistress in the house at the time of application, the wife is entitled to refuse to live with him, and a subsequent offer made by the husband in Court to give up his mistress does not deprive the wife of her right of refusal to live with her husband—14 Bur. L.R. 240. But in such cases, the Magistrate should take into consideration the social habits of the particular community to which the parties belong. If that community does not completely disapprove of concubinage and tolerates it so far as to give kept women some status and rights, the fact that the husband keeps a concubine ought not by itself to entitle the wife to claim separate maintenance—Gantapalli v. Gantapalli, 20 Mad 470 (475). The circumstance that a Hindu husband keeps a concubine in the house will not entitle a wife to an allowance for maintenance if her husband is willing to receive her and treat her with the consideration which is due to her position—2 Weir 641, Q E v Mannatha, 17 Mad. 260

(4) Where the breach between the husband and wife is irremediable and it is quite impossible for the latter to return to the former after many years' separation without leading to fresh trouble and dispute, she is entitled to maintenance by living separate from him—1914 P.W.R. 26.

(5) The marriage of a Mahomedan with the step-mother of his wife is not valid under the Mahomedan law. The wife is entitled in such a case to say that she would not live with her husband during the continuance of such marriage—2 Weir 647.

(6) Where a Burmese Buddhist has taken a lesser wife without the consent of the chief wife, the latter can refuse to live with her husband and at the same time can claim maintenance—4 L.B.R. 340 Also, according to Burmese Buddhist law, the fact that the husband took a second wife might be a good reason for the first wife's refusal to live with him, unless he provided her with a separate residence—11 Bur. L T 105

The following are not sufficient grounds for the wife's refusal to live with her husband .—

(1) The fact that the husband has married again does not entitle the first wife to separate maintenance, if the husband is willing to maintain her in his house—Arumagam v Tulukanam, 7 Mad, 187; 1880 P.R. 27; 1882 P R 31, Dhera v. Nando, 1878 P.R. 2; Purushotam, Ratanlal 7, 1914 P R 12; Sukrulla v Fatma, 25 Cr.L.J 453 (Nag.). The existence of a co-wife with whom the complainant had quarrels, or the husband's want of affection for the complainant or his greater affection for the co-wife, is not a valid ground of the complainant's refusal to live with her husband—Ganda Singh v Atma Devi, 1901 P.R. 14. The fact that the younger wife will suffer annoyance from the elder wife and that the husband may not protect her from such annoyance, is not a proper ground for the younger wife's refusing to live with her husband and claiming maintenance—Maung Waing v. Ma Chit, 1904 U.B.R. 1st Qr. (Cr.P.C.) 10

(2) Minority of the wife is not a ground for her not living with her husband, if the husband offers to maintain his wife in her house—1882 P.R. 1; though in such a case, having regard to her tender age, it might be better that she should live with her parents.

(3) Where the husband is willing to maintain his wife, the fact the prompt dower has not been paid is not a ground for separate dence and maintenance—Sadar Din v. Suban, 1883 P.R. 6; Meh Dina, 1880 P.R. 15.

1285. Sub-section (4) :—“Living in adultery”—Living in adultery means following a course of adulterous conduct more or less continuous; a single act of adultery cannot be considered as living in adultery—Gantapalli v. Gantapalli, 20 Mad. 470; 5 N.L.R. 19; Patala Atchamma v. Patala Mahalakshmi, 30 Mad. 332; In re Fulchand, 52 Bom. 160, 29 Cr.L.J. 314 (315); Ram Aular v. Raghurai, 13 O.L.J. 802, 3 O.W.N. 717, 27 Cr.L.J. 1190. The words “living in adultery” refer to a course of conduct or at least to something more than a single lapse from virtue. Where the wife, two years prior to the application for maintenance, had given birth to an illegitimate child, but since that time she had been living with her parents leading a chaste and respectable life, she cannot be said to be living in adultery so as to disentitle her to maintenance—Kallu v. Kaunsilla, 26 All. 326, 1 A.L.J. 18, 1 Cr.L.J. 84.

Under certain circumstances, past adultery of the wife would disentitle her to maintenance, although she was not living in adultery at the time of the application. Thus, where a woman committed adultery with a man of low caste and was expelled from her caste, thereby making it impossible for her husband to live with her, she could not claim maintenance, although at the time of application she was not living in adultery—Ponnasce v. Peria Moopan, 31 Mad. 185; Ram Aular v. Raghurai, 3 O.W.N. 717, 13 O.L.J. 802, 27 Cr.L.J. 1190. Where the wife deserted her husband many years ago and led a life of adultery and has not attempted to seek her husband's pardon for past misconduct, the wife was not entitled to maintenance, merely because she was not living in adultery at the time of making the application for maintenance—In re Shivram, Ratnaji 506 (507). But the fact that the wife does not seek the husband's pardon for her past misconduct is not, by itself, a sufficient reason for excluding a wife who has committed only a single act of adultery from the benefit of sec. 488—In re Fulchand, 52 Bom. 160, 30 Bom.L.R. 79, 29 Cr.L.J. 314 (315).

There must be clear proof of adultery. The mere fact that the husband considers the wife's conduct open to suspicion is not sufficient—2 Weir 647. A mere suspicion by the husband that the child of the wife was the result of her intimacy with another man is not a ground of refusing maintenance—1881 A.W.N. 37. The mere fact that the parishet of the brotherhood condemned the wife's conduct is not a ground for dismissing an application for maintenance, and the Magistrate should have inquired whether the wife was living in adultery—1881 A.W.N. 62.

“Refuses to live with her husband”.—See Note 1284 ante. If a Civil Court has passed a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, ordering the wife to live with her husband, and she refuses to do so, she is debarred from making any claim to maintenance—Bai Parwati v. Ghanchi, 44 Bom. 972 (975, 977). Where a Hindu wife leaves her husband's house without good cause, her right of maintenance is only suspended, and she has the right to return to her husband's house and claim maintenance—Janaki v. Shivram, 12 S.L.R. 90, 20 Cr.L.J. 98, 48 I.C. 978.

"Living separately by mutual consent":—A wife is not entitled to maintenance from her husband when both have entered into an agreement which provides for their living separately by mutual consent, and they are actually living separately in terms of that agreement—Ratanlal 870. Where it appeared that by mutual consent, the husband and wife had been living separately for a number of years, and that the maintenance of the wife was, by arrangement made at the time they began to live separately, provided for by the assignment to her of some land, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make an order under this section—2 Weir 648.

To bring the case within sub-section (4) it must be shown that the husband and the wife are living apart by a definite contract mutually made between them. A contract voluntarily and freely made and entered into between the parties is essential. Where therefore a husband and wife are living apart in obedience to the decree of a Panchayet of their castemen by which the wife is awarded maintenance, it cannot be said that they are living apart by mutual consent—Nathun v Maturwa, 4 P.L.J. 109, 20 Cr L.J. 154

1286. Sub-section (5):—Cancellation of order:—Under this sub-section, an allowance granted to the wife only can be cancelled; an allowance granted to a child cannot be cancelled, though it may be altered under sec 489—Mehtab v. Allah Baksh, 1885 P.R. 17. An order for maintenance of the child of a divorced Mahomedan wife, who has married again, cannot be cancelled under this section. Such an order can be cancelled only on the ground of change of circumstances mentioned in sec. 489—Budhni v. Dabal, 27 All. 11

'Is living in adultery':—An order granting maintenance to a wife can be cancelled under this sub-section upon proof that the wife is living in adultery subsequent to the order—Totaram, Ratanlal 353, Larati v Ram Dial, 5 All. 224. But adultery previous to the order of maintenance is not admissible in evidence to cancel the order. Specially, where a Magistrate had awarded maintenance to the wife after adjudicating upon all the facts antecedent thereto and connected with the objection of the husband as to his wife leading an adulterous life, held that on the principle of res judicata, another Magistrate would be wrong in re-opening the same antecedent facts as to adultery of wife, and in discontinuing the maintenance on those facts—Larati v. Ram Dial, 5 All. 224. Evidence of past adultery is admissible under sub-section (4) before passing an order of maintenance; but after an order is passed, such past adultery cannot be considered for the purpose of cancelling the order. The ruling in 5 All. 224 has been dissented from in 5 Rang 697. See Note 1291 infra.

There must be sufficient evidence of adultery. The fact that the wife continually went to the bazar, or that men went to the house where she lived (especially when other people including the wife's mother lived in that house) is not sufficient evidence to lead to the conclusion that wife was living in adultery—1893 A.W.N. 56 The words 'living in adultery' mean a continuous course of misconduct; and unless this continuity is established it cannot be inferred from a single act of adultery that the woman is living in adultery. Therefore, where a woman to whom maintenance had been awarded under this section gave birth to an illegitimate child, held that this single instance of misconduct did not show that she was living in adultery, so as to enable the Magistrate to cancel the allowance—Jatindra v. Gouribala, 29 C.W.N. 647, 26 Cr.L.J. 1184. Where the husband alleges adultery, the Magistrate should make an inquiry and adjudicate upon such allegation—Ultam Chand, 1902 P.R. 36; Sohni v. Manohar, 1882 A.W.N. 168.

'Living separately by mutual consent':—Where after an order for maintenance has been passed, both the husband and wife while temporarily living together presented a petition by which they agreed that the husband should pay his wife Rs 10 a month so long as she stayed at the house of her father, and the petition asked for a decree on the said terms, held that the intention of the parties was, when they filed the petition, that the wife should abandon all claims for arrears due till then—Parul Bala v. Satish, 37 C.L.J. 180, 24 Cr.L.J. 945, A.I.R. 1923 Cal 456.

Where the wife denied the validity of an alleged deed of compromise by which the parties agreed to a reduction in the rate of the allowance ordered by the Magistrate, it was held that the Magistrate was not competent to cancel the order for maintenance until the agreement had been declared by a competent tribunal to be binding on the wife—2 Weir 649.

Other cases.—Sub-section (5) is not exhaustive of the grounds on which an order for maintenance may be cancelled. Thus, an order can be cancelled on the ground of divorce. Where the husband pleads in answer to an application for enforcement of the order of maintenance, that he has lawfully divorced his wife, and such plea is proved, the Court will decline to enforce the order, for the period subsequent to the date when the marriage ceased to exist—Shah Abu v. Ulfat, 19 All. 50; Shaikh Daud, 17 N.L.R. 92, 63 I.C. 329, 22 Cr.L.J. 633. On a valid divorce actually taking place, the Magistrate's order ceases to have operation—In re Abdul Ali, 7 Bom. 180. The apostacy of a Mahomedan wife ipso facto dissolves the marriage and the wife therefore is not entitled to maintenance from her husband—9 L.B.R. 206. In case of Mahomedans the order becomes inoperative on the expiry of the period of iddat after divorce—Mahomed Hosein v. Ma Pwa, 13 Bur L.T. 43, 21 Cr.L.J. 503, 56 I.C. 663. Similarly, where the father was ordered to pay maintenance to his daughter, the marriage of the daughter makes her maintenance a charge on her husband and not on her father, and the father may apply for cancellation of the order—2 Weir 650.

Suspension of Order.—If a wife who has obtained an order for maintenance, returns to her husband, and lives with him for some time (and even bears a child), the order for maintenance will not come to an end, but will only remain in suspense; so that if she leaves him again, she will be entitled to enforce the order—Kanagammal v. Pandara.

50 Mad. 663, 52 M.L.J. 176, 28 Cr.L.J. 271 (272); Narayana Swami v Mangayarkarasammal, 28 Cr.L.J. 237. A mere temporary stay of this kind, though it may have suspended the operation of the order, has not the effect of cancelling it in the way in which it can be cancelled under sec. 488 (5)—Parul Bala v. Satish, 37 C.L.J. 180, 24 Cr.L.J. 945. In an Allahabad case, however, it was held that upon a wife voluntarily returning to her husband, the order for maintenance would become permanently ineffectual, notwithstanding that afterwards she left him again, and that she would have to obtain a fresh order for maintenance—Phulkali v. Harnam, 1888 A.W.N. 217.

Application for Cancellation is essential—Sub-section (5) provides that in certain specific circumstances the Magistrate shall cancel the order. In such cases it will be incumbent upon the counter-petitioner to make an application for cancellation of the order, until he does so, the order will remain in force. Thus, the mere fact that a wife is living in adultery will not bring the order to an end automatically. So also, the mere fact that the wife has returned to live with her husband will not put an end to the order—Kanagammal v Pandara, 50 Mad 663, 28 Cr L.J 271 (272); Narayanaswami, 28 Cr.L.J 237.

Application to whom to be made.—An application for the cancellation of an order of maintenance must be made to the Magistrate who made the original order or to his successor-in-office—Bhagwanta v. Sheo Charan, 25 All. 545.

Magistrate can go into question of Divorce.—The Magistrate can go into the question of divorce, even in a summary proceeding under sec. 488, if the husband applies for cancellation of the order of maintenance on the ground that he has divorced his wife. If the husband is able to adduce satisfactory evidence that there has been a valid divorce, the Magistrate would be justified in acting upon that evidence. It is not necessary for the husband to produce a decree of a civil court declaring that he has divorced his wife—In re Punjalal, 30 Bom L.R. 617, 29 Cr L.J. 908 (909). Cf. also Shah Abu v. Ulfat, 19 All 50, In re Abdul Ali, 7 Bom 180.

1287. Sub-section (6):—Evidence.—An order under this section must be passed on proof in the proceedings, and not upon knowledge acquired by the Magistrate in some other case—Lopotee v Tikha, 8 W.R. 67, and the various elements required to sustain an order under this section must be strictly proved by evidence recorded on oath—13 W.R. 19. An order for payment of maintenance without recording evidence and without examining any witnesses is illegal—2 Weir 628. Where a Magistrate, instead of examining the applicant at length and her witnesses, got her only to verify on oath the truth and correctness of her application, and treating her application as legal evidence against the husband, passed an order for maintenance, held that the order was bad—Kamla v. Mangal Dei, 23 O.C. 237, 25 Cr.L.J. 302. Proceedings under this Chapter are judicial in their nature and should not be conducted as if they were ministerial matters. The notes of evidence therefore should not be vague or inadequate and the order recorded must Issued on distinct findings of fact—Laraiti v. Ram Dial, 5 All. 224. If however an order is made with the consent of parties, the necessity of evidence may be dispensed with—2 Weir 629.

The evidence must be recorded as provided by sec. 355. Proceedings under this Chapter cannot be conducted as in a summary trial under Chapter XXII—Kali Dasi v. Durga, 20 Cal. 351.

Presence of the defendant :—As directed by this sub-section, the inquiry should be conducted in the presence of the person proceeded against. A proceeding under this section should not be conducted ex parte. Evidence should be taken in the presence of the defendant or his pleader; unless the Court is satisfied that the defendant is willingly avoiding service of summons or neglecting to attend the Court, proceedings should not be taken ex parte—1 C.L.J. 102. Proceedings can be conducted in the presence of the pleader, only when the personal attendance of the defendant has been dispensed with. Where his attendance has not been dispensed with, the Court is justified in refusing to hear the Mukhtear by whom he is represented, and the Court ought to insist upon the presence of the defendant and should not proceed ex parte—Hormuzshah v. Perozbai, 2 Bom.L.R. 700.

Under the proviso to this sub-section, the Magistrate may proceed ex parte, if he is satisfied that the defendant is willingly avoiding service and neglecting to attend the Court. But in every case of absence of the defendant the Court ought not to treat the absence as due to wilful neglect—Hormuzshah v. Perozbai, 2 Bom.L.R. 700. A Court ought not to infer that the defendant was neglecting to attend the Court, when the inability to attend was due to the absence of specification in the summons of the place where he was to appear—7 M.H.C.R. App 43.

Where, no notice having been served on the person against whom the proceedings were taken, the order was passed ex parte, and within three months he applied to the Magistrate's successor to have the order revised, stating that he had no notice of the application, such succeeding Magistrate had jurisdiction under sec. 488 (6) to have the case re-opened and disposed of according to law—Maung Tun v. Ma Thein, 2 Bur.L.J. 61, 24 Cr.L.J. 928, A.I.R. 1923 Rang 159.

Presence of complainant :—This section does not require the personal attendance of the complainant. If the complainant be a pardanashin lady, her presence may be dispensed with—Ghulam v. Niazali, 1903 P.R. 19. In Hakim v. Mouzi, 1 C.L.J. 214 and Ma Su v. Paul Sassoon, U.B.R. (1892-96) 64, however, the Magistrate dismissed an application for maintenance for default of appearance of the complainant.

1288. Sub-section (8) :—Forum :—This sub-section did not occur in the 1872 and 1882 Codes and it was therefore held that the application must be heard by the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the wife resided—Malcolm De Castro, 13 All. 348; In re Todd, 5 N.W.P. 237. These decisions are no longer good law. Under the present Code, the proper Court to take cognizance of a petition by the wife under this section is the Court within whose jurisdiction the husband or the father, as the case may be, resides—See Benbow v Benbow, 24 Cal. 638, Shaik Fakruddin, 9 Bom. 40; Hildephonsus v. Malone, 1885 P.R. 13, Bishen Das v. Nanaki, 1893 P.R. 3. This sub-section does not give the wife or child to select a forum other than that where the husband or father is then residing or last resided with the complainant—1904 U.B.R. 1st Qr. (Cr.P.C.) 10

The words "last resided" do not contemplate a mere casual residence in a place for a temporary purpose with no intention of remaining there. Such residence does not give jurisdiction to the Magistrate of that place—Ramdei v. Jhunni Lal, 1 Luck. 343, 3 O.W.N. 231, 27 Cr.L.J. 820, Cl. Flowers v. Flowers, 32 All. 203 (F.B.). Where the husband has a fixed place of residence, it is the Magistrate of that place who has jurisdiction, and an occasional visit to the wife at another place where the wife resides, does not give jurisdiction to the Magistrate of the latter place. See Flowers v. Flowers, 32 All. 203, Khairunnissa, 53 Bom. 781, 1929 Cr. C. 462. Therefore, where the husband who was a permanent resident of Lahore for 11 years, took his wife to Lucknow at her brother's house and left her there declaring that he would support her no longer, and his stay at Lucknow did not exceed a week, held that as the residence at Lucknow was a mere flying visit, the application for maintenance should be made at Lahore and not at Lucknow—Ramdei v. Jhunni, (supra). Where the husband pays only occasional visits to his wife, who lives apart from him, he cannot be said to reside at the place where the wife resides, so as to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate of that place—Ram Kumar v. Rukmin, 24 O.C. 249, 63 I.C. 870, 22 Cr.L.J. 710. But if the parties have no fixed place of residence, the application should be made to the Court within whose jurisdiction the husband and wife last resided, even though temporarily. See Bright v. Bright, 36 Cal. 964 (1966), Murphy v. Murphy, 45 Bom. 547 (550); Khairunnissa, 53 Bom. 781. Where a man has no fixed dwelling, any place where he is staying at any particular time may be treated as his residence—Fernandez v. Wray, 25 Bom. 176. (The cases of 32 All. 203, 36 Cal. 964 and 45 Bom. 547 were decided with reference to the meaning of the word "resided" in sec. 3 of the Indian Divorce Act, 1869). In a recent Allahabad case, it has been held that though a mere flying visit do not amount to residence (as in 3 O.W.N. 231), still the residence contemplated by this sub-section does not necessarily mean permanent residence, but includes a temporary residence. And so where a husband and wife left their permanent place of residence (Bhatgaon) and stayed for two months at Agra, the husband paying occasional visits to his permanent place of residence, held that the temporary residence at Agra was sufficient to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate at Agra—Sher Singh v. Amir Kuer, 49 All. 479, 25 A.L.J. 435, 23 Cr.L.J. 494. The same view has been taken in Allah Ditta v. Sakina, 29 Cr.L.J. 687 (Lah.), and in Jolly v. Jolly, 21 C.W.N. 872.

In the case of a kept mistress, a man is said to reside with her if he visits her only occasionally at her settled abode, so long as he has the intention of continuing to so visit her. If the woman has no settled abode, her stay for two months at a place where she is occasionally visited by the man would give jurisdiction to the Magistrate of that place—Hidayat v. Mahomed, 5 S.L.R. 220, 13 Cr.L.J. 522 (523).

An order passed by a Magistrate who is empowered to try maintenance-cases under this section would not be bad merely because the proceedings were taken in a wrong Court. To such a case, sec. 531 is applicable and not sec. 530 (n)—Sitram v. Sukia, 49 C.L.J. 205, 30 Cr.L.J. 525.

1289. Whether civil suit lies :—Where the right to maintenance is conferred by this section as well as by the personal law of the parties, the right can be enforced not only under this section but also by a civil suit for maintenance. But where the right is not conferred by the personal law of the parties (e.g. the right of the illegitimate children of a Hindu by a non-Hindu woman, to get maintenance from their putative father), such right cannot be enforced by a civil suit, and the only remedy is that provided by this section. The distinction between a remedy under the common law and a remedy under this section is that the right under the common law may be enforced not only against the father during his life-time, but also against his estate after his death, but a right under this section does not survive the death of the father—Lingappa v. Esudason, 27 Mad 13.

Order does not bar civil suit .—An order under this section passed by a Magistrate does not take away the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts—Derau Mahinga v. Marathkarim, 30 Mad 400. A Magistrate's order for maintenance does not bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to make a declaration that the husband is not liable to pay separate maintenance to his wife—2 Weir 615. In spite of an order for maintenance of illegitimate children passed by a Magistrate, a civil suit is maintainable for a declaration that the children are not the children of the plaintiff—Kailasa v. Raghubar, 17 O.C. 331, 26 I.C. 526; 1 Bur.L.J. 82. Similarly, an order of a Magistrate refusing maintenance does not bar a suit in a Civil Court for maintenance—Ghana v. Gereli, 32 Cal 479. Contra—Subhadra v. Basdeo, 18 All. 29 and Anonymous, 2 Weir. 614 where it has been held that a Magistrate's order for maintenance of wife duly made under this section cannot be superseded by a decree of the Civil Court declaring that the wife is not entitled to any maintenance.

1290. Effect of Civil Court decree .—Effect of previous decree .—A Civil Court's decree cannot be disturbed by an order of the Magistrate. Where a decision for a monthly allowance for maintenance has been obtained in the Civil Court and is in force, the Magistrate is not competent to order a further and separate maintenance—Subburamkamma, 2 Weir 615. The jurisdiction vested in the Magistrate being auxiliary to that of the Civil Court, it is not open to a Magistrate to ignore a Civil Court decree on the ground that it rests on reasons which do not appear to him satisfactory—Veeran v. Ayyammah, 2 Weir 615. Where the husband has obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, and the decree is in force, no application for maintenance by the wife ought to be entertained by the Magistrate—U.B.R. (1910) 1st Qr. 34. Where a Civil Court has declared that the child is not the child of the defendant, the Magistrate should treat the decree as conclusive on the question of relationship and should refuse to pass any order for the maintenance of the child—Narayanan Itticherry, 33 M.L.J. 449, 18 Cr.L.J. 971. But the weight to be attached to a decree must depend upon the particular circumstances of the case; and no hard and fast rule can be laid down that a decree of a Civil Court is for ever binding on the Magistrate. If, after the husband had obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, he ill-treated his wife so much that she had to leave his house, and she applied to the Magistrate for an order of maintenance, and the Magistrate granted the application on the ground that she was justified in refusing to live with her husband, held that the Magistrate was justified in ignoring the decree and in exercising his discretion in favour of the wife by absolving her from the condition that she must live with her husband. Otherwise the husband can at first get a decree for restitution of conjugal rights and then turn his wife out without any allowance at all—Rajpati v Deoli, 46 All 877 (878).

The existence of an order of the Probate Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court in England whereby the husband is directed to pay his wife so much alimony per month, is no bar to an application by the wife under sec 488 Cr.P.C., if in fact the husband has neglected to maintain his wife. The existence of the order is not sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, for a mere order for maintenance is not equivalent to maintenance. Sec 488 gives jurisdiction to the Magistrate to award maintenance if he is satisfied that a person has neglected to maintain his wife—Kent v Kent, 49 Mad. 891, 49 M.L.J. 335, 26 Cr.L.J. 1597.

Effect of subsequent decree—See the new sub-section (2) of sec 489. Where an order is passed by a Magistrate under this section for maintenance against the husband, and in a subsequent suit by the husband in the Civil Court for restitution of conjugal rights a consent decree is passed allowing the wife maintenance and residence, held that the decree of the Civil Court will supersede the Magistrate's order—Nur Muhammad v Ayesha, 27 All 483. The decree of a Civil Court for restitution of conjugal rights supersedes any previous order of a Magistrate for maintenance, if the wife should persist in refusing to live with her husband. The Magistrate ought to cancel his order or rather to treat it as determined if the wife failing to comply with the decree for restitution refuses to live with her husband—In re Bulakidas, 23 Bom 484, Maung Tha v Ma Mya 9 Bur L.T. 162, 17 Cr.L.J. 412; In re Chandulal 43 Bom 885, 21 Bom L.R. 766 20 Cr.L.J. 687. But a decree of a Civil Court ordering restitution of conjugal rights does not ipso facto cancel a maintenance order passed under the Cr. P.C. In considering any application for cancellation of a maintenance the Magistrate is not necessarily bound to follow the order of the Court, but must consider it along with any other circumstances may be brought before him—Maung Dun v. Ma Sein, 3 Rang. 150, 26 Cr.L.J. 1341. A decree for restitution of conjugal rights does not necessarily debar a wife from claiming separate maintenance. Sec 489 (2) gives a certain amount of discretion to the Magistrate as to whether he should cancel the order, and this discretion must be exercised judicially—Ali Mahomed, 20 S.L.R. 145, 27 Cr.L.J. 876 (877). Where a decree for restitution of conjugal rights imposing certain conditions on the husband is passed against a wife, who had obtained an order for maintenance, non-compliance by the husband with the conditions of the decree would revive the right of the wife to claim maintenance and to have the order enforced—Devi Ditta v. Ganga Devi, 1906 P.R. 4, 4 Cr.L.J. 73. See also 3 P.L.T. 51. A husband against whom an order for maintenance was passed obtained subsequently a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. Two execution petitions filed by him were dismissed as he failed to prosecute the same diligently, and it was clear from his conduct that he was not at all anxious to get back his wife to live with him on the ordinary terms of husband and wife. Held that as the object in getting the decree for restitution of conjugal rights was merely to get the maintenance order cancelled, and not a bona fide wish to live amicably with her, the Court should not exercise its discretion under clause (2) of sec. 489 and cancel the order for maintenance—Pavakkal v. Athappa, 49 M.L.J. 269, 27 Cr.L.J. 30. But if the husband, who has obtained a decree for restitution makes a bona fide attempt to live with his wife, but the latter flatly refuses to live with him, she is not entitled to claim maintenance, and the order for maintenance must be cancelled—Ali Mahomed, 20 S.L.R. 145, 27 Cr.L.J. 876 (878).

When the Civil Court finds that the relationship of husband and wife has ceased to exist, the husband is entitled to ask the Magistrate, who is enforcing the order of maintenance, to abstain from giving further effect to the order—Mahomed Abid v. Luddon Saheba, 14 Cal 278. Where a Civil Court has decided any points which would disentitle the wife to maintenance, the Magistrate who had previously passed an order for maintenance, will be bound, in the interests of justice, to take the judgment into consideration before proceeding to pass a fresh order enforcing payment of the allowance—Anonymous, 2 Weir 614. Similarly, where the relationship on which the maintenance order is based has been declared by a final decree of a competent Civil Court not to exist, it is open to the person adversely affected by the order to ask the Magistrate to abstain from giving any further effect to the order of maintenance. Therefore a Civil Court decree declaring that A is not the child of B supersedes a Magistrate's previous order for A's maintenance, and the Magistrate cannot enforce the Criminal Court's order after the Civil Court decree is passed—Venkayya v. Padamma, 48 Mad. 721, 45 M.L.J. 104, 24 Cr.L.J. 720; 16 Cr.L.J. 609 (Oudh), 13 Bur.L.T. 104.

1291. Miscellaneous—Second application:—It is not competent for a Magistrate to hold a second inquiry into the same allegations which have once been already inquired into and dismissed by a competent Court—1916 P.R. 124; 17 Cr.L.J. 106 (Cal.). On the general principle of res judicata, a Magistrate is wrong in law in reopening a matter of maintenance which had already been adjudicated on by another Magistrate—Laraiti v. Ram Dial, 5 All. 224. But the Rangoon High Court, dissenting from this view, has said that the Magistrate is not wrong in law in entertaining the second application, nor are his proceedings bad or void regardless of merits, but of course the Magistrate ought not to act on the second application without considering the previous decision—Po So v. Ma Kyin, 4 L.B.R. 337, 9 Cr.L.J. 21; Maung Hla v. Ma On Kin, 5 Rang. 697, 28 Cr.L.J. 912. But the Magistrate can entertain a subsequent application for fresh cause shown. There may be change of circumstances which would enable the applicant to come into Court again, not on the same ground, but on a new ground—Maung Hla v. Ma On, 5 Rang. 697, 28 Cr.L.J. 912, Ma Su v. Paul Sassoon, U B R (1892-96) 64; Ayudal v. Subramania, 2 Weir 633.

But if the previous application has been dismissed for default of appearance and there was no adjudication regarding the merits, a second application is entertainable—Monmohan v. Sarabala, 24 C.W.N. 32, 21 Cr.L.J. 3, 30 C.L.J. 128; Maung Hla v. Ma On, supra. Contra—Hakimi v. Mouze, 1 C.L.J. 214, where it has been held that if an application under this section is dismissed for default, the law does not empower the Magistrate to re-hear the application.

Insanity of defendant—If the defendant in a proceeding under this section is alleged to be insane, the Magistrate has no power to appoint a guardian ad litem, but he should hold a judicial inquiry into his sanity and put him under medical observation, if necessary. If, as a result of such inquiry he comes to the conclusion that the defendant is insane, he must follow the procedure laid down in Ch XXXIV and postpone the proceedings until the Magistrate is satisfied that the defendant is capable of understanding the proceedings—Appichi v. Kuthu Jammal, 48 Mad. 388, 48 M.L.J. 187, 26 Cr.L.J. 701.

No limitation:—A wife does not lose her right of maintenance because she has delayed in making the application—Kunnath v. Veluth, 2 Weir 616. The law has not fixed any time within which a claim of maintenance is to be made. The fact that the wife has not advanced her claim immediately on her husband's desertion of her does not disentitle her to maintenance—Veluth, 2 Weir 615. The second proviso to sub-section (3) provides a period of limitation for an application for the issue of a warrant for enforcement of the order, but not for an application for maintenance.

1292. Nature of proceedings under this section:—A proceeding under this section is of a criminal nature, and therefore it is a criminal case within the meaning of sec 528, and the District Magistrate may withdraw a case instituted under this section from the file of a first class Magistrate to his own file—1905 P R 5. As the order is one passed in a criminal trial, no appeal lies under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the order of a single Judge made on a revision petition against the order of a Magistrate under this section—Ravana Appadu v. Rayana Appanna, 39 Mad 472. If the parties to the proceedings compromise the claim for maintenance, the Magistrate cannot pass an order in accordance with the terms of the compromise; because to do so would be to assume the functions of a Civil Court—Lingadu v. Labbakka, 2 Weir 629. He can only dismiss the petition for maintenance and strike it off the file—Lingadu, supra.

The Calcutta High Court holds that proceedings under this section are civil proceedings and the defendant thereto may give evidence on his own behalf—Nur Mahomed v. Bismulla, 16 Cal. 781. This is now expressly provided by sub-section (2) of sec. 340. A proceeding under this section being a proceeding of a civil nature, the parties can be examined as witnesses. Thus, the wife may be examined as to the non-access of her husband during her married life, in order to prove the illegitimacy of her children—Rozario v. Ingles, 18 Bom. 468. The person proceeded against under this section is not an accused—Parbati v. Chotey, 17 C.P.L.R. 127, 1 Cr.L.J. 864. The word 'accused' was formerly inadvertently used in sub-section (9). The Legislature has now corrected the error by substituting the words "any person" for the word 'accused.' This section is not intended to be punitive but a preventive one, and hence the neglect or refusal to pay maintenance is not an 'offence' within the meaning of section 4—1893 P.R. 15, an application for maintenance is not a complaint of an offence, and the provisions of sec. 177 are not applicable to determine the jurisdiction of the Court competent to entertain the application—Hildephonsus v. Malone, 1885 P.R. 13; Compensation cannot be awarded under section 250 to the person proceeded against if the application for maintenance is dismissed as false and frivolous or vexatious—6 M.L.T. 261. The Magistrate cannot send the case under sec. 202 for inquiry—Makhan v. Harnamo, 29 Cr.L.J. 909 (910) (Lah.) The defendant cannot be examined under sec. 342, as he is not an accused. See page 899 ante.

Further inquiry.—When an application under this section is dismissed by a Magistrate, the District Magistrate cannot order further inquiry under sec. 436, because it cannot be said that a complaint has been dismissed or the accused has been discharged—Parbati v. Chotey, 17 C.P.L.R. 127, 1 Cr.L.J. 864.

Appeals.—When a Magistrate orders maintenance under this section, no appeal lies as there is no conviction of an offence—Golam Hossein, 7 W.R. 10; Thaku, 5 B.H.C.R. 81.

1293. Revision.—The High Court has jurisdiction to set aside or modify the Magistrate's order, if the rate of maintenance awarded appears to be excessive, or to order further inquiry with a view to decide what amount should be allowed—Mad H. C. Pro, 29—7—1887. But the High Court is not disposed to interfere with the discretion of a Magistrate when he has fixed an amount after considering all the circumstances of the case—In re Bai Manek, 52 Bom. 763, 29 Cr.L.J. 1049 (1050). The High Court can set aside in revision a previous order of a Criminal Court passed under this section in view of a subsequent decree of a Civil Court—16 Cr.L.J. 609 (Oudh).

But the High Court does not interfere in revision when other issues are raised which should be settled in the Civil Courts, and when nothing is to be gained by protracted litigation in the Criminal Court. In such cases, the persons aggrieved by Magisterial orders should take their case to the Civil Courts—In re Kandasami, 50 M.L.J. 44, 27 Cr.L.J. 350.

Where the husband applied in revision for cancellation of the order of maintenance on the ground that the marriage had become null and void on account of the first husband of the wife being alive, held that the High Court could not, in a revision application of this kind, properly deal with that question, but that the petitioner must apply to the Court of matrimonial jurisdiction to have the marriage declared null and void—Palmerino v Palmerino, 28 Bom L.R. 1299, 28 Cr.L.J. 51 (52).

489. (1) On proof of a change in the circumstances of any person receiving under Section 488 a monthly allowance, or ordered under the same section to pay a monthly allowance to his wife or child, the Magistrate may make such alteration in the allowance as he thinks fit:

Provided that if he increases the allowance the monthly rate of one hundred rupees in the whole be not exceeded.

(2) Where it appears to the Magistrate that, in consequence of any decision of a competent Civil Court, any order made under section 488 should be cancelled or varied, he shall cancel the order, or, as the case may be, vary the same accordingly.

Change—In sub-section (1) the words 'one hundred' have been substituted for the word 'fifty,' and sub-section (2) has been newly added, by section 132 of the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923.

1294. Scope :—This section furnishes the ground on which the Court passing an order under sec. 488 can modify that order. An order of a competent Court under sec. 488 for the maintenance of a child can be modified under this section—Budhuni v Dabal, 27 All. 11. When a maintenance order is made with reference to the means of the husband, he should apply under this section, if he is aggrieved, for reduction of the allowance—9 W.R. 1. The revision of an order of maintenance and the grant of it on a lower scale than that of the original order is not legal, without an application under this section from one of the parties and without proof of change of circumstances—2 Weir 628.

An application under this section can be made so long as there is a subsisting order under section 488. Thus, an order awarding maintenance to the wife was passed in 1910; afterwards in 1912 she obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, but he never it and went on paying the maintenance to his wife as before. In 1918, the wife applied for increase of the amount of maintenance under sec. 489. Held that this application could not be granted because there was no subsisting order under section 488, the same having been put an end to by the decree of 1912. The fact that the husband continued to pay the maintenance in spite of the decree of 1912 did not keep the order of 1910 alive—Chandulal, 43 Bom. 885, 20 Cr.L.J. 687, 52 I C 607.

It is only on a change of circumstances of the kind mentioned in this section that the Magistrate can make an alteration in the maintenance allowance that has to be paid. He cannot inquire whether at the time when the husband was directed to pay the allowance he had sufficient means, because that in effect would be a review of the previous judgment of the Court, which is prohibited by sec. 360—In re Punjalal, 30 Bom L.R. 617, 29 Cr L.J. 908.

1295. Change of circumstances:—The expression 'change in the circumstances' in this section means not merely a temporary or accidental change in one of such circumstances (such as salary) but a change in all the circumstances connected with the condition of the person—Rukmini v. Piri, 1891 A.W.N. 32.

The change of circumstances in this section is a change of pecuniary or other circumstances of the party paying or receiving the allowance, which would justify an increase or decrease of the amount of the monthly payment originally fixed, and not a change in the status of the parties, which would entail stoppage of the allowance—Shah Abu v. Uljat, 19 All 50. The words 'alteration in the allowance' clearly indicate that the section refers to such change of circumstances as would necessitate only an alteration in the amount of allowance, and not to circumstances (e.g., divorce) which entail the discontinuance of the allowance altogether—Din Mahamad, 5 All. 226 (per Mahmood, J.); In re Punjalal, 30 Bom L.R. 617, 29 Cr.L.J. 908 (909). Circumstances which necessitate not merely an alteration in the allowance but a cancellation of the order of maintenance do not come under this section but under sub-section (5) of section 488; or can be pleaded by the husband when the order is being enforced under sub-section (3) of that section—In re Punjalal, 30 Bom L.R. 617, 29 Cr.L.J. 908 (909). But the Madras High Court has held in a recent case that the word 'alteration' includes cancellation. The reduction of the maintenance allowance to nothing (which is the same thing as cancellation of the order granting maintenance) would come within the meaning of the word 'alteration'. Therefore a Magistrate can under this section, cancel the allowance granted to the daughter, if she has since been married and has thus become able to maintain herself by reason of her marriage—Meenakshi v. Karuppanna, 48 Mad 503, 48 M L J. 183, 26 Cr.L.J. 732.

The growth of the child, or the birth of another child, or the death of a child is a change in the circumstances—Ramayee, 14 Mad. 398; Upendra v. Soudamini, 12 Cal. 535. The fact that the children are grown up and are no longer unable to maintain themselves amounts to a change in the circumstances—Ma Yu v. Coloquhoun, 19 Cr.L.J. 160; Thambuswamy, 10 Bur.L.T. 209, 18 Cr.L.J. 103, 9 L.B.R. 49. Where a divorced Mahomedan wife has married again, the fact that the second husband has merely undertaken to maintain her child by the first husband, does not empower the Magistrate to cancel the order of maintenance passed against the first husband to maintain his child. There is no such change of circumstances as is contemplated by this section—Budhni v. Dabal, 27 All. 11. The second husband is not bound by law to maintain the child, perhaps he may refuse to maintain it any day. So the change of circumstances in this case is not such as can be relied upon.

The change of circumstances must be actual and of such a nature that the law would recognise it. The mere fact that the wife might possibly be able to earn something by her own labour is not a ground on which the husband may apply for reduction of the rate of allowance—1887 A.W.N. 107, because the law does not compel a wife to work for her livelihood, while her husband is living and has sufficient means to maintain her. If the parties, subsequent to an order under sec 488, make an agreement modifying its terms, such agreement would amount to a change in the circumstances, and the party interested can apply under this section and get the order modified—Prabhu v. Ram, 25 All. 165.

1296. Alteration of allowance—An order of alteration of allowance under this section cannot take effect retrospectively. The Magistrate has no power to reduce the rate of maintenance which has already accrued due; his order will take effect in respect of the allowance that will fall due after the date of the order—2 Weir 650. The arrears which have fallen due will be enforced at the rate originally fixed.

When an application for modification of the allowance has been preferred under this section, the Magistrate cannot inquire into the propriety or otherwise of the previous order of maintenance—2 Weir 650.

An application for alteration of allowance is no ground for staying the execution of an order of maintenance already granted, as that order carries with it all the proper consequences so long as it remains in force—Sidheswar v. Gyanada, 22 Cal 291.

The amount of maintenance payable to each person must be specified; otherwise it cannot be altered. See Thambuswamy, 9 L.B.R. 49 cited under sec. 488 under heading 'Amount of maintenance.'

Sub-section (2) :—See Note 1290 under section 488, under heading "Effect of subsequent decree"

490. A copy of the order of maintenance shall be given without payment to the person in whose favour it is made, or to his guardian, if any, or to the person to whom the allowance is to be paid, and such Enforcement of order of maintenance.

order may be enforced by any Magistrate in any place where the person against whom it is made may be, on such Magistrate being satisfied as to the identity of the parties and the non-payment of the allowance due.

1297. Who can enforce order :—The order can be enforced by a second class Magistrate, if the person against whom the order is passed resides within his jurisdiction—Ubhai, Ratanlal 288

The words 'any Magistrate of any place where the person against whom it is made may be' do not deprive the Magistrate who has made the order of his power to enforce the order under Sec. 488 (3), even though the defendant no longer resides within his jurisdiction. It was not intended by the Legislature that the poor wife would have to rush about the country pursuing her absconding husband to wherever he chooses to go. When the defendant is beyond the jurisdiction of the Magistrate who made the order, he may issue a warrant for collection of the arrears of maintenance—Gnanambalammal, 52 Mad 77, 55 M L J 516, 29 Cr.L.J. 932, Karri Papayamma, 4 Mad. 230. The application for an order to enforce the recovery of maintenance may be made either to the Magistrate who passed the original order or to the Magistrate having jurisdiction over the place where the person resides. It is left in the applicant to choose where she will apply. The provisions of this section cannot be held to derogate from the provisions of sec. 488 (3)—Mu Thaw, 7 L.B.R. 116, 15 Cr.L.J. 701 (702), dissenting from Karri Papayamma, 4 Mad. 230, in so far as it held that if the defendant had left the jurisdiction of the Court passing the order, the Court had a discretion to refer the applicant to the Magistrate having jurisdiction at the place where the defendant was to be found.

Powers and Duties of the Magistrate :—It has been held in Prabhu v Rami, 25 All 165 that a Magistrate to whom an application has been made to enforce an order of maintenance, should not take into consideration anything further than the identity of the parties and the nonpayment of the allowance. He may also consider whether the person (in case of a Mohamedan) to whom maintenance is ordered still holds the position of wife. But no further steps relaxing the clear words of Sec. 490 should be allowed. The fact that the parties had made an agreement subsequent to the order modifying its terms is not a matter for the consideration of the Magistrate enforcing the order. If the person against whom an order for maintenance is made considers that such order should no longer be in force against him, it is for him to apply under Sec. 489 and get the order altered. It is not suitable or expedient that it should be open to a second Magistrate to call in question an order duly given upon proof.

But a wider view has been taken in 10 Mad. 13. In this case it has been held that where in answer to an application for enforcement of an order of maintenance, the husband pleads that the claim has been released, the wife having received a lump sum in satisfaction of her claims for maintenance, the Magistrate enforcing the order is competent to consider such plea, and if it is proved, to refuse to enforce the order.

But there can be no doubt that the Magistrate enforcing the order should take into consideration the question whether the person to whom the order has been given is, at the time she makes the application, still holding the position of wife (i.e., has not been divorced); on this point, there is no conflict of opinion between the High Courts. See Prabhu v. Rami, 25 All. 165; Shah Abu v. Ulfat, 19 All. 50, Baj v. Nawab, 1894 P.R. 21; Daulat v. Jadu, 17 O.C. 260, 15 Cr.L.J. 646; Hasan v. Mi Sin, 1915 U.B.R. 1st Qr. 53, 29 I.C. 659, 16 Cr.L.J. 531.

The Magistrate enforcing the order is also bound to consider a Civil Court decree passed subsequent to the order of maintenance. If the Civil Court has decided that the complainant is not and never had been the wife of the defendant, the Magistrate must refuse to enforce the order for maintenance—Nawab Zulfikar v. Zainal, 9 O.C. 49. For further notes as to the effect of Civil Court decree, see Note 1290 under sec. 488.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

DIRECTIONS OF THE NATURE OF A HABEAS CORPUS.

491. (1) Any High Court may, whenever it thinks fit, direct—Power to issue directions of the nature of a habeas corpus.

- (a) that any person within the limits of its appellate criminal jurisdiction be brought up before the Court to be dealt with according to law;
- (b) that a person illegally or improperly detained in public or private custody within such limits be set at liberty;
- (c) that a prisoner detained in any jail situate within such limits be brought before the Court to be there examined as a witness in any matter pending or to be inquired into in such Court;
- (d) that a prisoner detained as aforesaid be brought before a Court-martial or any Commissioners acting under the authority of any commission from the Governor-General in Council for trial or to be examined touching any matter pending before such Court-martial or Commissioners respectively;

(e) that a prisoner within such limits be removed from one custody to another for the purpose of trial; and

(f) that the body of a defendant within such limits be brought in on the Sheriff's return of cepi corpus to a writ of attachment.

(2) The High Court may, from time to time, frame rules to regulate the procedure in cases under this section.

(3) N. detained under the 1818, Madras Regulation XXV of 1827, or the State Prisoners Act, 1850, or the State Prisoners Act, 1858.

The proceedings by way of habeas corpus are proceedings calling upon a person having custody of another person to produce him and demonstrate under what authority he holds him in custody. If the authority is a legitimate authority, the High Court cannot interfere. All that this Court can do is to see that there is no patent defect visible in the authority by which the person having custody detains any person—Jamna, 20 S.L.R. 128, 27 Cr.L.J. 37 (38). It is doubtful whether the exercise of jurisdiction under sec. 491 is necessary where the person detained is on bail.—Ibid.

The investment of the extraordinary powers of habeas corpus in a High Court does not take away from the litigants their ordinary rights which they have under the Civil Law. Therefore a refusal by the High Court to exercise the powers under this section to recover the custody of a child will not deprive the applicant of his right to seek his remedy either by means of an application under the Guardians and Wards Act or by a regular suit—Sua Lay v. Yeo Boon, 4 Bur.L.J. 269, 27 Cr.L.J. 737.

This section does not apply to a case where there has been a conviction and sentence. Where there has been a conviction and sentence, the proper course, if there is a miscarriage of justice, is to take the matter to the Crown for remedy—Bonomally, 44 Cal. 723 (P.B.).

High Court's power not taken away by the Extradition Act:—The High Court's power to issue a writ of habeas corpus has not been taken away from the procedure provided in the Indian Extradition Act, sec. 3, sub-sections (6) and (7) —Tops, 46 Cal. 52. The High Court has power to issue an order and to examine whether a person detained in public custody under the Extradition Act is legally detained, and this power is not taken away merely because the Government have already issued a warrant for surrender under sec. 3, sub-section (8) of that Act.—Ruddolf Stallmann, 39 Cal. 164.

1299. Clause (b) :—Custody of children.—The High Court before passing an order in respect of a minor child, ought to take into consideration the interest and welfare of the child.—Zarabibi v. Abdul, 12 Bom. L.R. 891; Swa Lay v. Yeo Boon, 4 Bur.L.J. 269, 27 Cr.L.J. 737. The Court will not ordinarily force a child to remain in a custody to which the child objects, and before deciding as to its custody, the Court will take account of the wishes of the child, if it is old enough to form an intelligent preference—33 Mad. 288. Where a mother had for eight years neglected her child who had been educated at a mission school, the High Court refused her application for custody of the girl aged 15 years, on the ground that, if granted, it would be detrimental to the welfare of the child.—In re Saifari, 16 Bom. 307. Where the father has delegated the guardianship of his children to another person, the question whether the father is entitled to resume the guardianship depends on the children's interests and welfare.—Annie Besant v. Narayamah, 38 Mad. 807 (P.C.). Where a Hindu mother, who has custody of her minor children, is inclined towards Christianity and is likely to be converted to that religion and to bring up her children in such a way that they will ultimately express a desire to be converted to Christianity, the proper course is to remove the mother from guardianship and appoint another person as guardian, under the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act. The High Court will not take action under sec. 491—Veeraswami v. Patnamma, 29 Cr. L.J. 1048 (1049).

The High Court of Judicature has, under its Common Law powers, jurisdiction to issue a writ for the production of children outside British India, provided it is satisfied that they are in the custody or control of a person within its jurisdiction. Sec. 491 cannot be said to have affected this Common Law jurisdiction of the High Court—Mahomedali v. Ismailji, 50 Bom. 616, 27 Cr.L.J. 721. But section 491 cannot apply if the person is in custody outside British India, and the person having the custody or control of that person is also outside British India—Shiva Prasad, 27 A.L.J. 520, A.I.R. 1929 All. 347 (348).

Detention:—Where a boy, who had been under the guardianship of his uncle, went to his sister's house to attend her marriage, and refused to return on the ground that he intended to discontinue his studies and to get some work, and he also said that he was kept back to stay with his sister because she was left alone when her husband was out on work, held that there was nothing to show that he was detained against his will, and as there was no suggestion that his sister and her husband were not proper persons to live with, it could not said that he was improperly detained—Paul v. Hunt, 6 Bur.L.J. 111, 28 Cr.L.J. 865.

Appeal :—When a petitioner obtains a rule calling upon the other side to show cause why a child should not be delivered to her, and the rule is discharged, the order discharging the rule is a judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and is therefore appealable—In re Narrondas, 14 Bom. 555. An order by a Judge directing a writ of habeas corpus to issue is not an order made "in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, and is open to appeal—Mahomedali v. Ismailji (supra).

491A. Any High Court established by Letters Patent may exercise the powers conferred by section 491 in the case of any European British subject within such territories, other than those within the limits of its appellate criminal jurisdiction, as the Governor-General in Council may direct.

This section has been newly added by Sec. 31 of the Cr. Law Amendment Act, 1923. By this section, European British Subjects, even when outside the limits of British India, will get the privilege of obtaining writs in the nature of Habeas Corpus from the High Courts.

PART IX.

SUPPLEMENTARY PROVISIONS.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

OF THE PUBLIC PROSECUTOR.

492. (1) The Governor General in Council or the Local Government may appoint, generally, or in any case, or for any specified class of cases, in any local area, one or more officers to be called Public Prosecutors.

(2) * * The District Magistrate, or, subject to the control of the District Magistrate, the Sub-divisional Magistrate, may, in the absence of the Public Prosecutor, or where no Public Prosecutor has been appointed, appoint any other person, not being an officer of police below such rank as the Local Government may prescribe in this behalf, to be Public Prosecutor for the purpose of any case.

Change :—This section has been amended by section 13 of the Cr.P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The following changes have been made —Firstly, the words “In any case committed for trial to the Court of Session” in the beginning of sub-section (2) have been omitted, because the necessity of appointing a Public Prosecutor in the absence of that officer may arise not only in Sessions Courts but in all other instances. Secondly, the italicised words have been substituted in place of the words “the rank of Assistant District Superintendent,” because “as there is a variety of nomenclature of the Police officers, we think it better to leave it to the Local Governments to prescribe the rank of police-officers who may be appointed Public Prosecutors for the purposes of a particular case”—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

In U. P., all Joint Magistrates and Assistant Magistrates exercising first class powers have been empowered to prosecute in sessions trials—Govt. Notification, 31st December 1870.

But it is highly objectionable to appoint the Magistrate, who in the first instance tried and convicted the accused, to be Crown Prosecutor to conduct an inquiry subsequently directed in the same case. To convert a Judge into an Advocate seeking to uphold his decision before another tribunal is quite unprecedented and most objectionable, as he has an interest in the case which a Public Prosecutor should not have—Reg. v. Kashinath, 8 B.H.C.R. 126.

1300. Duty of Public Prosecutor :—The purpose of a criminal trial is not to support a theory but to investigate the offence and to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused, and the duty of a Public Prosecutor is to represent not the Police but the Crown, and this duty should be discharged by him fairly and fearlessly and with a full sense of the responsibility that attaches to his position. The guilt or innocence of the accused is to be determined by the tribunals appointed by law and not according to the tastes of any one else—Ram Ranjan v. Emp., 42 Cal. 422, 19 C.W.N. 28, 16 Cr.L.J. 170; Kunja Subudhi v. Emp., 8 Pat. 289, 30 Cr.L.J. 675 (683). There should be no unseemly eagerness on the part of the Prosecutor at securing a conviction. His object must be the furtherance of justice and not to act as counsel for any particular person or party—Reg. v. Kashinath, 8 B.H.C.R. 126.

493. The Public Prosecutor may appear and plead Public Prosecutor may plead in all Courts in cases under his charge. Pleaders privately instructed to be under his direction.
 without any written authority before any Court in which any case of which he has charge is under inquiry, trial or appeal, and if any private person instructs a pleader to prosecute in any Court any person in any such case, the Public Prosecutor shall conduct the prosecution, and the pleader so instructed shall act therein under his directions.

1301. Pleader privately instructed :—The Counsel instructed and retained by a private individual can watch the case on behalf of his client, but he cannot, without being especially empowered by the District Magistrate, conduct the prosecution—Chaitan Lal, OSC No 31. Where in a criminal appeal pending before the Chief Court of Panjab, the brother of the murdered man appointed a pleader to support the conviction, held that the pleader so appointed was not a Public Prosecutor—Akbar v. Emp., 1886 P.R. 29.

Where the Public Prosecutor has charge of the prosecution, the pleader instructed by a private person must act under the directions of the Public Prosecutor and is not entitled to conduct the prosecution in preference to the Public Prosecutor—B. N. Ry. Co. Ltd. v. Shaikh Makbul, 7 P.L.T. 343, 27 Cr.L.J. 313. The Public Prosecutor may always avail himself of the services of the counsel retained by a private individual, but in doing so he does not deprive himself of the management of the case—In re Narayan, 11 B.H.C.R. 102.

494. Any Public Prosecutor appointed by the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government may, with the consent of the Court, in cases tried by jury before the return of the verdict, and in other cases before the judgment is pronounced, withdraw from the prosecution of any person, and upon such withdrawal,—

(a) if it is made before a charge has been framed, the accused shall be discharged;

(b) if it is made after a charge has been framed, or when under this Code no charge is required, he shall be acquitted.

494. Any Public Prosecutor * * may, with the consent of the Court, in cases tried by jury before the return of the verdict, and in other cases before the judgment is pronounced, withdraw from the prosecution of any person either generally or in respect of any one or more of the offences for which he is tried, and upon such withdrawal,—

(a) if it is made before a charge has been framed, the accused shall be discharged in respect of such offence or offences;

(b) if it is made after a charge has been framed, or when under this Code no charge is required, he shall be acquitted in respect of such offence or offences.

Change :—This section has been amended by section 134 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below.

1302. Scope of Section —Under the old law this section applied only to Public Prosecutors appointed by Government. A Prosecutor especially appointed by the Magistrate, under sec 492 (2) to conduct a case had not the power to withdraw from the prosecution under this section—Q E. v Madhoo, 8 All 291; Ramakrishna, 2 Weir 653. A Government Pleader who was not appointed a Public Prosecutor under the provisions of sec 492 (1) could not withdraw from the prosecution under this section. He could withdraw only under section 240, i.e., only in cases where several charges had been preferred against the same person and he had been convicted on one of those charges—2 Weir 258. The present section as now amended will confer the power of withdrawal on all Public Prosecutors.

No person other than the Public Prosecutor can withdraw from the prosecution; even a Vakil acting under the directions of the Public Prosecutor cannot do so. But if the prosecution is withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor and the Vakil, and the application for withdrawal of the case is signed by both the persons, the withdrawal is not invalid—Sita Singh, 46 Cal. 700, 30 C.L.J. 255, 21 Cr.L.J. 5.

This section (as well as section 495) does not apply to security proceedings. It applies only to proceedings which can end in a discharge or acquittal of the accused; but security proceedings do not contemplate the frame of a charge at all, and as a result of the proceedings neither an order of discharge nor one of acquittal is passed therein. Hence sections 494 and 495 cannot apply to security proceedings—36 Mad. 315.

This section contemplates the case of withdrawal of a prosecution in cases tried by jury, before the return of the verdict, and in other cases, before the judgment is pronounced. It does not contemplate the case of withdrawal of prosecution after the conviction of the accused by the first Court, and in the Appellate stage of the case. Withdrawal at that stage is illegal, and the appeal must be heard and judicially determined—Ananta Lal v. Jahiruddin, 46 C.L.J. 121, 23 Cr.L.J. 833.

Secs. 1337 and 494 :—As to the distinction between these sections, see Note 950A under sec. 337.

1303. Withdrawal from prosecution :—The Public Prosecutor cannot withdraw a case on the ground that the complainant was keeping out of the way and could not be served with summons. He should take steps to enforce his attendance—Anonymous, 2 Weir 655. But the Court can allow the Public Prosecutor to withdraw the prosecution against an accused in order that he may call him as a witness for the prosecution against the other accused persons—G. V. Raman, 56 Cal 1023, 33 C.W.N. 468 (471). In fact, when it is necessary to take the evidence of one accused against the others, the usual practice is either to tender pardon to the accused under sec. 337, or to withdraw the prosecution against him under sec. 494, or to enter a nolle prosequi under sec. 333 (in cases before High Courts). See G. V. Raman, supra; Regina v. Lyons, (1840) 9 Carr. & Payne 555; Queen v. Owen, 9 Carr. & Payne 83; R. v. Rowland, Ry & M 401. In all cases, where two persons are joint in the same indictment, and it is desirable to take the evidence of the one against the other, it is desirable for the purpose of insuring the greatest possible amount of truthfulness in the person coming to give evidence, to take a verdict of not guilty as to him, so that the witness may give his evidence with a mind free of all the influence which the fear of impending punishment might otherwise produce—Winson v. Queen, (1866) L.R. 1 Q.B. 289 (312).

The complainant has no locus standi in the matter of withdrawal of a prosecution. When a case has been started upon a police report, and the Court Sub-Inspector (who is the Public Prosecutor) wants to withdraw the case, the Court cannot reject the application for withdrawal simply because the complainant wants to proceed with the case—Gopi Bari, 1 P.L.T. 400, 57 I.C. 657, 21 Cr.L.J. 641.

Consent of Court:—Consent of the Court is necessary to the withdrawal of the prosecution. The Court in coming to a decision as to whether it would give consent should not take into consideration any extraneous circumstance. The discretion as to whether the Magistrate should give consent to the withdrawal is to be exercised not arbitrarily but must be based on correct legal principles—G. V. Raman, 56 Cal. 1023, 33 C.W.N. 468 (473)

Withdrawal of some of the charges:—Under the old section, a Public Prosecutor was not competent to withdraw only one or some of the charges. If he withdrew at all, he had to withdraw all the charges. Where one of the charges was withdrawn, and the accused was tried on the other charges, the High Court ordered the trial on the charge withdrawn—2 C.L.J. 18 (n). But the law has now been changed, and this section empowers the Public Prosecutor to withdraw one or some of the charges.

Record of reasons:—When a Court, acting under this section gives its consent to a withdrawal from a prosecution, the order passed is a judicial order, and the Court should record its reasons in order that the High Court may be in a position to say whether the discretion vested in the Court has been properly exercised—Umesh v. Satish, 22 C.W.N. 69; Rajani v. Idris, 48 Cal. 1105, Jagat v. Kalmuddi, 26 C.W.N. 880; G. V. Raman, 56 Cal. 1023, 33 C.W.N. 468 (471), Sugan Chand v. Chunilal, 6 N.L.J. 177, 24 Cr.L.J. 361, Abdul Gani v. Abdul Kadir, 1 Rang. 756, 2 Bur L.J. 287; Rujula, 25 N.L.R. 6, 30 Cr.L.J. 872. The Madras and Patna High Courts hold that it is not necessary that the reasons are to be recorded by the Judge—5 M.L.T. 216; Gulli Bhagat v. Narain Singh, 2 Pat. 708.

1304. Acquittal:—If the Public Prosecutor withdraws from the case after a charge is framed, he must be acquitted under clause (b), and not discharged—Sivarama, 12 Mad. 35. Where therefore a prisoner, the charge against whom was withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor, was discharged, instead of being acquitted, and was again committed to the Sessions on a second charge for the same offence, it was held that the conviction was bad in law—Sivarama, 12 Mad. 35. In a summons case, an order of discharge under this section amounts to an order of acquittal—Mul Singh v. Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 433 (Lah.)

Where a person is acquitted, on the charge being withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor, the acquittal should be recorded without taking the opinions of the assessors. An acquittal is a matter of right to the accused, whatever might be the opinions of the assessors—Ratanlal 307.

Retrial—An order of acquittal under this section bars a retrial for the same offence by virtue of sec. 403—9 N.L.R. 26, 40 Mad. 976; 18 Cr.L.J. 329 (Mad.); 23 Cr.L.J. 305 (Sind). If a case is withdrawn against an accused in order that his evidence may be available against his co-accused, and he is acquitted, he cannot be retried, even though he refuses to give his evidence for the prosecution. In this respect this section differs from secs. 337 and 339—G. V. Raman v. Emp., 56 Cal. 1023, 33 C.W.N. 468 (474).

Accused a competent witness against co-accused :—When a prosecution against a person has been withdrawn under this section, he can be examined as a witness in the case against his other co-accused—Hussein Haji, 25 Bom. 422; Banu Singh, 33 Cal 1353; Kasem Ali, 47 Cal. 154. See also G. V. Raman, 56 Cal. 1023 and the English cases cited in Note 1303.

But the prosecution must be withdrawn and the accused discharged under this section, before he can be examined as a witness against his co-accused; because so long as he is in the position of an accused, no oath can be administered to him under sec. 342 (4), and he cannot therefore be examined as a witness. Where the Court sanctions the withdrawal of a prosecution but omits to record an order of discharge, and the accused continues to be kept in custody, his position is in no way changed from that of the accused, and he cannot be examined as a witness—Banu Singh, 33 Cal 1353. But if the accused was in fact discharged from custody by virtue of withdrawal from prosecution, the omission to record a formal order of discharge would be cured by sec 537, and the accused would be a competent witness against the other accused—7 A.L.J. 86; Sherati, 18 C.W.N. 1213, 15 Cr.L.J. 693

1305. Revision :—The High Court is in a position to consider whether the discretion vested in the Magistrate to give consent to the withdrawal of a prosecution has been rightly exercised—Rajani v Idris, 48 Cal. 1105, 25 C.W.N. 615, Jagat v Kalmuddi, 26 C.W.N. 880; Gopi Bari, 1 P.L.T. 400, 57 I.C. 657, 21 Cr.L.J. 641.

But where good reasons have been shown by the Court below for allowing the withdrawal of a prosecution, the High Court will be slow to interfere in revision against the order allowing the withdrawal—Bepin Behari v. Haripada, 24 Cr.L.J. 5 (Cal.). Where the Sessions Judge has exercised his discretion in refusing permission to withdraw a case, and he has not improperly exercised that discretion, the High Court would be very reluctant to interfere with his discretion—In re Kaliappa, 23 L.W. 101, 27 Cr.L.J. 334. Where a discretion has been exercised by a Court of competent jurisdiction, which is not on the face of it arbitrary, the practice of the High Court is that as a revisional Court it will neither inquire into the reasons nor interfere. Specially where the Court has acquitted the accused upon withdrawal of the charges, the High Court would not be right in interfering except upon a properly constituted appeal preferred by the Local Government under sec. 417—Gulli Bhagat v Narain Singh, 2 Pat. 708 (710), 5 P.L.T. 404, 25 Cr.L.J. 446; 5 M.L.T. 216; Abdul Gani v. Abdul Kadir, 1 Rang. 756, 2 Bur L.J. 287.

Where a charge is withdrawn, and the accused is acquitted, it is not competent to the revisional Court to consider the question of the legality of the charge. A number of persons were charged before the Magistrate with the offence of robbery. The Public prosecutor withdrew the charge, and the Magistrate recorded an order of acquittal. On revision, it was contended that the charge of robbery was wrong, in as much as more than five persons were implicated in the act, and the Magistrate ought to have framed a charge of dacoity, and therefore the acquittal on the charge of robbery was wrong. The High Court refused to enter into the question as to the legality of the charge, and held that the Magistrate's procedure was right. There being a charge before him, and that charge having been withdrawn, he acted rightly in recording an order of acquittal—Sheobaran v. Shibi, 2 A.L.J. 30.

The High Court will not interfere with the order of acquittal passed by the trial Court under this section, at the instance of a private prosecutor. If the Court has allowed the Public Prosecutor to withdraw the case upon insufficient or improper grounds, and has passed an order of acquittal, the private prosecutor cannot be heard to object to it in revision. The Local Government is the only authority who can take action for the correction of that error—Gullu Bhagat v. Narain, 2 Pat. 708 (711), 5 P.L.T. 404, 25 Cr L.J. 446.

Further inquiry:—If the case is withdrawn under clause (a), the accused will be discharged, and further inquiry may be directed under sec. 436—Hata, 30 P.L.R. 58, 30 Cr L.J. 233. Where the order of discharge under this section is a proper one, no further inquiry should be directed under sec. 436—Sitaramayya v. Emp., (1911) M.W.N. 74, 12 Cr L.J. 440, 11 I.C. 624. But a fresh complaint can be made on fresh materials.

495. (1) Any Magistrate inquiring into or trying Permission to conduct prosecution.

any case may permit the prosecution to be conducted by any person other than an officer of police below a rank to be prescribed by the Local Government in this behalf, * * * but no person, other than the Advocate General, Standing Counsel, Government Solicitor, Public Prosecutor or other officer generally or specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf shall be entitled to do so without such permission.

(2) Any such officer shall have the like power of withdrawing from the prosecution as is provided by Section 494, and the provisions of that section shall apply to any withdrawal by such officer.

(3) Any person conducting the prosecution may do so personally or by a pleader.

(4) An officer of police shall not be permitted to conduct the prosecution if he has taken any part in the investigation into the offence with respect to which the accused is being prosecuted.

The words "with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council," have been omitted by the Devolution Act (XXXVIII of 1920).

1306. Permission to conduct prosecution :—The permission of the Magistrate is discretionary, and the High Court will not interfere with such discretion. Where a Magistrate has, after due consideration, exercised the discretion and allowed counsel to appear on behalf of the prosecution, the High Court cannot, as a Court of Revision, overrule the order of the Magistrate and direct him to refuse to allow counsel to appear—Mangiah v. Dalshina Murthi, 2 Weir 655. Similarly, where the District Magistrate considers that the too frequent appearance of pleaders for the prosecution in petty criminal cases is detrimental to the interests of justice, he can refuse to permit the prosecution to be conducted by a pleader, and the Chief Court will decline to interfere with the order of the District Magistrate—Rala Ram v. Buta, 1905 P.R. 6.

Who can be permitted—The Magistrate is not precluded from exercising in exceptional cases his discretion by allowing private Vakils of good character to conduct the prosecution—Krishnamachariar, 12 M.L.J. 354. The words 'any person' include persons other than certified pleaders. It is however discretionary with the Criminal Courts in each case to permit such persons to conduct the prosecution—Mad. H. C. Pro 2-9-1882.

The fact that a certain person is also a Prosecuting Inspector does not deprive him of his right as a private citizen, and he may in his private capacity ask for permission to prosecute in his case—Maung Pu, 10 Bur.L.T. 213, 17 Cr.L.J. 486. So also, the fact that a particular person is a complainant is not a sufficient ground for not permitting him to prosecute the case—Ibid. But it is doubtful whether the words 'any person' would include an absolute stranger who had no connection in the remotest degree with the prosecution and whose desire to help the prosecution was based on a personal grudge only—Darsan v. Atmaram, 11 A.L.J. 313, 14 Cr.L.J. 389.

If the offence be of a nature affecting the public (e.g., rioting or unlawful assembly) which the Crown alone in the interests of public peace and security has a right to conduct, a private person should not be permitted to conduct the prosecution—Malayil Kottagi, 18 Cr.L.J. 329 (Mad).

Under a notification of the Madras Government, all superior police-officers above the rank of a first class Head constable in charge of a police station are generally empowered to conduct the prosecution without even the permission of the Magistrate under sub-section (1); such officers would be entitled under sub-section (2) to withdraw from the prosecution with the permission of the Court as mentioned in section 494—Anantharama v. Muthia Thevan, 1914 M.W.N. 776, 15 Cr.L.J. 614.

Sub-section (2) :—'Any such officer'—These words refer only to the Advocate General, Standing Counsel etc., mentioned in sub-section (1). If any person other than these officers (e.g., an Advocate privately engaged by the complainant and permitted by the Magistrate) withdraws from the prosecution, the effect provided in sec. 494 does not follow; in other words, the trial will proceed—Nga Maung v. Nga Lu, 10 Cr L.J. 14, 1908 U.B.R. 1st Qr. (Cr.P.C.) 15; see also Lakshmana v. Keelan Peria, 1911 M.W.N. 106, 11 Cr.L.J. 722, 8 I.C. 867.

Sub-section (3) :—A person, whether a private complainant or not, when he is permitted to conduct the case as prosecutor, may instruct a counsel to appear—11 B H.C.R. 102.

It is not open to a Magistrate to decline to allow the complainant, who is conducting the prosecution, to have a particular pleader of his own choice. The section does not authorise the Magistrate to take the prosecution out of the hands of the pleader of the complainant and to assign it to some other person who is not the Public Prosecutor—Ghadially v. Emp., 18 S L.R. 30, 25 Cr.L.J. 571

1307. Sub-section (4) :—Exclusion of Police officer—In all important cases and specially in cases of murder and dacoity, the police-officer making the investigation should be examined as a witness, regarding the circumstances of the investigation. For this reason he is debarred from conducting the prosecution—Ratanlal 173 Where the police-officer who conducted the investigation by arresting the accused and seizing the property found, was allowed to conduct the prosecution, it was held that such a procedure was highly improper; but since in this case the accused were not prejudicated thereby, the irregularity did not vitiate the trial but was cured by section 537—20 Bom. 533.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

OF BAIL.

496. When any person other than a person accused of a non-bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer in charge of a police-station, or appears or is brought before a Court, and is prepared at any time while in the custody of such officer, or at any stage of the proceedings before such Court to give bail, such person shall be released on bail: Provided that such officer or Court, if he or it thinks fit, may, instead of taking bail from such person, discharge him on his executing a bond without sureties for his appearance as hereinafter provided:

Provided, further, that nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the provisions of Section 107, sub-section (4), or Section 117, sub-section (3).

Change :—The second proviso has been added by section 135 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. For notes relating to this proviso, see Note 240 under sec. 107.

1308. Grant of bail :—This section is imperative in its terms and the Court is bound to comply with its provisions. In every bailable offence, bail is a right and not a favour. Detention in the lock up is the alternative, not the original, order—Raghunandan, 32 Cal. 80; Sheolalsing, 6 C.P.L.R. 31. When a man who is arrested is not accused of a non-bailable offence, no needless impediments should be placed in the way of his being admitted to bail. The intention of the law is that in such cases the man is ordinarily to be at liberty, and it is only when he is unable to furnish such moderate security, if any is required of him, as is suitable for the purpose of securing his appearance before a Court pending inquiry, that he should remain in detention—Emp. v. Mir Hashamali, 20 Bom.L.R. 121. The Magistrate cannot refuse to pass an order of bail on the ground of expediency and of the inability of the accused's pleader to show a provision in the Code how he could claim a bail—Sheolalsing, 6 C.P.L.R. 31. If a case is proceeding in an extremely tardy manner, the Magistrate should enlarge the accused on bail, instead of insisting upon his rotting in jail during the time the Crown is collecting evidence in support of the prosecution—Tularam, 27 Cr.L.J. 1063 (1065). Where the accused has surrendered himself before the date of hearing, that is a circumstance to show that the accused is not likely to abscond, consequently he may be granted bail—Tularam, supra.

When the Police arrests a person under sec 55, he should be given the option of bail—Daulat Singh, 14 All. 45.

Refusal of bail.—If the Magistrate refuses to grant bail, he must record his reasons for such refusal. In the absence of any record of reasons the High Court in revision granted bail—14 C.W.N. cxxxvii. If the Magistrate improperly refuses bail, no action is sustainable against him for such improper refusal. The duty of a Magistrate in accepting or refusing bail is not merely a ministerial but a judicial duty. A mistake in the exercise of that duty, without malice, will not sustain an action—Paran Kusam v. Stuart, 2 M.H.C.R. 396.

Court to decide sufficiency of bail.—When the bail is ordered by the Court, the duty of deciding as to the sufficiency or otherwise of the bail is with the Court itself, and not with the police. If such duties are irregularly entrusted to police, two dangers are likely to arise. First, a police officer may sometimes be unscrupulous enough to take advantage of the power entrusted to him, for the purpose of extortion; and secondly, the bringing of false charges against the police. But the Court, when it admits a man to bail, is at liberty to call for a report from the police as to the sufficiency of the bail—Gaytri Prosunno, 15 Cal. 455.

1309. Bond :—Bail means security with sureties, whereas the bond referred to in the first proviso is a simple recognizance of the principal without any surety.

Under this section, a Police officer can either demand a bail from an accused or accept his own bond without sureties, but under no provision of the law can he take a third party's bond for the appearance of the accused without taking an undertaking from the accused himself—Wadhawa Singh, 29 Cr.L.J. 491 (492) (Lah). Such bond is invalid, and the person executing it incurs no legal liability if the accused absconds—Ibid.

Bond of agent :—Where the personal attendance of the accused is dispensed with, a recognizance bond, if deemed necessary, should be taken from him (and not from his agent) binding him to appear, either in person or by agent. A Magistrate has no legal authority to secure the attendance of the agent, by a bond taken from the agent—5 B.H.C.R. 64

497. (1) When any person accused of any non-

When bail may be taken in case of non-bailable offence.

bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer in charge of a police station or appears or is brought before a Court, he may be released on bail, but he shall not be so released if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or transportation for life:

Provided that the Court may direct that any person under the age of sixteen years or any woman or any sick or infirm person accused of such an offence be released on bail.

(2) If it appears to such officer or Court at any stage of the investigation, inquiry or trial, as the case may be, that there are not reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed a non-bailable offence, but that there are sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt, the accused shall, pending such inquiry, be released on bail, or, at the discretion of such officer or Court, on the execution by him of a bond without sureties for his appearance as hereinafter provided.

(3) An officer or a Court releasing any person on bail under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall record in writing his or its reasons for so doing.

(4) If at any time after the conclusion of the trial of a person accused of a non-bailable offence and before judgment is delivered, the Court is of opinion that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is not guilty of any such offence, it shall release the accused if he is in custody, on the execution by him of a bond without sureties for his appearance to hear judgment delivered.

(5) A High Court or Court of Session and in the case of a person released by itself, any other Court, may cause any person who has been released under this section to be arrested and may commit him to custody.

Change.—This section has been amended by section 136 of the Criminal Pro. Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. In sub-section (1) the words "an offence punishable with death or transportation for life" have been substituted for the words "the offence of which he is accused"; the proviso and sub-sections (3) and (4) have been newly inserted; and the italicised words in sub-section (5) have been added. "It was pressed upon us that the provisions as to bail in non-bailable cases are much too stringent. One suggestion made to us was that in section 497 we should delete all words after "may be released on bail" in sub-section (1) and the whole of sub-section (2). The result would have been to give all Courts full discretion in the matter of allowing bail in non-bailable cases, and we felt generally that this was going too far. What we have done is to allow the Court or police-officer to release on bail a non-bailable case unless there appear to be reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or transportation, and, as some safe-guard against this, we have provided in sub-section (5) for a review by the Sessions Court or the High Court of any order admitting to bail in a non-bailable case."—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

1310. Principle:—Under the old section the general rule was that bail was not to be taken in respect of non-bailable offences—Nensi Hansraj, 8 Bom.L.R. 420; Narendra Lal, 36 Cal. 166; Har Chand, 10 S.L.R. 208; 2 Weir 857. Under the present section, the Legislature by defining the offences under which bail is not to be granted (viz. offences punishable with death or transportation) has practically laid down that bail should ordinarily be granted, and that only in respect of the heinous offences mentioned above it will be refused. "This cannot but be regarded as the result of a liberalising influence on the policy of the Legislature, and the discretion of the Courts will henceforth be less fettered than before"—In re Nagendra Nath, 51 Cal. 402 (417). In view of the express provision contained in this section, it is not open to Courts in India to follow the principles laid down in the decisions of English Courts in determining matters of bail—Narendra Lal, 36 Cal. 166, 13 C.W.N. 43, Gul, 29 Cr.L.J. 470.

As the law stands now, it is no longer the case that bail ought to be refused merely because the offence is a non-bailable one. That rule is now restricted to offences punishable with death or transportation—28 O.C. 220. The mere fact that the offence is a serious one is not a ground for refusing bail. However serious an offence may be, if it is bailable and there is no likelihood of the accused absconding if released on bail, the seriousness of the offence would not alone justify a Court in refusing bail—Abdul Habib, 26 A.L.J. 363, 29 Cr.L.J. 450. Where the accused charged with a serious non-bailable offence is an old man and is a Government servant, and it is found that if he is not released on bail there would be nobody to instruct his counsel in going through the documentary evidence and that he would not be able to make a proper defence, held that bail should be granted—Abhram Bali v. Emp., 28 O.C. 220, 12 O.L.J. 394, 26 Cr.L.J. 1286. But this matter is left to the discretion of the Court, and the Magistrate may in the exercise of this discretion refuse to grant bail to a person accused of a non-bailable offence—Jumo v. Emp., 20 S.L.R. 136, 27 Cr.L.J. 859 (860). If a person who has been discharged after executing a security bond is re-arrested for a non-bailable offence, he should be granted bail—Nathan, 10 P.L.T. 801, 30 Cr.L.J. 809.

The discretionary power of the Court to admit to bail is not arbitrary but is judicial and is governed by established principles. In deciding whether bail should be granted, Courts should consider the seriousness of the charge, the nature of the evidence, the severity of the punishment prescribed for the offence, and in some instances the character, means and standing of the accused—In re Nagendra Nath, 51 Cal 402 (416), 38 C.L.J. 388, 25 Cr.L.J. 732, Tularam, 27 Cr.L.J. 1063 (1066).

Magistrates are bound to consider the nature of the offence charged, the character of the evidence against the prisoner, and the punishment which in the event of conviction is likely to be inflicted on the prisoner. The Magistrate may well refuse to enlarge on bail where the prisoner is likely to intimidate witnesses or where there are reasonable grounds for believing that he will use his liberty to suborn evidence—Md. Eusoof v. Emp., 3 Rang. 538 (542), 27 Cr.L.J. 401, followed in Emp. v. Nga San Htiwa, 5 Rang. 276 (F.B.), 28 Cr.L.J. 773, Achhaibar, 27 A.L.J. 927, Krishna Chandra, 6 Pat 802, 28 Cr.L.J. 621. Where the accused was charged under sec. 307 I.P.C., and it was alleged that the accused might, if let on bail, assail the complainant, he should not be released on bail—Naranji, 30 Bom.L.R. 622, 29 Cr.L.J. 901.

'Reasonable grounds for believing' etc.—This section lays down that a person accused of a heinous offence like murder shall not be released on bail if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of the offence with which he is charged—Nga San, 5 Bur.L.J. 170, 28 Cr.L.J. 188. The section says nothing about taking into consideration the likelihood of the accused person absconding. All that the Court has to consider is whether there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is guilty—Henderson, 6 L.B.R. 172, 14

Cr L.J. 171. Other considerations may arise in deciding the question as to granting bail, and one of those considerations is whether there are any grounds for supposing that the accused would abscond. But the main question for consideration in determining matters of bail is whether there are reasonable grounds for believing the accused to be guilty—Jamini v. K E., 36 Cal. 174; Gul, 29 Cr.L.J. 470 (471). Whether there are reasonable grounds or not for believing that the accused is guilty must be decided judicially, that is to say, there must be tangible evidence on which, if un rebutted, the Court might come to the conclusion that the accused might be convicted—Jamini, 36 Cal 174.

In determining matters of bail, the Appellate Court also should be guided by this principle. That Court should not refuse bail on the ground that the accused has been sentenced to a long term of imprisonment by the trying Court, or that the granting of bail has a tendency to increase the number of appeals and of protracting the appellate proceedings. The main question for consideration by the Appellate Court is whether there are reasonable grounds for believing the accused to be guilty of the offences charged—Gul, 29 Cr.L.J. 470, (471).

The phrase "an offence punishable with death or transportation for life" covers not only offences which are punishable with death as well as in the alternative with transportation for life, but also covers an offence which is punishable with transportation for life but not in the alternative with capital punishment. The phrase must be read disjunctively, as if it ran, "offence punishable with death, or punishable with transportation for life"—Emp v. Nga San Htiwa, 5 Rang. 276 (F B), 28 Cr.L.J. 773 (overruling Id Eusoof v Emp, 3 Rang. 538, 27 Cr.L.J. 401), Naranji, supra.

Proviso.—"This clause provides for the grant of bail in any case at the discretion of the Court, if the accused is a minor, female, sick or infirm person"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

1311. Sub-section (2)—Bond for appearance:—When a Police officer takes a bond under this section, he has power to make it a condition of the bond that the accused person shall appear before the police; the law does not require that the accused person shall always be directed to appear before a Court. When the law enables a Police officer to take bonds, that officer can certainly direct the accused to appear before the police. To hold otherwise would be to render secs. 499 and 514 meaningless—Kansai Ram, 1913 P.R. 22, 14 Cr.L.J. 631. But in 11 Cal. 77 it has been held that a bond for appearance before a Police officer is void.

1312. Sub-section (4):—The reason for adding this sub-section has been thus stated by Mr Rangachariar (the mover of the amendment) "The reason for this amendment is this. As Honourable Members are aware, at the conclusion of the trial in the original Court, oftentimes judgment is not ready for delivery at once, but the Court has come to the conclusion, after taking the verdict of the assessors or the jury in a Sessions trial, or the Magistrate has made up his mind, that the accused is not guilty and therefore proposes to acquit him. As sections 366 and 367 stand, a doubt has been expressed whether really the accused could be set at liberty before judgment is actually pronounced. In fact an unfortunate client of mine was acquitted like this and judgment was delivered a week later. The complainant took the matter up to the High Court and a Full Bench had to sit to consider the question whether the whole trial was not vitiated by such a procedure. In order to avoid such things, this provision is necessary"—Legislative Assembly Debates, 12th February 1923, page 2206

The Full Bench case referred to by Mr Rangachariar is Sankaralingu v. Narayan, 45 Mad. 913 (F.B.) In this case a trial was held with the aid of assessors, and they gave their opinions that the accused were not guilty. The Sessions Judge then wrote a short note setting forth the findings of the assessors, and adding his own finding agreeing with the assessors that the accused were not guilty, and they were acquitted. At a later date he wrote a full reasoned judgment. Held by the Full Bench that the procedure was a mere irregularity curable by section 537

The present sub-section validates such procedure, making it conditional on the accused to execute a bond for his appearance when judgment is to be delivered.

1313. Sub-section (5) —Cancellation of bail.—The Magistrate can cancel any bail allowed to an accused person and direct him to surrender, if it appears on the production of further evidence that a case is made out against him—Johur Mull, 10 C.W.N. 1093; Jamini 36 Cal. 174. The High Court and the Court of Session can cancel a bail granted by the Subordinate Court

But the District Magistrate has no power to cancel a bail and order the re-arrest of a person released on bail by a Subordinate Magistrate—4 Bur.L.T. 70. Sub-section (5) gives that power only to the High Court and the Court of Session

Under this clause, the powers of the High Court are confined to cases of persons released by the Trial Magistrate. Therefore, there is no jurisdiction in the High Court to entertain an application under this clause against an order granting bail passed by a Sessions Judge in a case pending before a sub-Magistrate. But under sec 561A the High Court has inherent power to interfere with an order granting bail passed by a Sessions Judge—Local Govt. v. Gulam Jilani, 25 Cr.L.J. 1363 (Nag)

1314. Revision :—The proceedings in which it is, or has to be, determined whether bail from an accused person should be taken or not, fall within the definition of "judicial proceedings" and the High Court has power to interfere with the orders made in such proceedings when they prove to be illegal—Manikam, 6 Mad. 63. But the District Magistrate cannot revise any order as to bail passed by a subordinate Magistrate under this section. If the District Magistrate considers the subordinate Magistrate's order to be wrong, he should report it to the High Court—Sadashiv, 22 Bom. 549

Even the High Court's power of interference is limited. The High Court has jurisdiction to interfere in revision, only if the Judge has passed an illegal order. Where a Sessions Judge after considering the evidence thinks that there are no reasonable grounds for believing the accused to be guilty of the offence of which he is accused, and releases him on bail, the High Court will not go behind this finding and cancel the order of the Judge releasing the accused on bail—Thimma Reddi, 10 M.L.J. 411; Badri Prosad, 5 A.L.J. 419, 8 Cr.L.J. 49. Similarly, if the Sessions Judge, after considering all the grounds of objection, has in his discretion refused to grant bail in case of a non-bailable offence, the High Court will not interfere and admit the accused to bail under sec. 493—Nga San, 5 Bur L.J. 170, 28 Cr.L.J. 188. The High Court will be very cautious in interfering with the discretion of a Magistrate in case of bail under sec. 497, especially where the prosecution has not tendered evidence to connect the accused with the offence—Ratanla 892.

498. The amount of every bond executed under this Chapter shall be fixed with due regard to the circumstances of the case, and shall not be excessive; and the High Court or Court of Session may, in any case, whether there be an appeal on conviction or not, direct that any person be admitted to bail or that the bail required by a police officer or Magistrate be reduced.

Power to direct admission to bail or reduction of bail.

Scope of section :—Under this section the High Court can only release the accused on bail or reduce the amount of bail, but cannot order the arrest or commitment to custody of any person who has been released on bail by the lower Courts—Gulam Jilani, 25 Cr.L.J. 1363 (Nag). The High Court can grant bail in cases pending anywhere in the Presidency—Jumna v. Ramanathan, 55 M.L.J. 690, 52 Mad. 52, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 29 (30).

Amount of bond :—The amount of bond should be fixed with reference to the social status of the party concerned—K. E v Kaung Nga, 2 L.B.R. 235.

Granting of bail by Appellate Court :—When an accused person has been convicted of a non-bailable offence by a competent Court after a regular trial, the Appellate Court should not ordinarily release the accused on bail unless there is an error of law or a mistake or misstatement of fact apparent on the face of the record, or unless there exists any of the reasons mentioned in the proviso to sec 497 (1). But the Appellate Court should not refuse to grant bail merely on the ground that the accused has been sentenced to a long term of imprisonment by the trial Court, or that the granting of bail has a tendency to increase the number of appeals and of protracting the appellate proceedings—Gul, 29 Cr L J. 470 (471, 472).

1315. Powers of High Court and Sessions Court :—This section gives the High Court and the Court of Session very wide powers to admit an accused person to bail in any case even when he is charged with a non-bailable offence—K. E. v. Badri Prasad, 5 A.L.J. 419, 8 Cr.L.J. 49; 2 Weir 657; 7 Bur.L.R. 86. The powers of the High Court or the Court of Session given by section 498 are not controlled by the statutory limitation laid down in sec. 497 of refusing bail if there appear reasonable grounds for believing the accused to be guilty of an offence punishable with death or transportation for life. The powers in sec. 498 are not fettered by any rules defining the limits within which they would be exercised, as the powers under sec. 497 are—Bishambhar Nath v. Emp., 11 O.L.J. 527, 1 O.W.N. 281, 25 Cr.L.J. 1132; Fateh Singh, 51 All. 603, 30 Cr.L.J. 697; Achnaibar, 27 A.L.J. 927, 30 Cr.L.J. 718 (719). But the Calcutta High Court holds that although the power of the High Court under this section to grant bail 'in any case' is quite unfettered, still in exercising its discretion the High Court ought to take into consideration the limitations imposed by Sec. 497—Sourindra, 37 Cal. 412, 14 C.W.N. 512. This case has been followed by the Nagpur Court in Sh. Karim v. Emp., 27 Cr.L.J. 319. (But now the limitations imposed by Sec. 497 are very few). The rule laid down in sec. 497 for the guidance of Courts other than High Courts is a rule founded upon justice and equity, and one which should be followed by the High Court as well as by every other Court, unless anything appears to the contrary. The extended powers given to the High Court under Sec. 498 are not to be used to get rid of this very reasonable and proper provision of the law—Ashraf Ali, 42 Cal. 25, 16 Cr.L.J. 1215. In another case the Calcutta High Court has held that in exercising its discretion under sec. 498 the High Court should not confine its attention to the question whether the prisoner is likely to abscond or not. Other circumstances may also affect the question of granting bail to accused persons charged with crimes of a grave character—Narendra Lal Khan, 36 Cal. 166, 13 C.W.N. 43, 9 Cr.L.J. 375. The Rangoon High Court holds that although the High Court has absolute discretion in the matter of granting bail, and is not bound by the provision of sec. 497, still the Legislature having placed the initial stage of dealing with crimes with Magistrates and having in fact enacted that persons accused of non-bailable offences shall not be released on bail except under the terms of sec. 497, the High Court is bound to follow the general law as a rule, and not to depart from it except under very special circumstances—Boudville v. K. E., 2 Rang. 546 (547); Emp. v. Nga San Htwin, 5 Rang. 276 (F.B.), 28 Cr.L.J. 773, Henderson v. K. E., 6 Bur.L.T. 73, 14 Cr.L.J. 171. In an earlier Sind case it was held that the High Court when passing order under Sec. 498 was not limited by the restrictions imposed by Sec. 497, that bail should not as a matter of principle be granted in non-bailable cases except in special circumstances; and that the discretion given under Sec. 498 was one that should be exercised according to the exigencies of each case—Harchand v. Crown, 18 Cr.L.J. 642, 10 S.L.R. 208. But in a recent Sind case it has been held that though sec. 498 gives wide powers to the High Court granting bail, it should be interpreted as controlled by the provision of sec. 497—Gul, 29 Cr.L.J. 470 (471) (following 37 Cal. 412 and 42 Cal. 25). When the High Court is concerned with persons who have been actually convicted, the principle which will necessarily guide the High Court in granting bail will be whether there are reasonable grounds for believing that the convicts committed the offences in question—Sh Karim v Emp, 27 Cr.L.J. 319 (Nag.).

The High Court and the Court of Session can exercise their power of granting bail, as soon as the Police have arrested the accused and even before the case is sent up to the Magistrate—7 Bur.L.R. 86. They can admit a person to bail even where he has been convicted and has not appealed—Badri Prasad, 8 Cr.L.J. 49, 5 A.L.J. 419. Where the accused relies merely on a technical ground against the probability of his conviction, he should not be admitted to bail—Ratanlal 480. The High Court refused to grant bail, where the application for bail contained defamatory statements and allegations consisting of attacks on the trying Magistrate and on the public and private conduct of other officers of high rank—Clive Durant, 15 Bom. 488.

Grant of bail pending appeal to Privy Council:—Where the accused obtained special leave from the Privy Council to appeal to that tribunal, and applied for bail to the Judicial Committee, and the Judicial Committee expressed an opinion that the matter should be decided by the High Court, whereupon the petitioner applied to the High Court for bail, held that the High Court had jurisdiction to make an order in the case releasing the accused on bail, pending the decision of the Privy Council—Q. E. v. Subrahmanya Ayyar, 24 Mad. 161. But when in a case the petitioner has no right to appeal to the Privy Council, and the High Court has no power to give leave to appeal to that tribunal, the High Court cannot, after it confirms the conviction of the Court below, admit the petitioner to bail, simply because he proposes to apply (but has not yet applied) to the Judicial Committee for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. It cannot do so even under clause 41 of the Letters Patent. As soon as the High Court confirms the conviction on appeal or revision, it becomes functus officio, and has no jurisdiction afterwards to grant bail in order that a petition for leave to appeal may be made to His Majesty in Council, or until the petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council is disposed of—Tulsi Telini v Emp, 50 Cal. 585; Diwan Chand v. K. E., 1908 P.R. 15; Hanmantao v Emp, 21 N.L.R. 161, 27 Cr.L.J. 185. The High Court has inherent jurisdiction (under sec. 561A) to grant bail to an accused who has filed an application to the Judicial Committee for special leave to appeal to the Privy Council, but has not yet obtained the leave; but it would be proper for the High Court to wait till the Privy Council has granted the special leave, and then to grant bail on a fresh application being made—Ram Saroop v. Emp, 49 All. 247, 25 A.L.J. 97, 27 Cr.L.J. 1377.

1316. Power of Sessions Judge:—The Sessions Judge can grant bail to 'any person' who has been wrongly convicted by the Magistrate, and whose case he can either deal with himself or can refer to the High Court. But the words 'any person' do not include a person convicted by the Sessions Judge himself. When a Sessions Judge, after convicting the accused, released them on bail pending their appeal to the High Court, it was held that he had no jurisdiction to do so. This section does not give him power to alter or vary his own order—Basappa, 4 Bom. L.R. 55.

The Sessions Judge has power to admit the petitioners to bail in any case, e.g., on a reference under section 123 (2). It stands to reason that if in the case of a person who is convicted and who has preferred an appeal, bail is allowable, bail can similarly be allowed in the case of a person against whom an order has been made under sec 118, which order is liable to be revised by the Sessions Judge under section 123, sub-section (2)—Ahmed Ali Sardar v Emp, 50 Cal 969.

The admission to bail is a matter within the discretion of the Sessions Judge, and where the Judge uses his discretion with proper care, the High Court will decline to interfere—K E. v Badri Prasad, 5 A.L.J. 419, 8 Cr.L.J. 49; Sh Karim v Emp, 27 Cr.L.J. 319 (Nag).

499. (1) Before any person is released on bail or released on his own bond, a bond Bond of accused and for such sum of money as the sureties. police officer or Court, as the case may be, thinks sufficient shall be executed by such person, and, when he is released on bail, by one or more sufficient sureties conditioned that such person shall attend at the time and place mentioned in the bond, and shall continue so to attend until otherwise directed by the police-officer or Court, as the case may be.

(2) If the case so require, the bond shall also bind the person released on bail to appear when called upon at the High Court, Court of Session or other Court to answer the charge.

1317. Time and place—A bail-bond must contain the time and place of appearance—1885 A W N 44

There is nothing illegal in requiring the accused to bind himself to appear from the date of the execution of the bail-bond on every day until the case is disposed of. No notice is necessary before proceeding to enforce the penalty if default is made—6 M H C R App 39.

Verbal direction to appear—By the terms of a bail-bond the defendant bound himself to appear 'on the first inquiry or at other time required'. He appeared on the first day of the inquiry and was verbally directed to appear on a subsequent date, but failed to do so. It was held that the amount secured by the bond could be legally forfeited by of such non-attendance—Haslavaram-Subba Reddi, 2 Weir 658. ✓

Omission of date by surety:—In a bail-bond, the accused person bound himself to appear on a specified date, and below his signature was the undertaking by the surety that he would cause the accused's appearance, but this declaration did not mention the date for the accused's appearance. The accused having made default, the security was forfeited. It was held that the bail-bond and the undertaking by the surety should be read as one document, and the undertaking should be read as referring to the date mentioned in the portion of the bond signed by the accused, that the omission of date by surety was immaterial, and that therefore the security was rightly forfeited—Mappillai Kader, 19 Cr.L.J. 687 (Mad.).

Appearance before Police:—The words 'until otherwise directed by the Police officer' shew that a bond under sec. 497 may require the accused to appear before the Police, the direction as to appearance is not limited to appearance before a Court—Kansai Ram, 1913 P.R. 22, 14 Cr.L.J. 631.

500. (1) As soon as the bond has been executed, the person for whose appearance it has been executed shall be released; and, when he is in jail, the Court admitting him to bail shall issue an order of release to the officer in charge of the jail, and such officer on receipt of the order shall release him.

(2) Nothing in this section, section 496 or section 497 shall be deemed to require the release of any person liable to be detained for some matter other than that in respect of which the bond was executed.

501. If, through mistake, fraud or otherwise, insufficient sureties have been accepted, or if they afterwards become insufficient, the Court may issue a warrant of arrest directing that the person released on bail be brought before it and may order him to find sufficient sureties, and, on his failing so to do, may commit him to jail.

1318. Scope:—This section applies only to a case where there were sureties; it does not apply where the accused was let out on his own bond, without any surety—Karathan Ambalam, 33 Mad 1088, 17 Cr.L.J. 132

Insufficient sureties—A Magistrate is justified in increasing the amount of bail if by further inquiry the case turns out more serious than he at first imagined—Sita Ram v. Govind, 1912 P.L.R. 66, 13 Cr.L.J. 474.

502. (1) All or any sureties for the attendance and appearance of a person released on bail may at any time apply to a Magistrate to discharge the bond, either wholly or so far as relates to the applicants.

(2) On such application being made, the Magistrate shall issue his warrant of arrest directing that the person so released be brought before him

(3) On the appearance of such person pursuant to the warrant, or on his voluntary surrender, the Magistrate shall direct the bond to be discharged either wholly or so far as relates to the applicants, and shall call upon such person to find other sufficient sureties, and, if he fails to do so, may commit him to custody

Where a surety has applied for cancellation of the bail-bond and the Magistrate has received the application, there is no other alternative left to the Magistrate than to cancel the bail-bond. There is no need to hear the application on the merits, and the Magistrate cannot dismiss it because of the applicant's failure to attend and plead - Narayan Shivram, 9 Bom L.R. 1285, 7 Cr L.J. 24.

CHAPTER XL.

OF COMMISSIONS FOR THE EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.

503. (1) Whenever, in the course of an inquiry, a trial or any other proceeding under this Code, it appears to a Presidency Magistrate, a District Magistrate, a Court of Session or the High Court that the examination of a witness is necessary for the ends of justice, and that the attendance of such witness cannot be procured without an amount of delay, expense or inconvenience which, under the circumstances of the case, would be unreasonable, such Magistrate or Court may dispense with such attendance and may issue a commission to any District Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class, within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such witness resides, to take the evidence of such witness.

When attendance of witness may be dispensed with.

(2) When the witness resides in the territories of any Prince or Chief in India in which there is an officer representing the British Indian Government, the commission may be issued to such officer.

(3) The Magistrate or officer to whom the commission is issued, or, if he is the District Magistrate, he or such Magistrate of the first class as he appoints in this behalf, shall proceed to the place where the witness is or shall summon the witness before him, and shall take down his evidence in the same manner, and may for this purpose exercise the same powers, as in trials of warrant cases under this Code.

(4) Where the commission is issued to such officer as is mentioned in sub-section (2), he may delegate his powers and duties under this commission to any officer subordinate to him whose powers are not less than those of a Magistrate of the first class in British India.

1319. Scope of section—This section provides for the issue of a commission to examine a witness in British India or in the territories of any Prince or Chief in India in which there is an officer representing the British Government. This section does not provide for the examination of a witness residing outside India—5 Bom. 338, Emp. v Abdul, 49 Bom. 878, 27 Bom L.R. 1373, 10 Cr.L.J. 571 (All).

This section relates to the issue of a commission and does not empower the trying Magistrate himself to go to the house of a witness to examine him—2 S.L.R. 8, 10 Cr.L.J. 211.

'In the course of inquiry'—A committing Magistrate is competent to examine a witness in the course of the inquiry before himself. But after making the order of committal, he has no jurisdiction to issue a commission for taking evidence so that it might be available at the trial before the Court of Session or High Court. After a commitment is made, applications for the examination of witnesses on commission must be made to the High Court or to the particular Judge exercising original criminal jurisdiction in the High Court or to the Court of Session, as the case may be—Jacob, 19 Cal 113; Ramchandra, 19 Bom. 749.

the fact that she avoided the civil remedy and chose to set the criminal law in motion materially altered her position as regards the question whether she should be exempted from personal appearance, and the accused had a right and a privilege to have her evidence taken in his presence in the Court—Faridunnissa, 5 All. 92.

1321. Delay, expense or inconvenience :—The taking of evidence on commission in criminal cases ought to be most sparingly resorted to. Such a procedure may be adopted only in extreme cases of delay, expense or inconvenience—Faridunnissa, 5 All. 92. If a witness is unable to attend the Court owing to illness (e.g. weak heart and a painful internal malady) the proper course for the Magistrate would be to first ascertain whether it would be possible for the witness to come to Court within a reasonable time, and if not possible, then the Magistrate will have to reluctantly come to the conclusion that his evidence should be taken on commission—Jamuna Singh v. K. E., 3 Pat. 591 (594). Where the evidence of two witnesses was a most material one in the case, in as much as they deposed to the identification of the stolen property, on which deposition the whole case depended, the witnesses ought not to have been examined on commission but their attendance before the Court ought to have been procured, and the expense of Rs 500 in procuring their attendance was not considered to be unreasonable or excessive, having regard to the circumstances of the case—Burke, 6 All. 224.

'May issue'—Discretion of Court :—The issue of a commission for examination is entirely in the discretion of the Court. In criminal cases, the issue of a commission would be a most unsatisfactory course of proceeding, and one dangerous to the interests of the community—8 Cal. 896. The issue of commission is an unsatisfactory proceeding, because on the one hand the Court has no opportunity of noting the demeanour of witness, and on the other hand, of controlling irrelevant and unnecessary or harassing cross-examination of the witness. The discretion to issue a commission should be sparingly exercised, and only in cases of real hardship and inconvenience, having due regard to the prejudice which is likely to be thereby caused to the opponent—Vishnoo v. Dipchand, 20 S.L.R. 28, 27 Cr.L.J. 89.

Sub-section (3) :—Where the Magistrate issues commission for the examination of a witness in a Native State, the officer representing the British Indian Government is bound either to proceed where the witness is, or to summon such witness before him; or he may delegate his functions to any officer subordinate to him. But he cannot decline to execute the commission on the ground of inconvenience or some other similar reason. The provisions of sub-section (3) are mandatory in this respect. Thus, the officer cannot refuse to execute the commission on the ground that there is no Resident Political Officer in that State who can execute the commission, for the Cr. P. Code nowhere speaks of a 'Resident Political Officer'—Sikandar, 9 Lah. 347, 29 Cr.L.J. 202.

Commissioner cannot make complaint under sec. 195 .—Although the commissioner appointed under this section may be a 'Court' for the purpose of issuing process against the witness and for recording evidence, still he is not a 'Court' within the meaning of sec. 105. Therefore where a witness gives false evidence before such commissioner, the proper authority to make a complaint for the prosecution of the witness for perjury is not the commissioner but the Court which issued the commission—Sardul Ali, 11 C.W.N. 909, 6 Cr.L.J. 160.

504. (1) If the witness is within the local limits of the jurisdiction of any Presidency Magistrate, the Magistrate or Court issuing the commission may direct the same to such Presidency Magistrate, who thereupon may compel the attendance of, and examine, such witness as if he were a witness in a case pending before himself.

(1A) When a commission is issued under this section to a Chief Presidency Magistrate, he may delegate his powers and duties under the commission to any Presidency Magistrate subordinate to him.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the power of the High Court to issue commissions under the Slave Trade Act, 1876, section 3.

Change .—In sub-section (1) the word 'such' has been substituted for "the said," and sub-section (1A) has been newly added, by section 137 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. "This clause enables a Chief Presidency Magistrate to delegate to a subordinate Presidency Magistrate his powers and duties under any commission issued in his name"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

505. (1) The parties to any proceeding under this Code in which a commission is issued, may respectively forward any interrogatories in writing which the Magistrate or Court directing the commission may think relevant to the issue, and the Magistrate or . . .

Parties may examine witnesses.

to whom the commission is directed or to whom the duty of executing such commission has been delegated, shall examine the witness upon such interrogatories.

(2) Any such party may appear before such Magistrate or officer by pleader, or if not in custody, in person, and may examine, cross-examine and re-examine (as the case may be) the said witness.

Change :—The italicised words have been added by section 138 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. This amendment is consequential to the amendment made in sec. 504.

506. Whenever, in the course of an inquiry or a trial or any other proceeding under this Code before any Magistrate other than a Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate, it appears that a commission ought to be issued for the examination of a witness whose evidence is necessary for the ends of justice, and that the attendance of such witness cannot be procured without an amount of delay, expense or inconvenience which, under the circumstances of the case, would be unreasonable, such Magistrate shall apply to the District Magistrate, stating the reasons for the application; and the District Magistrate may either issue a commission in the manner hereinbefore provided or reject the application.

1323. Where a case is pending before a subordinate Magistrate, the District Magistrate cannot issue a commission for the examination of a witness in that case, without a reference by the subordinate Magistrate under this section—2 S.L.R. 8, 10 Cr.L.J. 211. A Magistrate can take action under this section if the evidence of the witness is necessary, but not otherwise—Dinabandhu v. Hasan Ali, 33 C.W.N. 1088.

507. (1) After any commission issued under Sec. 503 or Sec. 506 has been duly executed, it shall be returned, together with the deposition of the witness examined thereunder, to the Court out of which it issued; and the commission, the return thereto and the deposition shall be open at all reasonable times to inspection of the parties, and may, subject to all just exceptions, be read in evidence in the case by either party, and shall form part of the record.

(2) Any deposition so taken, if it satisfies the conditions prescribed by Section 33 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, may also be received in evidence at any subsequent stage of the case before another Court.

1324. Sub-section (2) — Admissibility of evidence taken on commission :—This section has been enacted on the basis of the judgment in 19 Bom. 749 Under the 1892 Code, evidence taken under a commission issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate during the course of an inquiry before him was held inadmissible at the trial of the same case at the High Court Sessions—Q E v Jacob, 19 Cal 113 This difficulty has been removed by this sub-section

Evidence taken on commission is admissible in a trial of a seaman for an offence committed on the High Seas—Barton, 16 Cal 238

508. In every case in which a commission is issued under Sec. 503 or Sec. 506, the inquiry, trial or other proceeding may be adjourned for a specified time reasonably sufficient for the execution and return of the commission.

Adjournment of inquiry or trial. When a commission has been issued, the trial should be postponed till the return of the commission The trial and commission cannot go together. The discretion given by this section to adjourn proceedings ought to be exercised in a reasonable manner The accused person should not be detained for an unnecessarily long time—See Jacob, 19 Cal. 113.

CHAPTER XLI.

SPECIAL RULES OF EVIDENCE.

509. (1) The deposition of a Civil Surgeon or other medical witness taken and attested by a Magistrate in the presence of the accused, or taken on commission under Chapter XL, may be given in evidence in any inquiry, trial or other proceeding under this Code, although the deponent is not called as a witness.

Deposition of medical witness.

Power to summon medical witness.

(2) The Court may, if it thinks fit, summon and examine deponent as to the subject of his deposition.

1325. Deposition :—It is only the deposition of a Civil Surgeon that can be taken in evidence; the only opinion of the Civil Surgeon which can be considered in judicially dealing with the case is an opinion expressed by him when examined as a witness under the usual tests to which witnesses are subjected. The Civil Surgeon's letter addressed to the Sessions Judge expressing an opinion as to the nature of the wound inflicted upon the deceased, is extra-judicial matter and cannot be received in evidence—Samiruddin, 8 Cal. 211. So also, the certificate of a medical officer as to the cause of the death of a person and of the fatal character of the wounds is no evidence—2 Weir 659. The report of a Medical man on his post mortem examination cannot be treated as evidence, though it may be used by him to refresh his memory when giving evidence—Roghuni, 9 Cal. 455. A paper which purports to be the substance of a report from a subordinate medical officer with an expression of concurrence by the Civil Surgeon cannot be used as evidence, although the examination of a medical witness written in proper form may be so used—Chintamonee, 11 W.R. 2. A certificate granted by the Professor of a Medical College as regards the bones submitted to him for examination is not admissible in evidence. He must be examined as a witness—Ahilya Manaji, 24 Bom.L.R. 803.

'By a Magistrate' —The deposition may be attested by a Magistrate, i.e., any Magistrate, not necessarily by the committing Magistrate while holding the preliminary inquiry—1893 A.W.N. 180.

'In the presence of the accused' :—To render it admissible in evidence, the deposition of a witness in a criminal case should be taken and attested by the Magistrate in the presence of the accused—Kachali Hari, 18 Cal. 129; Jhubboo Mahton, 8 Cal. 739. The evidence of a Medical officer given before a committing Magistrate is not admissible in the Sessions Court where the committing Magistrate does not certify that the evidence was given in the presence of the accused—4 C.W.N. 49. In the absence of proof that the deposition was taken and attested by the Magistrate in the presence of the accused, it cannot be presumed, under sec. 80 or sec. 114 Illustration (e) of the Evidence Act, that the deposition was so taken and attested—Kachali Hari, 18 Cal 129; Pohp Singh, 10 All. 174. The examination of a medical witness taken in the absence of the accused is inadmissible in evidence. When, however, there is sufficient prima facie evidence to warrant a commitment to the Sessions Court, and the evidence of the medical witness is likely to be only of a formal character, and great inconvenience would result from his being summoned to a Magistrate's Court, the examination need not be taken before a Magistrate, but his attendance before the Sessions Court must be secured. Under all other circumstances the Magistrate should invariably record the evidence of the medical witness before himself—Ratanlal 81.

In order to secure compliance with the provisions of this section, Magistrates are hereby directed to sign at the foot of the deposition of medical witnesses a certificate in the following form.—“The foregoing deposition was taken in the presence of the accused (name) who had an opportunity of cross-examining the witness. The deposition was explained to the accused, and was attested by me in his presence”—Cal G. R. & C. O. page 14, C. P. Cr. Cir., Part II, No 55; N. W. P. H. C. Cr. Cir., Para. 38, p. 17.

Deposition should be carefully recorded—The statement of a medical witness, if taken and attested by the Magistrate in the presence of the accused, is admissible as evidence in the Sessions Court, although the medical witness is not himself called. It ought therefore to be recorded with the utmost care and accuracy—Bharat, 20 O C 61, 18 Cr.L.J. 380

1327. Value of medical evidence :—Mere theories of medical witnesses should not be accepted as against proved facts. It would be improper for a Judge to reject facts which were proved by the evidence of certain witnesses, merely because a medical officer gave his opinion that what the witnesses deposed to could not be true—11 W.R. 25 Medical experts and others such as Judges who have to form opinions and exercise their judgment should have regard primarily to the facts and not draw upon their imagination; otherwise the administration of justice would depend upon their individual idiosyncrasies and become unstable and unworkable—Emp. v Yunus Ali, 32 C.W.N 783 (787). A Judge is not entitled to discard the direct evidence of credible and unimpeachable witnesses who depose that with their own eyes they saw certain things done, merely upon the strength of the opinion of a medical witness that those things could not have been done—1889 A.W.N 74. On the other hand, in a case of murder, the medical evidence as to the cause of death should never as a matter of precaution be dispensed with, although the accused admits having killed the deceased and pleads extenuating circumstances—Agra N A 2nd January 1862, p 1.

1328. Sub-section (2) .—Summoning of medical witness — In a case of murder or man-slaughter, where the medical report is inconsistent with the prosecution evidence, it is the duty of the prosecution to call the medical officer himself or to give other medical evidence in the hearing of the jury, and not to stand merely on the deposition given by the medical officer before the committing Magistrate in its recorded form. It is unreasonable to expect the jury to convict if a proper exposition and explanation of the medical evidence is not given viva voce by a doctor who can deal with the matter and satisfy the jury—Debendra Narayan, 56 Cal 566, 33 C.W.N. 632, 30 Cr L.J. 1031 (1033). The recorded deposition of a medical witness should be carefully scrutinized by the Sessions Judge, and if it appears that the deposition is essential deficient or requires further explanation or elucidation, the Judge should summon and examine the witness—Bharat, 20 O.C. 61, 18 Cr L J 380.

In all cases of murder, the committing Magistrate should bind over the medical witnesses to attend at the Sessions, unless grave inconvenience will be caused thereby—Rule 204 of Mad. Rules of Practice

"If Magistrates carefully and fully record the medical evidence, there will be no necessity for summoning the medical witness to attend before the Sessions Court,, except for special reason in particular cases. The accused persons or their pleaders should be asked at the time of commitment whether they wish to have the medical witness summoned before the Sessions Court or whether they consider that the evidence recorded by the Magistrate, which should be carefully attested in their presence, is sufficient. If they desire the personal attendance of the medical witness, this should be regarded as a sufficient reason for summoning him"—Cal G. R. & C. O., p 14

510. Any document purporting to be a report under the hand of any Chemical Examiner or Assistant Chemical Examiner to Government, upon any matter or thing duly submitted to him for examination or analysis and report in the course of any proceeding under this Code, may be used as evidence in any inquiry, trial or other proceeding under this Code.

1329. Report —The report must be the original report of the Chemical Examiner, bearing his signature, and not a copy of the report; and it must be signed by the Chemical Examiner—15 W.R. 49

Where a matter containing poison was submitted to the Chemical Examiner, his report in order to be admissible in evidence must purport to be signed by the officer who detected the poison in the matter and who from personal knowledge could certify to the correctness of the result embodied in the report—2 Weir 661.

'Any Chemical Examiner':—The word 'any' includes an Additional Chemical Examiner. The word 'any' did not occur in the earlier Code, and it was therefore held in Q. E. v. Aulal Muchi, 10 Cal 1026 that the report of an Additional Chemical Examiner could not be received in evidence

Identity of articles examined:—When committing cases, a Magistrate must take care to send up evidence to prove that a body sent to the hospital for post mortem examination is really the body of the person referred to in the case under trial, or that an article analysed by the Chemical Examiner was actually the article sent to him for analysis in the case under trial. A Sessions Judge must insist upon being furnished with such evidence, and must not record either the chemical analysis report or the evidence of the medical officer until the connecting links requisite to render them admissible have been established—Nga Pya, 1 Bur. L.R. 634; Q. E. v. Autal Muchi, 10 Cal. 1026; Chukkarpalli Ramayya v. Emp., 20 M.L.J. 657, 1 Cr.L.J. 222; Mad. Din v. Emp., 26 P.L.R. 748, 26 Cr.L.J. 1420. A Sessions Judge is bound to warn the jury, that before using the Chemical Examiner's report, they must be satisfied on the evidence that the substances examined were in fact what they were said to be—Ofel Molla v. Emp., 18 C.W.N. 180, 15 Cr.L.J. 147.

511. In any inquiry, trial or other proceeding under this Code, a previous conviction or acquittal may be proved, in addition to any other mode provided by any law for the time being in force—

Previous conviction or acquittal how proved.

(a) by an extract certified, under the hand of the officer having the custody of the records of the Court in which such conviction or acquittal was had, to be a copy of the sentence or order; or,

(b) in case of a conviction, either by a certificate signed by the officer in charge of the jail, in which the punishment or any part thereof was inflicted, or by production of the warrant of commitment under which the punishment was suffered;

together with, in each of such cases, evidence as to the identity of the accused person with the person so convicted or acquitted.

1330. Proof of previous convictions—Before passing sentences, it is desirable and necessary that if there are previous convictions they should properly be proved—Turimella, 17 Cr.L.J. 179. Magistrates are not absolved from the ordinary rules of evidence in taking proof of previous convictions. Whenever it is required to prove a previous conviction against a man, whether it be for the purpose of enhancement of punishment under section 75 I. P. C., or in proceedings under Chap. VIII of the Cr. P. C., such previous conviction must be proved strictly and in accordance with law. Unless it is so proved, no Court can properly take such previous conviction into consideration—43 Cal. 1128. Previous convictions should, regard being had to the provisions of this section, be proved by copies of judgments or extracts from judgments or by any other documentary evidence of the fact of such previous convictions, and the examination of the accused in respect of those convictions is, having regard to sec. 342, without legal warrant or jurisdiction—Yasin, 28 Cal. 689; Alloomiya, 28 Bom. 129. Previous conviction should be proved by one of the modes laid down in this section The Court should not be satisfied only with the admission of the accused—Dayaram, 30 P.L.R. 530, 30 Cr.L.J. 1082.

When the previous conviction has been put to the accused and he denies it, the certified extract from the records of the Court in which he was convicted should be put in evidence; proof should be given that he and the person named therein are one and the same person, and the Court should record a specified finding upon that point—1881 A.W.N. 144; Tuki Mahomed v. Kishto, 15 W.R. 53. But a mere Kaifiat from the record office is not sufficient to prove a previous conviction—Tuki Mahomed v. Kisto, 15 W.R. 53

Finger-impressions.—The manner in which a previous conviction may be proved is not limited to the method laid down by this section. Any relevant evidence upon which the Court can properly base a finding that the accused was on a previous occasion convicted of an offence will do as well as the method indicated by this section. Thus, a previous conviction may be proved by finger-impressions. See Emp. v. Sahadeo, 3 N.L.R. 1, 5 Cr.L.J. 220; Murli Roy, 6 C.P.L.R. 3; Abdul Hamid, 32 Cal. 759, Fakir Mahomed, 1 C.W.N. 33; 1906 P.L.R. 3. If the identity of the accused is to be proved by a comparison of finger-prints, the one taken in Court being compared with certain finger-prints contained in the record of previous convictions, there ought to be evidence to prove the similarity between the two, and the identification of the last-mentioned finger-prints as those of the person who has been previously convicted—Ramdas v. K. E., 21 C.W.N. 469, 16 Cr.L.J. 462. The papillary ridges on the bulbs of the fingers and thumbs, by means of which finger-impressions are made, while proved to be almost beyond change from birth to death, are never wholly repeated in the case of the fingers of any other person, and they therefore furnish a surer test of identity than any other comparable bodily feature. Where two prints made on different occasions resemble one another in the minutiae, and contain no points of disagreement, an irresistible conclusion arises that they were made by the same finger—Emp. v. Sahadeo, 3 N.L.R. 1, 5 Cr.L.J. 220.

512. (1) If it is proved that an accused person has absconded, and that there is no

Record of evidence in absence of accused.

immediate prospect of arresting him, the Court competent to try or commit for trial such person for the offence complained of may, in his absence, examine the witnesses (if any) produced on behalf of the prosecution, and record their depositions. Any such deposition may, on the arrest of such person, be given in evidence against him on the inquiry into, or trial for, the offence with which he is charged, if the deponent is dead or incapable of giving evidence or his attendance cannot be procured without an amount of delay, expense or inconvenience which, under the circumstances of the case, would be unreasonable.

(2) If it appears that an offence punishable with death or transportation has been committed by some person or persons unknown, the High Court may direct that any Magistrate of the first class shall hold an inquiry and examine any witnesses who can give evidence concerning the offence. Any depositions so taken may be given in evidence against any person who is subsequently accused of the offence, if the deponent is dead or incapable of giving evidence or beyond the limits of British India.

1331. Scope of section.—This section has been specially enacted for enabling the Magistrate to record evidence in the absence of an absconding accused, and therefore a Magistrate cannot reject an application of the complainant to summon witnesses or to call on them to produce documents, because the accused has absconded—2 Bom L.R. 707.

The Magistrates can only record the evidence, and cannot convict or sentence the accused in his absence—1917 P R 36

A pardon can be tendered to an approver under sec. 337 even though the principal accused has absconded; in such a case, the approver's evidence will be recorded under this section—46 Bom 120.

Proof of absconding.—In order to give jurisdiction to the Court to examine witnesses in the absence of the accused, it must be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the accused has absconded and that there is no immediate prospect of arresting him—1890 A W N 100, 1896 A W. N. 182 So, where evidence was recorded by the Magistrate while there was no proof that the accused had absconded, there was no judicial proceeding, and any witness giving false evidence therein could not be prosecuted for an offence under sec 193 I. P. C.—Emp. v Makhni, 1890 A. W.N 100.

According to the Lahore High Court, to satisfy the requirements of this section, all that is necessary is that it should be proved that the accused has absconded, and it is not necessary that a finding should be given by the Court to that effect—Daya Ram v Emp., 6 Lah 489, 27 Cr L J 247, 26 P.L.R. 845. But in an earlier case the Punjab Chief Court held that where the accused had absconded, the Court should take evidence as to the accused person having absconded, and should record a finding to that effect. In the absence of such proof and finding, the recording of the deposition of witnesses in the absence of the accused was illegal—Wahid v Emp., 1883 P.R. 21 The Allahabad High Court also holds that the finding that the accused has absconded should be recorded as a condition precedent by the Magistrate who takes the evidence under sec 512—Sheoraj v. Emp., 48 All 375, 27 Cr.L.J. 874. The Court which records the deposition under sec. 512 must first of all record an order that in its opinion it has been proved that the accused has absconded—Emp v Rustam, 38 All. 29, 13 A.L.J. 1043, 16 Cr.L.J. 801. It is sufficient if the Magistrate records a finding that the accused has absconded; it is not necessary to record further that there is no immediate prospect of arresting him. And so, where the Magistrate recorded a clear finding that the accused had absconded, the mere fact that he did not recite in his order a finding that there was no immediate prospect of arresting the accused, would not render the evidence taken in the absence of the accused inadmissible against them when arrested—Bhagwati v. Emp., 41 All. 60, 16 A.L.J. 902, 20 Cr.L.J. 8. In Ghurbia v. Q. E., 10 Cal 1097, the Calcutta High Court has laid down that evidence can be recorded against the accused in his absence, only if the fact of his absconding is alleged, tried and established before the deposition is recorded; but nothing is said in this case as to whether the Court should record a finding as to the absconding of the accused, as in fact the evidence in this case was not recorded under sec. 512.

Value of the deposition given in absence of accused.—The latter part of sub-section (1) seems clearly to indicate that the witnesses who were examined during the absence of the absconding accused should be examined in the presence of the accused, when he is found, unless it is impracticable to obtain their attendance. The statements recorded by a Magistrate under sec. 512 in the absence of the accused cannot be treated as evidence in the Sessions Court, if the witness is living and can be procured—Rakhia v. Emp, 1911 P.L.R 157, 12 Cr.L.J. 214. Where it was not impracticable to obtain the attendance of the witnesses when the accused was found, and the accused was committed to the Sessions merely on the strength of the recorded deposition of those witnesses, the commitment was held to be illegal—22 W.R 33. But if the accused pleads to the charge, the commitment cannot be quashed—Sagambar, 12 C.L.R. 120. If, however, upon such commitment, the Sessions Judge in the course of the trial is of opinion that the prosecution has not laid a basis for the reception of the deposition taken before the Magistrate in the absence of the accused, he should adjourn the trial and, under sec 540, summon such witnesses as he may deem material—Sagambar, 12 C.L.R. 120.

When two witnesses who had given evidence at a previous trial against four persons then on trial, happened to have referred in the course of their deposition at that trial to a person S who was then absconding, and that person S is subsequently tried, the statements of those two witnesses cannot be read at the subsequent trial of S merely because they happen to be absent and cannot give evidence. The two witnesses gave their evidence at a trial in which S was not an accused person; they merely mentioned the name of S, but the attention of the Court was not then directed against S, nor was the evidence given in any sense as evidence against S—Shcoraj v. Emp., 48 All. 375, 27 Cr.L.J. 874.

'Incapable of giving evidence':—Where a witness who had been examined under section 512 appeared in Court at the trial but could not remember the details of the occurrence, held that he could not be considered as 'incapable of giving evidence' within the meaning of this section. What the Court should do in such a case is to refresh the memory of the witness by reading out his deposition and then ask him if he remembers the details of the occurrence—Bhika v Emp., 25 Cr L J 95 (Lah.)

CHAPTER XLII.

PROVISIONS AS TO BONDS.

513. When any person is required by any Court or officer to execute a bond, with or Deposit instead of recognizance.

without sureties, such Court or officer may, except in the case of a bond for good behaviour, permit him to deposit a sum of money or Government promissory notes to such amount as the Court or officer may fix, in lieu of executing such bond.

'Except in case of bond for good behaviour':—The object of law in making this exception in good behaviour cases, is to secure the good conduct of the person bound over, not by means of money but by a bond and sureties, and by making the sureties responsible for the good behaviour of the person bound down See 2 N W P. 295

1332. Deposit of money:—The deposit of money is in lieu of executing a bond Where a person was ordered to execute a bond for good behaviour, and also to deposit a certain sum in addition thereof, the order as to deposit was illegal, because it was not in lieu of, but in addition, to, execution of bond, and also because it was a good behaviour case—Ratanlal 671

Where money has been deposited in Court as bail, the Magistrate is bound to return the amount, on the appearance of the accused, to the person who made the deposit It has no jurisdiction to attach this money in order to realise out of it the fine imposed on the accused—Raghuandan v Emp, 11 O L J. 296, Girdhari Lal v Emp, 19 A L J 887.

514. (1) Whenever it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court by which a bond Procedure on forfeiture of bond.

under this Code has been taken, or, of the Court of a Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class, or when the bond is for appearance before a Court, to the satisfaction of such Court, that such bond has been forfeited, the Court shall record the grounds of such proof, and may call upon any person bound by such bond to pay the penalty thereof, or to show cause why it should not be paid.

(2) If sufficient cause is not shown and the penalty is not paid, the Court may proceed to recover the same by issuing a warrant for the attachment and sale of the moveable property belonging to such person or his estate if he be dead.

(3) Such warrant may be executed within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which issued it; and it shall authorize the attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to such person without such limits, when endorsed by the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such property is found.

(4) If such penalty is not paid and cannot be recovered by such attachment and sale, the person so bound shall be liable, by order of the Court which issued the warrant, to imprisonment in the civil jail for a term which may extend to six months.

(5) The Court may, at its discretion, remit any portion of the penalty mentioned and enforce payment in part only.

(6) Where a surety to a bond dies before the bond is forfeited, his estate shall be discharged from all liability in respect of the bond. * * *

(7) When any person who has furnished security under section 106 or section 118 or section 562 is convicted of an offence the commission of which constitutes a breach of the conditions of his bond or of a bond executed in lieu of his bond under section 514-B, a certified copy of the judgment of the Court by which he was convicted of such offence may be used as evidence in proceedings under this section against his surety or sureties, and, if such certified copy is so used, the Court shall presume that such offence was committed by him unless the contrary is proved.

Change :—This section has been amended by section 139 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. In sub-section (3) the word 'attachment' has been substituted for the word 'distress' as the former word is more appropriate. In sub-section (6) the words "but the party who gave the bond may be required to find a new surety" have been omitted, but a separate provision to the same effect is made in the new section 514-A. Sub-section (7) has been newly added, the reason is stated in Note 1339 below.

1333. What amounts to forfeiture :—Bonds for appearance should be strictly construed. If the bond requires the accused to appear on a day fixed, and if he appears on that day, the bond is complied with, and the failure of the accused to appear on any other day on which the case is called does not entail a forfeiture of the bond—Anonymous, 2 Weir 663; Anonymous, 4 M.H.C.R. App 44; Behari Lal, 36 Cal. 749 Where bonds were taken from the accused and his sureties to appear on Sunday when the Court was closed, and when on the next Monday the case was called on and the accused not being present the bonds were forfeited, it was held that as the bond required the attendance of the accused on the day fixed, i.e., on Sunday and not on the next day, the failure of the accused to appear on Monday did not cause a forfeiture of the bond—Asanulla, 2 C.W.N. 519 If, however, the bond requires the accused to appear from day to day until the close of the trial, the bond is not illegal—6 M.H.C.R. App. 38, and the accused will forfeit his bond if he fails to appear on any adjourned hearing. Where a bond required the accused to appear 'on the first hearing or at other times required' and the accused appeared on the first day as mentioned in the bond, and was verbally directed to appear on a subsequent date on which he failed to appear, it was held that the failure to comply with the verbal direction would entail a forfeiture of the bond—Haslavaram Subba Reddi, 2 Weir 658. Where on a person being arrested under sec. 55 of this Code, the usual security bond was taken for his appearance, held that the bond was only with respect to the offence for which the person was arrested under sec. 55, and the failure of the surety to produce the person in connection with any other offence which he might be suspected of having committed subsequently did not entail a forfeiture of the bond—Mana v Emp, 25 Cr.L.J. 131 (Lah.) A bail bond should not be forfeited for failure of the surety to produce the accused person, where the failure to produce is due to an act of law, e.g., on account of the accused being arrested for another offence—Alauddin v Emp, 4 Pat. 259, 6 P.L.T. 397, 26 Cr.L.J. 833.

Where a bond requires the accused to appear before a particular Court, the failure of the accused to appear before another Court to which the case has been transferred, does not work a forfeiture of the bond, if no obligation to appear in the latter Court has been specified in the bond—Shamsuddin v. Emp, 30 Cal. 107, Behari Lal, 36 Cal. 749;

or when the bond is for appearance before a Court, to the satisfaction of such Court, that such bond has been forfeited, the Court shall record the grounds of such proof, and may call upon any person bound by such bond to pay the penalty thereof, or to show cause why it should not be paid.

(2) If sufficient cause is not shown and the penalty is not paid, the Court may proceed to recover the same by issuing a warrant for the attachment and sale of the moveable property belonging to such person or his estate if he be dead.

(3) Such warrant may be executed within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which issued it; and it shall authorize the attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to such person without such limits, when endorsed by the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such property is found.

(4) If such penalty is not paid and cannot be recovered by such attachment and sale, the person so bound shall be liable, by order of the Court which issued the warrant, to imprisonment in the civil jail for a term which may extend to six months.

(5) The Court may, at its discretion, remit any portion of the penalty mentioned and enforce payment in part only.

(6) Where a surety to a bond dies before the bond is forfeited, his estate shall be discharged from all liability in respect of the bond. * * *

(7) When any person who has furnished security under section 106 or section 118 or section 562 is convicted of an offence the commission of which constitutes a breach of the conditions of his bond or of a bond executed in lieu of his bond under section 514-B, a certified copy of the judgment of the Court by which he was convicted of such offence may be used as evidence in proceedings under this section against his surety or sureties, and, if such certified copy is so used, the Court is wholly illegal, and the bond given by the surety for the woman's appearance has no legal force and cannot be forfeited if the woman does not appear—Bela Singh, 1918 P.L.R. 50, 19 Cr.L.J. 443, 44 I.C. 971; 1907 P.W.R. 22.

Death of accused :—The death of the accused discharges the sureties from all liabilities. "The object of the surety bonds is to ensure that the accused person shall not evade justice by flying from the jurisdiction of the Court. But if the accused elects to die sooner than face his trial, that can hardly be a sufficient reason for forfeiting the bonds of sureties; it cannot impose upon them any moral obligation or responsibility to the Court"—Rama Bapu, 18 Bom L.R. 683, 17 Cr.L.J. 393; Vijayaraghavulu, 37 Mad. 156

1334. What Court can proceed under this section :—

So far as bonds generally are concerned, action may be taken under this section by the Court by which the bond was taken or by the Court of a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class. But in the case of a bond for appearance before a Court, the tribunal indicated is the Court and there is no other tribunal. Where the bond is for appearance before a Sessions Court, a Deputy Magistrate cannot take action for the forfeiture of the bond. The Sessions Judge cannot delegate that function to the Deputy Magistrate under sec. 516 which deals with the levy of the amount only—14 C.W.N. 259, 10 Cr.L.J. 248. Where a bail-bond was executed for due appearance of the accused before a certain Court, and no provision was made therein for his appearance before any other Court to which the case might thereafter be transferred, held that after such transfer, the former Court had no jurisdiction to forfeit the bond on the ground of the non-appearance of the accused either before the Court to which the case was transferred or before itself—Maung Nge v. K E, 2 Rang. 581 (586). A personal recognizance to appear was taken from the accused by the Magistrate of Karjat. The accused having failed to appear on the day fixed, the Magistrate at Karjat issued a notice to the accused under this section. In the meanwhile, the accused was transferred to the Court of the Magistrate at Khalapur, who forfeited the bond and directed the accused to pay the penalty. It was held that the Magistrate at Khalapur had no jurisdiction to make the order under this section, as he was not the Magistrate who had taken the bond or before whom the accused had to appear on the date of default—In re Mir Husen, 16 Bom L.R. 84, 15 Cr.L.J. 295. The Presidency Magistrate of Bombay has no jurisdiction under this section to order the forfeiture of a bond for appearance before the Police taken by the Police under sec. 106 of the City of Bombay Police Act (Bom Act IV of 1902)—Crawford, 42 Bom 400, 19 Cr.L.J. 607

1335. Notice to show cause :—If an order of forfeiture is passed without any notice to the person whose bond is forfeited, it amounts to a failure of justice, and the defect cannot be cured by sec. 537—Sarju v. Jai Raj, 25 Cr.L.J. 445, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 51. Before a warrant can be issued for the attachment of his property, the surety should be called upon to show cause why he should not pay the penalty mentioned in bond, and it should be clear on the face of the record that he was so called upon. A mere verbal and unrecorded order to show cause is not sufficient—15 W.R. 82. A summary order for recovering the amount due on the security bond from a surety without serving upon him any notice to pay the same or to show cause why it should not be paid, is invalid—9 W.R. 4. Where a Magistrate, in a proceeding to forfeit the surety bond for good behaviour, issued notice to the surety and upon his non-appearance did not proceed to hold any inquiry as to whether the principal offender had committed any offence, but relying on the evidence he had recorded before giving notice, passed an order forfeiting the surety bond, held that the procedure was illegal in as much as the only evidence recorded was not recorded upon notice to the surety, and that the order must be set aside—Moslem Mandal, 54 Cal. 134, 44 C.L.J. 170, 27 Cr.L.J. 1293.

Procedure, if party appears to show cause:—If the party appears to show cause, he should be allowed an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses upon whose evidence the rule to show cause was issued—4 Cal 865; Har Chandra, 25 Cal. 440. If the accused appears and shows cause, and the Magistrate still considers that the recognizance should be forfeited, it is his duty to record the evidence upon which it is proved that the accused has acted in such a way that it becomes necessary to forfeit the recognizance. There must be a regular judicial trial and legal inquiry before punishment can be inflicted—12 W.R. 54. Before it can be declared that a bond executed by a surety is forfeited, there must be a formal finding arrived at after taking evidence in the presence of such surety, which evidence must prove that the principal person has so acted as to necessitate or render it advisable that the surety should, by reason of the act of the principal, forfeit his bond—Har Chandra, 25 Cal. 440.

1336. Order when to be passed:—If the accused's bond is forfeited, the Court may at once proceed to pass an order of forfeiture. If the accused fails to appear on the day fixed, the order of forfeiture of the bond of appearance is not illegal if it is passed on the very next day—Nihal Chand, 2 Bom L.R. 589. Indeed, a Magistrate ought to take action immediately, otherwise it will be deemed that the Magistrate has decided not to take action under this section. Thus, where a person who is already bound over under Chapter VIII is charged with an offence before a Magistrate, and the Magistrate at the time of passing his sentence in the second offence knows that there is an outstanding recognizance, he should decide once for all whether he will proceed on it or not. If he does not make any order for the forfeiture of the recognizance, it must be taken that he has decided not to forfeit the recognizance, and he cannot afterwards, in a subsequent and separate proceeding, reconsider his decision and direct forfeiture of the recognizance—Manshi v. Emp., 25 Cr L.J. 4 (Lah); Mawaz, 1913 P.R. 13, 14 Cr L.J. 67; 1904 P.R. 26, Ramchundra, 1 C.L.R. 134; Parbatti Churn, 3 C.L.R. 406. But is it sufficient if the Magistrate passes an order of forfeiture in substantially the same proceeding in which he convicts the accused, though he does not pass such order immediately on conviction. Thus, where the Magistrate did not pass an order of forfeiture of security at the time of conviction of the principals, but while convicting them he plainly wrote in his judgment that "in as much as the sureties would forfeit Rs. 4,000 presently, I refrain from passing a heavy sentence on the accused;" and then the Magistrate issued process to the sureties and confiscated the security in full: it was held that the Magistrate having plainly showed in his judgment his intention to confiscate, the order of forfeiture of security though passed subsequently after conviction was legal—Hussain Khan v. Crown, 1917 P.R. 15, 18 Cr.L.J. 566. But the Allahabad High Court holds that the mere fact that no immediate action is taken against a person under this section is no bar to his taking such action at a subsequent time, there is nothing in the language of this section which lays down any such limitation; the Magistrate can wait till the time of appealing has expired or till the appeal has been dismissed, and then he can proceed under this section—Emp v Raja Ram, 26 All. 202. This case has been followed by the Sind Court in Jeomal, 19 S.L.R. 95, 27 Cr.L.J. 326 (327). Even the Judges who decided the case of 1913 P.R. 13 (cited above) have also admitted that there is nothing in sec. 514 to debar a Magistrate who has convicted a person of an offence, which involves the forfeiture of the bond, from subsequently taking action against that person by forfeiting the bond in question.

If a person is bound down to keep the peace, say for one year, and the bond is forfeited, proceedings for forfeiture of the bond must be initiated within the term of the bond, i.e., within one year from the date of the bond; and if the proceedings are started within that period, the termination of the period of the bond before the proceedings are finished will not invalidate the subsequent order of forfeiture—20 A.L.J. 692, 44 All. 657.

Moveable property.—During the surety's lifetime, only moveable property can be attached and sold for recovery of the penalty—16 A.L.J. 503 (see this case cited under sec. 118). But a surety can offer house property as security under sec. 118, though his moveable property alone can be attached and sold—Ibid.

'His estate if he be dead'.—These words were introduced into the Code of 1898 to meet 1894 P.R. 22, where it was held that the legal representative of a deceased surety could not be proceeded against under the provisions of this section.

1337. Liability of sureties.—It is the duty of the surety to see that the accused does not run away, but where a surety has failed to produce the accused by reason of an illegal order passed by a Magistrate which the surety was not bound to carry out, and where there is no connivance and no negligence, it cannot be said that the surety has acted irresponsibly so as to be penalised—Parbhu Dayal, 49 All. 825, 28 Cr.L.J. 586 (587), 25 A.L.J. 537. A surety executed a bond whereby he undertook to produce the accused before the Magistrate of Agra during an inquiry into an offence. The Magistrate ordered the surety later to produce the accused at Purnea. The surety sent the accused Purnea, but the latter absconded on his way to Purnea. Nine later the surety was ordered to produce the accused before the Magistrate at Agra in connection with a case at Purnea, and on his failing to do so his security was forfeited. Held that as the bond directed the surety to produce the accused at Agra, the first order directing the surety to produce the accused at Purnea was illegal. The second order was legal, but as the accused had absconded during an honest attempt of the surety to carry out the illegal order of the Magistrate (by sending the accused over to Purnea), the surety should not be penalised to the full extent; and the High Court directed that the order forfeiting the sum of Rs 1,000 be reduced to a sum of Rs 250—Parbhu Dayal, supra.

If the absence of the accused is due to an arrangement between the accused and the complainant, and the surety has knowledge of the arrangement, he is not relieved of his liability, but in such a case he should not be ordered to pay the full amount—Ali Muhammad, 27 P.L.R. 646, 27 Cr.L.J. 1152

The bond executed by the principal and the bond executed by the surety are to be considered as one bond for one amount, and is discharged on forfeiture by the payment of the amount due by either the principal or the surety—Kaku v. Q. E., 1894 P.R. 26. In no case can an amount in excess of the amount secured by the bond be demanded or recovered from the person bound or his sureties, individually or collectively—Ali Mahomed v. Emp., 1911 P.L.R. 226, 12 Cr.L.J. 404, 11 I.C. 581. Where the principal accused was bound over (under sec. 107) in the sum of Rs 500, and his surety in the same amount, and on forfeiture of the bond the Magistrate ordered that the principal should forfeit the whole amount of his bond, viz., Rs 500, and the surety should forfeit Rs. 250, held that the order was illegal, the Magistrate could not demand a sum in excess of Rs. 500, whether from the principal or from the surety or from both. The High Court modified the order of the Magistrate by directing the principal to pay Rs 250 and the surety to pay Rs. 250—Harnam v. Crown, 5 Lah 448 (449). When the amount of the bond has been recovered from the principal, the sureties are not liable to any further amount. The liability of the surety is only a joint and several liability with the principal and there is no warrant to collect the amount twice over—K. E. v. Nga Kaung, 2 Cr.L.J. 463, U.B.R. (1905) 31; K. E. v. Nga Kaung, 2 L.B.R. 235, 1894 P.R. 26, Abdul Aziz, 4 Lah 462. But the Calcutta High Court holds that on the breach of the bond both the surety and principal are liable to pay the penalty of their respective bonds; and the surety is liable quite irrespective of the question whether the amount of the bond of the principal has been realised or not. The liability of the surety is not co-extensive with that of the principal as in the ordinary case of a surety for a debtor for the payment of his debt, where the surety is discharged as soon as the principal debtor pays the money due from him. Here the surety is an additional safeguard against a breach of the peace. Therefore where the principal accused was bound down in the sum of Rs 100, to keep the peace under sec 107, and the surety bond himself in the sum of Rs 50, and upon the bond of the accused being declared forfeited, both he and his surety were ordered to pay the amounts of their respective bonds (viz. Rs. 100 and 50), held that the order was not illegal—Saligram v. Emp., 36 Cal. 562.

As regards the liability of sureties per se, if three sureties sign a bond, they are jointly and severally liable to pay the amount of the bond, but every one of them cannot be called on to pay the whole amount; the sum named can be recovered only once—Mahomed Ibrahim v. Crown, 8 S L R. 173, 16 Cr.L.J. 100

Since sureties on a bond are required in order that the failure of the principal to appear may be at their peril, it follows that the object of this provision is defeated if the principal and surety are allowed to relieve the latter of the peril and confine it to the former by an arrangement among themselves. Therefore, an agreement by an accused with his surety that he will indemnify the surety if the bail is forfeited on account of the accused's non-appearance, is void—Jodhraj v. Bishanlal, 20 N L R 166.

Sub-section (4) :—Imprisonment —When default is made in payment, the Magistrate cannot forthwith direct imprisonment. He should order the attachment and sale of the defaulter's moveable property, and if the penalty cannot be recovered from such attachment and sale, then and then only can he direct imprisonment—10 C L R 571, Maung Po v. Maung Shwe, 30 Cr.L.J. 346 (348)

1339. Sub-section (7) :—Admissibility of judgment of convictions :—This sub-section has been newly enacted. Under the old law there was a conflict of opinion among the High Courts. The Allahabad and Punjab Courts laid down that where a person who had given a security bond with a surety for good behaviour, was convicted of an offence, the production of the judgment of conviction and the proof, if necessary, of the identity of the principal was sufficient evidence upon which a Magistrate was competent to issue notice to the surety. It was not incumbent on the Magistrate to prove that the principal was properly convicted, by re-summoning the witnesses on whose evidence the principal was convicted—Man Mohan, 21 All 86, Wadhawa, 1903 P R. 32, 1911 P W R. 35. But in Har Chandra, 25 Cal 440 and Chandra Sekhar, 11 Cal. 77, it was held that the mere production of the original record or a certified copy of the trial in which the principal was convicted would not be conclusive evidence to show that the accused had really committed an offence; such fact must be proved by evidence taken in the presence of the surety, unless it was admitted by him. The present sub-section adopts the view of the Allahabad and Punjab decisions. "There has been a conflict of opinion among a judgment convicting the principal in a bond taken under the Code and ordering the forfeiture of the bond is sufficient prima facie proof in proceedings under this section against the sureties. The amendment permits the use of such a judgment as evidence in such proceedings and directs that the Court shall presume that such offence was committed unless the contrary is proved"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

The judgment of conviction is undoubted evidence against the principal himself. Thus, where the bond is given by the person bound down to keep the peace, the judgment convicting him of a breach of the peace is admissible in evidence against him, and may form a sufficient basis for an order under this section, he having had an opportunity of cross-examining the witness on whose evidence the forfeiture is held to be established—Hara Chandra, 25 Cal. 440; 4 Cal. 865.

Revision —The High Court can revise all orders made under this section. See notes under section 515.

1340. Nature of proceedings under this section :
—The proceeding to realise a penalty is of the nature of a civil proceeding (3 P.L.T. 381) and the person against whom it is taken is competent to give evidence on oath in his own behalf—15 W.R. 87. It is not a criminal proceeding, and no charge need be drawn up. After the Magistrate has satisfied himself that the bond has been forfeited, he can at once call upon the person concerned to pay the penalty. The proceeding therefore cannot be held to be a "trial" in the sense of the Code—2 Mad 169

514A. When any surety to a bond under this Code becomes insolvent or dies, or when any bond is forfeited under the provisions of section 514, the Court, by whose order such bond was taken, or a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class, may order the person from whom such security was demanded to furnish fresh security in accordance with the directions of the original order, and if such security is not furnished, such Court or Magistrate may proceed as if there had been a default in complying with such original order.

This section has been newly added by sec 140 of the Cr P.C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923, to make up the deletion of certain words in sub-section (6) of section 514. It also covers the case of a surety who becomes insolvent.

514B. When the person required by any Court or officer to execute a bond is a minor, such Court or officer may accept, in lieu thereof, a bond executed by a surety or sureties only.

Bond required from a minor.

"We have added a new section 514B to provide for the case of a bond being required from a minor"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

Under the old law, where a person released on probation under sec. 562 and ordered to execute a bond for good conduct was a minor, the bond could not be executed by his sureties, see K. E. v. Mi Pyu, 4 L.R.R. 12, 6 Cr.L.J. 123. This is no longer good law, having regard to the provision of this section.

515. All orders passed under Section 514 by any Magistrate other than a Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate, shall be appealable to the District Magistrate, or, if not so appealed, may be revised by him.

Appeal from and revision of orders under Section 514.

1341. Appeal and revision—Under the old Codes of 1861 and 1872 there was no provision for appeal or revision of orders forfeiting a security bond under sec. 514, see Ananthachari v. Ananthachari, 2 Mad. 169. This section makes provision for such appeal or revision

Under this section, all orders passed by the subordinate Magistrates shall be appealable to the District Magistrate, but not to any first Class Magistrate—Ratanlal 384.

A bond for keeping the peace or for good behaviour is not given to any particular person but to the Court, and no private party is entitled to appeal against an order of a Magistrate refusing to forfeit the bond, but it is open to the District Magistrate to take action in revision—Sarju v. Jal Raj Kumar, A I R. 1925 Oudh 51, 25 Cr L.J. 445.

Orders passed by a District Magistrate under this section may be subject to revision by the High Court—Masta v. K. E., 1905 P R. 15, 2 Cr.L.J. 131

516. The High Court or Court of Session may direct any Magistrate to levy the amount due on a bond to appear and attend at such High Court or Court of Session.

Power to direct levy of amount due on certain recognizance.

This section empowers the Court of Session to delegate his power of levying fine to a Magistrate, but he cannot delegate his power of initiating proceedings for forfeiture of the bond—14 C W N 259, 10 Cr.L.J. 248 (cited in Note 1334 under sec. 514).

CHAPTER XLIII.

OF THE DISPOSAL OF PROPERTY.

516A. When any property regarding which any offence appears to have been committed, or which appears to have been used for the commission of any offence, is produced before any Criminal Court during any inquiry or trial, the Court may make such order as it thinks fit for the proper custody of such property pending the conclusion of the inquiry or trial, and, if the property is subject to speedy or natural decay, may, after recording such evidence as it thinks necessary, order it to be sold or otherwise disposed of.

This section has been newly added by section 141 of the Cr P.C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "It is proposed to add to the chapter a new section to enable the Court to pass orders for the custody or disposal of property during an inquiry"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). Under the old law, an order for disposal of property could be made only when the inquiry or trial was concluded (sec. 517), but no order could be made while the offence committed in connection with such property was still under inquiry, and the trial was not yet ended—Ratanlal 957, 5 C L J. 229, 24 M.L.J. 1. This section enables a Court to make an order for disposal of property during the inquiry or trial.

517. (1) When an inquiry or a trial in any Criminal Court is concluded, the Court may make such order as it thinks fit for the disposal, by destruction, confiscation, or delivery to any person claiming to be entitled to possession thereof or otherwise, of any property or document produced before it or in its custody or regarding which any offence appears to have been committed or which has been used for the commission of any offence.

(2) When a High Court or a Court of Session makes such order and cannot through its own officers conveniently deliver the property to the person entitled thereto, such Court may direct that the order be carried into effect by the District Magistrate.

(3) When an order is made under this section in (3) *When an order is made under this section, *  a case in which an appeal lies, such order shall not (except when the property is live-stock or is subject to speedy and natural decay) be carried out until the period allowed for presenting such appeal has passed, or, when such appeal is presented within such period, until such appeal has been disposed of.

such order shall not, except where the property is live-stock or subject to speedy and natural decay, and save as provided by sub-section (4), be carried out for one month, or when an appeal is presented, until such appeal has been disposed of.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prohibit any Court from delivering any property under the provisions of sub-section (1) to any person claiming to be entitled to the possession thereof, on his executing a bond with or without surties to the satisfaction of the Court, engaging to restore such property to the Court if the order made under this section is modified or set aside on appeal.

Explanation.—In this section the term “property” includes, in the case of property regarding which an offence appears to have been committed, not only such property as has been originally in the possession or under the control of any party, but also any property into or for which the same may have been converted or exchanged, and anything acquired by such conversion or exchange, whether immediately or otherwise.

Change .—This section has been amended by section 142 of the Cr.P.C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923, as follows .—

(a) The italicised words have been added in sub-section (1) “These words are added to elucidate the order for disposal of property produced before a Court by explaining that this means disposal by destruction, confiscation or restoration to the person claiming to be entitled to the possession thereof”—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

(b) Sub-section (3) has been changed as shown in parallel columns. “It allows one month for the presentation of an appeal or an application for revision where this is allowed”—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

(c) Sub-section (4) has been added “By this clause, the Court is enabled, if it sees fit, to restore the property to the possession of any person claiming to be entitled to it, who is willing to execute a bond for its return if need be"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

1342. Scope of section :—Under the Code of 1882, the operation of this section was much restricted, and the Court could make an order under this section only with reference to property in respect of which any offence had been committed or which had been used for the commission of any offence otherwise not—Fattah Chand, 24 Cal 499, Basudeb v. Naziruddin, 14 Cal. 834 : 1 C.W.N. 561; 2 Weir 665, 666, 668, 669; 1 Bom. 630, Anant Ramchandra, 10 Bom. 197; 17 Bom 748; Devidin, 22 Bom 844, and the order could be made only when that offence was actually under investigation or trial by the Court—Ratanlal 500; Abdul Khalik, 1888 P.R. 46.

Under the 1898 Code, the scope of the section has been enlarged, and an order can be made with regard to any property produced before the Court, or in its custody, even though it has not been used for the commission of any offence or though no offence in regard to it has been committed—Russul v Ahmed, 34 Cal 347, In re Pyde Ramanna, 42 Mad. 9, Maung Ma v. Ma Kra, 6 Rang' 259, 29 Cr.L.J. 958; 21 Cr.L.J. 414 (Nag); (e.g., when the accused is acquitted of the offence—Maung Ma, supra); or though the offence actually under investigation is not in connection with the property or is not proved—2 Weir 666. The ruling in 2 Weir 665 is no longer good law. The decision in 30 Cal. 690 is erroneous as it did not notice the change in the law in the 1898 Code.

1343. Property :—Property produced in Court :—When a portion of a property (e.g. a portion of salt or other articles in bulk) is produced in Court and received in evidence as a sample, the whole bulk is taken to have been produced before the Court, and the Magistrate can make an order with respect to the entire bulk—2 Weir 670.

*Property in respect of which an offence has been committed :—*These words mean property which has been the subject of offences like theft or criminal misappropriation—Abinash v. K. E., 34 Cal. 988. Where the accused gave false information that his jewels were stolen, and afterwards these jewels were found in his possession, and the Magistrate after convicting him of an offence under sec 182 I P. C. confiscated those jewels under this section, it was held that the order under this section was illegal, because the jewels were neither produced before the Court, nor was there any offence committed with regard to them—Lakshmi Narayan, 9 C.W.N. 597.

Cash is not, strictly speaking, property, except in so far as it is capable of being possessed and identified in specie. If, however, it is certain that the coins found on the person of thieves are the actual coins which have been the subject of theft, then it is permissible to treat such coins as stolen property and the Magistrate can pass an order as to their disposal (e.g., an order to pay them to the complainant as compensation). But coins which have been put into circulation and passed on to other persons cannot be treated in the same way as stolen coins actually remaining in the possession of thieves—Parsu v. Emp., 18 S.L.R. 218, 26 Cr.L.J. 1315. But in an Allahabad case, where the accused embezzled some money from a Bank and sent part of the embezzled money to one of his creditors in notes under insured cover which was traced and seized by the police, and the Magistrate after convicting the accused ordered the money to be handed over to the Bank, held that the order was strictly justified under the provisions of this section, as the money was "property in respect of which an offence was committed" and it was property to which the Bank was entitled—Bankey Lal v. Allahabad Bank, 23 A.L.J. 889, 26 Cr.L.J. 1232.

The Magistrate can dispose of property stolen in British territory, though the Police might have seized it in foreign territory—1878 P R 20.

Property used for the commission of an offence.—This means property which has been instrumental in committing an offence e.g. guns or swords—Abinash v. K E., 34 Cal 986 Thus, where the accused stole two bullocks and killed them, it was ordered that the axe and the knives with which he slaughtered the animals and which were found with the accused when he was arrested, should be confiscated and sold—Bhura v Emp., 26 Cr L J 1495 (1496) (Nag) But any instrument or thing which is too remotely connected with the commission of an offence cannot be confiscated under this section Thus, it is illegal to confiscate a press in which a seditious matter has been published, because the press is a too remote instrument and cannot be said to be property which has been used for the commission of the offence—Abinash, 34 Cal. 986; 1907 P.W.R. 37. A Magistrate convicting a person for gambling under sections 6 and 7 of the Madras Towns Nuisances Act cannot confiscate the money found in his waistcoat pocket, when there was no evidence to show that the money was actually staked—Appaji Aiyar, 41 Mad. 644 So also, a boat which has been used by the accused in going to commit a theft or in escaping from pursuit cannot be said to be property used for the commission of an offence—Jarip Gazi, 8 C.W N 887, see also Ratanlal 688 Similarly, where the accused has been guilty of rash driving, it is illegal to pass an order that the cart and pony of the accused should be sold and the sale proceeds paid over to the complainant as compensation—Ilahi Baksh, 1904 P.L R 4, 1 Cr.L.J. 38

Property must be moveable —This section has no application to immoveable property. Where the accused dispossessed the complainant of his garden by breaking the pad-lock of its gate and were convicted of the offence of criminal trespass, the Court had no power to order the restoration of the garden to the complainant under this section as this section did not apply to immoveable property—Sheonandan v. Bholanath, 18 C.W.N 1146, 15 Cr.L J 222 See also 36 Cal 41; 1900 A.W N 81, and Adepu v Ramayya, 12 L.W 227, 22 Cr L.J 110, 59 I.C. 414 Contra—Tun Hla v. Shwe Ngo, 4 L B R. 229, 7 Cr L.J. 490, where the word 'property' was held to include immoveable property.

Property must have been in existence :—No order can be made under this section with respect to property which was not in existence at the time of the offence. Thus an innocent purchaser of a stolen cow cannot be ordered to deliver up the calf which was not even in embryonic existence when the theft took place, but which was given birth to by the cow while she was in his possession—10 Mad 25

1344. Order, when can be made :—According to the words of this section an order for disposal of the property can be made only upon the conclusion of the trial, and not long after the conclusion of the trial—Naini Mal, 24 Cr.L.J. 804 (All). An order for disposal of property passed 14 days after the date of the passing of the judgment in the trial is not invalid—Kishan Chand v. Nanak Chand, 7 Lah L.J. 625, 26 Cr.L.J. 1453. But in another Lahore case it has been held that the order under sec. 517 and the judgment in the trial must be contemporaneous. And so, if no order is passed by a Court in respect of the disposal of the property on the conclusion of the trial of the accused, the Court has no jurisdiction to pass order at any subsequent time directing delivery of the property to the complainant—Abdul v. Ghulam Muhammad, 4 Lah. 460 (461). This case has been dissented from in 7 Lah.L.J. 625 cited above.

No order as to the disposal of property can be made under this section if the trial is barred under sec. 403. The words 'when an inquiry or trial is concluded' cannot apply to a case in which the Court is prohibited from conducting a trial at all—Tun Hla v. Shwe Ngo, 4 L.B.R. 229, 7 Cr.L.J. 490. Similarly, an order directing delivery of property cannot be made by a Magistrate without any criminal proceeding before him or any other Magistrate, but merely on the application of the person in whose favour the order is made—6 C.L.J. 707.

Where a person charged with criminal breach of trust in respect of certain jewels died before the day fixed for his trial, and there was no trial, no order could be made by the Magistrate under this section. The jewels were ordered to be returned to the person from whom the Police recovered them—Kuppammal, 29 Mad. 375

Order discretionary :—Orders under this section are discretionary. This section invests the Magistrate with a discretionary power and it is a rule of law that such power must be exercised judicially, i.e., according to the sound principles of law and not in an arbitrary manner—Sadashiv, 11 Bom.L.R. 16, 9 Cr.L.J. 162. This discretion is open to correction by the High Court where it has been exercised in violation of judicial principles—Pandharinath, 40 Bom 186, 16 Cr.L.J. 783

1345. Nature of order under this section :—The old section stated that the Magistrate could make such order as he thought fit for the 'disposal' of the property. This was a general term and the nature of the order to be passed for disposal was not specified. It depended upon the discretion of the Magistrate to say what order was to be passed having regard to all the facts of the case—Sadashiv, 11 Bom.L.R. 16, 9 Cr.L.J. 162. Under the amended section the word 'disposal' has been elucidated by certain explanatory words

Order in a bribe case :—When the accused was convicted of taking bribe and the money paid as bribe was deposited in Court by the complainant, the Magistrate could order a portion of the bribe to be confiscated and the rest to be paid to the complainant—1873 P.R. 9.

Order in respect of currency note —Where the accused stole a currency note from the complainant and changed it at the Government Treasury, then on conviction of the accused for theft, the currency notes should be delivered to the Treasury and not to the complainant. Currency note is money and the ownership passes by mere delivery, and the original owner cannot claim the amount as against the Treasury—Nizam v Jacob, 19 Cal. 52. The accused purchased some gold ornaments and handed to the jeweller a currency note which he had stolen. The jeweller not having had adequate cash took the note to a neighbouring shopkeeper who cashed it in good faith. Afterwards, during the prosecution of the accused, the note was attached from the shopkeeper, and on conviction of the accused the Magistrate ordered it to be returned to the Crown whose property it was found to have been. Held that the currency note should be returned to the shopkeeper, for property in it had passed to him by mere delivery—In re Pandharinath, 40 Bom 186, 31 I.C. 383, 16 Cr L.J. 783. Title to a currency note passes by mere delivery, and therefore where a stolen currency note is recovered from an innocent third person, it should be returned to that person, and not to the person who lost it by theft—Srinivasamoorthi v. Narasimhalu, 50 Mad. 916, 28 Cr L.J. 879 (880). See also In re Collector of Salem, 2 Weir 664, 7 M.H.C.R. 233, 3 Cal. 379, 1 N.W.P. 298.

So is the rule in respect of current coins. But Babashahi coin is not current coin in British India, and it is to be delivered to the complainant from whom it is stolen, like any other common article or property—In re Mathur, 25 Bom 702.

Order of confiscation —An order of disposal under this section includes an order of forfeiture or confiscation—Ratanlal 492. This is now expressly provided for in the present section. In 5 N.L.R. 59 it was held that the 'disposal' of property could not be held to include confiscation or forfeiture, as the penalty of confiscation or forfeiture having been expressly provided for in secs 62, 121 etc of the Indian Penal Code and in numerous other sections of other Acts, it could not be included in the general word 'disposal' used in this section. The same view was taken in Secretary of State v Lown Karan, 5 P.L.J. 321, Abinash v K E, 34 Cal 986, 1907 P.W.R. 37. These rulings are no longer correct in view of the express words of the present section.

An order for the confiscation of property which is the subject matter of an offence cannot be made without first giving notice to and hearing the person to whose prejudice the order would be. Want of notice would be a good ground for setting aside the order—Ambica Tewari, 9 Bur.L.T. 193, 17 Cr.L.J. 207.

Order of destruction of counterfeit coin:—If the accused is convicted of an offence under sec. 241 I. P. C., and counterfeit coin is found in his possession, the Magistrate can order the destruction of the coin—2 Weir 669.

Order of restoration of property:—If no offence is proved to have been committed in respect of any property produced before the Court, and the accused is acquitted, the Magistrate should restore the property to the person from whom it was last taken (i.e., to the accused)—1897 A.W.N. 26; 2 Weir 669, Sattar Ali v. Afzal, 54 Cal 283, 28 Cr.L.J. 546, Hagu v. Manmatha, 18 C.W.N. 959; In re Davidin, 22 Bom 844; 1 C.W.N. 561, 2 Weir 668; 1 Bom. 630; Anant Ramchandra, 10 Bom. 197; 17 Bom. 748, Ahmed, 9 Mad. 448; 14 Cal. 834; 5 W.R. 55. In such a case, an order of confiscation is not proper—18 Cr.L.J. 811 (Mad.). See also 17 Bom L.R. 79; 42 Mad 9. The property should be restored especially when there is no finding in the case that it belongs to some one else—Gaparaju, 3 M.L.T. 334. Thus, where an accused person has been acquitted of the offence of cheating, it is not competent to the Court to restore the goods found in the possession of the accused to the complainant. The proper order in such a case would be to let the goods remain in the possession of the person in whose custody they were found—Ram Dan v. Hari Das, 27 Cr L.J. 853 (854) (Cal)

But if a case of theft fails, because the dishonest intention of the accused is not proved, the property can be restored to the complainant, and need not be given back to the accused—18 M.L.J. (Sh. N.) 4. So also, where the Magistrate, though he discharges the accused, believes that the property in his custody is the subject of some offence, he is not bound to restore the property to the person from whom it was taken, but can make an order of disposal under this section—Q. E. v. Ahmed, 9 Mad. 448

A Magistrate cannot, on dismissal of a complaint, restore the property to the accused, if he disclaims the property. In such a case the Court should retain the property until one or other of the parties has established his right in the Civil Court—1913 P.W.R. 37

If a complaint of theft of a certain property is dismissed on the ground of there being a bona fide dispute about the ownership of the property, the Magistrate should take custody of the property, sell it (if it is perishable) and retain the sale proceeds until they are shown to be payable to one or other of the parties, either by virtue of a decree of Court, or of an agreement between themselves—Visa Samra, 16 Bom L.R. 951, 16 Cr.L.J. 111, 27 I.C. 159, Chenra Reddi v. Ramasami, 1 L.W. 1032, 27 I.C. 152, 16 Cr.L.J. 104. In 2 Weir 667, it has been held that in such a case, the Magistrate may deliver the property to the person from whose possession it was last taken, with a condition that the property, or its value, must be forthcoming in case the rival claimant establishes a title. But if it is found that the property belongs partly to the accused and partly to another person, it is not illegal to deliver the property to both of them on their joint receipt—34 Mad. 94

1346. Order, when rights of third parties are concerned :—A property with regard to which an offence has been committed should not be delivered to the owner of the property when it has been pledged to another person (see 19 Cr.L.J. 788) without allowing the pledgee an opportunity of being heard. But when the evidence disclosed that the property was obtained by fraud from the owner and subsequently pledged, the property should be delivered to the owner and the remedy of the pledge was to bring a suit in the Civil Court to enforce his lien on the property—Kong Lone v. Ma Kay, 4 L.B.R. 13, 6 Cr.L.J. 125; Palaniappa v. Ko Saye, 3 Bur L.T. 111, 12 Cr.L.J. 88, 8 I.C. 1204. But where certain jewels were given to the accused to sell, but the accused instead of selling them gave them to another person who pledged them to a third person, it was held that the jewels should be restored to the pledgee and not to the owner; because the owner, having parted with the jewels to be disposed of for money, was not entitled to the assistance of a Criminal Court in recovering them from a pawnee to whom they were so disposed of—Stephen Aviet v. K. E., 4 L.B.R. 25, 6 Cr.L.J. 135, Annamalai v. Mrs. Basch, 11 L.B.R. 217, 23 Cr.L.J. 216. But if in such a case the pledgee was not a bona fide pledgee and knew that the pledgor had no authority to pledge the articles, held that the articles should be delivered to the owner and not to the pledgee—Emp. v. Nga Po Chit, 1 Rang 199, A.I.R. 1923 Rang 227, 24 Cr.L.J. 858. Where a pledged property was stolen from the possession of the pledgee by the pledgor who was thereupon convicted of theft, the Court should pass an order restoring the property to the pledgee and not to the person to whom the pledgor had sold it for value after the theft—Gour Mohan v. Bansidhar, 24 Cr.L.J. 238 (Cal.). A goldsmith was entrusted with a certain quantity of gold and diamonds for making a comb for the complainant. When the article was nearly completed, the goldsmith pledged it to a diamond merchant who had no knowledge that the property was the property of the complainant. The Court ordered the jewel to be returned to the complainant. Held that the order was justifiable—Changanlal v. Maung Po Kauk, 2 Bur L.J. 152. Where certain jewels were given to a broker for sale and the broker sold the jewels and misappropriated the sale proceeds, and was convicted of criminal breach of trust, the jewels ought to be restored to the purchaser and not to the owner, because the offence was committed not with respect to the jewels but with respect to the sale proceeds, and therefore the Magistrate was not competent to make any order with respect to the jewels which validly belonged to the purchaser—Nanatal v. Maung Tun, 4 Bur L.T. 170, 12 Cr.L.J. 467, 11 I.C. 1003.

Notice :—In a case in which the question of the right to possession is not one between the complainant and the accused, but one between the complainant and a third person, an order for the restoration of the property should not be made without giving the opposite party an opportunity of being heard. Thus, where the complainant entrusted certain jewels to the accused who committed criminal breach of trust in respect of them and pledged them to another person, the Court should not order the jewels to be restored to the complainant without giving any notice to the pledgee—Shwe Wa v. C I. Mehta, 5 Rang. 553, 28 Cr.L.J. 932

1347. Question of title.—An order under this section does not decide the question of ownership of the property. It merely decides the question of the right to possession, till a Civil Court decides the question of ownership—1 Bur.L.T. 267. Where a question of bona fides and of title by purchase or otherwise clearly arises, the duty of the Criminal Court is not to pass any order under this section, but to leave the complainant to his remedy in the Civil Court if he thinks he has one—Naini Mall v. Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 804 (All.). Where the title to the seized property is doubtful, it should be returned to the person from whom it was seized, unless there are special circumstances which would render such a course unjustifiable—Srinivasamoorthi v. Narasimthalu, 50 Mad 916, 28 Cr.L.J. 879 (880). If conflicting claims are put forward to the property by different parties, the Magistrate cannot give a decision as to the ownership of the property; the proper procedure would be to keep the property in Court, pending any order which may be made by a competent Civil Court—Ram Khelawan v. Talsi, 28 C.W.N. 1094. Where the property in dispute was a certain quantity of wood, the proper order would be to sell the property and retain the sale proceeds in Court until they were shown to be payable to one or other of the parties either in virtue of a decree or in virtue of an agreement among themselves—Visa Samta, 16 Bom.L.R. 951, 16 Cr.L.J. 111, 27 I.C. 159.

1348. Improper orders :—(1) Disposal in charity :—The section does not place the property at the disposal of the Magistrate in the sense of enabling him to bestow it in charity. He is to make such legal disposition thereof as seems right, i.e., to direct its restoration to some one to whom it seems to belong or permit it to continue in the possession in which it is found or otherwise—2 Weir 666.

(2) Order regarding custody of children —Orders regarding custody of children cannot be passed under this section—1 Weir 348

(3) Order for removal of building —Where the accused built a new wall abutting on the road in contravention of the rules of the Municipality and the Magistrate after convicting and fining the accused ordered the wall to be pulled down, it was held that the order as to the removal of the wall was illegal—1900 A.W.N. 81.

(4) Order demanding security :—The Magistrate cannot take a bond from the accused to produce the property (with respect to which an offence is alleged to have been committed) in Court whenever required. There is no provision of the law which enables a Magistrate to make an order demanding security. He can proceed under sec. 94 in order to secure the production of the property, and on failure of the accused to produce it, he can proceed under sec. 96—Purna Chandra v. Sashi, 7 C.W.N. 522. Sub-section (4) does not apply to the case, because under that sub-section a Magistrate can take a bond from a person at the time of delivering the property to him.

(5) Detention of property :—If no offence is proved in respect of the property produced in Court, the proper order that the Court may pass is to restore the property to the person from whom it was originally taken. It cannot detain the property until the title of the rightful owner is declared by a Civil Court—2 Bom 844

Sub-section (4) :—If no offence is proved to have been committed, the Magistrate may restore the property to the accused, and at the same time demand security from him for its production whenever required—2 Weir 668

1349. Explanation .—The words 'conversion' and 'exchange' used in the Explanation to the section must be taken in their ordinary sense. They apply to such acts as melting down of gold and silver into ornaments or the exchange of notes for cash. When, therefore, a person fraudulently obtained a decree upon a forged promissory note and in execution of that decree purchased a garden and was subsequently convicted of cheating, it was held that the convicting Court could not direct restoration of the garden to its owner, because it could not be said that the garden was acquired by the conversion of the forged promissory note into a decree—Nga Ke Moun. 4 Bur L T. 211, 12 Cr L J 473, 12 I.C. 81. A gold ornament was stolen from the complainant and sold by the thief for Rs 184 to the applicant who converted it into gold and sold it in pieces to different persons. In the course of the trial of the theft case, the applicant was made to produce Rs 184, and at the end of the trial the Magistrate ordered the sum to be paid over to the complainant. It was held that the money could not be paid over to the complainant, since it merely represented the sum which the applicant paid to the accused as the price of the gold bangles, and it could not be treated under the Explanation to this section as the exchanged property with reference to which an offence had been committed—Anant, 20 Bom L R 604, 19 Cr L J 721, 46 I C. 401

In view of this Explanation, the objection that the coins directed to be returned are not the identical coins stolen cannot be sustained—4 S.L R 255

Appeal —See section 520

1350. Revision .—The High Court has jurisdiction to interfere with an order of the Magistrate passed under this section—2 Weir 669, 40 Bom 186. An order made under this section may be revised by the High Court either under sec 520 or by virtue of the powers conferred on it by sec 439 read with secs. 435 and 423 (d) of the Code—Hagu v. Manmatha, 18 C W.N 959, 15 Cr L J 184. But where the case is one in which an appeal lies, any party aggrieved by an order as to the disposal of property must go to the Court of appeal. In such a case, a Court of revision has no jurisdiction to interfere with an order as to the disposal of property. It is only when there is neither an appeal nor a confirmation that a Court of revision or reference can interfere—35 Bom 253. The High Court will not exercise its revisional pow.

the jewels to be restored to the complainant without giving any notice to the pledgee—Shwe Wa v. C. I. Mehta, 5 Rang. 553, 28 Cr.L.J. 932.

1347. Question of title :—An order under this section does not decide the question of ownership of the property. It merely decides the question of the right to possession, till a Civil Court decides the question of ownership—1 Bur.L.T. 267. Where a question of bona fides and of title by purchase or otherwise clearly arises, the duty of the Criminal Court is not to pass any order under this section, but to leave the complainant to his remedy in the Civil Court if he thinks he has one—Naini Mall v. Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 804 (All). Where the title to the seized property is doubtful, it should be returned to the person from whom it was seized, unless there are special circumstances which would render such a course unjustifiable—Srinivasamoorthi v. Narasimhalu, 50 Mad 916, 28 Cr L.J. 879 (880). If conflicting claims are put forward to the property by different parties, the Magistrate cannot give a decision as to the ownership of the property; the proper procedure would be to keep the property in Court, pending any order which may be made by a competent Civil Court—Ram Khelawan v. Tuls, 28 C.W.N. 1094. Where the property in dispute was a certain quantity of wood, the proper order would be to sell the property and retain the sale proceeds in Court until they were shown to be payable to one or other of the parties either in virtue of a decree or in virtue of an agreement among themselves—Visa Samta, 16 Bom.L.R. 951, 16 Cr.L.J. 111, 27 IC 159.

1348. Improper orders —(1) Disposal in charity :—The section does not place the property at the disposal of the Magistrate in the sense of enabling him to bestow it in charity. He is to make such legal disposition thereof as seems right, i.e., to direct its restoration to some one to whom it seems to belong or permit it to continue in the possession in which it is found or otherwise—2 Weir 666

(2) Order regarding custody of children :—Orders regarding custody of children cannot be passed under this section—1 Weir 348

(3) Order for removal of building :—Where the accused built a new wall abutting on the road in contravention of the rules of the Municipality and the Magistrate after convicting and fining the accused ordered the wall to be pulled down, it was held that the order as to the removal of the wall was illegal—1900 A.W.N. 81.

(4) Order demanding security :—The Magistrate cannot take a bond from the accused to produce the property (with respect to which an offence is alleged to have been committed) in Court whenever required. There is no provision of the law which enables a Magistrate to make an order demanding security. He can proceed under sec 94 in order to secure the production of the property, and on failure of the accused to produce it, he can proceed under sec 96—Purna Chandra v. Sashi, 7 C.W.N. 522. Sub-section (4) does not apply to the case, because under that sub-section a Magistrate can take a bond from a person at the time of delivering the property to him.

money found on the person of the accused; when no money was found in the possession of the person convicted, the Magistrate cannot grant compensation to the innocent purchaser out of the fine imposed on the accused—2 Weir 671; K. E. v. Abdul, 3 Bom.L.R. 449; K. E. v. Dhondu, 3 Bom.L.R. 764. See also Ratanlal 631.

The Magistrate cannot call upon the owner to pay the purchase-money of the stolen property to the bona fide purchaser; and an order delivering the property to the purchaser from the thief because the original owner would not pay him the purchase money, is illegal—1896 A.W.N. 91.

520. Any Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision may direct any order under section 517, section 518 or section 519 passed by a Court subordinate thereto, to be stayed pending consideration by the former Court, and may modify, alter or annul such order and make any further orders that may be just.

1352. "Any Court of appeal or revision" —The words "any Court of appeal" are not necessarily limited to a Court before which an appeal in the main case is pending. The orders under secs 517-519 are appealable quite independent of the fact whether an appeal has been preferred or not from the main order of conviction or acquittal—Joggeshur, 3 Cal 379, Q. E. v. Ahmed, 9 Mad 448, U Po Hla, 7 Rang. 345 (F.B.), 30 Cr.L.J. 540 (542). Therefore where a second class Magistrate restored certain property to the complainant when no offence was found to have been committed, the District Magistrate was competent to annul the order and restore the property to the person from whose possession it was taken, although there was no appeal pending before the District Magistrate—2 Weir 673. So also, even where no appeal has been preferred from a conviction by a subordinate Court, the District Magistrate has got jurisdiction to interfere as a Court of revision under sec. 520 with an order passed by the trial Court under sec 517—Emp. v. Nga Po Chit, 1 Rang 199, 24 Cr.L.J. 858, A.I.R. 1923 Rang 227, U Po Hla, supra.

But the Sessions Judge is not a Court of appeal or revision in respect of an order passed by a second class Magistrate. So also, a Sessions Judge is not a Court of appeal from the decision of a second class Magistrate, because there can be no second appeal to the Sessions Judge. Moreover, the Sessions Judge has no revisional powers over the order of a sub-divisional Magistrate passed on appeal—Soma Pillai v Krishna Pillai, 47 M.L.J. 481, 25 Cr.L.J. 1247, 20 L.W. 521. But see Explanation to Sec 435.

Moreover, the words 'Court of Appeal' imply the Court to which an appeal lies in the particular case and not the Court to which appeals would ordinarily lie from the Court deciding the particular case. And therefore where a 1st class Magistrate, in acquitting the accused person with theft of cattle, ordered the cattle to be restored to him, but the complainant appealed to the Sessions Judge as regards the order relating to the disposal of property, whereupon the Sessions Judge revised the order and held that the complainant was entitled to the cattle, held that the Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction to act under sec. 520 since he was not a Court of appeal in this particular case, because no appeal could lie to him against a judgment of acquittal; the appeal ought to have been preferred to the High Court—In re Khema, 42 Bom. 664, 20 Bom L.R. 395, 19 Cr.L.J. 597. The trying Magistrate acquitted the accused who was charged with theft of a drum, and under sec. 517 directed the drum to be returned to the accused. On appeal the District Magistrate set aside the order under sec. 517 and directed the drum to be delivered to the complainant. Held that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to do so, because he was not a Court of appeal within the meaning of sec. 520, since no appeal could lie to him against an order of acquittal. The District Magistrate was also not a Court of confirmation, reference or revision, the only Court which could pass orders on a reference or revision being the High Court—Emp. v. Devi Ram, 46 All 623 (624), 22 A.L.J. 505, 25 Cr.L.J. 1168. The Rangoon High Court, however, holds that even in case of an acquittal by the trial Court, the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, as a Court of revision, has power under sec. 520 to interfere with the order of the trial Court with regard to the disposal of property—U Po Hla v Ko Po, 7 Rang 345 (F B), 30 Cr.L.J. 540 (542), overruling Moung Mra v Ma Kra, 6 Rang. 259, 29 Cr.L.J. 958. The same view was taken in an earlier Madras case—Emp. v. Ahmed, 9 Mad 448. The Punjab Chief Court also held that the 'Court of appeal' merely implied the Court to which appeals would ordinarily lie, and did not mean that an appeal must lie in the particular case in which the order was passed as to disposal of property—Bhagat Ram, 96 P.L.R. 1911, 12 Cr.L.J. 400, 11 I.C. 584.

An appeal from an order of a second class Magistrate ordinarily lies to the District Magistrate, but if the District Magistrate has directed an appeal or a certain class of appeals to be heard by a Sub-divisional Magistrate, the Court of the Sub-divisional Magistrate, and not that of the District Magistrate is the 'Court of Appeal' under this section. Therefore where an appeal in the main case lies to the Sub-divisional Magistrate, that Magistrate has jurisdiction to pass an order as to the disposal of property under this section—In re Arunachala Thevan, 46 Mad 162.

But when no appeal is preferred against the main order in the case (i.e., against the acquittal or conviction), but the appeal is confined entirely to the question of disposal of property, the appeal would lie to the Court to which an appeal ordinarily lies, (e.g., to the District Magistrate from an order of a second class Magistrate, and not to the Sub-divisional Magistrate)—In re Arunachala, 45 Mad. 162 (165); Jogi Venkiah v. Station House officer, 42 M.L.J. 534. 'But see In re Khema, 42 Bom. 664 (cited above) where the appeal was not against the main order of acquittal, but against the order as to disposal of property, but still the High Court held that the Court of appeal was not the Sessions Judge to whom the appeal would ordinarily lie, but the High Court to which the appeal would lie against the main order in the particular case (i.e., against acquittal)

But when an appeal has been preferred to a particular Court from the main order of conviction or acquittal, no appeal or revision against an order as to the disposal of property can be preferred to any other Court. The jurisdiction of the other Courts as to the revision of the order is suspended owing to the seizure of the whole case by the Court of Appeal—Hussain Shah, 17 C.P.L.R. 107. But where the Appellate Court in dealing with an appeal has left untouched the order passed by the Original Court under Secs. 517–519, there exists no bar to an application for revision of that order being made in any other Court having jurisdiction to revise that order—Hussain Shah, 17 C.P.L.R. 107

Where a Magistrate disposing of a criminal appeal fails to pass an order under section 520, it will be open to his successor to do so—In re Subba Naidu, 43 M.L.J. 87. See sec. 559.

Notice—An order under this section should not be passed without giving notice to the opposite party—35 Bom 253, Kanshi Ram, 4 Lah. 49 (51). Although there is no rule of law which requires that such a notice is absolutely necessary, still if there is some interval between the date of the main order in the appeal and the order as to disposal of property, it is desirable that notice should be given to the opposite party before passing the second order—In re Arunachala, 46 Mad. 162.

1353. "And make any further orders that may be just"—These words did not occur in the old Codes and were for the first time introduced into the Code of 1898. Under the old Codes it was doubted whether the Appellate or Revisional Court could direct restitution of property when setting aside the order of the Lower Court. But now the addition of the words "and make any further order that may be just" in this section gives such power to the Superior Court beyond any doubt. See 46 Mad 162 (at p 167), 18 C.W.N 959, and 19 Cr.L.J 995 (Pat). Owing to this change in the section, the following rulings are no longer good law.—9 W.R. 57, 14 Cal 834, 1 Bom 630, 8 Bom. 575; 22 Bom. 434.

Where the trial Court has not made any order as to the disposal of property, the Sessions Judge on appeal can pass any order that may be just with regard to the disposal of property—Thiraj, 10 Lah 187. The fact that an order for delivery of property under sec 517 has been carried out, does not deprive the High Court of its power to order restoration of the property to the rightful owner—Shwe Wa v C. I. Mehta, 5 Rang 553, 28 Cr.L.J. 932. It is clearly just that when a subordinate Court has made over property to a person who is not entitled to its possession, the High Court should remedy the error by restoring the property to the person properly entitled to its possession—Ibid. It is not necessary that an order as regards the property should be passed under this section by the Appellate Court simultaneously with the disposal of the appeal. Thus, where a conviction for theft of bulls was set aside by the Appellate Magistrate but at that time he forgot to pass any order as to the bulls, and some time after the disposal of the appeal he passed an order for restoration of the bulls to the accused, held that the second order was not illegal as it could be treated as part of the proceedings of the main appeal (the interval being a short one)—In re Arunachala, 46 Mad. 162

When an application is made to the Superior Court "to make any further order as may be just," such application should not always be deemed as an appeal and need not be presented within the period of limitation prescribed for filing an appeal from the order of a Magistrate—Srinivasamoorthi v. Narasimhalu, 50 Mad. 916, 28 Cr.L.J. 679 (880). Thus, a person was convicted in June 1920 for dishonestly receiving stolen currency notes, and was ordered by the Magistrate to make over the money to the complainant. On appeal, the Sessions Judge in July 1921 reversed the conviction and acquitted the accused, but passed no order as regards the notes. Subsequently, in January 1922, the accused made an application to the Sessions Judge for the restoration of the money, which the Judge rejected as barred by limitation. Held, that this application was in no sense an appeal against the order of the trying Magistrate, but an independent application to the Sessions Judge with a view to his taking action under sec 520 and 'passing any order that may be just.' No period of limitation is prescribed for such an application, and it can be made within a reasonable time from the date on which an accused person is acquitted of the crime with which he was charged—Kanshi Ram v. Crown, 4 Lah. 49 (51), 24 Cr.L.J. 713

1354. Revision :—When an order of the Lower Court has been set aside by the Sessions Court under this Section, the order of the Sessions Court is not appealable, the remedy is by way of revision to the High Court—1898 A.W.N. 40. The words 'any proceeding' in sec. 435 are wide enough to empower the High Court to revise an order passed under this section—2 Weir 669.

521. (1) On a conviction under the Indian Penal Code section 292, section 293, section 501 or section 502, the Court may order the destruction of all the copies of the thing in respect of which the conviction was had and which are in the custody of the Court or remain in the possession or power of the person convicted.

(2) The Court may, in like manner, on a conviction under the Indian Penal Code, section 272, section 273, section 274 or section 275, order the food, drink, drug or medical preparation in respect of which the conviction was had, to be destroyed.

522. (1) Whenever a person is convicted of an offence attended by criminal force or show of force or by criminal intimidation, and it appears to the Power to restore possession of immoveable property.

Court that by such force or show of force or criminal intimidation any person has been dispossessed of any immoveable property, the Court may, if it thinks fit, when convicting such person or at any time within one month from the date of the conviction, order the person dispossessed to be restored to the possession of the same.

(2) No such order shall prejudice any right or interest to or in such immoveable property which any person may be able to establish in a civil suit.

(3) An order under this section may be made by any Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision.

Change—The italicised words and sub-section (3) have been added by section 143 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "This amendment provides for the order of restoration being passed within one month from the date of conviction, secondly, it extends the scope of the section to ouster from possession by show of criminal force or criminal intimidation; and thirdly, it gives power to an Appellate Court or to the High Court in revision to pass such an order"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

1355. Scope of section:—Sec. 522 which enables a Magistrate to deprive a wrong-doer of possession, is limited only to cases in which possession has been obtained by criminal force attending an offence and the wrong-doer has been convicted of such offence—2 Weir 98

An order under this section should not be made where the accused person has not been convicted of an offence attended by criminal force—Sorta v. Dochhi, 12 C.W.N. 269, 37 All 654. Thus, no order can be passed under this section, where the trespass which the accused was alleged to have committed was not a criminal trespass but merely a civil one—Sorta v. Dochhi, 12 C.W.N. 269. If the conviction is set aside in appeal or revision, the order under Sec 522 resulting from the conviction must also be set aside—Lal Chand v. Dasondhi, 24 Cr L.J. 493, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 15.

1356. Criminal force.—To justify an order under this section, the Court must find that the offence of which the accused is convicted was attended with criminal force as defined in Sec 350 of the I P. Code; and therefore where a person was convicted of criminal trespass, in which no criminal force was used, the Magistrate could not make an order under this section—Churaman v. Ramlal, 25 All 341; Chunni v. Baldeo, 21 A. L.J. 593, Ishan v. Dino Nath, 27 Cal 174, 3 L.B.R. 20, Balram v. Chamru, 2 P.L.T. 120; Hari Chand, 20 Cr L.J. 488, 1919 P.R. 1

51 I.C. 472; 1906 P.R. 12; Shera, 28 P.L.R. 238, 28 Cr.L.J. 320, 24 O.C. 352; 1922 M.W.N. 356. If the accused armed with sticks and lathis rushed at the complainant and used threats, whereupon the complainant was obliged to run away from his field, held that there was criminal force as defined in secs. 349 and 350 I. P. C. although actual physical force was not used, and an order under this section was justified—Emp. v. Ashiq Hussain, 45 All 25 (26).

But the words 'attended by criminal force' do not mean an offence of which criminal force is an ingredient; to hold such view is to put a narrow construction on the general words. Therefore, an offence under sec. 447 I.P.C. or under sec. 341 I.P.C. would fall under the present section, if criminal force was in fact used in committing the offence, although the use of criminal force is not a necessary ingredient of an offence under sec. 447 or 341 I. P. Code—Batakala Pottiyavadu, 26 Mad. 49 (50), Mohini v. Narendra, 31 Cal. 691 (696) (F.B.). Contra—Ram Chandra v. Jityandria, 25 Cal. 434 (439), Lachmidas, 23 W.R. 54, 12 L.W. 227 and 4 P.L.W. 329 where the words were interpreted to mean an offence in which criminal force formed an ingredient.

There must be a clear finding by the Magistrate that criminal force was in fact used by the accused, and that the complainant was dispossessed by such force. In the absence of such finding, an order under this section cannot be made—Batakala, 26 Mad. 49 (50); Ramchandra v. Jityandria, 25 Cal. 434 (438); Bhagbat v. Siddique, 39 Cal. 1050; Teja Singh, 28 Cr.L.J. 819 (Lah.). In Usmanmiya v. Amirmiya, 28 Cr.L.J. 191 (192) it has been held that there need not be an express finding that criminal force was used, if the evidence on record leaves no doubt as to the matter.

The word 'force' means force to a person as defined in section 349 I. P. C. and not force to property. Thus, where the accused dispossessed the complainant of his garden by breaking open the padlock of the gate but used no force or violence to any person, it was held that the case did not fall under this section—Sheonandan v. Bholanath, 15 Cr.L.J. 222, 18 C.W.N. 1146. [But see Usman v. Amirmiya, 28 Cr.L.J. 191 (192)] Where the accused committed rioting and used violence to the complainant's fencing but not to any person, it was held that this section did not apply—Sadasib Mandal, 18 C.W.N. 1150, 15 Cr.L.J. 720. This section does not apply to a case of criminal trespass and dispossession of the complainant unless it is found that the trespass was attended with use of criminal force on the person of the complainant—Balram v. Chamru, 2 P.L.T. 120, 22 Cr.L.J. 329, 61 I.C. 57. Where trespass was committed in the absence of the complainant, an order for restoration cannot be passed—Mangi Ram v. Emp., 26 P.L.R. 500.

1357. Show of force:—An order may now be passed under this section even if the offence is attended with mere show of force. On this point there was a conflict of opinion prior to the present amendment. In some cases it was held that there must be actual criminal force and not mere show of criminal force. Thus, it was held that the offence of being members of an unlawful assembly was one in the composition of which the use of criminal force did not enter, though the show of criminal force might exist; and therefore an order under this section could not be passed on conviction for being members of an unlawful assembly—Ramchandra v. Jityandria, 25 Cal 434 (439); 5 C.W.N. 250; Ishan v. Deno Nath, 27 Cal. 174; Narayan v. Visaji, 23 Bom. 494; Bundhi Singh, 19 Cr.L.J. 516, 45 I.C. 276, 4 P.L.W. 329, Mahesh, 50 I.C. 30, 20 Cr.L.J. 270 (Pat). But these cases were dissented from in Chhako Mandal, 11 C.W.N. 467; 1918 U.B.R. 3rd Qr. 11; and 20 Cr.L.J. 115 (Bur.), where it was held that an order as to possession of property could be passed by a Magistrate even where a person was dispossessed by mere show of criminal force. The Legislature has now given effect to the ruling in the latter set of cases by inserting the words "show of force or criminal intimidation" in this section, and the former set of cases must be deemed as overruled. And thus it has been held under the amended Code that where the accused succeeded in taking possession of the complainant's house by means of criminal trespass, threatening to use force to the complainant and his men, the accused's act clearly came within this section and an order for restoration of the house to the complainant was just and proper—Rameshar v K E., 4 Pat. 438, 27 Cr.L.J. 137.

1358. Dispossession:—To justify an order under this section it must be shown that a party has been dispossessed by criminal force. Where there is no evidence of such dispossession, an order under this section cannot be sustained—2 Weir 674, Kaon, 1917 P.L.R. 62, 18 Cr.L.J. 898. There should be an express finding that the person in whose favour the order was made had been dispossessed by the use of criminal force—Lachmidas v Pallat, 23 W.R. 54. Where the accused was convicted of rioting and an order was passed under this section to the effect that one of the witnesses be put in possession of certain land until ousted by a Court of competent jurisdiction, held that as there was no evidence that the witness had been dispossessed by criminal force, the order of the Magistrate was bad—2 Weir 674. If the Magistrate purported to act under sec. 145, he should have instituted separate proceedings.

Where it is found that neither party is in actual possession, an order under this section cannot be made—2 Weir 675.

Order affecting possession of third person:—The object of the provisions of this section is to enable the criminal Court, by a summary order, to restore the state of things which existed at the time of the dispossession by the convicted person or persons. It cannot go behind the state of affairs existing at the time of forcible dispossession leading to the criminal prosecution. Where an auction-purchaser of a mortgaged property was put in possession of the property by ejecting the tenant, and the auction-purchaser was forcibly dispossessed by the accused, it was held that upon the conviction of the accused, the auction-purchaser was entitled to be restored to actual possession which he held of the house at the time of his dispossession, that the tenant had no right to any possession, and the should seek his remedy in the Civil Court—Rameshwar v. Bisna Nath, 5 C.W.N. 374.

An order under this section can only be binding between the parties to the order and can have no finality in favour of one who was not a party to the order and does not claim under any party—Adinarayana v. Surama, 48 M.L.J. 372.

1359. Order under this section.—The order to be passed under this section is an order to the effect that the person dispossessed be restored to the possession of the property. Where the accused obstructed the complainant's right of way over a path by the erection of a hut, and used criminal force to the complainant when the latter objected to the obstruction, held that the Magistrate could order the hut to be removed, because that was the only way in which the complainant could be restored to the possession of his right of way of which he had been dispossessed by reason of the obstruction—Mohini v. Harendra, 3 Cal. 691 (695) (F.B.).

Order when can be made.—An order under this section, although it can be made only on the conviction of an offence, is an independent order and need not be made simultaneously with the conviction—Narayan v. Visafi, 23 Bom. 494. It is not essential in law that an order restoring possession should find a place in the actual judgment. But it must be immediate, that is, directly arising out of the judgment of the Court convicting in the case, and without any fresh materials having in the meantime been produced—Jatindra, 14 Cr.L.J. 172 (Cal.); see also Khubi v. Bakhtayal, 16 A.L.J. 489, 19 Cr.L.J. 734, 46 I.C. 414. It is proper if it is made within a reasonable time from the date of conviction—U.B.R. (1918) 3rd Qr. 111, 20 Cr.L.J. 115 (Bur.). It is not necessary for the Magistrate to pass an order under this section simultaneously with the conviction and there is no illegality if he passes the order at any time after the conviction, if the cause of delay in applying for the order is fully explained to his satisfaction and the complainant moves the Court promptly after the cause of delay has ceased—Ghulam Muhammad v. Karam Singh, 1914 P.R. 15, 15 Cr.L.J. 275. In this case, there was 20 months' delay owing to the filing of a civil suit by the accused, and the Court excused the delay, since the complainant applied for restoration immediately after this civil suit had terminated in his favour. It should be noted that the present section as now amended gives only one month's time.

In Mohan v. Rai Chand, 4 C.W.N. 308, however, it has been held that an order under this section must be made simultaneously with the order of conviction of the accused, and cannot be made subsequently. But this ruling is no longer good law in view of the words "or at any time within one month" newly added in this section. "We do not think that an order of restoration need be made simultaneously with the conviction, but we think that any application for such an order should be made promptly, and that one month is sufficient time to allow for this purpose"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

1360. Notice to party :—Since an order under this section is to be immediate, that, is directly arising out of the judgment of the Court convicting the accused, and without any fresh materials having in the meantime been produced, it is not necessary that any notice should go to the accused before the order is passed—Jalindra Nath, 14 Cr.L.J. 172 (Cal) But the Magistrate should give the party an opportunity to show cause as a matter of due exercise of judicial discretion—Pan Nyun v. Maung Nyo, 3 L.B.R. 20, 2 Cr.L.J. 377 Where an order under this section was made in respect of a house on a conviction of rioting and hurt, and the Sessions Judge on appeal set aside the conviction but directed the order under sec 522 to be in abeyance pending a reference to the High Court, and subsequently in the absence of the complainant declared the order to be void, it was held that the Sessions Judge's order should not have been made behind the back of the party affected by it—Majid Ali v. Ali Asrab, 23 C.W.N 862, 20 Cr.L.J. 846

Sub-section (2) :—Limitation for civil suit —See Art. 47 of the Indian Limitation Act, which provides a period of three years from the date of the order.

An order under this section may be passed by the Court of appeal or revision at any time howsoever long after the conviction by the Magistrate, and not necessarily within one month from the date of conviction—Rameshwar v K E, 4 Pat 438, A I R 1925 Pat 689

1362. Appeal or Revision :—Since an Appellate Court can pass an incidental or consequential order under section 423 (d), an order under this section (which is in the nature of an incidental or consequential order) is also subject to appeal and is similarly subject to the revisional powers of the High Court under sec 423—Gourhari v Allaz, 29 Cal 724 The ruling in 25 Cal. 630 is not correct in view of section 423 (d) An Appellate Court may set aside an order under this section, while affirming the conviction—10 C.W.N 900 The High Court has full power to interfere with an order passed by a Magistrate under this section, although this section is not mentioned in sec. 520—Ahmed Ali v Keenoo 36 Cal 44. Where the Magistrate ordered that a property which the accused had taken possession by force should be restored to the complainant, but on the application of the accused the High Court set aside the order of restoration, held that the order of the High Court amounted to an order of restoration of the property to the accused—Sheonandan v Bholi Nath, 18 C.W.N 1147, 15 Cr L J 222.

523. (1) The seizure by any police officer of property taken under section 51 or alleged or suspected to have been stolen, or found under circumstances which create suspicion of the commission of any offence, shall be forthwith reported to a Magistrate, who shall make such order as he thinks fit respecting the disposal of such property or the delivery of such property to the person entitled to the possession thereof, or, if such person cannot be ascertained, respecting the custody and production of such property.

(2) If the person so entitled is known, the Magistrate may order the property to be delivered to him on such conditions (if any) as the Magistrate thinks fit.

If such person is unknown, the Magistrate may detain it and shall, in such case, issue a proclamation specifying the articles of which such property consists, and requiring any person who may have a claim thereto to appear before him and establish his claim within six months from the date of such proclamation.

Sections 517 and 523 :—Section 517 applies only when an inquiry or trial in a Criminal Court is concluded. But sec 523 applies even though there has been no inquiry or trial, as in a case where a complaint has been dismissed under sec. 203—Ramasami v. Venkateswara, 24 M.L.J. 1, 14 Cr.L.J. 27.

1363. Scope of section :—This section does not apply where the property was not taken possession of by the Police under sec 51 or 54 i.e., where it was not seized by the police under the suspicion of its being stolen property nor had the petitioner committed any offence in respect to the property. Thus, it does not apply where the police obtained possession of the property in question in the course of an investigation into an offence which is in no way related to the property—Chuni Lal v. Ishar Das, 4 Lah 38 (42, 43), 24 Cr L.J. 670. This section applies only to property seized by the Police of their own motion in the exercise of the powers conferred on them, i.e., under secs. 51, 54, 165 and 166. Such property should be disposed of by the Magistrate under this section. But property seized by the Police under a search warrant issued by the Magistrate during the course of an inquiry or trial comes under sec. 517 and not under this section—Ratanlal Rangildas, 17 Bom. 748. So also, this section does not apply where the property is seized by the Police on the complaint of certain persons claiming as owners thereof—Kupparamal, 29 Mad 375 (377). Contra—Lakshman Govind, 26 Bom. 552, where it has been held that the words 'seized by the Police apply equally whether the seizure was under a warrant of the Magistrate, or without such warrant, and the Magistrate has power under this section to dispose of the property seized under a search warrant.

Property.—Standing crops do not come under the provisions of this section—Narayan v. Visaji, 23 Bom. 494.

1364. Order under this section.—Under this section the Magistrate may make 'such order as he thinks fit.' The discretion given by these words should be properly exercised. If there is no evidence as to the ownership of the property, it should be delivered to the person from whose possession it was taken—5 Bom.L.R. 25, 17 Bom.L.R. 79; Kyin Tou v. E. Cho, 4 L.B.R. 14, 6 Cr.L.J. 126; 8 S.L.R. 141. A Magistrate is also competent to order the property seized by the Police to be made over to the complainant if the Magistrate finds on the materials before him that the complainant is entitled to the property—Husansha v. Mashaksha, 12 Bom.L.R. 232. But if the property is alleged or suspected to have been stolen or found under circumstances which create suspicion of the commission of any offence, the Magistrate can pass order that the property should be at the disposal of the Government even though the complainant may be entitled thereto—Ramasami v. Venkateswara, 24 M.L.J. 1, 14 Cr.L.J. 27. So also, if neither party succeeds in establishing his title to possession, the property would be at the disposal of the Government—Ibid.

Conditional order regarding property.—The Magistrate cannot demand security, either under this section or under sec. 517, from the person in whose possession the articles are, for their production if required—7 C.W.N. 522 (see the case cited under sec 517). But if before the inquiry or trial, it becomes necessary to pass an immediate order to save the property from possible loss or decay, the Magistrate can order the property to be delivered to one of the parties on certain terms—Nasib Ali v. Rukhmini, 5 C.W.N. 415.

1365. Inquiry.—It has been pointed out in a Bombay case that the provisions of this section are wider than those of the corresponding section of the Code of 1872, and the Magistrate, instead of delivering the property to the person from whom it was taken, may now hold an inquiry and then deliver it to the person legally entitled—8 Bom. 338. In another case it has been held that the Magistrate is bound to make a proper inquiry before making an order concerning the right of possession of property under this section—In re Ratanlal, 17 Bom. 748. See also 26 Bom. 552. But the Madras High Court holds that from a study of the section it appears that there is no obligation on the Magistrate to hold an inquiry for the purpose of determining as to which of the contending parties is entitled to the property. 'It does not appear that it is authorised to usurp the functions of a Civil-Court and convert the trial of an accused person into an inquiry in regard to property'—Kupfammal, 29 Mad. 375 (378). In another Bombay case also it is laid down that the Magistrate need not hold an inquiry but may proceed on such evidence as is available and pass an order under this section. He can base his order on a mere statement made by the accused to the Police that the property was stolen by him from the adjudged owner—Q. E. v. Tribhovan, 9 Bom. 131. The same view has been taken by the Sind Court—Asi, 5 S.L.R. 3, 12 Cr.L.J. 108, 9 I.C. 634 (dissenting from 17 Bom. 748). The Magistrate is not bound to make a judicial inquiry by examination of witnesses on oath before making an order under this section. All that the law requires is that he should have materials before him to satisfy himself as to who is entitled to possession—Ma Thein v. Ma The, 12 Bur.L.T. 266, 57 I.C. 81, 21 Cr.L.J. 561; Chuni Lal v. Ishar Das, 4 Lah. 38 (42), 24 Cr.L.J. 670. An order under this section can be passed on police reports and papers alone without any independent inquiry on oath with regard to the question of ownership—Chuni Lal v. Ishar Das, supra. If there is no question that the property was taken out of the complainant's possession, the Magistrate can return the property to the complainant without making any inquiry—Ratanlal 365.

When the Magistrate has issued a proclamation under sub-section (2), he is not bound to make any inquiry till after the expiry of the six months from the date of the proclamation—Mahalabuddin, 22 Cal. 781.

Question of title—The Magistrate deciding a case under this section should not decide any question of title but must be confined only to the question of possession—Husansha v. Mashaksha, 12 Bom.L.R. 232. The order under this section does not conclude the right of any person. The real owner may proceed in the Civil Court against the holder of the articles for damages—Q. E. v. Tribhovan, 9 Bom. 131.

1366. Proclamation—When the person legally entitled to the property is known, the Magistrate need not make a proclamation nor wait for six months before delivering the property to him. He may deliver the property to the person entitled, whether he has issued a proclamation or not. If he has issued a proclamation, that fact will not invalidate an order for immediate delivery of the property to such a known person—Po Lwin, 3 L.B.R. 197, 4 Cr.L.J. 203.

1367. Revision—On a proper case being made out, the High Court in revision has jurisdiction to examine an order passed under this section—Chuni Lal v. Ishar Das, 4 Lah. 38 (42). The High Court has power in revision not only to set aside a Magistrate's order for the disposal of property passed under this section, but also to order restitution of the property to the person entitled thereto—Ma Thein v. Ma The, 12 Bur.L.T. 266, 21 Cr.L.J. 561, 57 I.C. 81.

Review—Orders under this section cannot be reviewed. When once a Magistrate has passed an order restoring possession of the property, he cannot reconsider it and pass another order subsequently—4 Bom.L.R. 12.

524. If no person within such period establishes his claim to such property, and if the person in whose possession such property was found is unable to show that it was legally acquired by him, such property shall be at the disposal of Government, and may be sold under the orders of the Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate, or a Magistrate of the first class empowered by the Local Government in this behalf.

Procedure where no claimant appears within six months.

(2) In the case of every order passed under this section, an appeal shall lie to the Court to which appeals against sentences of the Court passing such order would lie.

1367A. "Unable to show that.... . . him" —When the proclamation has been issued under sec. 523, and the six months have expired, then the provisions of sec 524 come in, and the person in whose possession the property was found can come up and prove his title to the property—Mahalabuddin, 22 Cal 761 If he is unable to show that the property is his own, it may be forfeited to Government. But the words "unable to show that it was legally acquired by him" do not reverse the presumption laid down in sec 110 of the Evidence Act, i.e., it should be presumed that the accused is the owner of the property, in the absence of any proof to the contrary. Where the police seized certain property from the accused and no claimant came forward to claim the same though a proclamation was issued, and several items of the property bore the name of the accused, but the Magistrate said that the evidence produced by the accused was suspicious, though no evidence was elicited to show clearly that the accused's claim was false, it was held that under the circumstances the proper and safest course is to follow the presumption laid down in sec. 110 of the Evidence Act—Aslum v Crown, 8 S L R. 141, 16 Cr L J 138, 27 I C 202. Where no offence is found to have been committed, the property should be returned to the accused and should not be confiscated to the Government—In re Kareppa, 17 Bom L R 79, 16 Cr. L J 207, 27 I C 767.

Property shall be at the disposal of Government —The Criminal Court can make arrangements for the custody and protection of the property while in the possession of Government, and can make a transfer of the property to such person as it thinks proper—Secretary of State v Lown Karan, 5 P L J. 321 (324), 21 Cr L J. 475.

The words "at the disposal of the Government" may reasonably be interpreted as meaning that the Government shall be free to sell the property or to hold it as a trustee for the true owner, who will be entitled to bring a suit for possession of the property—Ibid (at p. 327).

1368. Appeal:—The appeal allowed by sub-section (2) is an appeal in the full sense of Chapter XXXI, and the provisions of that chapter must be fully complied with. Where an appeal to the Court of Session from an order of the District Magistrate was treated as a sort of miscellaneous application and decided ex parte without a notice to the other party, and none of the procedure of Chapter XXXI was followed, the order of the Sessions Judge was set aside—1881 A.W.N. 150.

Civil suit :—In one case the Bombay High Court has expressed the opinion that as this section allows an appeal from an order under this section, it is doubtful whether the law contemplates a remedy by suit—Secretary of State v. Wakhul, 19 Bom. 668. But in another case the Bombay High Court has laid down that the Magistrate's order under this section is not conclusive as to title, and the owner is entitled to bring a civil suit for possession—Q. E. v. Tribhavan, 9 Bom. 131. See also Wasappa v. Secretary of State, 40 Bom. 200. These two cases have been followed in Secretary of State v. Lown Karan, 5 P.L.J. 321 (326), 21 Cr.L.J. 475.

525. If the person entitled to the possession of such property is unknown or absent and the property is subject to speedy and natural decay, or if the Magistrate to whom its seizure is reported is of opinion that its sale would be for the benefit of the owner or that the value of such property is less than ten rupees, the Magistrate may at any time direct it to be sold; and the provisions of sections 523 and 524 shall, as nearly as may be practicable, apply to the nett proceeds of such sale.

The italicised words have been added by section 144 of the Cr.P.C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

CHAPTER XLIV.

OF THE TRANSFER OF CRIMINAL CASES.

High Court may transfer case or itself try it.

526. (1) Whenever it is made to appeal to the High Court—

- (a) that a fair and impartial inquiry or trial cannot be had in any Criminal Court subordinate thereto, or
- (b) that some question of law of unusual difficulty is likely to arise, or
- (c) that a view of the place in or near which any offence has been committed, may be required for the satisfactory inquiry into or trial of the same, or

- (d) that an order under this section will tend to the general convenience of the parties or witnesses, or
- (e) that such an order is expedient for the ends of justice, or is required by any provision of this Code;

it may order—

- (i) that any offence be inquired into or tried by any Court not empowered under sections 177 to 184 (both inclusive) but in other respects competent to inquire into or try such offence;
- (ii) that any particular * * * case or appeal, or class of * * * cases or appeals, be transferred from a Criminal Court subordinate to its authority to any other such Criminal Court of equal or superior jurisdiction;
- (iii) that any particular * * * case or appeal be transferred to and tried before itself; or
- (iv) that an accused person be committed for trial to itself or to a Court of Session.

(2) When the High Court withdraws for trial before itself any case from any Court other than the Court of a Presidency Magistrate, it shall, except as provided in section 267, observe in such trial the same procedure which that Court would have observed if the case had not been so withdrawn.

(3) The High Court may act either on the report of the lower Court, or on the application of a party interested, or on its own initiative.

(4) Every application for the exercise of the power conferred by this section shall be made by motion, which shall, except when the applicant is the Advocate General, be supported by affidavit or affirmation.

(5) When an accused person makes an application under this section, the High Court may direct him to execute a bond, with or without sureties, conditioned that he will, if so ordered, pay any amount which the High Court has power under this section to award by way of costs to the person opposing the application.

(6) Every accused person making any such application shall give to the Public Prosecutor notice in writing of the application, together with a copy of the grounds on which it is made; and no order shall be made on the merits of the application unless at least twenty-four hours have elapsed between the giving of such notice and the hearing of the application.

(6A) Where any application for the exercise of the power conferred by this section is dismissed, the High Court may, if it is of opinion that the application was frivolous or vexatious, order the applicant to pay by way of costs to any person who has opposed the application any expenses reasonably incurred by such person in consequence of the application.

(7) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect any order made under section 197.

(8) If, in any criminal case or appeal, before the commencement of the hearing, the Public Prosecutor, the complainant or the accused notifies, to the Court before which the case or appeal is pending, his intention to make an application under this section in respect of the case, the Court shall exercise the powers of postponement or adjournment given by Section 344 in such a manner as will afford a reasonable time for the

(8) If, in the course of any inquiry or trial or before the commencement of the hearing of any appeal, the Public Prosecutor, the complainant or the accused notifies to the Court before which the case or appeal is pending his intention to make an application under this section in respect of such case or appeal, the Court shall adjourn the case or postpone the appeal for such a period as will afford a reasonable time for the application being made and an order being obtained thereon, before the accused is called on for his defence, or, in the case of an appeal, before the hearing of the appeal.

application to be made and an order to be obtained thereon.

(9) Notwithstanding anything hercinbefore contained, a Judge presiding in a Court of Session shall not be required to adjourn a trial under sub-section (8) if he is of opinion that the person notifying his intention of making an application under this section has had a reasonable opportunity of making such an application and has failed without sufficient cause to take advantage of it.

Change.—This section has been amended by sec 145 of the Cr.P.C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. In clauses (ii) and (iii) the word 'criminal' has been omitted, in sub-section (5) the words "any amount . . . application" have been substituted for the words "the costs of the prosecutor", sub-sections (6A) and (9) have been newly added, and sub-section (8) has been materially altered as shown in parallel columns. The reasons are stated below in their proper places

Secs. 526 and 269:—Sec. 269 in no way limits the powers of transfer conferred on the High Court by this Section. The High Court has power to transfer a case from a jury-district to a non-jury district—10 S.L.R. 154 (cited under sec. 269).

1369. Conditions precedent.—Before an application is made to the High Court for transfer, the District Magistrate must be moved first. The High Court will not ordinarily entertain an application for transfer when the applicant can under the law move the District Magistrate for the same relief but has not done so. The High Court will interfere only in the last resort—Ravi Chandra v. Sandar, 26 Cr.L.J. 960 (All.); In re Fonseca, 1 Cr.L.J. 589, 6 Bom.L.R. 480; Ghulam Nabi v. Jawala, 24 Cr.L.J. 466 (Lah.). (Contra—Nathoomal, 20 S.L.R. 54, 27 Cr.L.J. 40 (41), where it is held that the application for transfer lies to the High Court direct, and a trial will be unnecessarily delayed if the District Magistrate has to be moved in the first instance before applying to the High Court). The case to be transferred must be a case pending before a competent Court. The High Court cannot under this section transfer a case which is not properly before a Subordinate Court of competent jurisdiction to receive and try it—Mangal Tekchand, 10 Bom. 274; Ledgard v Bull, 9 All. 191 (P.C.); Scott v. Rickets, 9 Mad 356; In re Sikka, 17 L.W. 69, 6 Cal 30; 7 Bom L.R. 104, Girdharlal v. Motilal, 3 Bom L.R. 121. If the complaint has been made to a Magistrate who is not competent to take cognizance of the case, he shall return the complaint for presentation to the proper Court with an endorsement to that effect (see sec. 201). The application for transfer must be made before the disposal of the case. A case cannot be transferred after acquittal. This section contemplates interference by the High Court by way of transfer, when a person is aggrieved or injured by any order of the Magistrate before the disposal of the case. It is not intended to give power to interfere in order to set aside an acquittal or discharge—Corporation of Calcutta v. Bheechunram, 2 Cal. 290; 1 Bom.L.R. 782.

1370. Cases which can be transferred :—In clauses (i) and (ii) of the old section, the Legislature used the words 'criminal case' and so the word criminal led to a divergence of views in several cases. Thus, as regards cases under Chapter VIII, it was held in 28 Cal. 709, 41 Cal 719, Wahid Ali, 32 All. 642, 12 A.L.J. 262, 1913 P.R. 1 and 1 S.L.R. 98 that such cases were criminal cases and were therefore covered by this section; but in 1914 P.R. 5 and 1916 P.L.R. 78 it was held that those cases not being criminal cases could not be transferred from one Court to another. So also, as regards cases under Chapter XII, in 2 C.L.J. 614, 26 Mad 188, 34 All. 533 and 11 O.C. 61, it was held that proceedings under section 145, being criminal proceedings, could be transferred from one Court to another, whereas the contrary view was taken in 25 Bom. 179 and 8 S.L.R. 215. The Legislature has now wisely omitted the word 'criminal,' so that all cases inquired into and tried in any criminal Court can now be transferred under this section. "The word criminal has been omitted to make it clear that the powers of a High Court to transfer criminal cases extend to the transfer of miscellaneous proceedings under the Code."—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914) A proceeding under sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act is neither civil nor criminal, but is a 'case' within the meaning of sec. 526, and as it is held in a Criminal Court, it can be transferred from one Court to another under this section—Lakshmi Narain v. Ratni, 27 P.L.R. 225, 27 Cr.L.J. 476 (477). The contrary view held in 1888 P.R. 41 is no longer correct.

Future cases cannot be transferred.—The High Court can transfer actual cases only, i.e., cases actually pending before a Court; it cannot direct that cases that may be filed in future should, when filed, not be heard by the authority to which they are presented but should be transferred to some other Courts—Q. E. v. Lagma, Ratanlal 973

Inquiry :—A inquiry under the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act is an inquiry contemplated by this section and can be transferred from one Court to another—Bansi v. Lakshmi, 45 All 700 (701)

1371. Clause (a).—Reasonable apprehension of not having a fair trial :—The basis of all applications for transfer of criminal cases must be that the accused must have a reasonable apprehension that he will not receive a fair trial—1 P.L.J. 309 When there are circumstances existing to create a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that he will not receive a fair and unprejudiced trial, a transfer should be directed, though there is really no bias in the mind of the Court from which the transfer is sought and though the circumstances may be capable of explanation—2 Weir 678; Baktu v. Kali Prasad, 23 Cal. 297; Duveyon v. Driver, 23 Cal. 495; Kali Churn v. Emp., 33 Cal. 1183, 18 Cal. 247; Ram Kishen, 35 All. 5; Farzand v. Hanuman, 19 All. 64; 25 Bom. 179, Sardari Lal, 3 Lah. 443; 1 P.L.T. 522; Rang Bahadur v. Kareman, 2 P.L.T. 297; Benode Behari v. Emp., 5 P.L.T. 63, 25 Cr.L.J. 590; 20 Cr.L.J. 566 (Pat.), 25 Cr.L.J. 603 (Lah.). Confidence in the administration of justice is an essential element of good government, and reasonable apprehension of failure of justice in the mind of the accused person should therefore be taken into serious consideration on an application for transfer—Kali Churn v. Emp., 33 Cal. 1183, 10 C.W.N. 793, Sardari Lal v. Emp., 3 Lah. 443, 24 Cr.L.J. 286.

When a transfer is asked for, it is not sufficient merely to allege that the applicant would not get an impartial trial, but he must place before the Court the facts which give rise to this belief in his mind—Amar Singh v. Sadhu Singh, 6 Lah. 396, 26 Cr.L.J. 853

When sufficient grounds are made out for a transfer, the High Court is bound to act under this section. It is precluded from considering the possible effect which the transfer may have on the reputation or authority of the Magistrate concerned—Narain v. Howrah Municipality, 10 C.W.N. 441. One of the most important duties of the High Court is to create and maintain confidence in the administration of justice, and this can be done by giving to every citizen an assurance that so far as practicable he will never be forced to undergo a trial by a Judge or Magistrate, when he has reasonable apprehension that a fair and impartial trial cannot be obtained from that Judge or Magistrate—1 S.L.R. 8. In transferring a case from one Magistrate to another, the High Court ought not to be guided by the impressions produced in its own mind as to the impartiality of the Magistrate, but must look to the effect likely to be produced in the minds of the parties and their witnesses by the selection of a Magistrate whose personal antecedents or circumstances have however unavoidably connected him with either one party or the other—In re Pandurang, 25 Bom. 179

It is the duty of the Magistrate not only to conduct the case impartially, but also to conduct himself in such a manner that the parties may have absolute confidence in him that only full justice will be dealt out to them. If the Magistrate, though not actually biased, still conducts himself in such a manner and utters such words as to impair the confidence of any of the parties, then there is good ground for the transfer of the case from his file to that of some other Magistrate—Bhairab Chandra, 25 Cal. 727; Lalit Mohan v. Surya Kanta, 28 Cal. 709; Id Akbar v. Emp., 47 All. 288, 23 A.L.J. 133; Sikandar Lal, 10 Lah. 778, 30 Cr.L.J. 129. Judicial officers should be careful to avoid the opportunity of having imputations made. Where a Magistrate offers a seat on the dais to a gentleman not necessarily having any connection with the case, while he is hearing it, receives visits from the complainant and the defendant during the hearing of the proceedings, thereby laying himself open to an imputation, and accepts a lift in the complainant's car and sits in it with the complainant's brother, it is advisable to transfer the hearing of the case—Ganpat v. Koshalendra, 3 O.W.N. 245, 13 O.L.J. 644, 27 Cr.L.J. 498. Magistrates should not fail to remember that it is their duty no less to preserve an outward appearance of impartiality than to maintain the internal freedom from bias, which is incumbent on all judicial officers, and that if they allow their executive zeal to appear to outturn their judicial discretion, their action is certain to induce the party to make an application to the High Court for transfer—1 S.L.R. 8

What is a reasonable apprehension should be decided according to the incidents of the case and in reference to the special circumstances. It is difficult to lay down any hard and fast rule under which a transfer should be made, for the circumstances in one case might differ from those of the other—Kali Churn, 33 Cal. 1183; 5 P.L.T. 63; Rajani Kanta, 36 Cal. 904; Rekha Ahir, 1 P.L.T. 494, 56 I.C. 664. It is not sufficient if the accused merely alleges that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had. He should also place before the Court the facts and circumstances from which he is led to entertain such belief, and if these will reasonably give rise to that belief, a transfer will be made—10 O.C. 165; 1917 P.W.R. 13. The allegation by the accused that he distrusts the tribunal and that he believes that he will not get a fair trial, must be examined and found true before it can be accepted; otherwise the accused person has only to say that he distrusts the Magistrate in order to get the case transferred, and he will go on doing so indefinitely—Abdulla v. Emp., 22 N.L.R. 99, 27 Cr.L.J. 835. It is not every kind of apprehension that will entitle an accused person to get a transfer of the case; the apprehension of the accused must be shown to be reasonable—Rekha Ahir, supra; Pulin v. Asutosh, 39 C.L.J. 330. The High Court will not order a transfer merely in defence to the susceptibilities of the accused when there is no reasonable ground for the apprehension—Narain Chandra v. Howrah Municipality, 10 C.W.N. 441. What is a reasonable apprehension must of course depend on the degree of intelligence of the accused—Ahmad Din v. Emp., 25 Cr.L.J. 638; Sardari v. Emp., 3 Lah. 443; Machal v. Matru, 10 N.L.R. 15, 15 Cr.L.J. 196 (197). The possibility of probability of his entertaining a reasonable apprehension must also be determined from the circumstances which might give rise to such apprehension and from the conduct of the accused, after taking into consideration the accused's position in life, his conduct and behaviour, his character, social status and mental development—Fazluddin, 30 Cr.L.J. 728 (731) (Nag.). In determining whether an application is reasonable, it is the duty of the High Court to place itself in the position of the accused and to consider the facts and circumstances attending his position. Abstract reasonableness ought not to be the standard—Kali Churn, 33 Cal. 1183; 15 Cal. 455; Kishori Gir v. Ram Narayan, 8 C.W.N. 77; 29 Cal. 211; Pulin v. Asutosh, 39 C.L.J. 330. The Nagpur Court however goes further and holds that if an accused person does in fact believe that he will not have a fair and impartial trial in a certain tribunal, it is inexpedient that he should be tried by it, however high the certainty of impartiality of that tribunal may be in the minds of all right-thinking men. That the belief is entirely wrong and does not do him any credit is immaterial. The question is not whether the belief is reasonable or unreasonable, but whether it exists or not, though the only way of deciding whether it exists or not is to see whether it might reasonably be expected to exist in a person of the standard of intelligence and honesty common in the class to which the accused belongs—Abdulla v. Emp., 22 N.L.R. 89, 27 Cr.L.J. 835, Machal v. Matru, supra. In a Sind case it is laid down that the apprehension to be established must be an apprehension reasonable in the opinion of the Court, and not such apprehension as would appear reasonable in the mind of the accused. The Court itself should be satisfied on that point, and the real test is not what the accused may reasonably have been led to think about it—Wali Mahomed, 18 Cr.L.J. 644, 10 S.L.R. 183. But this would be putting a wrong construction on the section. For, it is not so much the mind of the Magistrate that determines the question, but it is the impression that is reasonably created in the mind of the accused by the conduct of the Magistrate—Sikandar Lal, 10 Lah 778, 30 Cr.L.J. 129 (131). It has been observed in an oft quoted English case, that the law of transfer of cases is based not so much upon the motives which might be supposed to bias the Judge as upon the susceptibilities of the litigant parties. One important object at all events is to clear away everything which might engender suspicion and distrust of the tribunal and so to promote the feeling of confidence in the administration of justice which is so essential to social order and security—Sergeant v. Dale, 2 Q.B.D. 558 (567); Satindra Nath Sen, 1929 Cr.C. 597 (600) (Cal.), Awadh Singh v. Puran, 2 P.L.T. 198, Anant v. Emp., 7 N.L.J. 155, Machal v. Matru, 10 N.L.R. 15, 15 Cr.L.J. 196. Where good grounds are made out for a transfer, the application ought not to be refused merely because the case has reached an advanced stage or that the transfer might entail expenses and trouble—Sikander Lal, 10 Lah 778, 30 Cr.L.J. 129.

1372. Instances of reasonable apprehension.—When the District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge expressed an opinion that an impartial jury could not be obtained if the case was tried in the district, it was held that the expression of such belief was sufficient to shake the confidence of the public and of the parties in the fairness and impartiality of the jury, and to create in their minds a reasonable apprehension that a fair and impartial trial could not be had if the case was tried there, and therefore an order for transfer was expedient for the ends of justice under this section—Bhairab Chandra, 25 Cal 727. When in a case of petty theft, the Magistrate issued non-bailable warrants against the accused in the first instance, and then exacted very heavy bail from them, there was a sufficient ground for apprehension that a fair trial could not be had from him, and therefore a transfer should be directed—8 C.W.N. 589. Where in a summons case the Magistrate had issued a warrant without any apparent reason, and there was reason to believe that in other proceedings connected with the case the Magistrate had formed an opinion unfavourable to the accused, there ought to be a transfer of the case—Wilson, 18 Cal. 247. The issue of a warrant for the arrest of a complainant who has not appeared is not justifiable, and this action on the part of the Magistrate is a sufficient ground for transfer of the case from his file—Fazal Ahmad v. Abdulla, 26 P.L.R. 701, 7 Lah. L.J. 571. Where it appeared that during the course of an inquiry preliminary to commitment some entries in the order-sheet were not made by the Magistrate daily as required by the rules of the High Court, and certain orders were not recorded either on the particular day or possibly even on the following day, and in one instance the Magistrate did not record the order with reference to the order of proceedings before him, and it further appeared that the Magistrate, even after the receipt of the order of the High Court staying all further proceedings in the case, proceeded to record the evidence of a medical officer, held that the Magistrate had acted with impropriety and the case should be transferred to another Magistrate—Anant Ram v. Mansool, 2 C.W.N. 639. Where a Magistrate acquitted the accused on a consideration of the complainant's statement alone, and without examining his witnesses, it showed that the Magistrate had formed a decided opinion before hearing the evidence for the prosecution; the High Court set aside the order of acquittal and directed the transfer of the case to another Magistrate—Sinnai Gowndan, 20 Mad. 388. Where the Magistrate makes inordinate delay in examining the complainant, or disregards the preliminaries prescribed by this Code for dealing with complaints, or awaits the consideration of the evidence in another case with which the accused has no concern, in order to decide whether any action should be taken upon the complaint, these may give rise to a reasonable apprehension that a fair trial cannot be had, and the case should be transferred—Rekha Ahir, 1 P.L.T. 494, 21 Cr.L.J. 504, 56 I.C. 664. Where the complainant made a verbal statement in chambers before the District Magistrate who at once arrested the accused before making any inquiry, and there was a likelihood of the Magistrates of the district figuring as witnesses in the case, held that the case should be transferred to a different district altogether—Din Dayal, 1 P.L.T. 522, 21 Cr.L.J. 795, 58 I.C. 523. Where after the application of the accused for adjournment of the case to enable them to move the High Court for transfer, the Magistrate raised the amount of bail of some of the accused from Rs. 100 to Rs. 250, and cancelled the bail-bonds of others, it was held that the action of the Magistrate might be absolutely bona fide, but it was sufficient to create a reasonable apprehension in the minds of the accused that they would not have a fair trial before him—Tittu Sahu, 1 P.L.T. 652, 21 Cr.L.J. 530, 57 I.C. 454. Where the Magistrate exhibits haste in recording the statement of an accused person before all the evidence for the prosecution is concluded, this fact may create an apprehension in the mind of the accused that he will not get a fair trial, and entitles him to a transfer of the case—18 A.L.J. 1145. Where in a proceeding under sec. 107, the persons against whom the proceeding was taken were appointed special constables, it might raise a reasonable apprehension that they would not have a fair and impartial trial, and a transfer ought to be allowed—11 C.W.N. 121; 10 C.W.N. 82. Where it was alleged by the accused that the District Magistrate had cancelled his license for arms and refused to see him when he called to pay his respects, it was held that these incidents were likely to lead the accused to believe that the District Magistrate was displeased with him and there was a reasonable apprehension of his not having a fair trial from the Magistrate—Ram Krishna, 35 All 5, 13 Cr L.J. 823. Where the trying Magistrate stopped the cross-examination of the complainant in a case because in his view the complainant had been fully cross-examined for one hour, it was held that the act of the Magistrate was indiscreet and might reasonably lead the accused to believe that they would not get a fair trial at his hands, and the case should therefore be transferred to another Magistrate—20 Cr L.J. 559 (Pat.). Where there was an order of the Superintendent of Police that the accused was to be allowed facilities for instructing legal advisers only on application to him, it was held that there might be a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that his movements were unduly restricted by that order, and the High Court therefore allowed a transfer of the case to another place—23 C.W.N. 481, see also Harhar Roy, 23 C.W.N. 479. Where a Magistrate, during the course of the trial, received a letter from the witness for the defence, which was calculated to create an apprehension in the mind of the petitioner that the witness was a friend of the Magistrate; where the witnesses for the petitioner were treated in a manner different from that in which the witnesses of the opposite party were treated; and where the Magistrate while complying with the prayer for postponement as the petitioner wanted to move for transfer to another Court, passed an illegal order imposing condition when he had no discretion but to postpone; held that a strong ground was made out for transfer—Dayawanti v. Bitanand, 30 P.L.R. 657, 30 Cr L.J. 1048. Where the Magistrate refused to dispense with the personal appearance of pardanashin ladies belonging to respectable families, and repeatedly insisted on their appearance in Court, the High Court transferred the case from that Magistrate—17 C.W.N. 1248. Where a complaint of murder had been preferred against the accused before the Sub-divisional Magistrate, and during the pendency of the complaint, the Deputy Commissioner of the District made a speech in the presence of all the Magistrates including the Sub-divisional Magistrate, that the accused was innocent and that baseless charges had been imputed from malicious motives, held, that under the circumstances, the apprehension on the part of the complainant that he would not get justice at the hands of the Magistrate was reasonable, and that there was a sufficient ground for transferring the case from the file of the Subdivisional Magistrate—Rup Narain v. Abdul Hamid, 11 O.L.J. 657, 25 Cr L.J. 1374. Where the Magistrate refused to give facilities to the accused to prosecute his civil suit connected with the same facts on which the prosecution was based, and the record of the civil suit was unnecessarily sent for and detained by the Magistrate so as to delay the decision in the civil suit, held that this was a good ground for apprehension that the accused would not get fair trial from the Magistrate—Faqir Singh, 10 Lah. 223, 29 Cr.L.J. 769 (770). An examination of the accused under sec. 342 amounting practically to a lengthy cross-examination by a series of searching questions may raise an apprehension in the mind of the accused about the fairness of the trial and is a valid ground for transfer—Faqir Singh, supra.

The applicant who wants the transfer of the case on the ground of bias in the mind of the Magistrate must show the very clearest grounds for believing that the Magistrate is likely to be prejudiced or influenced by an improper motive in the decision of the case. In the absence of such ground, it is highly improper to transfer a case from his Court and thus to throw a gratuitous slight upon the Magistrate—6 B.H.C.R. 69; Ratanlal 323, 1887 A.W.N. 139. The transfer of a criminal case should not be necessarily ordered simply because an accused person thinks that he would not get an impartial trial, but the real question to be considered is whether on the facts disclosed in the application for transfer, there arises a reasonable inference that the Magistrate who is seized of the case may be prejudiced willingly or unwillingly against the accused—12 A.L.J. 33. Moreover, to justify a transfer, it must be shown that the Magistrate possessed such a substantial interest in the result of the case as would justify a conclusion that he had a real bias in the matter—Hyderally, Ratanlal 685.

For a transfer of a case on the ground of bias on the part of the Magistrate, it is not necessary for an accused person to prove actual bias, it is sufficient to show circumstances which may raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of an accused person that he will not have a fair and impartial trial, although the circumstances may be susceptible of explanation and may have happened without any real bias in the mind of the Magistrate—2 Weir 678; Wilson, 18 Cal. 247; Duveyon v. Driver, 23 Cal. 495; Bhairab Chandra, 25 Cal. 727; 28 Cal. 709; Baktu v. Kali, 28 Cal. 297; Kali Churn 33 Cal. 1183; 19 All. 96; 25 Bom. 179; Rang Bahadur v. Karimn, 2 P.L.T. 297, 63 I.C. 868; 1 P.L.T. 522, 20 Cr.L.J. 566 (Pat.); Amar Singh v. Sadhu Singh, 6 Lah. 396, 26 Cr.L.J. 853; Faqir Singh, 10 Lah. 223, 29 Cr.L.J. 719 (771); Sikandar, 10 Lah. 778, 30 Cr.L.J. 129; 15 C.P.L.R. 192. The grounds of transfer need not show actual bias, but it is sufficient if there are grounds alleged for suspecting bias. But if false charges of bribery and corruption are trumped up against the Magistrate, no transfer will be ordered, even when there are sufficient grounds for suspecting bias—2 L.B.R. 220.

Although each of the circumstances alleged may not be by itself sufficient to show that there was a bias on the part of the Magistrate, a transfer would nevertheless be justified, where having regard to all the circumstances taken together, the accused might reasonably apprehend that he would not have a fair trial—9 C.W.N. 619; Tila Sahu, 1 P.L.T. 552; Din Dayal, 1 P.L.T. 522, 58 I.C. 523.

1373. Expression of opinion or remarks :—A Magistrate who has already formed a decided opinion about the case before him and has expressed a strong opinion as to the guilt of the accused, is precluded from trying the case and a transfer ought to be directed—Harischandra, 10 Bom L.R. 201; Wahid Ali, 32 All. 642, 7 A.L.J. 813; 22 A.L.J. 430, Grish Chunder, 20 Cal. 857; Wilson, 18 Cal. 247; Sidanath, 8 C.W.N. 641; 3 C.W.N. 278; Rang Bahadur v. Kariman, 2 P.L.T. 297, 63 I.C. 868; 20 Cr.L.J. 566 (Pat.); 23 Cr.L.J. 168; In re Virji, 6 Bom.L.R. 856; Motunial v. Md. Razizan, 19 S.L.R. 117, 27 Cr.L.J. 802. Where a case was sent to a Magistrate for disposal with a remark by the District Magistrate that it was quite a clear case and the defence was ridiculous, it was a good ground for transfer of the case to another district—Md. Yakub v. Emp., 2 O.W.N. 688, 26 Cr.L.J. 1525. Where the Magistrate started proceedings under sec. 476 against a witness of the accused for perjury, immediately after his statement had been recorded, and before the case against the accused had been concluded, held that the action of the Magistrate was likely to create an apprehension in the mind of the accused that he had prejudged the case against him, as the action under sec. 476 amounted to an expression of opinion that the witness had given false evidence—Gopal Singh, 29 Cr.L.J. 40 (Lah). A transfer was ordered where in the course of the examination of the prosecution witness, the Magistrate made certain observations which went to show that he was not favourable to the prosecution—Shcodhari v. Jhingur, 7 P.L.T. 49, 26 Cr.L.J. 1249. Where a Magistrate made certain premature and ill-advised remarks regarding the evidence of certain defence witnesses, and held out threats to the accused regarding the sentence and the effect of his transfer-application, held that the case was a fit one for transfer—Sikandar Lal, 10 Lah. 778, 30 Cr.L.J. 129 (131). Where a Magistrate had already formed a very strong opinion and passed strong remarks on the conduct of the Sub-Inspector, the case should be transferred from his Court—Sartaj Singh, 22 A.L.J. 430, 26 Cr.L.J. 139 (140). A Magistrate in recording the evidence of a witness made a note regarding the demeanour of the witness (sec. 363) to the effect that the witness faltered and that from his demeanour it appeared that he had not told the truth, held that as the witness was altogether disbelieved by the Magistrate, this was a sufficient ground for transfer of the case to some other Magistrate—Golan Bari v. Yar Ali, 29 C.W.N. 316, 26 Cr.L.J. 852. Where a Magistrate, in recording the examination of the accused under sec. 364, added a note which amounted to an expression of opinion that he had already made up his mind as to the value of the defence, held that this was a good ground for transfer—Faqir Singh, 10 Lah. 233, 29 Cr.L.J. 769 (771).

Expression of opinion in a connected or counter case—A Judge is not disqualified from trying a case of rioting merely because he has decided a counter case of rioting and expressed an opinion. But the Judge should be careful to confine himself in the trial to the evidence before him and should not let his mind be influenced by the evidence given in the former case—Asimaddi v. Govinda, 1 C.W.N. 426.

also, Rajani Kanta v. Emp., 36 Cal. 904. Judges are presumed to be upright men who will approach each case from the point of view of that case alone and not permit their minds to be affected in any way by anything that has gone before that case. The mere fact that the Judge, in a former proceeding arising out of a counter case to the one now coming before him, expressed certain views upon the evidence in the former case as to which of the two versions is correct, is not a reasonable ground of apprehension that the accused will not have a fair trial—Amrit Mandal, 1 P.L.J. 399, 18 Cr.L.J. 95; Emp. v. Hargobind, 33 All. 583. Interest or bias on the part of the Magistrate is not to be inferred from opinions formed on evidence judicially recorded; otherwise a Magistrate would, after disposing of one of two counter cases, be disqualified from trying the other—Crown v. Kamil, 1 S.L.R. 37; In re Vadlal, 6 Bom.L.R. 1092. But when in a case and a counter case, the Magistrate in discharging the accused in one case expressed a strong opinion on the guilt of the accused in the other case, a transfer of the case pending will be directed—Rangasami v. Emp., 30 Mad. 233. Where in a proceeding it appeared that the Magistrate had expressed his opinion in a very strong language against the petitioner in a connected case, a transfer should be directed—Rehmani, 1916 P.L.R. 78; Viswanath v. Emp., 27 Cr.L.J. 210 (Nag); 11 O.L.J. 556.

1374. Inspection by Magistrate :—The inspection of a locality by the Magistrate acting fairly and judiciously during the inspection is not only not illegal, but under certain circumstances proper for the right understanding of the evidence. The Magistrate does not constitute himself a witness by a mere local inspection, and such inspection is no ground for transferring the case—Harsa Singh, 1901 P.L.R. 89, 1901 P.R. 13. But if the Magistrate goes to inspect the locality accompanied with one party (e.g., a partisan of the complainant) the action of the Magistrate is improper and is a sufficient ground for transferring the case—Bhai Gopal, 1901 P.L.R. 165; Karban Ullah v. Azmat, 12 C.W.N. 748. It is not only not objectionable but in many cases highly advisable that a Magistrate trying a criminal case should himself inspect the scene of occurrence in order to understand fully the bearing of the evidence given in Court. But if he does so, he should be careful not to allow any person on either side to say anything to him which might prejudice his mind one way or another. If the Magistrate goes out of his way in making a local inspection and makes the inspection with the complainant without notice to several of the accused and in their absence, the accused may very rightly apply for a transfer under this section—Faqiray Lal, 21 Cr.L.J. 166, 6 O.L.J. 689, 54 I.C. 774, In re Lalji, 19 All 302; Atiar Rai v. Emp., 39 Cal 476. Sec. 539B clearly lays down that if a Magistrate visits the scene of occurrence, he should do so after due notice to the parties. Where the Magistrate visited the place without notice to the parties, made inquiries, and as a result of his inquiry he summoned several persons as witnesses, held that the Magistrate by his action placed himself in the position of a witness to corroborate or contradict the other evidence, and was therefore disqualified from conpleting the trial of the case—Pakir Muhammad v. Emp., 4 Rang. 106, 27 Cr.L.J. 1084. See also notes under sec 556, under heading "Local Inspection."

Magistrate being a witness in the case :—The fact that the Magistrate may be a witness in the case for the defence is a ground of transfer, but in applying to the High Court for a transfer on that ground, it must be shown that the Magistrate will be a necessary and essential witness for the defence—Srilal Chamarra, 19 Cr L J 632 (Cal), 45 I.C 680. When in a criminal case the evidence of the Magistrate is found necessary by the defence, it is proper that the case should be transferred to another Magistrate—Abdul Lali, 26 All. 536. In 1897 A W N 17, it has been held that the mere fact that a Magistrate in whose Court a case is pending may be summoned as a witness for the defence, is not of itself a ground for the transfer of the case from the Court of such Magistrate; but it may be a ground for such Magistrate committing the case to the Court of Session, instead of passing sentence himself, in the event of a conviction.

1375. Magistrate having personal knowledge of the case :—If a Magistrate has knowledge in respect of matters which form the subject matter of the proceedings, and he derives such knowledge from outside the Court and not from evidence on the record, the case should be transferred from him—Satindra Nath Sen, 1929 Cr C. 597 (600) (Cal) When a Magistrate initiates proceedings under sec 110 on information within his own knowledge, he is not the proper person to conduct the inquiry under sec 117; the case must be transferred to some other Magistrate—6 C.W N. 595; 28 Cal 709 But in an Allahabad case it has been held that there is nothing to limit the source or the nature of the information on which a Magistrate can act under sec 110; and therefore the mere fact that the Magistrate has initiated proceedings on information based upon his own personal knowledge is not a ground for transfer—Mithu Khan, 27 All 172 (173) Where a Magistrate became aware of some of the facts in connection with a case by his taking part, or at any rate by his being present, at a search made by the Police during the investigation, it was expedient that the case should be transferred to the file of some other Magistrate—Gya Singh v Mahomed, 5 C.W.N 864 Where a Magistrate had dealt with the dispute in an informal manner as a private arbitrator, it is desirable that the case should be transferred to another Court, as his previous informal knowledge would necessarily hamper him at every turn—18 C L J 150

1376. Magistrate being friend or relation of complainant :—The mere fact that the Magistrate is the master of the complainant does not deprive him of his jurisdiction, but in such a case it would generally be expedient for him to refer the complainant to another Magistrate—Basappa, 9 Bom 172

The fact that the Magistrate is a friend or remote relation of complainant is no ground for transfer—Sitaram v Govind, 1912 P.L.R.-16, 13 Cr L.J. 474 So also the fact that the accused was a class fellow of the Magistrate some 15 years previously is not a sufficient ground for transfer. If a case had to be transferred on every occasion in which the Magistrate fifteen years before had rubbed shoulders with somebody who was a complainant or respondent or advocate in the case, then the whole of judicial work would come to an end—Gokul Prasad, 27 A.L.J. 616, 30 Cr.L.J. 522. The fact that both the complainant and the accused are acquainted with the Magistrate who sometimes gets medical help from each, is not a ground of transfer—Aliquallah, 1917 P.W.R. 13, 18 Cr.L.J. 719. So also, the fact that the Magistrate is a relation of the Sub-Inspector of Police or that he is in private life a guardian of a person who has a claim to the estate whose manager or servant instituted the proceeding, is not a valid ground of transfer—28 Cal. 297. But in 13 C.W.N. 50 (note), the fact that the prosecution witness was a relation of the Magistrate was held to be a sufficient ground for transfer. Where the Magistrate is a great friend of a prosecution witness, who is himself a friend of the complainant, the complaint should be transferred from the file of that Magistrate—Trilok Singh v. Crown, 8 Lah.L.J. 257, 27 Cr.L.J. 782. In a recent Calcutta case the fact that the complainant's mukhtar was a near relation of the Magistrate was held to be a ground for transfer—Nityaranjan v. K. E., 29 C.W.N. 648, 26 Cr.L.J. 1183.

1377. Magistrate being interested in the case :—Where the District Magistrate's letter showed that he had taken a keen personal interest in the matter which had led up to the proceedings being taken against the accused and that he had even taken part in the inquiry and had himself instituted the proceedings (under sec. 107) and was more or less convinced of the accused's guilt, held that the proceedings ought to be transferred to another district—Wahid Ali, 7 A.L.J. 813, 32 All. 642. Where the accused was connected with a Raj estate which was under the management of the District Magistrate as Collector and Agent to the Court of Wards, the High Court granted the application for transfer of the case from the file of the District Magistrate, lest there might be some bias in the mind of the Magistrate inducing him to look with favour upon the interests of any party—Kishori Gir v. Ram Narayan, 8 C.W.N. 77. Where a Magistrate has interested himself in a case pending before him in the way of obtaining a settlement by the parties, it is to the interest of both the parties and it is but fair to the Magistrate himself that he should not hear the case—Muzaffar Husain v. Md. Yakub, 47 All. 411, 23 A.L.J. 191, 26 Cr.L.J. 869; Gobinda Chandra v. Gopal Chandra, 18 C.L.J. 150, 14 Cr.L.J. 602. But the mere fact that the District Magistrate in his capacity as Collector is concerned in the management of an estate under the Court of Wards is no ground for transfer of a case instituted by a servant of the estate against a tenant of the estate and pending before a Subordinate Magistrate in the district, especially where there was not even a suggestion that the Collector or Manager knew of the institution of the case—Baktu v. Kali Prasad, 23 Cal. 297. See also notes under sec. 556.

*Magistrate proceeding with the case after issue of rule for transfer :—*See Note 1388 under sub-section (8).

1378. Other cases :—Where from the number of witnesses on both sides the case could not be finished in one day but the Judge insisted on finishing the case in one day and was unwilling to grant an adjournment to another date, held that this constituted a sufficient ground for the transfer of the case from that Magistrate—Ram Sarup, 17 A L J. 48, 20 Cr. L. J. 127, 49 I C 111 Where the trying Magistrate ordered that he would examine only one witness a day during the trial and would devote no more time each day, and thus prolonged the trial of the case, held that this was a sufficient ground for transfer of the case—Narain Das v. Emp., 26 Cr L J 1363 (Lah) Where during a trial a prosecution witness made certain statements which showed his complicity in the offence and the Magistrate ordered him to be put on trial along with the accused, held that the action taken by the Magistrate was quite legal, but inasmuch as the witness had been examined on oath before the Magistrate who might to a certain extent have been prejudiced, the case against him should be tried by a different Magistrate—Radharaman v. Kamakshya, 20 Cr L J 385 (Cal), 50 I C 993 Where in a case of rioting and murder committed to the Sessions Court, which had apparently aroused considerable local interest, it appeared that the Civil Surgeon had been discussing the case at the local club with the officers of the station including the Sessions Judge, held that this fact by itself was sufficient to justify an order of transfer of the case from the Sessions Judge—Md. Daraz Khan, 19 A L J 946, 23 Cr L J 126 Where the Magistrate had asked the pleader for the defence not to defend the accused, held that under such circumstances the accused could not have confidence in the impartiality of the Magistrate and the case should be transferred—3 Lah L J. 528 Where no practitioner in a District ordinarily employed in criminal cases is willing to act for the accused, it is a ground for transfer of the case to another district—Lalla v Zahoor Ahmed, 2 O W N 682, 26 Cr. L J 1272 Where at the request of the complainant, his case is sent to a particular Magistrate for trial, the accused will be justified in asking for a transfer from that Court—25 Cr L J 989 (Lah)

1379. What are not grounds of transfer :—Want of temper and discretion on the part of the Magistrate in dealing with the petitioner's written statement and failure to give satisfactory explanation to the High Court are not, by themselves, sufficient grounds for granting an application for transfer—2 W R. 58 The mere fact that the complainant is a man of importance in the place where the trial is held is not sufficient to justify a transfer to another place In re Ratanji, Ratanlal 474

A bona fide mistake of law is not a ground of transfer Thus, in a case under sec. 380 I P C the Magistrate should at once give the accused an opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses if he so desires, even though the charge may not be framed, but a refusal fellow of the Magistrate some 15 years previously is not a sufficient ground for transfer. If a case had to be transferred on every occasion in which the Magistrate fifteen years before had rubbed shoulders with somebody who was a complainant or respondent or advocate in the case, then the whole of judicial work would come to an end—Gokul Prasad, 27 A.L.J. 616, 30 Cr.L.J. 522. The fact that both the complainant and the accused are acquainted with the Magistrate who sometimes gets medical help from each, is not a ground of transfer—Aliqullah, 1917 P.W.R. 13, 18 Cr.L.J. 719. So also, the fact that the Magistrate is a relation of the Sub-Inspector of Police or that he is in private life a guardian of a person who has a claim to the estate whose manager or servant instituted the proceeding, is not a valid ground of transfer—28 Cal. 297. But in 13 C.W.N. 50 (note), the fact that the prosecution witness was a relation of the Magistrate was held to be a sufficient ground for transfer. Where the Magistrate is a great friend of a prosecution witness, who is himself a friend of the complainant, the complaint should be transferred from the file of that Magistrate—Trilok Singh v. Crown, 8 Lah.L.J. 257, 27 Cr.L.J. 782. In a recent Calcutta case the fact that the complainant's mukhtar was a near relation of the Magistrate was held to be a ground for transfer—Nityaranjan v. K. E., 29 C.W.N. 648, 26 Cr.L.J. 1183.

1377. Magistrate being interested in the case :—Where the District Magistrate's letter showed that he had taken a keen personal interest in the matter which had led up to the proceedings being taken against the accused and that he had even taken part in the inquiry and had himself instituted the proceedings (under sec. 107) and was more or less convinced of the accused's guilt, held that the proceedings ought to be transferred to another district—Wahid Ali, 7 A.L.J. 813, 32 All. 642. Where the accused was connected with a Raj estate which was under the management of the District Magistrate as Collector and Agent to the Court of Wards, the High Court granted the application for transfer of the case from the file of the District Magistrate, lest there might be some bias in the mind of the Magistrate inducing him to look with favour upon the interests of any party—Kishori Gir v. Ram Narayan, 8 C.W.N. 77. Where a Magistrate has interested himself in a case pending before him in the way of obtaining a settlement by the parties, it is to the interest of both the parties and it is but fair to the Magistrate himself that he should not hear the case—Muzaffar Husain v. Md. Yakub, 47 All. 411, 23 A.L.J. 191, 26 Cr.L.J. 869; Gobinda Chandra v. Gopal Chandra, 18 C.L.J. 150, 14 Cr.L.J. 602. But the mere fact that the District Magistrate in his capacity as Collector is concerned in the management of an estate under the Court of Wards is no ground for transfer of a case instituted by a servant of the estate against a tenant of the estate and pending before a Subordinate Magistrate in the district, especially where there was not even a suggestion that the Collector or Manager knew of the institution of the case—Bakla v. Kall Prasad, 29 Cal. 297. See also notes under sec. 586.

Magistrate proceeding with the case after issue of rule for transfer.
—See Note 1388 under sub-section (8).

1378. Other cases.—Where from the number of witnesses on both sides the case could not be finished in one day but the Judge insisted on finishing the case in one day and was unwilling to grant an adjournment to another date, held that this constituted a sufficient ground for the transfer of the case from that Magistrate—Ram Sarup, 17 A L.J. 48, 20 Cr L.J. 127, 49 I.C. 111 Where the trying Magistrate ordered that he would examine only one witness a day during the trial and would devote no more time each day, and thus prolonged the trial of the case, held that this was a sufficient ground for transfer of the case—Narain Das v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 1363 (Lah) Where during a trial a prosecution witness made certain statements which showed his complicity in the offence and the Magistrate ordered him to be put on trial along with the accused, held that the action taken by the Magistrate was quite legal, but inasmuch as the witness had been examined on oath before the Magistrate who might to a certain extent have been prejudiced, the case against him should be tried by a different Magistrate—Radharaman v. Kamakshya, 20 Cr L.J. 385 (Cal), 50 I.C. 903 Where in a case of rioting and murder committed to the Sessions Court, which had apparently aroused considerable local interest, it appeared that the Civil Surgeon had been discussing the case at the local club with the officers of the station including the Sessions Judge, held that this fact by itself was sufficient to justify an order of transfer of the case from the Sessions Judge—Md. Daraz Khan, 19 A L.J. 946, 23 Cr L.J. 126 Where the Mag'strate had asked the pleader for the defence not to defend the accused, held that under such circumstances the accused could not have confidence in the impartiality of the Magistrate and the case should be transferred—3 Lah L.J. 528. Where no practitioner in a District ordinarily employed in criminal cases is willing to act for the accused, it is a ground for transfer of the case to another district—Laita v Zahoor Ahmed, 2 O W N 682, 26 Cr.L.J. 1272 Where at the request of the complainant, his case is sent to a particular Magistrate for trial, the accused will be justified in asking for a transfer from that Court—25 Cr L.J. 989 (Lah)

1379. What are not grounds of transfer.—Want of temper and discretion on the part of the Magistrate in dealing with the petitioner's written statement and failure to give satisfactory explanation to the High Court are not, by themselves, sufficient grounds for granting an application for transfer—2 W R 58 The mere fact that the complainant is a man of importance in the place where the trial is held is not sufficient to justify a transfer to another place—In re Ratanji, Ratanlal 474

A bona fide mistake of law is not a ground of transfer. Thus, in a case under sec. 380 I P C the Magistrate should at once give the accused an opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses if he so desires, even though the charge may not be framed—see note

Lakshmi, 45 All. 700 (701). Where a case has given rise to communal feeling to such an extent that one of the parties finds it difficult to persuade his witnesses to appear in Court, owing to the fear that they might render themselves liable to injury at the hands of the members of the opposite community, it is desirable that the case should be transferred to some other locality—Halim v. Emp., 8 P.L.T. 153, 27 Cr.L.J. 1391.

1382. Clause (e) :—"Expedient for the ends of justice":—When a Magistrate who had seizure of the case did not know English and there was a large amount of evidence oral and documentary 'n English in the case, a transfer was necessary in the interests of justice—Mohammad v. Ali Raza, 16 Cr.L.J. 73 (All.), 25 I.C. 665. But the fact that the Magistrate was not well versed in Telugu and Sanskrit in which a book produced in evidence was written is not a ground of transfer, because it is a difficulty which is of common occurrence—(1911) 2 M.W.N. 50.

Where the case was relating to a dispute between Hindus and Mahomedans in respect of a mosque or graveyard, it is desirable that the case should be tried by the District Magistrate or some other European Magistrate—Kader Baksh v. Sundar Lal, 1915 P.L.R. 127, 16 Cr.L.J. 213; Mangat v. Crown, 26 P.L.R. 267, 26 Cr.L.J. 1056; Harikishen v. Allah Baksh, 28 Cr.L.J. 588 (Lah.).

Unnecessary delay in the disposal of a petty case is a good ground for transfer—Mangalam v. Abdul, 2 Weir 679; 12 A.L.J. 262; 8 M.L.T. 222

The fact that the accused is an acquaintance of the Magistrate, and that it would be in the interests of justice if the trial were held by a stranger Magistrate who knew nothing about either party, is not a ground of transfer—Mewa Ram v. Narain, 16 A.L.J. 490, 19 Cr.L.J. 702, 46 I.C. 158.

1383. Clause (ii) :—"From a Criminal Court subordinate to its authority":—The High Court has no jurisdiction to direct the transfer of a case from a Court not subordinate to its jurisdiction: Sec. 185 does not empower such a transfer. Thus, the High Court at Madras has no power to transfer a case from the Court of the Presidency Magistrate of Bombay to the Court of the Presidency Magistrate at Madras—40 Mad 835.

The Courts of the District Magistrate and Sessions Judge of Bangalore are subordinate to the High Court of Madras, and the High Court can transfer the cases pending before those Courts—Scott v. Rickelits, 9 Mad 356. The Perim Sessions Court and the Court of the Cantonment Magistrate at Secunderabad are subject to the Bombay High Court, and that High Court can transfer any case pending before those Courts to any other Court of equal or superior jurisdiction—Mangal Tekchand, 10 Bom 274; Q. E. v. Edwards, 9 Bom. 333.

In an Allahabad case it has been held that Panchayat Courts established under the U. P. Act VI of 1920 are not subordinate to the High Court, and the power under this section cannot be exercised to transfer a proceeding pending in one Panchayet Court to another—Sat Narain v. Sarju, 46 All. 167 (168, 169). In this case, Kanhaiya Lal J. is of opinion that the High Court cannot transfer a case from one village Panchayet to another under the provisions of this section, but it can do so under sec. 22 of the Letters Patent—Ibid (p. 170). In a later case of the same High Court, however, it has been laid down that as Panchayet Courts are Criminal Courts, the High Court has jurisdiction to transfer cases pending before a Panchayet Court—Basdeo v. Badal, 49 All. 188, 28 Cr L J 94. In this case the learned Judges did not enter into the question whether the Panchayet Courts were subordinate to the High Court.

As to whether the High Court has power to transfer a case which has been committed to a Court of Session having no jurisdiction to the Court of Session having jurisdiction, see 18 All. 350, 8 Bom 312, 36 Mad. 357 and other cases cited in Note 549 under sec. 177, headed "commitment to wrong sessions."

The transfer must be to a Court of competent authority and of equal or superior jurisdiction. Where the High Court directed the District Magistrate to transfer a case (under sec. 107) to another Magistrate, and the District Magistrate transferred the case to a 2nd Class Magistrate, the transfer was illegal because the 2nd Class Magistrate was not competent to hear the case under sec. 107, and also because he was of inferior jurisdiction to the District Magistrate—37 All. 20. The transfer should have been made to a First Class Magistrate as in K E v. Munna, 24 All 151.

In selecting a Court to which the case is to be transferred regard must be had to the gravity of the offence. Where a case under sec. 211 I. P. C. was transferred from the Court of a Joint Magistrate to that of an Honorary Magistrate with first class powers, where the case remained pending for four months, it was held that the case, being of a serious nature, ought to have been transferred to the Court of Session or to the Court of a more experienced Magistrate—Atagan Lal v. Ganesh, 16 A L J 294, 45 I C 515, 19 Cr L J 611.

Power of the Court to which case is transferred—Sec. 19 All. 249 and 1917 P.R. 30 cited in Note 606 under sec. 192.

1385. Sub-section (3) - 'A party interested'—Ordinarily, the only persons who are recognised by the Code as parties to a criminal case are the persons who have the right to control the proceedings, i.

portion of the Code—Muhammad Sharif v. Hari Prasad, 5 Pat. 229, 27 Cr.L.J. 1214.

This clause does not apply to proceedings under sec. 145. As this clause directs that the application to the trial Court is to be made by the Public Prosecutor or the complainant or the accused, and as in a proceeding under sec. 145, there is no complainant or accused or Public Prosecutor, the parties in a proceeding under sec. 145 cannot take advantage of this clause. Probably the Legislature thought that proceedings which are quasi civil in their nature, such as inquiries into the possession of land, do not require the exercise of the very summary powers which clause (8) confers—Loka Mahton v. Kali Singh, 6 Pat 553, 28 Cr.L.J. 1035, Jamir v. Murari, 34 C.W.N. 59 (60), 50 C.L.J. 331, 1929 Cr. C. 522.

Court, whether bound to adjourn:—Under the old section there was a difference of opinion as to whether the Court was bound to adjourn the trial on an application for adjournment. In Q. E. v. Gayatri Prosunno, 15 Cal. 455, Kishori v. Ram Narain, 8 C.W.N. 77, 2 Weir 685, Kali Churn, 33 Cal. 1183, and 1 S.L.R. 35 it was held that the words of this section were obligatory and the Court was bound to adjourn. But in 19 Mad. 375, Dhone Kristo, 6 C.W.N. 717, 18 A.L.J. 1145 and Joharuddin v. Emp, 31 Cal. 715 it was held that the Court was not bound to grant an adjournment if there was sufficient time, between the date of the application for adjournment and the date fixed for the hearing of the case, to have moved the High Court for transfer and to have obtained its order thereon.

The words of the present sub-section have been made more imperative. The Joint Committee remarks: "Our amendment provides for a compulsory adjournment at any stage of the case, except that a Sessions Court may refuse to adjourn (sub-section 9) when it is of opinion that the application has been unreasonably delayed." Under the present sub-section, the Magistrate is bound to adjourn the case—Sartaj Singh, 22 A.L.J. 430, 26 Cr.L.J. 139 (140), and the Magistrate while granting the adjournment has no power to impose any condition—Dayawanti v. Bitanand, 30 P.L.R. 657, 30 Cr.L.J. 1048. After an application is made under this clause, the Magistrate is bound to adjourn the case at once, and cannot proceed with the case and record any evidence at all—Sartaj Singh, supra; Churanji Lal, 9 Lah 537, 29 Cr.L.J. 815.

But an application for adjournment cannot be granted if no ground is stated therein and the application is made at a very late stage, e.g. after the evidence on behalf of the opposite party has been closed—Jamir v. Murari, 34 C.W.N. 59 (61), 1929 Cr. C. 522; or if it is made after the arguments have been heard, and when nothing remains to be done by the Court except to deliver judgment—Chockalingam, 52 Mad 355, 30 Cr.L.J. 908.

When an application is made under this clause, it is not for the Magistrate to decide whether the applicant has an apprehension that he would not receive a fair trial at his hands. That is the function of the High Court. The Magistrate is bound to adjourn the case, unless in his judgment he is bona fide satisfied that the applicant has no intention of making an application for transfer—Jatoi v. Emp., 20 S.L.R. 122, 27 Cr L.J. 935 (1937). When a party applies for adjournment and notifies his intention to apply for a transfer, the Magistrate should satisfy himself that the party has a bona fide intention of moving the High Court and that the notification is not a mere pretext to obtain an adjournment. If it is found that the party has no such bona fide intention, the adjournment should be refused. But the Magistrate should not refuse applications for adjournments on conjectural grounds. It is only when it is quite clear to him that there is no bona fide intention of applying for a transfer that he can refuse to adjourn—Nathoomal, 20 S.L.R. 54, 27 Cr L.J. 40 (42, 43).

A refusal to adjourn the case without just cause is by itself a sufficient ground for transfer of the case—Jatoi v. Emp., supra; Shenau Uka, 3 S.L.R. 135, 10 Cr.L.J. 570, 4 I.C. 379, Olandas, 8 S.L.R. 341, 16 Cr.L.J. 476, 29 I.C. 108.

If the accused applies to the High Court and obtains an order of transfer, all proceedings held by the Magistrate after the accused had notified his intention of making an application for transfer would be void—Nathoomal, supra.

The postponement should be for a reasonable time to allow the party to move the High Court for transfer. A postponement for too short a time is useless—19 Mad 375. An adjournment for six days is not a reasonable time within which to move the High Court—2 Weir 686.

1388. Magistrate proceeding with the case after issue of rule for transfer—When an application was made under subsection (8), and the Magistrate without passing any orders thereon proceeded with the case, and even though a telegram to the effect that a rule nisi by the High Court staying proceedings had been issued was shown to the Magistrate, he examined some more witnesses for the prosecution and committed the accused, it was held that the action on the part of the Magistrate was enough to show a bias, and consequently a transfer was necessary—11 C.W.N. 507, 5 C.W.N. 110, 2 C.W.N. 498, 16 C.W.N. 1031. If the Court entertains any doubt about the truth of the telegram, it should have satisfied itself by telegraphing to the Registrar of the High Court—5 C.W.N. 110, 2 C.W.N. 498. Where, upon the High Court having issued a rule staying further proceedings, the petitioner sent a telegram which was laid before the trying Magistrate, but the petitioner having failed to appear on the date previously fixed, the Magistrate issued a warrant upon the petitioner, it was held that the sending of the telegram did not in any way absolve the petitioner from the obligation to appear before the Court on the date fixed, and the issue of the warrant upon the petitioner was no ground for transfer of the case—Chandi Prasad, 17 C.W.N. 536, 14 Cr.L.J. 823. But where further proceedings having been stayed by the High Court's order, one of the complainants appeared before the Magistrate on the date fixed for hearing and apprised him of that order, but the Magistrate instead of staying further proceedings issued a warrant for the arrest of the complainant who had not appeared, held that the Magistrate's action was unjust and hostile to the complainants and the case must be transferred—Fatal Ahmad v. Abdulla, 7 Lah.L.J. 571, 26 P.L.R. 701, 27 Cr.L.J. 104.

Where the High Court granted a transfer on the 26th, and on the 27th a telegram to that effect was shown to the Magistrate, and the Magistrate adjourned proceedings till the 30th so that the order of the High Court might reach him; and on the 30th the Magistrate proceeded with the case and convicted the accused, and on the 31st the order of the High Court reached the Magistrate, it was held that the Magistrate's action though not illegal was indiscreet, in as much as he did not wait sufficiently for the order of the High Court to reach him—Ratanlal 46

Sub-section (9) :—Under this sub-section the Sessions Court may refuse to adjourn when it is of opinion that the application has been unreasonably delayed. The reason is that "the calendars of Sessions Courts involving the convenience of jurors, assessors and parties are peculiarly liable to be upset by the postponement of cases"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

526A. (1) Where any person subject to the Naval Discipline Act or to the Army Act or to the Air Force Act is accused of any offence such as is referred to in proviso (a) to section 41 of the Army Act, the Advocate General shall, if so instructed by the competent authority, apply to the High Court, for the committal or transfer of the case to that High Court, and thereupon the High Court shall order that the case be committed for trial to or be transferred to itself and shall thereafter proceed to try the case by jury.

(2) The Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare any officer to be the competent authority for the purpose of issuing instructions under sub-section (1) in regard to any class of cases specified in the notification.

This section has been added by sec. 32 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923

527. (1) The Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, direct the transfer of any particular * * case or appeal from one High Court to another High Court, or from any Criminal Court subordinate to one

Power of Governor General in Council to transfer criminal cases and appeals.

High Court, to any other Criminal Court of equal or superior jurisdiction subordinate to another High Court, whenever it appears to him that such transfer will promote the ends of justice, or tend to the general convenience of parties or witnesses.

(2) The Court to which such case or appeal is transferred shall deal with the same as if it had been originally instituted in, or presented to, such Court.

The word "criminal" has now been omitted from this section by sec 146 of the Cr. P. C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

528. (1) Any Sessions Judge may withdraw any case from, or recall any case which he has made over to, any Assistant Sessions Judge subordinate to him.

(2) Any Chief Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate may withdraw any case from, or recall any case which he has made over to, any Magistrate subordinate to him, and may inquire into or try such case himself, or refer it for inquiry or trial to any other such Magistrate competent to inquire into or try the same.

(3) The Local Government may authorize the District Magistrate to withdraw from any Magistrate subordinate to him either such classes of cases as he thinks proper, or particular classes of cases.

(4) Any Magistrate may recall any case made over by him under Section 192, sub-section (2) to any other Magistrate and may inquire into or try such case himself.

(5) A Magistrate making an order under this section shall record in writing his reasons for making the same.

(6) The head of a Village under the Madras Village-Police Regulation, 1816, or the Madras Village-Police Regulation 1821, is a Magistrate for the purposes of this section.

Change — Sub-sections (1) and (4) have been newly added, and sub-section (6) has been slightly amended, by sec 147 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

Sub-section (1) :—"In order to facilitate arrangements for the disposal of sessions business, it is proposed to empower Sessions Judges to withdraw or recall cases from the file of Assistant Sessions Judges. This question does not arise in the case of appeals as they are heard by Sessions or Additional Sessions Judges"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921).

1389. Sub-section (2) :—*District Magistrate and Sub-divisional Magistrate :—*Under this section, the District Magistrate and the Sub-divisional Magistrate within his sub-division have co-ordinate jurisdiction. The District Magistrate cannot set aside a transfer made by the Sub-divisional Magistrate, on the ground that the reason which induced the Sub-divisional Magistrate to transfer the case are in his opinion insufficient. If the District Magistrate interferes on such ground, his action would be virtually entertaining an appeal against an order of the Sub-divisional Magistrate passed under this section. If the District Magistrate is of opinion that the order of the S. D. Magistrate is not legal or proper, he can take action under sec. 435 or 439. He can interfere with the transfer made by the Sub-divisional Magistrate only on the ground of expediency, i.e., he can withdraw the case from the Magistrate to whom it was transferred by the S. D. Magistrate, on the ground that it is inexpedient that that Magistrate should try the case; and the District Magistrate may then try the case himself or refer it to some other Magistrate—Raghunatha Pandaram, 26 Mad. 130; Kishori Lal, 30 Cr L.J. 654 (All). Magistrates of co-ordinate jurisdiction should not interfere with each other's jurisdiction. Where a District Magistrate acts on his own initiative in transferring a criminal case, his order is not vitiated by the fact that another Magistrate of co-ordinate authority (e.g. the Sub-divisional Magistrate) has refused to make the transfer. But if the District Magistrate examines the reasons given by the S. D. Magistrate and finds them to be wrong, that amounts to interfering by way of appeal, and the order of transfer passed by him is not sustainable in law—Narayanasamy v Kuppasamy, 5 L.W. 372, 18 Cr.L.J. 57 (58). But in Thaman v. Alagiri, 14 Mad 399 it has been held that a Magistrate subordinate to the Sub-divisional Magistrate is also subordinate to the District Magistrate within the meaning of this section, and the District Magistrate can set aside an order of transfer made by the Sub-divisional Magistrate, if he is of opinion that there were no sufficient grounds for the transfer, and can retransfer the case to the file of the original Magistrate from whom it was transferred by the S. D. Magistrate.

But this section cannot be so read as to imply that after a District Magistrate has transferred some cases from one file to the file of another Magistrate, a sub-divisional Magistrate who is subordinate to the District Magistrate has jurisdiction to nullify that order by ordering a fresh transfer of the cases to his own file—Id. Akbar v. Emp., 47 All. 288, 23 A. L.J. 133, 26 Cr L.J. 538.

Chief Presidency Magistrate :—The Chief Presidency Magistrate has under this section power to withdraw any case from one of the Presidency Magistrates and refer it for inquiry or trial to any other Presidency

Magistrate—In re Nageswar, 1 Bom.L.R. 397. The Chief Presidency Magistrate has power to transfer to his own file a case which had been transferred to the Fourth Presidency Magistrate for disposal by the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate who took cognizance of the offence—Mohim Mohan v. Punam Chand, 51 Cal 820, 28 C.W.N 903, 26 Cr. L.J. 101.

1390. Transfer :—Cases which can be transferred :—This section is applicable to—(1) proceedings under Chapter VIII—Dinendra, 8 Cal. 851; (2) proceedings under Chapter XII—Salish v. Rajendra, 22 Cal 898; 2 C.L.J. 614, Raj Mohan v. Prosunno, 5 C.W.N 696, 2 P.L.T 186, and (3) proceedings under sec 483—Ghulam, 1905 P.R 5.

The term "case" includes a proceeding upon a complaint as soon as the complaint has been received by the Magistrate who takes cognizance of the offence complained of. A case can be transferred even before the Magistrate decides to issue process against the accused—Asaram v. Bhagirath, 11 I.C. 621, 12 Cr.L.J 437, 7 N.L.R 97.

Case when can be transferred :—(1) A case may be transferred as soon as the complaint is filed and the Magistrate takes cognizance of the case and before he issues process. A person who apprehends that a complaint made against him will not be impartially tried by the Magistrate is entitled to have the case transferred even before issue of any process against him—Asaram v. Bhagirath, supra. But when a complaint has been dismissed by a Magistrate under sec 203 and the Sessions Judge has directed further inquiry into the case, the District Magistrate cannot transfer the case from the file of that Magistrate to any other Magistrate—11 C.W.N. 316. (2) A case cannot be transferred at a very late stage of the trial, when the prosecution evidence has been taken and all that remains to be done is to pass an order of commitment or discharge—Pakaria, 2 Weir 691. (3) A District Magistrate ought not to transfer a case pending before a subordinate Magistrate after the whole of the prosecution evidence has been taken and the Magistrate has expressed an opinion that the evidence for the prosecution is not sufficient to support the charge—Nobo, 14 W.R 12, Gobind Swain, 2 Pat 333. (4) A case which has been disposed of by a competent authority cannot be withdrawn by the District Magistrate to his file under this section—17 C.W.N 451. But where several persons were charged before the police with rioting and only one of them was sent up by the police for trial and convicted, whereupon the complainant asked the Magistrate to issue process against the other persons, but the Magistrate refused, and the District Magistrate thereupon withdrew the case to his own file, it was held that the District Magistrate had ample jurisdiction to do so, the refusal of the subordinate Magistrate to issue process against the other accused did not do the case finally, but the case was still pending before the subordinate Magistrate—5 C.W.N 488. (5) Where the records of a case are sent to a Head Assistant Magistrate under sec 349 for trial and punishment, the case can be validly transferred at the discretion of the District Magistrate to a Joint Magistrate—Chandra Sekar—

*To whom cases may be transferred :—*The District Magistrate, after withdrawing a case, can refer it to any subordinate Magistrate. An Additional District Magistrate is now subordinate to the District Magistrate under the express provision of Section 10 (3) and the latter can transfer cases to the former. The contrary ruling in 34 Cal 918 is no longer good law. When a Magistrate is gazetted to the office of the Chairman of the Municipal Board and takes charge of that office, he is thereby divested of his office as Magistrate. He ceases to be subordinate to the District Magistrate and the latter cannot transfer any criminal case to him for trial—36 All 513. Moreover, the case must be transferred to a Magistrate competent to try the case. A District Magistrate cannot transfer a case under sec. 107 to a second class Magistrate—Govind, 37 All. 20, or to a Magistrate who has no local jurisdiction over the matter—Konda Reddy v. K. E., 41 Mad. 246

A District Magistrate, after he has transferred a case from a Sub-divisional Magistrate, can retransfer the case to the same Sub-divisional Magistrate; such retransfer does not amount to revision of his own original order of transfer, as an order of transfer is not a final order—Ramalinga, 51 Mad. 610, 29 Cr.L.J. 734, 55 M.L.J. 217

When personal allegations are made against a Magistrate as grounds of transfer, the District Magistrate must require strict proof of the allegations—In re Mahadhu, Ratanlal 590. To move a case from one Magistrate to another on grounds personal to such Magistrate is tantamount to a severe censure on such officer, and the very clearest grounds must exist before a transfer can be allowed—6 B.H.C.R. 69; and moreover the Magistrate must be given an opportunity of answering the allegations made against him by the applicant—Vedu Bapu v Bhagwandas, 5 Bom L.R. 28.

Where a Magistrate in the course of an investigation held a prolonged inquiry during which he made a number of notes, and collected a large amount of information which by reason of the way in which it was acquired he could not properly or legally consider in arriving at a judicial determination, and the notes made by the Magistrate were of such a nature that he ought to be examined as a witness in respect thereto, it was held that in such a case, the Magistrate ought not to try the case, but that it must be transferred to some other Magistrate—21 Cal. 920, 20 W.R. 76. The fact that a Magistrate before whom a case is pending is also the Treasury Officer and has very little time at his disposal by virtue of his duties as a Treasury Officer is not a sufficient ground for directing a transfer of a case from his Court—Ghulam Mofiuddin, 20 Cr.L.J. 402 (Pat), 51 I.C. 162. Where a Magistrate tried and convicted an accused in a case and expressed an opinion that the evidence of the accused was not believable, it was held that the expressed opinion in itself was no ground for a transfer of another case against the same accused by a different complainant under a different set of facts—Hayat Khan, 4 P.L.W. 21, 19 Cr.L.J. 121. The fact that the trial of a case before a Magistrate extended for a long time (e.g., 3 months) is not a vital ground for withdrawing the case from the file of the Magistrate—Jewraj v. Dullabji, 19 Cr.L.J. 119 (Pat.), 43 I.C. 407

1392. Recording reasons.—See sub-section (5). The reasons for transfer of a case from one Magistrate to another must be recorded—Ratanlal 590, 5 Lah L.J. 230; Venkatachalam v. Chairman, 16 Cr.L.J. 626 (Mad.), 30 I.C. 450, and an omission to record reasons renders the order of transfer liable to be set aside—In re Venkata Reddi, 1924 M.W.N. 673, 26 Cr.L.J. 221. But the Calcutta and Patna High Courts are of opinion that a failure to record the reasons will not vitiate the proceedings unless it has prejudiced the accused—34 Cal. 918, Mahomed Sharif v. Hari Prasad, 5 Pat. 229, 27 Cr.L.J. 1214. Where by virtue of a Government order the District Magistrate had been directed to withdraw all cases in which complaints had been made against a police officer, the omission to record reasons therefor was a mere irregularity and did not vitiate the subsequent proceedings—Dukhi Kewal, 28 All. 421

1393. Notice.—Although the section does not provide for the giving of a notice to the opposite party, still on general principles notice should be given to the party affected, so as to give him an opportunity of showing cause against an order of transfer—Ajodhya v. Paryag, 7 C.W.N. 114; Kamatchi Ammal, 30 L.W. 401, 30 Cr.L.J. 1043; Sardara v. Emp., 5 Lah L.J. 230, Daud Hussan, Ratanlal 460, In re Ratanji, Ratanlal 474, Mulubhai, Ratanlal 655, Krishna Anant, Ratanlal 877, Umrao v. Fakir, 3 All. 749, Teacotta v. Ameer Majee, 8 Cal. 393, In re Nageshwar, 1 Bom. L.R. 347, Vedu v. Bhagwandas, 5 Bom. L.R. 28, Imp. v. Sadashiv, 22 Bom. 549, Baksha v. Tahir, 1902 P.R. 28; 14 C.P.L.R. 190; U.B.R. (1897—1901) 392, Ramalinga, 51 Mad. 610, 29 Cr.L.J. 734. Where a transfer is made at a late stage of the trial, e.g., when all the prosecution witnesses have been examined, the Magistrate does not exercise a sound discretion in not giving notice to the accused—6 M.L.T. 14, 1887 A.W.N. 53, Mahadhu, Ratanlal 590. Where at the instance of the complainant a Sub-divisional Magistrate after hearing the parties has transferred a case from the file of one Sub-Magistrate to that of another, it is incumbent upon the District Magistrate when re-transferring the case at the instance of the accused, to give notice to the complainant—In re Manikkam, 39 M.L.J. 714, 60 I.C. 55, 22 Cr.L.J. 199

But in several other cases it has been held that the issue of a notice is not mandatory, and the want of notice does not amount to illegality but to mere impropriety. The question of propriety is one to be decided on the facts of each case—In re Hawaji, 21 Bom. L.R. 276, 50 I.C. 496, 20 Cr.L.J. 320, In re Virji, 6 Bom. L.R. 856. The question is general in its terms, and although as a rule of practice it is desirable that a notice should be issued, still it cannot be said that the omission to issue is in itself a reason for setting aside the order of transfer—Gobinda v King Emp, 2 Pat. 333, A.I.R. 1923 Pat 228; Bagh Ali v. Md. Din, 6 Lah. 541, 27 Cr.L.J. 411. If the opposite party acquiesces in the transfer, he cannot complain on the ground of absence of notice—Asaram v. Bhagirath, 7 N.L.R. 97, 11 I.C. 621, 12 Cr.L.J. 437. When the District Magistrate transferred a case suo motu on administrative grounds, no notice was held to be necessary—1910 P.R. 3. When the order of transfer was made at the request of the trying Magistrate, no notice need be given to either party—Kuppumuthu, 24 Mad 317. Where there was great delay in disposing of a petty case, an order of transfer could be made without notice to the accused to shew cause against the order—2 Weir 692. When by virtue of a Government order the District Magistrate was directed to withdraw all cases in which complaints had been made against a police officer, no notice to the complainant was necessary before making a transfer—In re Dukhi, 28 All. 421.

1394. Power of District Magistrate after transfer :—The District Magistrate after he has transferred the case to a subordinate Magistrate has no jurisdiction relating to the case, so long as the transfer subsists. But he can again withdraw the case to his own file if he thinks fit—Mrs. Behliah, 12 W.R. 53. When a District Magistrate makes an order of transfer, the case is out of his hands, and the District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to make any order in the case when it is properly seized of by a subordinate Magistrate—Ajab Lal, 32 Cal. 783. He cannot dismiss the complaint, much less prosecute the complainant—Sh. Kutab Ali, 3 C.W.N. 490; nor can he issue process for the apprehension of the absconding accused—27 Cal 979. He can make no order in the case except such order as may be made by him by way of revision—Radhabullabh v Benode, 30 Cal 449.

Powers and duties of Magistrate to whom case is transferred.—When a case has been transferred after process has been issued to the accused, the Magistrate to whom the case has been transferred should proceed from the stage in which the proceedings were left. He cannot go back and dismiss the complainant under sec. 203—19 W.R. 28.

The Magistrate to whom a case is transferred can act upon the evidence already recorded by the Magistrate from whom the case is withdrawn. See notes under sub-section (3) of sec. 350.

The Magistrate to whom a case is transferred cannot further transfer the case to some other Magistrate subordinate to him—Bashir Hussain v. Ali Hussain, 36 All. 166; Darra v. Mukat, 12 A.L.J. 277, 15 Cr.L.J. 357.

1394A. Sub-sec. (6) :—This sub-section supersedes 15 Mad. 94 (decided under the 1882 Code) in which it was held that the village Headman not being a Magistrate, no case from his file could be transferred to the file of another Magistrate.

Prior to its present amendment, this sub-section applied only to village Headmen appointed under Madras Regulation IV of 1821; and therefore a District Magistrate was not competent to transfer a case from a village Headman appointed under any other Regulation (e.g., Reg. I of 1816)—26 Mad. 394. This case is now overruled as the present sub-section expressly mentions the Regulation of 1816

1395. Revision :—The High Court will not interfere in revision with an order of the District Magistrate dismissing an application under sec. 528 for the transfer of a case. The High Court's powers of revision are in express terms limited to those conferred by certain sections mentioned in section 439; section 526 is not one of those. The Letters Patent does not confer any power of transfer over and above that conferred by section 526. The remedy of the applicant is to make an independent petition for transfer under section 526 supported by affidavit or affirmation—Ashu v. Maung Po Kha. 1 Rang 632

CHAPTER XLIVA.

SUPPLEMENTARY PROVISIONS RELATING TO EUROPEAN AND INDIAN BRITISH SUBJECTS AND OTHERS.

This Chapter has been added by section 33 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923

528A. (1) Where, in any case to which the provisions of Chapter XXXIII do not apply, any person claims to be dealt with as an European or Indian British subject, or where any person claims to be dealt with as an European (other than an European British subject) or an American, he shall state the grounds of such claim to the Magistrate before whom he is brought for the purpose of the inquiry or trial; and such Magistrate shall inquire into the truth of such statement and allow the person making it a reasonable time within which to prove that it is true, and shall then decide whether he is or is not an European British Subject or an Indian British subject, or an European or an American, as the case may be, and shall deal with him accordingly.

(2) When any such claim is rejected by the Magistrate and the person by whom it was made is committed by the Magistrate for trial before the Court of Session, and such person repeats the claim before such Court, such Court shall, after such further inquiry, if any, as it thinks fit, decide the claim, and shall deal with such person accordingly.

(3) When any Court before which any person is tried rejects any such claim as aforesaid, the decision shall form a ground of appeal from the sentence or order passed in such trial.

This is the old section 453 with certain alterations.

1396. Analysis of section :—(a) An Indian British subject claiming to be dealt with as such must put in his claim before the Magistrate before whom he is brought for the purpose of inquiry or trial, according to the provisions of sub-section (1). This sub-section applies to Presidency Magistrates as well as Magistrates in the mufassal. (b) If the Magistrate rejects the claim and tries him, the decision shall form a ground of appeal from the sentence or order passed in such appeal. See sub-section (3). This sub-section applies to Presidency Magistrates as well as to Magistrates in the mufassal. (c) If the Magistrate rejects the claim and commits the accused to the Court of Session, he may repeat the claim before the latter Court. See sub-section (2). It should be noted that under sub-section (2) such repetition may only be made before a Court of Session (in the mufassal) and not before the High Court Sessions. (d) If the Court of Session rejects the claim and tries the accused, the decision shall form a ground of appeal from the sentence or order passed in such trial. (e) If a claim is made before a Presidency Magistrate and rejected by him, and the accused is committed to the High Court, there is no provision for repetition of the claim before the High Court, and the accused will not be entitled to put in, under sec 275 of the Code, before the High Court a further claim for being tried by a jury the majority of whom should be Indians. But the decision of the Presidency Magistrate rejecting the claim is not final, and is subject to revision by the High Court—Emp. v. Harendra Chandra, 51 Cal. 907 (1889, 900), 29 C.W.N. 384, 26 Cr.L.J. 385.

1397. Claim as to status :—Evidence :—The plea that the accused is an European British subject must be substantiated by ample evidence. Where the prisoner pleaded that he was an European British subject, but the evidence as to his nationality was incomplete, it was held that the plea was not made out—Turnbull, 2 Weir 11, 6 M.H.C.R. 7. So also, a mere statement by the prisoner that he is an European British Subject cannot be acted upon—Clarke v. Beane, 5 W.R. 53. The Judge may be satisfied by the appearance of the prisoner and the circumstances brought forward at the time that the plea is true, but if he is not so satis-

Red, and the plea is persisted in, it must be substantiated by sufficient evidence—Turnbull, 6 M.H.C.R. 7. A statement in an affidavit by the accused's wife that she heard from their grandparents while they were all living together that the accused's grandfather was born in England of English parents, though not controverted by the Crown by a counter-affidavit, is hearsay evidence, and is not sufficient to establish the status of the accused as an European British Subject—Thomas v. Emp., 53 Cal. 746, 27 Cr.L.J. 1304 (1306)

Opportunity to plead must be given.—The Magistrate trying the prisoner ought to give him an opportunity of pleading that he is an European British subject—Clarke v. Beane, 5 W.R. 53

Time for making claim.—A claim on the ground of status may be put forward before a committing Magistrate at any time up till the time when the commitment is made—Emp v Harendra, 51 Cal 980 (991).

528B. If in any such case an European or Indian

British subject or an European (other than an European British subject) or an American does not claim to be dealt with as such by the Magistrate before whom he is tried or by whom he is committed, or if, when such claim has been made before and rejected by the committing Magistrate, it is not repeated before the Court to which such person is committed, he shall be held to have relinquished his right to be dealt with as an European British subject or an Indian British subject, or an European or an American, as the case may be, and shall not assert it in any subsequent stage of the case.

This is the old section 454 with certain alterations

1398. Waiver.—An European British subject can relinquish his rights. The provisions of this Code give certain rights and privileges to the European British Subjects, which rights they are at liberty to give up—6 Cal. 83. Failure to make a claim amounts to a relinquishment of rights—Alexander Ruffe, 1912 P.R. 6, 13 Cr.L.J. 197 Where the Magistrate explained to the accused his rights under this Code and then asked him if he claimed to be dealt with as such, and the accused stated that he did not claim the rights, it was held that he had relinquished the rights—Barindra Kumar Ghosh, 37 Cal. 467 If no claim is put forward before the committing Presidency Magistrate, the accused will not be allowed to assert before the High Court any claim to be tried by a jury the majority of whom should belong to his own nationality—Emp. v Harendra, 51 Cal 980 (991), 29 C.W.N. 384 But the omission of the accused to avail himself of his right to claim the benefit of section 454 does not conclude the matter and he is not debarred from trying the conditions mentioned in clause (a) or (b) of sec 443 exist—Martindale v. Emp., 52 Cal. 347, 29 C.W.N. 447, 26 Cr.L.J. 401.

The expression "any subsequent stage of the case" includes the stages of appeal and revision—Jeremiah v. Johnson, 45 M.L.J. 800, 25 Cr.L.J. 231.

Magistrate whether bound to inform accused of his rights.—The Calcutta High Court holds that before an European British subject can be considered to have waived the privileges conferred upon him by this Code it must appear that his rights were distinctly made known to him to enable him to exercise his choice and judgment whether he would or would not claim those rights—Quiros, 6 Cal. 83. Where this was not done, the conviction was set aside—Baladev v. Charke, 18 C.W.N. 385, and the records were returned to the Magistrate with a direction that he should explain to the accused all the privileges he was entitled to as an European British subject and definitely ascertain from him whether he waived his claims—Nuty, 7 N.L.R. 93, 11 I.C. 620, 12 Cr.L.J. 436. But the Punjab Chief Court holds that it is not the duty of the Magistrate to ask categorically whether the accused claims his right as an European British subject, much less his duty to explain his right to him as such subject. The Legislature appears to presume that a person entitled to a privilege knows of its existence, and that if he desires to assert it he will assert it—Tobin, 1885 P.R. 5.

Revocation of waiver.—The waiver is not irrevocable. If the withdrawal of the waiver is made promptly and shortly after the waiver had been made, and if substantially nothing had been done in the interval on the waiver, the withdrawal should be allowed—Sterling, 1908 P.R. 1, 7 Cr.L.J. 274; Keough, 1878 P.R. 17.

528C. Where a person, not being an European Trial of person as belonging to class to which he does not belong.

British subject, is dealt with as an European British subject or not being an Indian British subject is dealt with as an Indian British subject or, not being an European (other than an European British subject) or American, is dealt with as an European or American, and such person does not object, the inquiry, commitment, trial or sentence, as the case may be, shall not, by reason of such dealing, be invalid.

This is the old section 453 with certain alterations

528D. (1) Unless there is something repugnant in Application of Acts conferring jurisdiction on Magistrates or Courts of Session the context, all enactments made by the Governor-General in Council or the Indian Legislature which confer on Magistrates or on the Court of Session jurisdiction over offences shall be deemed to apply to European British subjects, although such persons are not expressly referred to therein.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise any Court to exceed the limits prescribed by this Code as to the amount of punishment which it may inflict on an European British subject or to confer jurisdiction on any Magistrate of the second or third class for the trial of such subjects.

This is the old section 459 with certain alterations

CHAPTER XLV.

OF IRREGULAR PROCEEDINGS.

Irregularities which do not vitiate proceedings.

529. If any Magistrate not empowered by law to do any of the following things, namely:—

- (a) to issue a search-warrant under section 98;
- (b) to order, under section 155, the police to investigate an offence;
- (c) to hold an inquest under section 176;
- (d) to issue process, under section 186, for the apprehension of a person within the local limits of his jurisdiction who has committed an offence outside such limits;
- (e) to take cognizance of an offence under section 190, sub-section (1) clause (a) or clause (b);
- (f) to transfer a case under section 192;
- (g) to tender a pardon under section 337 or section 338;
- (h) to sell property under section 524 or section 525; or
- (i) to withdraw a case and try it himself under section 528;

erroneously in good faith does that thing, his proceedings shall not be set aside merely on the ground of his not being so empowered.

1399. Scope of Section :—Clause (f) :—'A case' includes cases under Chapter VIII or XII. See notes under Sec. 192. The irregularity of transfer under Sec. 192 by a Magistrate not empowered is cured by this section—Dasarath, 36 Cal. 869; Kishori v. Srinath, 36 Cal. 370

*Clause (g) :—*See 20 Ail. 40 cited under Sec. 337.

*Prejudice to accused :—*Having regard to the provisions of this section read with Sec. 531, it must be shown that the proceedings wrongly held in a case have in fact occasioned a failure of justice before they can be set aside—39 Cal. 119.

530. If any Magistrate, not being empowered by law in this behalf, does any of the following things, namely :—

- (a) attaches and sells property under section 88;
- (b) issues a search-warrant for a letter, parcel or other thing in the Post Office, or a telegram in the Telegraph Department;
- (c) demands security to keep the peace;
- (d) demands security for good behaviour;
- (e) discharges a person lawfully bound to be of good behaviour;
- (f) cancels a bond to keep the peace;
- (g) makes an order under section 133 as to a local nuisance;
- (h) prohibits, under section 143, the repetition or continuance of a public nuisance;
- (i) issues an order under section 144;
- (j) makes an order under Chapter XII;
- (k) takes cognizance, under section 190, sub-section (1) clause (c), of an offence;
- (l) passes a sentence under section 349, on proceedings recorded by another Magistrate;
- (m) calls, under section 435, for proceedings;
- (n) makes an order for maintenance;

(o) revises, under section 515, an order passed under section 514;

(p) tries an offender;

(q) tries an offender summarily; or

(r) decides an appeal;

his proceedings shall be void.

1400. Clause (j).—This clause refers only to a case where a Magistrate is not competent, by virtue of the position he holds or the powers vested in him, to try a case of the character mentioned in sec. 145. But where a Magistrate is competent to try a case under sec. 145, the fact that he has no local jurisdiction over the matter will not make the trial void—5 C.W.N 686

Clause (n).—If an order under sec 489 is passed by a Magistrate who is duly empowered to try maintenance-cases, the order is not vitiated by the fact that the proceedings were taken in a wrong Court. To such a case sec 530 (n) does not apply, but sec 531—Sitram v Sukia, 49 C.L.J 205, 30 Cr.L.J 525.

Clause (p).—If a Third Class Magistrate, not being specially empowered by the Local Government, tries an offender under sec 2 of the Bombay Public Conveyances Act (IV of 1863), the trial is void—Q E v. Rama, Ratanlal 921 If a Second Class Magistrate tries an accused, who has actually committed an offence under sec 409 I P C., as though for an offence under sec 406 I. P. C., the trial and conviction are void—Sitaram, 1 Bom.L.R. 27 But where the offence consists of circumstances of aggravation which make it triable by a higher Court, and a 2nd Class Magistrate tries it, ignoring those aggravating circumstances, the proceedings are not void ab initio under this section—Q E v Gundy, 13 Bom 502, A distinction should be drawn between proceedings which are improper and proceedings which are void If a Magistrate tries an offender for an offence which is beyond his jurisdiction, his proceedings shall be void But where the facts disclose an offence within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, it is a complete fallacy to say that he is not empowered to try the person charged for the offence which is within his jurisdiction merely because the same facts disclose a more serious offence which is beyond his jurisdiction No doubt it would be improper for a Magistrate to intentionally ignore the circumstances of aggravation which show that an offence beyond his jurisdiction has been committed, and to try the accused for a lesser offence within his jurisdiction, but his proceedings would not be void on that ground K E v Ayyan, 24 Mad 675; Kuttuva Rowther v Suppan, 25 L.W 86. 28 Cr L.J 164 (165) See also 4 Bom L.R. 267, and Dawson v K E, 2 Rang. 455, 26 Cr L.J. 1108

Where a trial is void under this section, sec 403 does not bar a retrial—Hussain Gaibu, 8 Bom 307, 1910 P.R 7, 29 Cal 412

*Clause (g) :—*Where a Magistrate deliberately disregards the offence actually complained of, viz., an offence not triable summarily, and tries it summarily, his proceedings are absolutely void—Kailash v Joynuddi 5 C.W.N. 252; 29 Cal. 409; 1907 P.L.R. 21; 4 Cal. 18; Emp. v. Rari Narain, 46 All. 446

*Clause (r) :—*The word 'Magistrate' in this section includes a Sessions Judge; therefore if a Sessions Judge hears an appeal which ought to have been presented to the High Court, the proceedings before the Sessions Judge are absolutely void—In re Abdulla, 2 Rang 386 (387), 26 Cr.L.J. 293, A.L.R. 1925 Rang. 39.

531. No finding, sentence or order of any Criminal Court shall be set aside merely on the ground that the inquiry, trial or other proceeding in the course of which it was arrived at or passed, took place in a wrong sessions division, district, sub-division or other local area, unless it appears that such error has in fact occasioned a failure of justice.

1401. Object and scope of section .—The policy of this Code as shown by secs. 531-538 is to uphold in most cases orders passed by a Criminal Court which was lacking in local jurisdiction or which has committed illegalities or irregularities, unless failure of justice has been occasioned or is likely to be occasioned through such want of jurisdiction or such illegalities or irregularities—Ganapathi, 42 Mad. 791.

This section only refers to districts, subdivisions and local areas governed by this Code, and not to tributary Mahals like Keonjhar or Mourbhanj to which the Code does not extend—16 Cal 667; 8 Cal. 985

The 'order' under this section includes an order of committal—Bhagwanthia v K E., 3 Pat 417 (421), 26 Cr.L.J. 49

*Offence in one place, trial or commitment in another :—*See Note 549 under section 177. See also 17 Mad. 402, cited under sec 332.

*Commitment to wrong Sessions :—*See Note 549 under sec 177

*Trial at a place outside jurisdiction :—*Where a criminal appeal was heard and disposed of at a place which was outside the local limits of his criminal jurisdiction, but where he had civil jurisdiction, it was held that the procedure was an irregularity, but no failure of justice being occasioned thereby, the trial was not a nullity—Q. E. v. Fazl Azim, 17 All 36

*Jurisdiction of Court to order forfeiture :—*This section applies only to proceedings in a wrong place and cures defects as to local jurisdiction. But it cannot cure a defect where a bond of appearance taken from the accused by one Magistrate is forfeited by another Magistrate, for it is a defect not of local jurisdiction but of personal jurisdiction—Mir Husein, 16 Bom.L.R. 84, 15 Cr.L.J. 295 (cited under sec 514)

Failure of justice:—Where no objection was taken in the Lower Court, and the petitioner failed to show in the High Court that he had been prejudiced, the High Court declined to interfere—21 W.R. 88. Even the fact that the objection to jurisdiction was taken at a comparatively early stage of the proceedings was not a conclusive proof that the accused was prejudiced by the irregularity—Kali Charan, 34 C.L.J. 200, 22 Cr.L.J. 666, 63 I.C. 458.

532. (1) If any Magistrate or other authority purporting to exercise powers duly conferred, which were not so conferred, commits an accused person for trial before a Court of Session or High Court, the Court to which the commitment is made may, after perusal of the proceedings, accept the commitment if it considers that the accused has not been injured thereby, unless during the inquiry and before the order of commitment, objection was made on behalf either of the accused or of the prosecution to the jurisdiction of such Magistrate or other authority.

(2) If such Court considers that the accused was injured, or if such objection was so made, it shall quash the commitment and direct a fresh inquiry by a competent Magistrate.

1402. Scope of Section:—Sec. 531 must be read as complete in itself and not as in any way cut down or limited by the proviso contained in the latter part of sec. 532. Sec. 531 applies only to cases in which there is no jurisdiction by reason of the inquiry, trial or other proceeding being held in a wrong local area. Sec. 532 seems to refer to cases in which the Magistrate is competent to deal with the offence as having taken place within the local limits of his jurisdiction, but has no power to commit to the Sessions either because he is a Second-Class Magistrate or for some reasons other than that of want of local jurisdiction—James Ingle, 16 Bom. 200.

This section applies only to cases where the Magistrate or other authority who has assumed to commit has not been duly invested with the powers under which he has assumed to make the commitment, i.e., when the defect is one personal to the committing authority and there is no defect in his proceeding—Shamal Khan, 1890 P.R. 16. This section does not deal with cases in which the defect in the committal order arises from want of territorial jurisdiction—James Ingle, 16 Bom. 200; Rathiram, 20 Cr.L.J. 416 (Mad), 51 I.C. 176. It does not apply where the commitment is bad owing to a disqualification of the Magistrate under sec. 556—2 L.B.R. 209. It has no application to commitments made by Magistrates acting under sec. 346—12 C.W.N. 136. But this section applies where the commitment is irregular by reason of want of sanction under sec. 196 or 197—Q E v B G. Tulak, 22 Bom. 112; Q. E v. Morton, 9 Bom. 268. It also applies where the commitment of the approver (who has broken the conditions of pardon) is irregular by reason of want of the certificate of Public Prosecutor required under sec. 339—Nga Wa v. Emp., 3 Rang. 55, 4 Bur.L.J. 23.

Objection to commitment:—If a Magistrate, being empowered to commit to the Sessions but having no territorial jurisdiction over the place of offence, commits a case to the Sessions, the commitment is valid under sec. 531, and it cannot be set aside under section 532, although the objection to such commitment was taken before the commitment—Q E v. Reddy, 17 Mad. 402.

Where objection to the want of jurisdiction of the Magistrate to commit is not taken before the Magistrate, the High Court can accept the commitment under this section, if it considers that the accused has not been prejudiced thereby—Bal Gangadhar Tulak, 22 Bom. 112.

533. (1) If any Court, before which a confession

Non-compliance with provisions of S. 164 or 364. or other statement of an accused person recorded or purporting to be recorded under Section 164 or Section 364 is tendered or has been received in evidence, finds that any of the provisions of either of such sections have not been complied with by the Magistrate recording the statement, it shall take evidence that such person duly made the statement recorded; and, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, S. 91, such statement shall be admitted if the error has not injured the accused as to his defence on the merits.

(2) The provisions of this section apply to Courts of Appeal, Reference and Revision.

1403. Scope of Section:—What this section means is this, that where a confession or other statement of an accused person is duly made, but in recording it the provisions of the law have not been complied with, oral evidence is admissible to prove that the confession or the statement was duly made. The defect which this section intends to cure is one not of substance, but of form only, as for instance when the Magistrate has omitted to sign the certificate, or has omitted to state in the certificate that the statement was taken in his hearing—2 C.W.N. 702; 1915 P.R. 17; or where the Magistrate has omitted to record that the required warning was given to the accused under sec. 164—Part-4 Singh v. Emp., 6 Lah. 415, 7 Lah.L.J. 482; Ramei v. Emp., 3 Pat. 872; Khemtan v. Emp., 6 Lah. 58, 26 Cr.L.J. 1074; Bawa Singh v. Emp., 7 Lah.L.J. 230, 26 Cr.L.J. 1458; or where the Magistrate has recorded that the confession was voluntarily made but omitted to record the questions and answers which would show that the confession was voluntary—Rama Kariyappa, 31 Bom.L.R. 565, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 327 (328). But this section will not render a confession admissible when the provisions of the law have been totally disregarded, as for instance where a statement has been neither signed by the accused nor certified by the Magistrate—9 Mad. 224, 17 Cal 862, or where no warning was given at all under sec. 164—Partap v Emp, 6 Lah 415, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 605. This section has no application where no record whatsoever has been made of a confession—Gulabu, 35 All 260. But the Bombay High Court lays down that neither the language nor the object of sec. 533 would justify a distinction between an omission to comply with the law and an infraction or direct violation of the law. The test is that as long as the irregularity does not injure the accused as to his defence on the merits, it can be cured under sec. 533—Vistram Babaji, 21 Bom. 495 (501), Q. E. v. Raghu, 23 Bom 221, Rama Kariyappa, supra. In these cases it has been held that this section applies to omissions to comply with the law as well as to infractions of the law, i.e., to defects not only of form but of substance also.

Irregularity in record of confession —See Notes 1037, 1038, and 1042 under sec. 364

Omission to sign the record —See Note 1040 under sec. 364

Want of memorandum or certificate —See Note 519 under sec. 164 and Note 1041 under sec. 364.

Irregularity in recording confession.—See note 516 under sec. 164.

534. An omission to inform under S. 447 any person of his rights under Chapter XXXIII shall not affect the validity of any proceeding.

Omission to give information under section 447.

This section has been amended by section 34 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923

535. (1) No finding or sentence pronounced or passed shall be deemed invalid merely on the ground that no charge was framed, unless, in the opinion of the Court of appeal or revision, a failure of justice has in fact been occasioned thereby.

Effect of omission to prepare charge.

(2) If the Court of appeal or revision thinks that a failure of justice has been occasioned by an omission to frame a charge, it shall order that a charge be framed, and that the trial be recommenced from the point immediately after the framing of the charge.

1404. Omission to frame charge :—An omission to frame a charge does not invalidate an order of acquittal and render it equivalent to an order of discharge; such order is a bar to a retrial for the same offence—3 All. 129. Mere omission to frame a charge will not justify a reversal of the order of the lower Court, unless a failure of justice has been occasioned, especially where at the close of the prosecution evidence-in-chief, the Magistrate laid down the charge—Madhab v. Emp., 53 Cal. 738, 27 Cr.L.J. 1295.

Where a charge was framed under sec. 147, I. P. C., but the accused was convicted of an offence under sec. 323, I. P. C., it was held that the conviction was illegal on account of the absence of a charge under sec. 323 I. P. C., and sec. 535 of this Code did not cure the defect. The words "merely on the ground that no charge was framed" in this section must mean a case where the offence being a petty one, and the evidence being fairly taken, the Court framed no charge at all. But where a charge has been framed (in this case a charge under sec. 147 I. P. C., was framed), this section does not apply and it cannot be said that the conviction 'shall not be deemed invalid merely on the ground that no charge was framed;' and the persons charged under sec. 147 I. P. C., for rioting with the common object of causing hurt to the complainant cannot be convicted under sec. 323 I. P. C., of causing hurt to another person—40 Cal. 168. But in a recent case the same High Court has laid down that this section is not confined to cases where no charge at all has been framed, but also applies to cases in which no charge was framed of the particular offence of which the accused has been convicted (though a charge of another offence was framed)—Abdul Rahim v. K. E., 41 C.L.J. 474, 26 Cr.L.J. 1279.

Where a Magistrate framed a charge under section 19 (e) and (f) of the Arms Act, and then submitted the record to the District Magistrate for his sanction and the District Magistrate sanctioned the institution of proceedings, whereupon the trial proceeded and the accused was convicted, it was held that the omission to frame a charge afresh after sanction was cured by this section—Kaka v. K. E., 4 L.B.R. 247, 8 Cr.L.J. 85.

536. (1) If an offence triable with the aid of assessors is tried by a jury, the trial shall not on that ground only be invalid.

(2) If an offence triable by a jury is tried with the aid of assessors, the trial shall not on that ground only be invalid, unless the objection is taken before the Court records its finding.

1405. Sub-section (1):—The difference between a trial by jury and a trial with the aid of assessors lies in the summing up of the case, and the manner in which the verdict of the jury and the opinions of the assessors are taken. It is at this latter point that there is a departure of ways, and if the accused does not put any objection at the crucial point, he cannot afterwards be heard to complain. Where no objection was taken at the trial, it was too late to take objection on appeal—33 Bom 423.

Sub-section (2):—Where a case was triable by jury but was tried with the aid of assessors and no objection was taken at the trial, it was held that the trial was not invalid, even though the accused was materially injured, by reason of the fact that the Judge differed from the opinions of the assessors and convicted the accused—Ganapathi, 23 Mad 632. The objection must be taken at the trial and cannot be taken in appeal—Ibid.

537. Subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, no finding, sentence or order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction shall be reversed or altered under Chapter XXVII or on appeal or revision on account—

Finding or sentence when reversible by reason of error or omission in charge or proceedings.

(a) of any error, omission or irregularity in the complaint, summons, warrant, charge, proclamation, order, judgment or other proceedings before or during trial or in any inquiry or other proceedings under this Code, or

(b) (Omitted).

(c) of the omission to revise any list of jurors or assessors in accordance with Section 324, or

(d) of any misdirection in any charge to a jury, unless such error, omission, irregularity or misdirection has in fact occasioned a failure of justice.

Explanation.—In determining whether any error, omission or irregularity in any proceedings under this Code has occasioned a failure of justice, the Court shall have regard to the fact whether the objection could and should have been raised at an earlier stage in the proceedings.

Change:—Clause (b) and the illustration have been omitted by sec 148 of the Cr P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. Clause (b) ran as follows:—“(b) of the want of, or any irregularity in, any sanction required by sec. 195 or any irregularity in proceedings taken under sec. 476.” By reason of the omission of this clause, any irregularity in a proceeding under sec. 476 can no more be condoned under sec. 537. Thus, if the Court takes action under sec. 476 in respect of an offence referred to in clause (a) of sec. 195, the proceeding is without jurisdiction, and sec. 537 cannot cure the irregularity—Dore Sah, 2 Luck. 646. 28 Cr.L.J. 681 (682).

The Illustration ran as follows.—“A Magistrate being required by law to sign a document signs it in initials only. This is purely an irregularity and does not affect the validity of the proceeding.” This illustration was given to show the class of irregularity contemplated by this section, as distinguished from substantial departures from law—Allu v Crown, 4 Lah 376 (380). But as this Code nowhere lays down that the Magistrate must sign his name in full and not in initials, the illustration was thought to be “inappropriate” and has been omitted by the Select Committee of 1916.

1406. Scope of Section :—This section applies to mere errors of procedure arising out of mere inadvertence and not to substantive errors of law—Appa Subhana, 8 Bom 200; 11 B H C R. 237; 12 W.R. (P.C.) 32. It does not apply to cases of disregard or disobedience of the whole of some mandatory provisions of the Code, but applies only to cases of failure to comply with some part of such provisions in the course of a general compliance with the whole—Gangadhar v Bhangí, 25 Cr.L.J. 1152 (Nag.). When a trial is contrary to law, it is no trial at all, and a disobedience to an express provision of law as to the mode of the trial is not an irregularity which can be cured by this section, but is an illegality which vitiates the whole trial. This section has not the effect of curing material irregularities and absolute illegalities. The errors which can be cured by this section are formal defects of procedure and not substantive errors of law—Subramanya Ayyar v. Emp., 25 Mad. 61 (P.C.); Harnarain v Kariman, 5 P.L.J. 61, 21 Cr.L.J. 621. This section does not apply to an infringement of statutory requirements. It only applies to errors, omissions and irregularities of a technical nature which may occur by accident or oversight in the course of proceedings conducted in the mode prescribed by statute. If in conducting a trial the Judge adopts a procedure which is a departure from the authorised procedure, it would amount to a violation of the law, which cannot be cured by section 537—Allu v. Crown, 4 Lah 376; Lyme v. Crown, 4 Lah. 382 (386). Thus, where two cross-cases were at first tried by the Judge separately but were afterwards tried jointly, the evidence for the prosecution in one case was treated at the request of the accused as the defence evidence in the cross-case, only one set of findings was recorded in respect of both cases, and finally one composite judgment was delivered, held that the procedure adopted by the Judge was a serious departure from the usual and proper course, and was not only irregular but grossly illegal. Section 537 could not apply to the case—Allu v Crown, 4 Lah. 376. The test to be applied in considering whether a particular infringement of the provisions of the Code does or does not fall within the purview of section 537 appears to be this. Does the error go to the whole root of the trial? Does it in effect vitiate the proceedings? Has the Court assumed an authority which it does not possess? Has it broken the vital rules of procedure? If the error is of such a nature, then the proceedings are vitiated in their very inception and section 537 has no application, but the mere fact that a certain provision of the Code is imperative does not in itself indicate that a breach of the provision vitiates the whole proceedings—Emp v. Bechu Chaube, 45 All. 124 (127), 20 A.L.J. 874, 24 Cr L.J. 67. A distinction should be made between a positive enactment by the Code that a certain trial shall not take place and a positive enactment that in the course of such a trial certain detailed procedure should be followed. Both are imperative provisions. But still the one is a different thing from the other. In the former case an infringement of the enactment amounts to an assumption of jurisdiction and vitiates the trial from the very beginning. In the latter case, an infringement merely amounts to an error, omission or irregularity in the procedure adopted in the course of the trial. This section aims at curing infringements of the latter type—Nga Hla U v K E., 3 Rang 139, 26 Cr L.J. 1336, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 258.

'Subject to provisions hereinbefore contained'—These words do not refer to the provisions of the entire Code preceding this section but only to the provisions of this chapter (i.e., secs 529 to 536)—Ram Subheg, 19 C W N 972, 16 Cr L.J. 641 (per Sharfuddin and Beachcroft JJ.); Contra—22 Cal 176, 23 Cal 983, Ram Subheg, 19 C W N. 972 (per Fletcher J.).

'Court of competent jurisdiction'.—This means a Court of competent jurisdiction in respect of the particular offence charged—Krishnabhat, 10 Bom 319. If a Magistrate in consequence of a personal disqualification (e.g., under section 556) is forbidden by law to try a particular case, though he may be authorised generally to try cases of the same class, he cannot be said to be a Court of competent jurisdiction with respect to that particular case—Sudhama, 23 Cal 328. Thus, a Magistrate who takes cognizance of a case under sec. 190 (1) (c) is not competent to try the case, if the accused objects to it, and if in spite of such objection he proceeds to try the same himself, he cannot be said to be a Court of competent jurisdiction in respect of that case—13 All. 345. If a District Magistrate transfers to a subordinate Magistrate a case which the latter is not competent to try, a trial by the latter of that case is a defect which cannot be cured by this section, as the trial is not held by a Court of competent jurisdiction—Raghu v. Abdul, 23 Cal. 442.

1407. Failure of justice.—The test in case of errors, omissions or irregularities and other matters of like nature referred to in this section is not whether the Court had acted illegally, (for in one sense every error or irregularity in so far as it contravenes the provisions of the Code is illegal) but whether there had been a failure of justice—Abdur Rahman, 27 Cal 839. Moreover, the test (viz., whether the error or irregularity has occasioned a failure of justice) is one which can be properly applied only after the final result of the case is known. Where an objection is taken on the ground of there being a material error, before a case is finally disposed of, and while there is time to correct the same, it would be unreasonable to hold that this section intends error to be allowed to remain uncorrected. To hold that would be to give this section the effect not only of curing mere formal defects of procedure when discovered too late, but of practically subverting all procedure—Nilratan v Jogesh, 23 Cal. 983. If, however, the inquiry has proceeded far enough to enable the test required by this section to be applied, this section may be called in to cure the error or irregularity—12 Cr.L.J. 320 (Sind).

'In fact':—The words 'in fact' have been introduced into the Code of 1898 apparently in order to emphasize the duty of the Court to go into the merits before interfering in consequence of misdirection or other error—Smither, 26 Mad. 1 (16).

1408. Error, omission or irregularity:—Error or irregularity in summons or warrant.—See 8 All. 293 in Note 143 under sec. 68; 38 Mad. 1088, and 18 A.L.J. 1149 in Note 162 under sec. 90; and Note 285 under sec. 115. The error of a Magistrate in proceeding by warrant instead of by summons, furnishes no ground for quashing the proceedings—1 W R. 16.

A search warrant issued illegally under section 96 (i) cannot, by the operation of this section, be taken to have been validly issued under sec. 98. This section cannot give legal effect to a defective warrant—Rash Behary, 35 Cal. 1076.

Issue of fresh summons—Where on an information a summons was issued to the accused, and owing to its disclosing no offence a fresh summons was issued without any fresh or supplemental information, the error, omission or irregularity in the fresh summons was not sufficient to upset the finding and sentence unless it had occasioned a failure of justice—Jeevanji, 31 Bom. 611.

Irregularity in arrest.—Where certain arrests were made without the substance of the warrants being notified to the persons arrested, the omission was cured by this section—18 Cr.L.J. 666 (All.).

Absence of complaint.—The absence of a complaint of Court required by sec. 195 of this Code goes to the root of the case and vitiates the whole trial—Girdhari Lal v. Emp., 29 O.C. 1, 12 O.L.J. 104, 26 Cr.L.J. 929; Ameraj v. Emp., 23 A.L.J. 35, 26 Cr.L.J. 751. See Note 614A under sec. 195.

Error or omission in the charge.—An omission to set out the guilty intention of the accused in a charge will be cured by this section unless it is shown that the omission has occasioned a failure of justice—22 Cal. 391. Where the law and section of the law were mentioned in the charge, the omission of the words "unlawfully and maliciously" in the charge was not so material as to prejudice the accused—42 Cal. 957. The omission of the word "dishonestly" in a charge under sec. 411 I. P. C. is not a ground of reversing the conviction and sentence, where the accused person fully understood the nature of the offence with which he was charged and has not been prejudiced by the omission—10 B.H.C.R. 373. Where there is ample evidence to show the common object of an assembly, the omission to mention the common object can be cured by this section—

2 P.L.J. 541; 18 Cr.L.J. 328 (Pat.); Basiraddi, 21 Cal. 827. But where the charge is defective and the common object of the unlawful assembly is not very precisely set out therein, and moreover the charge does not specify the property the taking possession of which is supposed to be the common object of the assembly, the defect in the charge cannot be cured by this section—Poresh Nath, 33 Cal. 295.

Errors in frame and contents of charge:—See Note 730 under sec. 225.

Irregularity in proclamation:—See 1917 P.R. 39 in Note 165 under sec. 87.

Error or omission in judgment:—See Note 1051 under sec. 367, under sub-heading "Defective Appellate judgments."

Misdirection to jury.—See Note 916 under sec. 297.

Explanation.—In considering whether the irregularity in a charge has occasioned a failure of justice, regard must be had to the time when the objection was taken to the irregularity. Where the accused, who was represented by pleader, did not raise any objection to the defect in the form of the charge when it was read out to him at the preliminary inquiry, nor at the time when he was called upon to plead to the charge at the sessions trial, but raised the objection after he had examined all his witnesses, and it appeared that he examined not less than 25 witnesses to meet the case for the prosecution, held that the accused could not be prejudiced by the defect in the charge, and that no failure of justice had been occasioned—Chidambaram v Emp., 32 Mad. 3 (13).

538. No attachment made under this Code shall be deemed unlawful nor shall any person making the same be deemed a trespasser, on account of any defect or want of form in the summons, conviction, writ of attachment or other proceedings relating thereto.

Attachment not illegal nor distrainer a trespasser for defect or want of form in proceedings.

The word 'attachment' has been substituted for the word 'distress' by sec. 149 of the Cr.P.C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. A similar amendment has been made in sections 386 and 387.

CHAPTER XLVI.

MISCELLANEOUS.

539. Affidavits and affirmations to be used before any High Court or any officer of such Court may be sworn and affirmed before such Court or the Courts and persons before whom affidavits may be sworn.

Clerk of the Crown, or any Commissioner or other person appointed by such Court for that purpose, or any Judge, or any Commissioner for taking affidavits in any Court of Record in British India, or any Commissioner to administer oaths in England or Ireland, or any Magistrate authorized to take affidavits or affirmations in Scotland.

1409. Affidavits sworn before the Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta cannot be used before the Patna High Court—B. N. Ry. Co v. Sh. Makbul, 7 P.L.T. 343, 27 Cr.L.J. 313. An affidavit made before a Magistrate who has no seisin of the case or who is not competent to try the case (but is competent only to commit, it being a sessions case) is not valid and cannot be used before a High Court—Ram Chandra v. K. E., 5 Pat. 110, 7 P.L.T. 304, 27 Cr.L.J. 499. A Deputy Magistrate has no power to administer oath to a person making an affidavit to be used in High Court; and such person cannot be prosecuted for perjury if he makes any false statement in such affidavit—In re Iswarchandra, 14 Cal. 653. But an affidavit to be used in a Civil Court may be sworn to before any Magistrate by virtue of sec 139 of the Civil Procedure Code—Dinobandhu v. Hurrymutty, 8 C.W.N. x1

An affidavit must contain nothing but bare facts known to the person who makes the affidavit either personally or upon information from a source which he believes to be a correct source and one on which reliance can be placed. As human beings are liable to make mistakes in reciting facts, the law requires that the contents of affidavits should be carefully read over to the deponents in a language which they understand and should be vouched by them to be correct—Mangal Prasad, 36 All 13, 11 A.L.J. 986, 15 Cr.L.J. 164 539A. (1) When any application is made to any Court in the course of any inquiry, trial or other proceeding under this Code, and allegations are made therein respecting any public servant, the applicant may give evidence of the facts alleged in the application by affidavit, and the Court may, if it thinks fit, order that evidence relating to such facts be so given.

An affidavit to be used before any Court other than a High Court under this section may be sworn or affirmed in the manner prescribed in Section 539, or before any Magistrate.

Affidavits under this section shall be confined to, and shall state separately, such facts as the deponent is able to prove from his own knowledge and such facts as he has reasonable grounds to believe to be true, and, in the latter case, the deponent shall clearly state the grounds of such belief.

(2) The Court may order any scandalous and irrelevant matter in an affidavit to be struck out or amended.

This section and the next have been added by section 150 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "This new section is intended to discourage the making of false and scandalous statements in petitions filed before the Courts, if such petition seeks to impugn the action of subordinate authorities"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914) "We think that the provisions of this section should apply to all criminal proceedings, including appeals. We would allow the applicant to give evidence by affidavit, and would leave the Court a discretion to require this to be done in any case"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

1409A. Under this section, an affidavit to be used before a Court other than a High Court, e.g., before a District Magistrate, must be sworn in the manner prescribed in sec 539 or before a Magistrate; but neither of these sections authorises the swearing of an affidavit before the Nazir of a subordinate Court, who has no authority to administer oath, and the person making a false statement in the affidavit cannot be convicted of an offence under sec 193 I P Code—Ganpat Devaji, 31 Bom.L.R. 144, 30 Cr L.J. 593 (594)

539B. (1) Any Judge or Magistrate may, at any stage of any inquiry, trial or other proceeding, after due notice to the parties, visit and inspect any place in which an offence is alleged to have been committed, or any other place which it is in his opinion necessary to view for the purpose of properly appreciating the evidence given at such inquiry or trial, and shall without unnecessary delay record a memorandum of any relevant facts observed at such inspection.

Local inspection.

(2) Such memorandum shall form part of the record of the case. If the Public Prosecutor, complainant or accused so desires, a copy of the memorandum shall be furnished to him free of cost:

Provided that in the case of a trial by jury or with the aid of assessors, the Judge shall not act under this section unless such jury or assessors are also allowed a view under Section 293.

"This section is inserted definitely prescribing that any Judge or Magistrate may, at any stage of any inquiry or trial, visit and inspect any place connected with the occurrence, subject to his recording a note of his inspection"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914) "We are of opinion that the Judge or Magistrate shall view the locus in quo only for the purpose of properly appreciating the evidence given at the trial, and that in the case of trial by jury or with assessors, the Judge should only view if the jury or assessors do the same under sec. 293. We also think that notice should be given to the parties of the intention of the Judge or Magistrate to visit the locus. We would also provide that the memorandum to be made by the Judge or Magistrate shall form part of the record of the case, and that a copy of it may be furnished to both sides"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

1410. Local inspection :—A trying Magistrate may visit the scene of an alleged offence to test the evidence he has heard in Court, and act on the opinion he has formed from what he has seen in adjudicating between the parties. The Court ought, in every case in which it has made a local inspection, to acquaint the parties with the opinion it has formed. An immediate report of what is seen should be placed on the record and laid open to the scrutiny of the parties—Babbon Sheikh v. K. E., 37 Cal 340 (349, 357); Parameshwar v. K. E., 3 P.L.T. 347, 23 Cr.L.J. 440, A.L.R. 1922 Pat. 296. A Magistrate, when making an inspection of the scene of offence, should invariably be accompanied by both the parties or their pleaders, who should draw his attention to facts if they choose and thus prevent him from drawing wrong inferences—Q. E. v. Chanbasappa Ratanlal 854, Q. E. v. Manikam, 19 Mad 263 (266), Krishnappa v. Sengoda, 2 Weir 727. A Magistrate may make a local inspection not only for the purpose of understanding the evidence adduced in Court, but also for the purpose of testing it by the light of his own observations. If the Magistrate has seen a certain state of things in making a local inspection, he can use the testimony of his own senses for testing the veracity of the witnesses deposing before him as regards the features of the locality—Babbon Sheikh v. Emp., 37 Cal. 340 (355, 356). But where a Magistrate made a local inspection and used it not for the purpose of understanding the evidence given at the trial, but for the purpose of obtaining information which did not appear from the evidence of the witnesses, the procedure was quite illegal, and the Magistrate went beyond the powers granted to him by this section and made himself a witness in the case. The trial was vitiated and must be set aside—Fakira, 29 Cr.L.J. 656 (Pat.); Hari Mohan, 30 Cr.L.J. 491 (492) (Pat.).

If the Sessions Judge thinks it necessary or desirable to visit the place of occurrence, he should give due notice to the parties, and proceed thither with the assessors and the parties, before the close of the trial, and before the opinions of the assessors are recorded—In re Oudh Behari, 1 C.L.R. 143; Deja v. K. E., 9 L.B.R. 83, 9 Bur.L.T. 133, 17 Cr.L.J. 500. If no notice is given to the parties, it is not competent to the Judge to take into account any observations of the locality made by him. And where the Judge made an inspection of the locality after the assessors had given their opinions, the Appellate Court eliminated that portion of the judgment which related to the visit to the spot and the Judge's conclusion therefrom, and decided the case on the other materials—Dey v. K. E., supra

During the trial of the accused persons, one of whom had made a confession, the Sessions Judge went himself to the scene of the crime accompanied by the assessors and the confessing accused, who showed him the ground and made certain additional statements by way of comment or illustration of his confession, and the Judge made note of them. Held that the law does not recognize a procedure of this kind and that the Judge was clearly wrong in allowing the accused to make the additional statements and in recording them—Kesho Singh v K E., 20 O C. 136, 18 Cr L.J. 742.

When a Magistrate makes a local inspection, he should without unnecessary delay record a memorandum of the inspection and supply the petitioner with a copy thereof. The Magistrate's refusal to make a memorandum is an illegality vitiating the proceedings, or in any case, an irregularity by which the defence is prejudiced—Jowala Singh, 10 Lah. 138, 29 Cr L.J. 719 (720). A Judicial Officer conducting a local inspection shall record the result of his inspection at once so that the parties may have an opportunity of seeing what the facts are which the Judicial Officer considered to be established by the local inspection—Jowala, supra. A Magistrate should not, after making a local inspection, deliver his judgment relying upon that inspection without giving the parties an opportunity to rebut his opinion. His report should be open to the scrutiny of the parties—Babbon Sheikh, 37 Cal 340. If the Magistrate holds a local inquiry but makes no memorandum of the facts observed, and then convicts the accused upon the knowledge of those facts, the procedure is illegal. The object of the local inspection is to allow the Magistrate properly to appreciate the evidence given at the trial, and not to allow the Magistrate to become the principal witness in the case on a question of fact. It is illegal for a Magistrate to keep the knowledge of the facts he had observed to himself and then to convict the accused upon such knowledge—Jowala Singh, supra. See also Parmeshwar, 3 P.L.T. 347, 23 Cr L.J. 440, A I R. 1922 Pat 296. Where after the Magistrate had made a local inspection, he gave judgment convicting the accused and then after delivering judgment he made a note of the result of such inspection in the order sheet, held that the procedure was irregular, but as the Magistrate's judgment in this case was mainly based on the documents on the record and on the oral evidence before him, and he used the local inspection only to confirm the evidence which he had already before him, the judgment of the Magistrate should not be set aside as the accused was not prejudiced by such irregularity—Bhola Nath v. Kedar, 25 Cr L.J. 705, A I R. 1925 Cal 353. But in another Calcutta case it has been held that the provisions of sub-section (2) are mandatory, and therefore where the Magistrate made a local inspection and drew up a diagram and made an inspection-note thereon but the note did not form part of the record of the case, the procedure was illegal and not merely irregular, and the defect could not be cured even though there was no prejudice to the accused—Hriday Gobinda v. K. E., 52 Cal. 148, 40 C.L.J. 149, 25 Cr.L.J. 1375. In a very recent case, however, where the local inquiry was made in the presence of both parties, and the Magistrate made no memorandum of the inspection, but the petitioners' pleader who was present at the time did not ask the Magistrate to record a memorandum or to attach a memorandum to the record or to give him a copy, and was content to go on to judgment without seeing the memorandum or even ascertaining whether one was made, it was held that the petitioners could not be allowed to say that for this formal defect the proceedings should be set aside, unless they could show that the Magistrate's omission had caused them prejudice—Forbes v. Md. Ali Hardar, 53 Cal. 46, 42 C.L.J. 131, 26 Cr.L.J. 1524 (dissenting from Hriday Gobind v. K. E., supra.). According to the Bombay High Court, the failure to make a memorandum of the facts observed at the inspection is not an illegality vitiating the trial but is only an irregularity covered by sec. 537, where no prejudice has been caused—Khushal Jeram v Emp., 50 Bom. 680, 27 Cr.L.J. 1151 (following 53 Cal. 46).

As to the circumstances under which a Magistrate making a local inspection is incompetent to try the case, see Note 1374 under section 526, and Note 1432 under sec. 556

540. Any Court may, at any stage of any inquiry, trial or other proceeding under this Code, summon any person as a witness, or examine any person in attendance, though not summoned as a witness, or recall and re-examine any person already examined; and the Court shall summon and examine or recall and re-examine any such person if his evidence appears to it essential to the just decision of the case.

1411. Examination of Court witnesses :—This section confers very wide powers upon a Court in the matter of summoning witnesses, but the wider the powers, the greater is the exercise of discretion required of the Magistrate. It was not intended by this section that the Magistrate should exercise his powers at the bidding of any person, but the powers are given to prevent any danger or miscarriage of justice owing to some particular witness not having been called—Sitab Singh v. Dalganjan, 12 A.L.J. 15, 14 Cr.L.J. 632. This section is a supplementary provision enabling the Court to examine, and in certain circumstances imposing on it the duty of examining, a material witness who would not otherwise be brought before the Court. But a Magistrate misuses this power if he uses it to anticipate the defence of an accused to his prejudice, or if he uses it, after satisfying himself that the accused has a good defence, to discharge the accused instead of acquitting him. A Magistrate cannot resort to this section in order to avoid the responsibility of making up his mind as to the value of the prosecution evidence—Chetu, 1886 P.R. 11.

The first part of this section is an enabling provision whereby a Court in the exercise of its discretion is empowered, at any time before it actually pronounces judgment, to take further evidence either for the prosecution or for the defence, and for that purpose it may adjourn the hearing of a case in order to procure the attendance of the proper persons. In many instances it happens that a new light is thrown on the case by witnesses for the defence and it then becomes desirable, sometimes in the interests of the accused himself, that fresh evidence should be called for. The second part of this section is imperative. If the new evidence appears to the Court essential to the just decision of the case, the Court has no choice but to take such evidence. The new witnesses should be examined, cross-examined and re-examined. Where the defence case could not have been anticipated by the prosecution, and it is said that witnesses are available to prove the falsity of the defence case, the Court should allow such witnesses to be examined. The accused should be given liberty to examine any further witnesses whom he wishes to examine to meet the evidence of the fresh witnesses for the prosecution—Maung Po Hmyin v K E, 1 Rang 308, 25 Cr L J 217, A.I.R 1923 Rang. 216.

Where the Magistrate visited the scene of occurrence without notice to the parties, in contravention of the provisions of sec. 539B, and made certain inquiries in the course of inspection, and then as a result of the inquiry, summoned several persons as witnesses, purporting to do so under sec 540, held that the action of the Magistrate could not be justified under section 540. This section merely provides that a Magistrate may summon any witness whose evidence appears to be necessary, and the most common way of knowing whether the evidence of such a witness is necessary is through the evidence of other witnesses in the case. But this section does not contemplate that the Magistrate should acquire such knowledge by going into the highways and by-ways and searching for further evidence; and the power to summon a witness does not by any means imply a power to discover such witness by personal inquiry out of Court—Pakir Muhammad v Emp, 4 Rang 106, 27 Cr.L.J. 1084.

When an accused person has been examined under sec 342 after the close of the prosecution, and then a witness is examined under sec. 540, it is not necessary to examine the accused again. See 3 Pat. 1015 and other cases cited in Note 977 under sec. 342.

A Magistrate may summon any person as a Court witness at any stage of the proceedings, but in fairness to the parties and to afford them an opportunity of proper cross-examination he should (save under exceptional circumstances) inform them beforehand of the names of those witnesses—Udho Rdm, 10 Lah. 790, A.I.R 1929 Lah 120 (121)

Who can summon witnesses:—No Magistrate other than the one who is seized of the case can summon witnesses under this section—36 All 13.

'May summon':—It is entirely in the discretion of the Court to call and examine witnesses; and the Public Prosecutor cannot demand as a matter of right to call and examine any witness not examined before the committing Magistrate—Hayfield, 14 All 212.

'At any stage'.—Although it is true that proper discretion has to be exercised under sec 540, still the terms of this section are extremely wide, and any Court may at any stage of any inquiry, trial or other proceeding summon any person as a witness, if his evidence appears to it essential to the just decision of the case. This power can be exercised even after the close of the case for the prosecution and the defence—In re Chellaperumal, 46 M.L.J. 325, 25 Cr.L.J. 354. A Magistrate can, under this section, receive fresh evidence after the evidence on both sides has been taken and the case adjourned for judgment, in as much as the case is still pending when such evidence is being taken—In re Ananda Chunder, 24 Cal. 167. Where in a criminal trial, after the evidence for the defence was closed, the Magistrate examined certain witnesses for the prosecution giving at the same time full liberty to the accused to cross-examine them, the High Court declined to interfere in revision—Gur Baksh, 21 O.C. 95, 19 Cr.L.J. 630, 45 I.C. 678. But although a Magistrate has discretion to admit evidence on behalf of either side at any stage of the inquiry or trial, still he ought not to admit further evidence for the prosecution after the prosecution has closed its case and the accused has entered upon his defence, unless there be valid reasons which must be recorded—Ganga v. K. E., 10 A.L.J. 383, 13 Cr.L.J. 772. Magistrates should exercise their discretion under this section very cautiously. Where arguments were heard and the case posted for judgment for a certain day, the examination of any further prosecution witnesses under this section cannot be justified—Natabar v. Adyanath, 27 C.W.N. 675. When the trial has been concluded so far that no witnesses remain to be examined on either side and the assessors have given their opinions, it is not open to the Sessions Judge to fish for witnesses under this section or to order for further inquiry to be made by the committing Magistrate—Alwal Khan, 1892 P.R. 4.

1412. Who may be examined:—Under this section the Court is bound to summon and examine any witnesses whose evidence seems to be essential to the just decision of the case—6 C.W.N. 98. The Court would not be bound to issue summons to witnesses, under this section, unless it is satisfied that their evidence will be very material—Shakir Ali, 19 All. 502. When the committing Magistrate refuses to examine any witnesses mentioned in the list submitted to him under sec 211, the Sessions Judge can under this section direct those witnesses to be summoned and examined—Raja of Kanti, 8 All 668; Hayfield, 14 All. 212.

Magistrates are at liberty to summon witnesses who are resident outside the limits of their own districts—3 M.H.C.R. App 5

The Magistrate may summon and examine any person as a witness. The power to summon a witness is not limited to the witnesses cited for the prosecution or the defence—Chetu, 1886 P.R. 11. A person who had been suspected and charged with an offence but was afterwards discharged by the Magistrate for want of evidence, may be examined afterwards as a witness for the prosecution—7 W.R. 44. Where the prosecution declines to examine any witnesses, the Court may on its own initiative cause them to be produced and examine them under this section—Emp v Satyendra, 37 C.L.J. 173, 24 Cr.L.J. 193, A.I.R. 1923 Cal 463. Where the defence is based on section 84 I. P. C., the Sessions Judge may under this section ascertain the behaviour of the prisoner during the years previous to the homicide, and if he has been kept in a lunatic asylum, record medical evidence of the facts observed there—Dongar, Ratanlal 279.

But this section does not enable the Court to examine the accused as a witness, even in appeal, for an appeal is but the continuation of the original case—Subbaya, 12 Mad. 451.

1413. Right of parties to cross-examine —When a Judge thinks it necessary to examine a witness under this section, and does so, the accused as well as the complainant ought to be allowed an opportunity of cross-examining the witness—Grish Chunder, 5 Cal 614, Gopal Lal v Manik Lal, 24 Cal 288, Pita v K E, 47 All 147. When a witness is called by the Court under this section, both the prosecution and the accused are entitled to cross-examine him on matters relevant to the inquiry, and they are not restricted to the points on which the witness has been examined by the Court—Chintamon, 35 Cal 243. Where a witness was at first called for the defence, but afterwards the accused declined to examine him, whereupon he was examined as a witness by the Court, it was held that the accused would not be deprived of his right to cross-examine the witness—Mohendra, 29 Cal. 387. It is not a proper cross-examination if the defence counsel is merely allowed to suggest certain questions to the Magistrate, and the Magistrate puts those questions to the witness—Pita v K E, 47 All 147, 26 Cr L.J. 575.

540-A. (1) At any stage of an inquiry or trial under this Code, where two or more accused are before the Court, if the Judge or Magistrate is satisfied, for reasons to be recorded, that any one or more of such accused is or are incapable of remaining before the Court, he may, if such accused is represented by a pleader, dispense with his attendance and proceed with any inquiry or trial in his absence, and may, at any subsequent stage of the proceedings, direct the personal attendance of such accused.

(2) If the accused in any such case is not represented by a pleader, or if the Judge or Magistrate considers his personal attendance necessary, he may, if he thinks fit, and for reasons to be recorded by him, either adjourn such inquiry or trial, or order that the case of such accused be taken up or tried separately.

This section has been added by section 151 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "This section is designed to meet a practical difficulty which is occasionally experienced in trials involving a large number of accused persons when one or more of them is incapable of remaining at the bar"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). "Sub-section (1) provides for the case of an accused who is represented by a pleader, and whose personal attendance can be dispensed with Sub-section (2) provides for the case of an accused who is not so represented, or whose continued personal attendance may be necessary, and allows the Court in such a case either to adjourn the trial of the accused, or to order the particular accused to be tried separately."—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

541. (1) Unless when otherwise provided by any law for the time being in force, the Local Government may direct in what place any person liable to be imprisoned or committed to custody under this Code shall be confined.

(2) If any person liable to be imprisoned or committed to custody under this Code

Removal to criminal jail of accused or convicted persons who are in confinement in civil jail, and their return to the civil jail.

is in confinement in a civil jail, the Court or Magistrate ordering the imprisonment or committal may direct that the person be removed to a criminal jail.

(3) When a person is removed to a criminal jail under sub-section (2), he shall, on being released therefrom, be sent back to the civil jail, unless either—

(a) three years have elapsed since he was removed to the criminal jail, in which case he shall be deemed to have been discharged from the civil jail under Section 342 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882 or

(b) the Court which ordered his imprisonment in the civil jail has certified to the officer in charge of the criminal jail that he is entitled to be discharged under Section 341 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1882.

In sub-section (3), the words "sub-section (2)" have been substituted for "sub-section (1)" by the Repealing and Amending Act, VII of 1924, to correct a clerical error

1414. 'Jail':—The term 'prison' and 'jail' do not include a police lock-up. A Magistrate has no power to sentence an accused to suffer imprisonment in a police lock-up—7 L B R 62

Dividing imprisonment in different jails:—A Criminal Court passing a sentence of imprisonment cannot divide the imprisonment in different jails. From this section and sec. 63 (t) of Act IX of 1894, and the Prisoners Act of 1871, it is clear that the power of directing imprisonment to be undergone in different jails belongs to the Local Government and the Inspector-General of Prisoners, and not to the Court passing the sentence—Q. E v. Radha, Ratanlal 827

542. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Prisoner's Testimony Act, 1869, Power of Presidency Magistrate to order prisoner in jail to be brought up for examination.

any Presidency Magistrate desirous of examining, as a witness or an accused person, in any case pending before him, any person confined in any jail within the local limits of his jurisdiction, may issue an order to the officer in charge of the said jail requiring him to bring such prisoner in proper custody, at a time to be therein named, to the Magistrate for examination.

(2) The officer so in charge, on receipt of such order, shall act in accordance therewith and shall provide for the safe custody of the prisoner during his absence from the jail for the purpose aforesaid.

543. When the services of an interpreter are required by any Criminal Court for Interpreter to be bound to interpret truthfully.

the interpretation of any evidence or statement, he shall be bound to state the true interpretation of such evidence or statement.

1415. It is not necessary to administer oath to an interpreter—16 W.R. 61. The omission to administer oath to an interpreter under section 5 (b) of the Oaths Act (X of 1873) renders it necessary for the prosecution to prove that the interpretation of the deposition was made accurately, but omission to do so does not make the deposition inadmissible in evidence—36 Cal. 808.

544. Subject to any rules made by the Local Government, * * * any Criminal Court may, if it thinks fit, order payment, on the part of Government, of the reasonable expenses of any complainant or witness attending for the purposes of any inquiry, trial or other proceeding before such Court under this Code.

Expenses of complainants and witnesses. Sec. 544, and the Rules framed by the Local Government under this section, give a discretion to the Magistrate in the matter of expenses of complainants and witnesses, but such discretion should be exercised not arbitrarily but on sound judicial principles—Emp. v Ganesh, 9 Bom.L.R. 353, 5 Cr L J. 329.

This section empowers the Court to order that the expenses of the complainant and his witness should be paid by the Government under proper circumstances. But it does not empower the Court trying a complaint to order that the diet money of a witness produced before it should be paid by the complainant. That power is vested in the Court under the general rules of the High Court. If the Court orders such payment, in accordance with such rules, the amount cannot be recovered under the provision of sec. 547 as if it were a fine, but can be recovered by a suit in the Civil Court—Kamal v Paramasukh, 29 C.W.N. 1033.

Bengal Rules:—1. The Criminal Courts are authorised to pay by these rates the expenses (a) of complainants or witnesses whether for the prosecution or for the defence (i) in cases in which the prosecution is instituted or carried on by or under the orders or with the sanction of the Government, or of any Judge, Magistrate or other public officer, or in which it shall appear to the presiding officer to be directly in furtherance of the interests of the public service, and (ii) in all cases entered in column 5 of the Schedule II appended to the Criminal Procedure Code as not bailable; and (b) of witnesses in all cases in which they are compelled by the Magistrate of his own motion to attend under the provisions of section 540 of the Code.

2. If a witness is summoned at the instance of the complainant or accused under section 244 of the Code, his expenses shall not be withheld from him except on the ground of failure to do his duty as a witness when summoned.

3. (1) For the purpose of computing the expenses which the Criminal Courts are authorised to pay under these rules, complainants and witnesses shall be divided into two classes, namely—

(a) labourers and ordinary cultivators and other persons of similar class, and

(b) persons of better position, and the allowances shall ordinarily be a diet allowance, which may be paid to persons coming under class (b) on demand by them, and to persons in class (a) as a general rule.

(2) Such allowance shall be calculated for each class at daily rates within, and never exceeding, the maximum limit specified below opposite the territorial description of the Court in which the complainant or witness appears :—

	Class (a) per diem	Class (b) per diem
I. Courts in the districts of Nadia, Murshidabad, Jessore, Khulna, and Midnapore	7 annas	Rs. 5
II. Courts in the rest of the districts in the Presidency	8 annas	Rs 5

Explanation.—The rates fixed in this rule are maxima, and are intended to meet the cost of meals for one day. In every case, therefore, the Court should consider the circumstances of the individual and local conditions and grant a reduced allowance in circumstances and localities where the actual expenses fall short of the maximum rate. In cases where no meal is taken away from home, or where only one meal is taken, no allowance or a reduced allowance, as the case may be, should be granted.

4 (1) Complainants and witnesses performing the journey or part of the journey by rail, steamer or train may be allowed their actual fares each way according to the class by which persons of their rank and station in life would ordinarily travel. In determining the class by which a person would ordinarily travel, regard should be had to the standard laid down in section V of the Travelling Allowance Rules published in the Calcutta Gazette Extraordinary, December 23, 1921.

(2) Charges for toll at ferries will be allowed at the authorized rates to the extent to which they have been actually incurred.

(3) Other travelling expenses will be given only when the journey could not have been performed on foot, or in the case of persons whose age, position and habits of life render it impossible for them to walk. In such cases, in addition to the allowance permitted by the preceding rules, travelling allowance shall be given at the following rates :—

(a) When the journey is by any kind of conveyance by road, the actual reasonable conveyance charge up to a maximum limit of 4 annas a mile.

(b) In the Districts where the usual mode of travelling is by water, the actual expenses incurred for boat-hire up to a maximum of Rs 2 per diem.

(4) In hill districts, where it is customary for respectable persons to be accompanied by a man carrying their baggage, when such a person is summoned for a distance of more than five miles, he may be allowed the actual cost incurred for the hire of one coolie.

5. If the Court is of opinion that any person following any trade or profession or engaged in any commercial undertaking has suffered substantial loss by reason of his attendance as a witness or complainant, he may be allowed, in addition to the diet money and travelling expenses:

permissible under the preceding rules, compensation according to circumstances.

6. Notwithstanding anything contained in these rules, Government servants when summoned to give evidence in their public capacity shall receive no payment from the Court on account of travelling or halting allowance, but shall be entitled to draw such allowance under the Civil Service Regulations, on producing a certificate of attendance granted by the Court. Provided that—

(i) when a Government servant is required to give evidence in his private capacity at a Court situated not more than five miles from his headquarters, the Court shall be authorised, where it considers it necessary, and notwithstanding anything contained in this rule, to pay the actual travelling expenses incurred;

(ii) when the salary of the Government servant as summoned does not exceed Rs. 10 per mensem, he shall be paid his expenses by the Court.

7. Notwithstanding anything contained in rules 3 and 4, whenever the Court requires the expenses of a Government officer, summoned as witness in his official capacity, to be deposited in advance, the term "expenses" shall be interpreted to mean the travelling and halting allowance admissible under the Civil Service Regulations.

8. Government servants when summoned to give evidence in their private capacity shall be paid by the Court such travelling allowance as is paid to persons of similar status under rules 3 and 4, but they shall not be entitled to any diet allowance, nor shall they receive any travelling allowance under the Civil Service Regulations.

9. Officers will be held responsible that parties of witnesses are brought to Court together as far as possible, so as to save expense. The hire of more than one boat shall not be allowed in one case unless the presiding officer is satisfied that the witnesses could not have arranged to come together.

10. The number of days for which diet allowance should be granted will be determined by the officer ordering payment in each case.

11. For this purpose and for regulating the reimbursement of tolls paid, a table shall be prepared and kept in each Court, showing the distance of each thana from the sudder station and subordinate stations, the number of intermediate ferries to be crossed, and authorised rates of charges for tolls at each of these ferries, the existence or absence of roads or waterways being also noted in the table—Calcutta Gazette, 1922, Part I, August 9, pp. 1522-1524

545. (1) Whenever under any law in force for the time being a Criminal Court imposes a fine or confirms in appeal, revision or otherwise a sentence of fine, or a sentence of which fine forms a part, the Court may, when passing judgment, order the whole or any part of the fine recovered to be applied—

Power of Court to pay expenses or compensation out of fine.

(a) in defraying expenses properly incurred in the prosecution;

(b) in the payment to any person of compensation for any loss or injury caused by the offence, when substantial compensation is, in the opinion of the Court, recoverable by such person in a civil Court; and

(c) when any person is convicted of any offence which includes theft, criminal misappropriation, criminal breach of trust, or cheating, or of having dishonestly received, or retained, or of having voluntarily assisted in disposing of, stolen property knowing or having reason to believe the same to be stolen, in compensating any bona fide purchaser of such property for the loss of the same if such property is restored to the possession of the person entitled thereto.

(2) If the fine is imposed in a case which is subject to appeal, no such payment shall be made before the period allowed for presenting the appeal has elapsed, or, if an appeal be presented, before the decision of the appeal.

Change —Clause (b) has been slightly amended and clause (c) newly added, by section 152 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. "Clause (b) makes it clear that compensation under section 545 may be paid to any person by whom it would be recoverable in a Civil Court. The payment of compensation to an innocent purchaser of stolen property is provided for in clause (c) when the property is restored to the possession of the person entitled thereto"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

1416. Order when can be made.—An order of compensation can be made under this section when the Court imposes a fine. If the accused is discharged or acquitted and no fine is imposed, no order under this section can be passed—In re Bastoo, 22 Bom 717, Govind Narayan, Ratanlal 407. If the accused is convicted of theft and sentenced to imprisonment but no fine is imposed on him, the Court cannot order payment of compensation to the person whose property was stolen—Bhura v. Emp., 26 Cr L J 1495 (Nag). Where a person is dealt with under sec 562 and no fine is imposed on him, the Court has no power to direct him to pay compensation to the other party—Munney Mirza v. K. E., 25 Cr L J 1116 (Oudh). In a proceeding under sec 107, an order directing the accused to pay the costs of the complainant is ultra vires—Sheo Prasad v. Mahangoo, 25 Cr.L.J. 76, A.I.R. 1924 All 694. Where the Magistrate does not impose any fine but orders the sale of the boat of the accused and directs the compensation to be paid out of the sale proceeds, the order is illegal—Beera, Ratanlal 688. Similarly, a compensation cannot be ordered to be paid out of the rents and profits of the property forfeited—Q. E. v. Nana Patil, Ratanlal 146. A Magistrate cannot, without imposing a substantive sentence of fine, order payment of compensation to the complainant—2 Weir 715. The proper course is to impose a fine, and out of the fine realised direct payment to the complainant of such amount as the Court thinks fit, having regard to the provisions of this section—Mohesh v. Bholanath, 3 C.L.R. 404.

What Court can award compensation:—Compensation may be awarded not only by the trying Court, but also by the High Court in revision, see Bishen v. Ismail, 6 Bur L.J. 81, 28 Cr.L.J. 757 (758).

A Police Patel's Court is not a "criminal Court" and he cannot make an order of compensation under this section—Q. E. v. Ramia, Ratanlal 317.

Order cannot be made after judgment:—The award of compensation should be a part of the sentence and order made upon a conviction of an offence, and should be founded upon a statement of the loss, damage or expenses ascertained at the trial—Q. v. Muttun, 11 W.R. 53. The order should be made when passing judgment, after the judgment is passed, the Court becomes functus officio and has no further power to make any order under this section—U.B.R. (1892-96) 80.

1417. Clause (a)—Expenses of the prosecution:—The award of costs should not exceed the actual costs of the complainant out of pocket—Mohesh v. Bholanath, 3 C.L.R. 405.

Expenses under this section do not include such expenses as are incurred in bringing the person of the offender before the Magistrate—Ramaswamy, Ratanlal 608. Where fine is imposed on a person for destroying land-marks, a portion of the fine so imposed cannot be ordered to be paid to the Amin for the purpose of paying the expenses of his deputation to restore the land-marks destroyed—6 W.R. 93; such expenses are not expenses incurred in the prosecution. Subsistence allowances and cart hire for prosecution witness cannot be ordered to be paid by the accused—U.B.R. (1892-96) 7. Court-fees and process fees are now provided for in Sec. 546A.

Expenses under this section should be directed to be paid out of the amount of the fine imposed, and a separate order for such expenses is improper—Q. E. v. Soalairam, Ratanlal 341; Takaram, 4 Bom L.J. 877. An order for expenses to be paid in addition to the fine is illegal—24 Mad. 305; Rajubhai, 5 Bom L.R. 126; Q. E. v. Dhanji, Ratanlal 196. But the expenses mentioned in sec. 546A may be awarded in addition to fine.

1418. Clause (b)—Compensation:—*Amount of compensation:—*When compensation is awarded under this section, the distinction between clauses (a) and (b) of the section should be borne in mind, and the order should show, whether it is made to defray the expenses of the prosecution or as compensation for injury caused by the offence committed—U.B.R. (1892-96) 290. In awarding compensation, no sum in excess of the loss actually suffered by the complainant should be ordered to be paid. Where the accused was convicted of illegally demanding money, and was fined three times the amount of the illegal receipt, and the whole of the fine was ordered to be paid to the complainant, the order was held to be improper—5 L.B.R. 50. In a theft case, it is illegal to award compensation to the complainant in excess of the price of the property stolen from him—Shib Das, 1913 P.L.R. 335, 14 Cr L.J. 659.

Where a complainant cannot recover substantial compensation in a Civil Court, compensation cannot be awarded to him under clause (b), but a sum may be awarded to him under clause (a) to defray the expenses of the prosecution—15 Cr L.J. 555 (Bur). Therefore a Magistrate convicting a person under sec. 193 I.P.C. can only order the expenses properly incurred in the prosecution to be defrayed out of the fine, but has no power to award compensation, because substantial compensation is not recoverable by a civil suit for perjury—Mangulchand v. Mohan, 14 N.L.R. 131, 19 Cr L.J. 927, 47 I.C. 443.

*Compensations which are improper:—*Where in a petty case no pecuniary loss has been sustained by the complainant, it is improper for the Court to award compensation—1 Bur.S.R. 538, but see 2 Weir 717, where it has been held that compensation should be awarded where there is substantial cause for it, even though the case be frivolous.

Where the accused was convicted and fined for being drunk on a public road, no compensation could be awarded to the constable who in arresting the accused had to struggle with him and in so doing lost his whistle and Rs. 5, because such compensation is not for injury caused by the offence committed—U.B.R. (1892-96) 79. A Court cannot award compensation for alleged offences other than those which form the subject of the inquiry in the case in which the order is made—Q. E. v. Govind Narayan, Ratanlal 407. Where the accused took his sister who was suffering from plague into a town without informing the authorities and was thereupon convicted for an offence under sec. 188 I.P.C., no compensation could be awarded to the Municipality on account of the expenses incurred by it in disinfecting the house into which the accused brought the case of plague—Q. E. v. Rahmatkha, Ratanlal 958. Where the offence is under the I.P.C., no compensation can be awarded under any other special law. Thus, where the accused was fined under sec. 379 I.P.C. for cutting trees in a field, and out of the fine recovered a reward of Rs. 5 was ordered to be paid to the complainant (under the Forest Act) for detecting the offence, it was held that the order of reward was illegal, since the offence was under the I.P.C., and not under the Forest Act—Vithu, Ratanlal 873. See also Bhikari, Ratanlal 241.

1419. Who is entitled to compensation:—Heirs of the deceased—Under the Code of 1861, compensation could be awarded to the 'person injured,' and therefore it could not be paid to the heirs of the person who had been killed—10 W.R. 39. Under the Code of 1872 also the law was practically the same, but in the 1882 Code the language of the section has been changed, and no mention is specifically made of the person who is entitled to compensation. Still in Lutchmak, 12 Mad. 352 and Yalla Sanguli Mamidi, 21 Mad. 74 the Judges clung to the old view, and held that compensation awarded to the widow of the deceased was illegal. In 36 Cal 302 and Saif Ali, 1893 P.R. 17, it has been held that the heirs of the deceased are entitled to compensation. The present amendment now makes it clear that compensation can be awarded to any person by whom it can be recovered in a Civil Court.

In awarding compensation to the heirs of the person killed, the names of the heirs should be mentioned. An order of compensation to the 'nearest heirs,' without specifying who those heirs may be, is bad in law—Chuha, 1913 P.R. 18, 14 Cr L.J. 522.

Husband of woman enticed away—Where a person is convicted of enticing away a married woman, compensation may be awarded to the husband for injury done to his honour—1878 P.R. 14.

Compensation for injury caused to another—Where the accused was charged with causing hurt to two persons, but was fined for causing injuries to one of them only, compensation out of the fine cannot be awarded to the other person—Vobanna, 2 Weir 718.

Refund of compensation—Where a conviction is set aside on appeal and a refund of the fine levied is ordered, and the party who has received a portion of the money as compensation refuses to refund it, the only remedy lies in a Civil Court—Anonymous, 2 Weir 717. But in Mutsuddi v. Mani Ram, 19 All 112, and other cases it has been held that the amount may be recovered by a process under sec. 547 and not necessarily by a suit in a Civil Court. See Note 1422 under Sec 547.

1420. Clause (c)—Bona fide purchaser of stolen property—This clause has been newly added. Under the old law, it was held that when a person was convicted of theft, an order awarding compensation, out of the fine imposed, to the innocent purchaser of the stolen property was not authorised by this section—6 Mad. 285; because the injury to the purchaser was not the consequence of the theft but of the invalid sale—Mariyappa, 2 Weir 716. On a conviction of theft, the stolen property should be returned to the owner, but it was illegal to impose a condition that a portion of the fine imposed on the accused should be paid to the innocent purchaser. No such condition could be imposed on the return of the property to the owner—K E v. Abdul, 3 Bom L.R. 449. When theft was proved, the stolen property was ordered to be restored to the rightful owner and not to the bona fide purchaser. The rule of English law protecting bona fide purchasers for value in market overt does not apply in India, and on conviction of the accused the property with respect to which the theft was committed should be delivered to the original owner—Nobo Kristo v. Lall Chand, 20 W R 38; Faiz Muhammad, 1908 P.R. 2. See also 1893 A.W.N. 61. In 1878 P.R. 21, it was held however that when stolen property was in the hands of a bona fide purchaser, the proper order to be made was to leave it in his hands, and the remedy of the complainant was to secure possession of the property in a Civil Court.

Under the present law, as provided by this clause, compensation will be awarded to the innocent purchaser.

The clause applies only to a purchaser and not to a mortgagee or pledgee, an innocent mortgagee or pledgee who has advanced money on the security of the stolen property will not be entitled to any compensation—Ratanlal 631; Ramchandra, 46 Bom. 893, 23 Cr.L.J. 341.

546. At the time of awarding compensation in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter, the Court shall take into account any sum paid or recovered as compensation under section 545.

Payments to be taken into account in subsequent suit.

'Take into account'—This expression does not mean that in a subsequent civil suit, at the time of awarding damages, the amount of compensation recovered under sec 545 is to be deducted from the damages awarded in the suit—22 W R 336 (Civil).

546A. (1) Whenever any complaint of a non-cognizable offence is made to a Court, the Court, if it convicts the accused, may, in addition to the penalty imposed upon him, order him to pay to the complainant—

Order of payment of certain fees paid by complainant in non-cognizable cases.

(a) the fee (if any) paid on the petition of complaint, or for the examination of the complainant, and

(b) any fees paid by the complainant for serving process on his witnesses or on the accused, and may further order that, in default of payment, the accused shall suffer simple imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days.

(2) An order under this section may also be made by an Appellate Court, or by the High Court when exercising its powers of revision.

This section has been added by section 153 of the Cr.P.C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "It embodies the provisions of section 31 of the Court Fees Act in order that greater prominence may be given to them"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). The provision as to imprisonment in default of payment, and sub-section (2) did not occur in the Court Fees Act. Section 31 of the Court Fees Act has now been repealed by section 163 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

1421. Scope of the section.—This section does not apply, and the costs of the complainant cannot be awarded, where the offence is not a non-cognizable one—Nuruddin v Emp, 25 Cr.L.J. 1161 (Oudh)

If the complaint is not required by law to be stamped, the fact that the Court-fee has been illegally levied by the Court will not be a ground for ordering the accused to pay the fee on conviction—8 B.H.C.R. 22. Thus, no fee is leviable on a complaint by Municipal Officers, and the accused on conviction should not be ordered to pay the same—Q E v. Khajabhog, 16 Mad 423

A proceeding under the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act is not a proceeding for an offence, and if in such a proceeding the workman admits the advance and repays the same, it is not open to the Magistrate to make him pay the complainant the Court-fee paid on the complaint—Dhondu, 6 Bom L R 255

If there are several persons convicted, the order of payment of the value of the Court-fee and process-fee should be joint and not several—Reg v. Sankara, Bom HC Cr Rule, 1872.

The provisions of this section are not to be controlled by section 545, unlike section 545 the expenses awarded under this section are directed to be paid in addition to fine and not out of the fine imposed—Yamuna, 24 Mad. 305

According to the Calcutta High Court, the order of payment of Court-fee is no part of the principal sentence in the case and is not to be treated as a fine added to a sentence of imprisonment so as to make the sentence appealable—20 Cal 687. But the Madras High Court holds that it is an integral part of the sentence—22 Mad 153, 5 M H C.R. App 28 See these cases cited in Note 1113 under section 413.

"May".—"We think the Court should not be bound to exercise the power conferred by this section in trivial cases and we have accordingly used the word may"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

547. Any money (other than a fine) payable by virtue of any order made under this Code, and the method of recovery of which is not otherwise expressly provided for, shall be recoverable as if it were a fine.

Moneys ordered to be paid recoverable as fines.

The italicised words have been added by section 154 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. These words provide for the recovery of compensation under sec. 250, of costs under sec. 148 (3), and of the Court-fees and process-fees mentioned in sec. 546A

1422. This section only provides a summary method of realising 'money payable' and these words cannot be stretched so as to include live stock or other goods—Phumman, 23 Cr.L.J. 157 (Lah)

An order of refund of compensation paid to the complainant under sec. 543 may be enforced by process under this section. It is not necessary that the accused should bring a civil suit for recovery of the money—Mutsaddi v. Mani Ram, 19 All 112, Ishri v. Bakshi, 6 All. 96, Pola Varapu, 7 Mad. 563; Ali Ahmad v Nathu, 1884 P R 14, Ratanlal 213 Contra—2 Weir 717

An order by the High Court setting aside an award of compensation (sec. 250) to the accused must be deemed to be an order directing refund of the money, and such order is enforceable under this section—Hovarna v. Jassu, 1885 P.R. 12. See also 1903 P R 29

An order directing the complainant to pay the diet money of his witness cannot be enforced under this section, the remedy of the witness to recover the money is by a civil suit—Kamal v. Paramsukh, 29 C W N 1033 (see this case cited under sec 544).

548. If any person affected by a judgment or order passed by a Criminal Court desires copies of proceedings. to have a copy of the Judge's charge to the jury or of any order or deposition or other part of the record, he shall, on applying for such copy, be furnished therewith:

. Provided that he pays for the same, unless the Court, for some special reason, thinks fit to furnish it free of cost.

1423. 'Affected by judgment, order' etc.—A complainant whose complaint is dismissed is a person affected by the order of dismissal, and therefore he is entitled to ask for a copy of the Magistrate's order of discharge—In re Abdul, Ratanlal 305, 8 Cal 166. But a 'charge' is not an order of a Criminal Court by which an accused person can be said to be affected within the meaning of this section, so as to entitle him to copies of deposition where the trial has not proceeded beyond the frame of charge and the examination of the prosecution witnesses. 1892 A W N 140

Accused entitled to copies—A prisoner is entitled to copies of all documents for which he applies and which he thinks necessary for his defence, and a Magistrate will be acting contrary to law in determining whether such copies are necessary or not—14 W R 77

549. (1) The Governor General in Council may make rules, consistent with this Code and the Army Act and the Air Force Act or any similar law for the time being in force, as to the cases in which persons subject to military or air force law shall be tried by a Court to which this Code applies, or by Court martial, and when any person is brought before a Magistrate and charged with an offence for which he is liable, under the Army Act, section 41, or under the Air Force Act, section 41, to be tried by a Court-martial, such Magistrate shall have regard to such rules, and shall in proper cases deliver him, together with a statement of the offence of which he is accused, to the commanding officer of the regiment, corps or detachment to which he belongs, or to the commanding officer of the nearest military or air force station, as the case may be, for the purpose of being tried by Court-martial.

(2) Every Magistrate shall, on receiving a written application for that purpose by the commanding officer of any body of troops stationed or employed at any such place, use his utmost endeavours to apprehend and secure any person accused of such offence.

The italicised words have been added by the Repealing and Amending Act, X of 1927.

550. Any police-officer may seize any property which may be alleged or suspected to have been stolen, or which may be found under circumstances which create suspicion of the commission of any offence. Such police-officer, if subordinate to the officer in charge of a police-station, shall forthwith report the seizure to that officer.

1424. If a Police officer has reason to suspect certain property to be stolen he must himself seize the property. He cannot order any other person to detain the same—Bithal, 16 O.C. 371, 15 Cr.L.J. 177.

This section gives the Police officer power to seize only the property suspected to be stolen; but it does not empower him to seize any other property which is mixed with the stolen one—1909 P.W.R. 14.

551. Police-officers superior in rank to an officer in charge of a police-station may exercise the same powers, throughout the local areas to which they are appointed, as may be exercised by such officer within the limits of his station.

552. Upon complaint made to a Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate on oath of the abduction or unlawful detention of a woman, or of a female child under the age of sixteen years, for any unlawful purpose, he may make an order for the immediate restoration of such woman to her liberty, or of such female child to her husband, parent, guardian or other person having the lawful charge of such child, and may compel compliance with such order, using such force as may be necessary.

Change :—The word "sixteen" has been substituted for "fourteen" by the Criminal Law Amendment Act XVIII of 1924, for the purpose of affording greater protection to girls. By the same Act, the age limit has been raised from sixteen to eighteen in sections 372 and 373 of the Indian Penal Code.

1425. Unlawful detention.—The detention of a child in a missionary school, against the will of her parent or guardian with a view that she should be brought up in a religion which such parent or child disapproved of and the adoption of which would not only involve a total change in the child's mode of life, but would also deprive the parent or guardian of any control in the education or bringing up of the child, would amount to unlawful detention—Abraham v. Mahtabo, 16 Cal 487

The detention of a girl by the father in his house against the will of her husband does not amount to unlawful detention, unless it is shown that the detention was contrary to the wish of the girl—Nathu v. Nari Lal, 15 Cr L J 712 (Cal.) If a woman is residing with her relative who are aiding her in endeavouring to procure a divorce, such detention is not unlawful—Syed Umar v. Syed Davood, 2 Weir 724

Unlawful purpose.—A Magistrate can act under this section when both the detention and the purpose are unlawful. In 16 Cal 487 cited above the detention was held to be unlawful, but the purpose was not. Unlawful purpose means immoral purpose. This section applies to female children only, and not to children generally, this shows that the purpose has some special reference to the sex of the person against whom it is entertained. In other words, the section has reference to adultery, concubinage, prostitution, deflowering or other similar purposes. But it certainly does not include the detention of a Hindu girl in a Christian Institution in order that she may be a Christian, or the detention of a Christian child in a Mahomedan Institution in order that she may be a Mahomedan—Abraham v. Mahtabo, 16 Cal. 487; see also 4 Bom L.R. 609

1426. Procedure :—It is the District Magistrate who alone has jurisdiction to entertain a complaint and make an order under this section. He has no power to transfer such a case to a Sub-Magistrate, and that Magistrate would have no jurisdiction therein—Ratanlal 963

An application under this section does not necessarily allege the commission of an offence, and is not a complaint; consequently the provisions of secs 200 and 203 do not apply to proceedings under this section—4 Bom L.R. 609. A person proceeded against under this section is not in the position of an accused person, and may offer himself as a witness in the proceeding, see sec. 340.

Where a Magistrate has reason to believe that a woman is unlawfully detained but cannot find who so detains her, the proper course is for the Magistrate to issue an order to have the woman brought before him and to examine her; it would be illegal for the Magistrate in such a case to order the restoration of the woman to liberty without any finding that she was unlawfully detained by any one and without ordering any one to restore her to liberty—Syed Umar v Syed Davood, 2 Weir 724.

An application to get back a girl from her father's custody on the allegation that she is the wife of the applicant must be made to a Civil Court and not to the Magistrate under this section—10 C.W.N. 1xxv.

553. (1) Whenever any person causes a police-officer to arrest another person in a presidency-town, if it appears to the Magistrate by whom the case is heard that there was no sufficient ground for causing such arrest, the Magistrate may award such compensation, not exceeding fifty rupees, to be paid by the person so causing the arrest to the person so arrested, for his loss of time and expenses in the matter, as the Magistrate thinks fit.

Compensation to persons groundlessly given in charge in Presidency-town.

(2) In such cases, if more persons than one are arrested, the Magistrate may, in like manner, award to each of them such compensation, not exceeding fifty rupees, as such Magistrate thinks fit.

(3) All compensation awarded under this section may be recovered as if it were a fine, and if it cannot be so recovered, the person by whom it is payable shall be sentenced to simple imprisonment for such term not exceeding thirty days as the Magistrate directs, unless such sum is sooner paid.

554. (1) With the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, the High Court at Fort William, and with the previous sanction of the Local Government, any other High Court established by Royal Charter may, from time to time, make rules for the inspection of the records of subordinate Courts.

Power of chartered High Courts to make rules for inspection of records of subordinate Courts.

(2) Every High Court not established by Royal Charter may, from time to time, and with the previous sanction of the Local Government,—

Power of other High Courts to make rules for other purposes.

(a) makes rules for keeping all books, entries and accounts to be kept in all Criminal Courts subordinate to it, and for the preparation and transmission of any returns or statements to be prepared and submitted by such Courts;

(b) frame forms for every proceeding in the said Courts for which it thinks that a form should be provided;

(c) makes rules for regulating its own practice and proceedings and the practice and proceedings of all Criminal Courts subordinate to it; and

(d) make rules for regulating the execution of warrants issued under this Code for the levy of fines:

Provided that the rules and forms made and framed under this section shall not be inconsistent with this Code or any other law in force for the time being.

(3) All rules made under this section shall be published in the local official Gazette.

555. Subject to the power conferred by S. 554, and by S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, the forms set forth in the fifth schedule, with such variation as the circumstances of each case require, may be used for the respective purposes therein mentioned, and if used shall be sufficient.

1427. "With such variation":—There being no prescribed form of warrant under section 100, a Magistrate who had to issue one under that section adapted a form under sec. 96 to the provision of sec. 100 by altering the figures and by drawing up the warrant in terms required by sec. 100. It was held that the warrant was perfectly legal—45 Cal. 905. See also Note 205 under sec. 100.

556. No Judge or Magistrate shall, except with the permission of the Court to which an appeal lies from his Court, try or commit for trial any case to or in which he is a party or personally interested, and no Judge or Magistrate shall hear an appeal from any judgment or order passed or made by himself.

Case in which Judge or Magistrate is personally interested.
Explanation.—A Judge or Magistrate shall not be deemed a party, or personally interested, within the meaning of this section, to or in any case by reason only that he is a Municipal Commissioner or otherwise concerned therein in a public capacity, or by reason only that he has viewed the place in which an offence is alleged to have been committed or any other place in which any other transaction material to the case is alleged to have occurred, and made an inquiry in connection with the case.

A, as Collector, upon consideration of information furnished to him, directs the prosecution of B for a breach of the Excise Laws. A is disqualified from trying this case as a Magistrate.

1428. Principle and scope of section :—It is one of the oldest and plainest rules of justice and common sense that no man shall sit as a Judge in a case in which he has any interest—Bholanath, 2 Cal. 23. It is an unshaken doctrine of human jurisprudence that no man can be judge in his own cause (Nemo debet esse iudex in propria sua causa). This maxim rests not upon any suspicion as to the honesty of the Judge or his capacity for the purposes of adjudication, but it rests upon a thing higher than the technicalities of law. It rests upon the philosophy that says that human beings are after all human beings, and with all honour due to the honesty and integrity of the Judges, they are not to hear cases in which they are themselves concerned (Q. E. v. Pohpl, 13 All 171 (174).

"The law in laying down this strict rule had regard not so much to the motives which might be supposed to bias the Judge as to the susceptibilities of the litigant parties. One important object, at all events, is to clear away everything which might engender suspicion and distrust in the tribunal and to promote the feelings of confidence in the administration of justice which is so essential to social order and security"—Serjeant v. Dale, 2 Q.B.D. 558 (567).

A Magistrate who is disqualified under this section to try a case is not a Court of 'competent jurisdiction' in respect to that case, and if he tries that case, the defect is not cured by sec 537—Sudhama v. Q. E., 23 Cal. 328. Nor will the disqualification be cured by any consent or waiver on the part of the accused—Shamdasani, 53 Bom. 716, 1929 Cr.C. 433 (434); Bholanath, 2 Cal. 23, Bisheshar, 32 All. 635; Faiz Muhammad, 9 N.L.R. 81, 14 Cr.L.J. 385 (387); 7 A.L.J. 749, 1 S.L.R. 98; 4 Lah.L.J. 452. Even the absence of bona fides on the part of the objector does not affect the question of the disqualification of the Magistrate in trying the case—Shamdasani, supra.

'Try or commit any case'—The expression 'try any case' is wide enough to include any stage of a judicial proceeding in which the guilt or innocence of the accused is finally adjudicated upon—Bhofraj, 5 S.L.R. 137, 13 Cr.L.J. 30. Thus, he cannot hear an appeal in the case. The word 'try' is comprehensive enough to include the hearing of an appeal—Nistarini v. A. C. Ghosh, 23 Cal. 44, 17 C.W.N. xii, Inayat Hussain, 1899 A.W.N. 74, 4 Lah.L.J. 452, Faiz Muhammad, 9 N.L.R. 81, 14 Cr.L.J. 385 (386); 1 S.L.R. 98. He is also debarred from interfering in revision in the case—1905 U.B.R. (Cr.P.C.) 37. He cannot direct further inquiry under sec. 436—Bhofraj, 5 S.L.R. 137, 13 Cr.L.J. 30 (Contra—27 All. 25).

But a Magistrate can initiate proceedings even though he is personally interested in the case—Bholanath Sen, 2 Cal. 23. Though a Magistrate is disqualified under this section from trying a case, on account of personal interest, he is not, on that account, debarred from granting a permission to another Magistrate to proceed with the case—Fateh Bahadur, 20 All. 181. The Magistrate is not debarred from taking cognizance of the case even though he has taken some part in the initiation of the proceedings—Oziullah v. Beni Madhab, 50 Cal. 135.

If a Magistrate considers that he is disqualified from trying a case, and the case is of a petty nature, he ought not to commit it to the Sessions, but should move the District Magistrate to transfer it to some other Magistrate—Emp. v. Ram Jatan, 21 A.L.J. 420, 25 Cr.L.J. 665, A.I.R. 1924 All. 185.

Permission of Appellate Court—Under this section, a Magistrate who is personally interested can try a case with the permission of the Appellate Court. And the Appellate Court can grant the permission if the Magistrate requests permission at the initial stage of the case and before the proceedings are begun—In re Shamdasani, 53 Bom. 716, 1929 Cr.C. 433 (435).

'In which he is a party':—Where a Magistrate while travelling in a railway carriage requested the accused who were his fellow-passengers to desist from smoking, and, on their contemptuously refusing to do so, arrested and subsequently tried and convicted them, it was held that the Magistrate was legally and morally disqualified from exercising his judicial functions in relation to the offences imputed—Venkana, Ratanlal 339. So also, a Magistrate, who was one of the persons obstructed by the accused driving on the wrong side of the road, could not himself try the accused for offences under secs. 28 and 29 of the Bombay Act VII of 1867—Lahana, Ratanlal 321.

1429. Personally interested:—The words 'personally interested' do not imply mere intellectual interest but something of the nature of an expectation of advantage to be gained, or of a loss or some disadvantage to be avoided, by the person who is said to be interested in the case—Cholappa, 8 Bom L.R. 947. Thus, a public officer whose duty it is to see that the law is obeyed cannot, merely by reason of that duty, be said to be personally interested in the prosecution and trial of an offender—In re Ganeshi, 15 All. 192. The words 'personally interested' cannot refer to any remote interest in the matter, but must refer to some particular and immediate personal interest in the case and its result—In re Ganeshi, 15 All. 192. The law does not measure the amount of interest which a Judge possesses. If he has any legal interest in the decision of the question one way, he is disqualified, no matter how small the interest may be—Sergeant v Dale, 2 Q.B.D. 558.

Instances —(1) Taking part in arrest of accused and Police proceedings—Where the Magistrate took an active part in dispersing the unlawful assembly and pursuing the members and arresting them, and subsequently he initiated proceedings against the accused and himself tried and convicted them, it was held that the Magistrate should not have tried the case himself as he had initiated and directed the whole proceedings and could be said to have been personally interested in them—20 Cal. 857. Where the investigation of the Police at the preliminary inquiry was directed by a Magistrate to a considerable degree and where the Magistrate himself traced some of the accused and ordered their arrest, he was disqualified from trying the case—Sadhama v. Q. E., 23 Cal. 328. A Magistrate who takes more than a formal part in a police investigation should not try the case—Nga Po v Emp., 4 Bur L.J. 65, 26 Cr.L.J. 1317; 2 L.B.R. 200.

(2) Magistrate being a witness:—A Magistrate cannot, in a case in which he is the sole Judge of law and fact, be a competent witness. The trial and conviction by a Magistrate of an accused in a case wherein he (the Magistrate) is himself a witness, is illegal—Donnelly, 2 Cal. 405; Mangni Lal, 20 Cr.L.J. 45 (Pat.), 48 I.C. 685; 1904 P.L.R. 21. A Magistrate cannot import matters (e.g., personal knowledge) into his judgment not stated on oath before the Court in the presence of the accused. If he does so, he makes himself a 'witness in the case, and renders himself incompetent to try it—Mangni Lal, 20 Cr.L.J. 45 (Pat.); Grish Chander, 20 Cal. 857. A Magistrate who becomes aware of some of the facts in connection with a case by his taking some part, or at any rate by being present, at a search made by the police during the investigation, should not try the case but transfer it to some other Magistrate—5 C.W.N. 864. An officer should not try an offence under sec. 174 I. P. C., in his capacity as a Magistrate, when the offence has been committed before him in his capacity as a Settlement Officer—Sukhari, 2 All. 405. But if during the course of the trial, the Magistrate himself made a statement on oath which he recorded, and permitted himself to be cross-examined and re-examined, it was held that he was not incompetent to try the case—Emp. v. Nanhe, 27 All. 33.

(3) Pecuniary interest:—If a Judge has any pecuniary interest, however small, in the result of the proceedings, it is against public policy that he should take part in the proceedings; he is disqualified from trying the case and the Court will not inquire whether he was really biased or likely to be biased—Allison v General Council of Medical Education, [1894] 1 Q.B. 750: 70 L.T. 471; In re Shamdasani, 53 Bom. 716, 1929 Cr. C. 433 (434); Rodrigues, 20 Bom 502. Thus, a Magistrate who is a shareholder of the Company against whose auditors a prosecution is started under sec 282 Companies Act, must be deemed to be personally interested, and cannot try the case—In re Shamdasani, supra. A Magistrate who is a shareholder of the company which is the complainant in the case is disqualified from trying the case. In such cases, it is not necessary to inquire whether there was any real or substantial ground for suspecting bias on his part—In re Rodrigues, 20 Bom 502. See also Bholanath, 2 Cal. 23. A Magistrate should not entertain a criminal case in which persons indebted to him are concerned either as complainants or as accused—C. P. Cr. Cir., Part II, No. 59.

(4) Judge or Magistrate being complainant—It is impossible to allow the same Judge or the Magistrate to be the complainant and the Court. If a Sessions Judge makes a complaint under sec 476A, he cannot hear an appeal in the case. The accused is entitled to a decision from a Judge who approaches the case with an absolutely open mind—Sai v Emp, 8 Lah. 496, 29 Cr L J 6 (7).

(5) Magistrate being servant of complainant:—A Magistrate who is a servant of the corporation is deemed to have such an interest in the result of a prosecution by the corporation as to disqualify him from trying the case—Wood v. Corporation of Calcutta, 7 Cal 322; Nobin v Chairman, 10 Cal 194.

(6) Magistrate being master of complainant—The mere fact that the Magistrate is the master of the complainant who is complaining on his own account merely, does not deprive the Magistrate of his jurisdiction, though in such a case it should generally be expedient for him to refer the complainant to some other Magistrate—Basappa, 9 Bom 172. But where the complainant was the servant of the Magistrate, and it appeared that the Magistrate's wife was driving in the dog-cart for passing which the accused was charged with rash and negligent driving, the Magistrate was held to be personally interested and ought not to try the case—Q. E. v. Sahadev, 14 Bom. 572.

(7) Magistrate being Agent of Court of Wards :—The mere fact that the District Magistrate is, in his capacity as Collector, concerned in the management of an estate under the Court of Wards, does not disqualify him from trying a case of theft arising out of a dispute between the landlord and tenant in an estate under the management of the Court of Wards—Amrit Majhi, 46 Cal 854, Baktu v. Kali Prosad, 28 Cal 297. But where the manager of an estate under the Court of Wards, who was also the Sub-divisional Officer, drew up proceedings as Magistrate under sec 145 against one who disputed the possession of a piece of land, in which the estate claimed an interest, and the Magistrate refused an application for transfer of the case, it was held that the Magistrate showed a lack of appreciation of ordinary principles which should guide judicial officers in matters of this kind—9 C.W.N. cccxvi.

(8) Magistrate being friend of a party :—If a Magistrate is in close business or friendly relationship with a party, it is on the whole undesirable that he should take part in hearing a case in which the interests of that person are gravely affected. Thus, a Magistrate is disqualified from trying a case, if the complainant during the pendency of the case has paid several visits to him and supplied him with servants and eatables. But the fact that on only one occasion the person at whose instance the complaint was made visited the Magistrate, and the visit was of a wholly innocent nature paid in the regular course of the Magistrate's social duties, would not disqualify the Magistrate—In re S. Mukhtar, 8 Pat 575 (F B), A I R 1929 Pat 151 (153).

1430. Sanctioning or directing the prosecution :—See the Illustration. A Magistrate who takes a mere formal part in the prosecution cannot be said to direct the prosecution and is not therefore deprived of his jurisdiction in the case. Thus, a Magistrate who simply issued process as officer-in-charge of the Sudder sub-division is not precluded from hearing an appeal in the case—Dasarath Rai, 36 Cal 869. Where a Magistrate under the Excise Act lays before the Inspector of Police certain information regarding the conduct of the accused in his dealings in opium and directs the said Inspector to make an inquiry on the basis of that information, and a prosecution is subsequently instituted in the ordinary course by the investigating Police Officer, held that the Magistrate cannot be said to have such connection with the proceedings antecedent to the prosecution as would debar him from trying the accused—Babu Ram, 15 Cr.L.J. 17, 11 A.L.J. 852. Whether a given case falls within the provisions of this section is a question of fact to be determined by the circumstances of each case. Where a Deputy Tahsildar made a report to the Tahsildar about certain offences and the Tahsildar in his turn reported the matter to the Deputy Magistrate, who authorised the Tahsildar to prosecute the accused, and the Tahsildar then lodged a complaint before the Deputy Magistrate who tried the case, held that the Deputy Magistrate was not disqualified, since he merely authorised the prosecution and not directed it. A distinction should be drawn between authorisation and direction of prosecution—Chenchu Reddi, 24 Mad. 238. If a District Magistrate or other executive head of a district or department orders a prosecution because the matter before him demands elucidation by judicial inquiry, this section would not be applicable, but where the officer ordering the prosecution has satisfied his own mind that the accused is guilty, then clearly he should not try the accused. Thus, where a Forest Officer asked the Deputy Commissioner to give a warning to the accused for having made a false report to that officer, but the Deputy Commissioner directed prosecution of the accused under sec. 182 I. P. C. on the ground that he was satisfied that there was a clear case of a false report deliberately made, held that the Deputy Commissioner was disqualified from hearing the case as Magistrate—Faiz Muhammed, 9 N.L.R. 81, 14 Cr L.J. 385 (386, 387). Where the prosecution is by a Town Committee, the mere fact that the Magistrate had as the President of the Town Committee sanctioned the prosecution cannot be said to give the Magistrate any personal interest in the proceedings, and the Magistrate is competent to try the case himself. But nevertheless it is not desirable that he should try the case when other Magistrates are available—Gopi Chand v K E., 1 Rang 517, 25 Cr L.J. 273, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 87. A Sessions Judge is not prohibited in law from hearing an appeal from a conviction in a case in which, as an Insolvency Judge, on the application of a creditor, he had allowed the prosecution to proceed—Srikrishna v Emp., 21 A.L.J. 90. But where a District Magistrate who as Inspector of Factories ordered an inquiry to be made in the same capacity directed the prosecution of the accused for an offence under the Factories Act, he was disqualified from trying the case—Lorinda, 1 Lah 35, 21 Cr L.J. 389. Where a Cantonment Magistrate in his capacity as secretary of the Cantonment Committee ordered the prosecution of the accused in respect of an alleged building in contravention of the cantonment rules, and proceeded to try the case, held that the case ought to be transferred to another Magistrate—Hira Lal v Emp., 20 A.L.J. 911. A Magistrate, who upon information furnished to him directs the issue of a warrant under sec. 6 of the Gambling Act, is disqualified from trying the case—Chin Pin, 13 Bur L.T. 154, 61 I.C. 835, 22 Cr L.J. 451. Where after the close of a trial, the trying Magistrate orders the Police to send up a charge-sheet in respect of a witness for the prosecution, and upon the Police doing so, tries that person and convicts him, held that the Magistrate having directed the prosecution is not competent to hold the trial—Gundoo, 23 Bom L.R. 842, 22 Cr L.J. 603, 62 I.C. 875.

1431. Explanation.—Under the Explanation, a Magistrate is not deemed to be a party or personally interested in any case by reason of the fact that he is a Municipal Commissioner or otherwise concerned therein in a public capacity. But if in addition to a connection of that sort, he directs the prosecution of a person for an offence, he is disqualified from trying the case, not by reason of the fact that he is a Municipal Commissioner or publicly connected with the case, but by reason of the further fact that he has constituted himself the prosecutor—Bhojraj, 5 S.L.R. 137, 13 Cr.L.J. 30; 1899 A.W.N. 74; Gundoo, 23 Bom.L.R. 842, 22 Cr.L.J. 603, 62 I.C. 875. Thus, the mere fact that the Magistrate might happen to be a Municipal Commissioner does not necessarily disqualify him from holding a trial in which some Municipal matter was involved. But it is a very different matter when it is found that the Magistrate is practically one of the prosecutors and the Judge—Kharak Chand v. Tarack, 10 Cal 1030. A Municipal Commissioner in his capacity as such Commissioner had invited the attention of the Executive Officer of the Municipality to the manner in which a certain Bye-law of the Municipality was being disregarded by the accused. The Executive Officer called the attention of the Health Officer to the matter and the Health officer instituted the prosecution after satisfying himself that there were good prima facie grounds for believing that the Bye-law was being broken and that the interests of the public health required its enforcement. The case was tried by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates of which the Municipal Commissioner was a member, and ended in a conviction. Held, that the trial and conviction were not illegal, because the Municipal Commissioner was not a party to the prosecution nor did he cause it to be instituted—Nanoo v. Emp., 24 Cr.L.J. 135 (All). The mere fact that the Magistrate is the Vice-President of the Municipality and Chairman of the Managing Committee does not disqualify him from trying an offence against the Municipality. But if he has taken any part in promoting the prosecution, as for instance, by concurring in sanctioning it at a meeting of the Managing Committee or otherwise, he would be disqualified—Q. E v Pherozsha, 18 Bom 422, Mahammad Baksh, 10 Lah 718, 30 Cr.L.J. 698 (699), Fazl Ilahi v Municipal Committee, 1896 P.R. 5. So also, if the Magistrate is the Vice-President of a Municipal Committee and was present at the meeting in which the resolution was passed, for the disobedience of which the accused is prosecuted, the Magistrate is debarred from trying the case—Nurkishan, 23 Cr.L.J. 704, A.I.R. 1922 Lah 72. A Magistrate does not, by reason of his being a member of a sub-committee of a Municipal Board, become personally interested so as to be disentitled to try the accused for an offence against the Municipal Board—Mohan Lal, 27 All. 25. But if he presides at a meeting of the Municipal Board which directs the prosecution of the accused, he becomes disqualified—Deendayal, 14 N.L.R. 14; Bhojraj, 5 S.L.R. 137, 13 Cr.L.J. 30; Rama Rao, 20 Cr.L.J. 244, 49 I.C. 916. It may be that he did not speak or vote at the meeting but the fact remains that he attended the meeting where the question was debated and the prosecution ordered, and he has therefore placed himself personally to some extent in the position of a prosecutor—Bhojraj, 5 S.L.R. 137. Where the Municipal Committee resolved to institute criminal proceedings against the accused and directed the Secretary to take necessary steps, and the Secretary forwarded a copy of the resolution to the Joint Magistrate (who was no other than the Secretary himself) who took proceedings and tried the accused, it was held that the trial was not only illegal but a mere show—Basant, 1883 A.W.N. 181. The District Magistrate is not disqualified from hearing the appeal merely because he happens to be the Chairman of the Municipal Board—Inayat Hussain, 1899 A.W.N. 74. Contra—23 Cal. 44 and Eragada, 15 Mad. 83, where it was held that the very fact that the Chairman of the Municipality was the Magistrate, disqualified him from trying the offence, and the Explanation did not apply to his case.

In Nobin v. Chairman, 10 Cal. 194, a distinction has been drawn between a salaried officer of a Corporation and an Honorary Officer, and it has been held that the Explanation does not apply to a salaried officer. A salaried officer of the Corporation is, by reason of the very fact that he is a servant of the Corporation, precluded from trying any Municipal case as a Magistrate. But a gentleman who without remuneration is merely discharging a public and honorary office, and who has no personal interest in the proceedings of the Municipality, may well be supposed to be free from that bias which the jealousy of the law presumes in other persons more immediately interested.

'Concerned therein in a public capacity'—A Magistrate in charge of opium and excise administration of a district is not personally interested in the observation of the provisions of the Opium Act, merely because it is his duty to see the law relating to sale of opium enforced and maintained in his district; he is therefore not precluded from exercising jurisdiction in respect of offences against the said Act—In re Ganesht, 15 All 192; 5 A.L.J. 357. A District Magistrate is not precluded under this section from trying an offence under the Police Act, merely because he is the head of the Police—Narain Singh, 22 All. 340. The fact that the District Magistrate is also the District Superintendent of Police does not of itself disqualify him from trying or inquiring into cases investigated by the Police of his district—2 L.B.R. 209. But if the Magistrate in his public capacity directs the prosecution, he is disqualified. Thus, where the Magistrate as president of the octroi sub-committee directed the prosecution of an accused for evading the payment of octroi, the Magistrate was debarred from trying the case, even though the accused had consented to be so tried—Bisheshar, 32 All 635.

1432. Local inspection.—Under the Code of 1882, it was held that a Magistrate making a personal inspection of the locus in quo where the offence was committed, made himself a witness in the case and thereby rendered himself incompetent to try the case—Q. E. v. Manikam, 19 Mad 263, Grish Chunder v. Q. E., 20 Cal 857; Haru Kishore v. Abdul, 21 Cal. 920. But now the law has been changed by the addition of the latter part of the Explanation.

A Magistrate is competent to inspect personally a locality in order to test the connection of the evidence and the plans of the locality submitted in the case. Such an inspection would not disqualify him from trying the case—Hansa Singh, 1901 P.R. 13, Babbon v. K. E., 37 Cal 34 (355). Where the Magistrate inspected the locus in quo and stated i in Council, or on the Local Government, may be exercised from time to time as occasion requires."

But this section was unnecessary, because its provisions are covered by section 14 of the General Clauses Act. The old section has therefore been omitted and an entirely different section has been framed in its place. "A new section is intended to be inserted, providing for the powers of Judge and Magistrates being exercised by their successors-in-office, and the determination by the Chief Presidency or District Magistrate of the person to be deemed the successor-in-office of a Subordinate Magistrate in cases of doubt"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

A complaint under sec. 476 relating to an offence committed in relation to a proceeding in a Magistrate's Court can be made by the successor-in-office of the Magistrate—Behram v. Crown, 7 Lah 108, 27 Cr.L.J. 776 See Note 1239 under sec 476.

560. A public servant having any duty to perform

Officers concerned in sales not to purchase or bid for property. in connection with the sale of any property under the Code shall not purchase or bid for the property.

561. (1) Notwithstanding anything in this Code,

Special provisions with respect to offence of rape by a husband. no Magistrate except a Chief Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate shall—

(a) take cognizance of the offence of rape where the sexual intercourse was by a man with his wife, or

(b) commit the man for trial for the offence.

(2) And, notwithstanding anything in this Code, if a Chief Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate deems it necessary to direct an investigation by a police-officer, with respect to such an offence as is referred to in sub-section (1), no police-officer of a rank below that of police-inspector shall be employed either to make, or to take part in, the investigation

Clause (a):—Where the offence referred to in this clause was taken cognizance of by the District Magistrate, the fact that the investigation into the offence had been conducted by a subordinate Police-officer was not a material irregularity which would vitiate the proceedings—Mehri, 1895 A.W.N. 9.

561A. Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to Saving of inherent power of High Court limit or affect the inherent power of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary to give effect to any order under this Code, or to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice.

1433A. This section has been added by section 156 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "By this section it is proposed to give statutory recognition to the inherent powers of the High Court—a principle which is already well-recognized"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

"Or otherwise to secure the ends of justice".—"We have slightly elaborated the provisions of this clause. We understand that a High Court has recently held [44 All 401] that it had no power to direct the expunging of objectionable matter from a record. We think it desirable that it should be made clear that this clause is intended to meet such a case"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922) See Note 1214 under sec. 439. Thus, by virtue of the inherent powers conferred on it by this section, the High Court can expunge any objectionable remark from the judgment of a lower Court—Amar Nath v Crown, 5 Lah 476 (481), 26 Cr.L.J 463; Abdul Aziz v. Emp., 25 Cr L J 1245 (Lah.), Benarsi Das v. Crown, 6 Lah. 166, 26 Cr L.J. 1326, Daly, 9 Lah 269, 29 Cr L.J 620, Panchanan v. Upendra, 49 All 254, 27 Cr L J 1407 (1408); Md. Qasam v Anwar Khan, 27 Cr L J. 510 (511), Mahomed Husain, 23 S L R. 432, 30 Cr L J 970. But such power can be exercised only where there is no foundation whatever for the remarks objected to, and not where it is a matter of inference from evidence—Panchanan v. Upendra, supra. The powers under this section should be sparingly used and only in exceptional cases. It is not desirable that the High Court should on the motion of a subordinate Magistrate, expunge remarks made by a lower Appellate Court relating to the conduct of judicial proceedings taken by the said Magistrate—Md. Qasam, supra.

In the exercise of its inherent powers under this section, the High Court cannot pass any order which would conflict with the provisions of the Code. Thus, the High Court has no jurisdiction to make an order for the restoration of attached property, where the application is made beyond the period prescribed in sec 89—In re Gurunath, 26 Bom L R 719, 25 Cr.L.J 1293.

The powers conferred on the High Court under this section are powers which must be found within the Crim Pro Code. This section confers no new powers on the High Court, because the Court cannot, by invoking its inherent powers, extend the powers given to it by statute—Sukh Dev, 1929 Cr. C. 351 (Lah.); Marudayya v Shanmuga, 49 M.L.J. 593. Thus, the High Court has no power to appoint a receiver pending the disposal of a revision petition against an order passed under section 145—Marudayya v Shanmuga Sundara, 49 M.L.J 593. See this case cited in Note 421 under sec. 145.

It has been held in some cases that the words "save as otherwise provided by this Code" in sec. 369, and the words "Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit" in sec. 561A, show that sec. 369 must be read as subject to sec. 561A, and that the latter section is in no way limited or governed by sec. 369. Therefore, the High Court is com-

Magistrate, who shall dispose of the case in manner provided by section 380.

(1A) In any case in which a person is convicted of theft, theft in a building, dishonest misappropriation, cheating, or any other offence under the Indian Penal Code, punishable with not more than two years' imprisonment, and no previous conviction is proved against him, the Court before whom he is so convicted may, if it thinks fit, having regard to the age, character, antecedents or physical or mental condition of the offender and to the trivial nature of the offence or to any extenuating circumstances under which the offence was committed, instead of sentencing him to any punishment, release him after due admonition.

(2) An order under this section may be made by any Appellate Court or by the High Court when exercising its power of revision.

(3) When an order has been made under this section in respect of any offender, the High Court may, on appeal when there is a right of appeal to such Court, or when exercising its powers of revision, set aside such order, and in lieu thereof pass sentence on such offender according to law:

Provided that the High Court shall not under this sub-section inflict a greater punishment than might have been inflicted by the Court by which the offender was convicted.

(4) The provisions of sections 122, 126A and 406A shall, so far as may be, apply in the case of sureties offered in pursuance of the provisions of this section.

Change:—Sub-section (1) has been substantially amended, and sub-sections (2) to (4) have been newly added, by section 157 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The main changes are the following:—“First, this section extends the list of offences on conviction for which a person may be released upon probation; secondly, it is made clear that section 562 does not apply merely to the case of youthful offenders but applies to a wider class of persons; thirdly, the word ‘trivial’ has been omitted; fourthly, the period for which an offender may be released under this section has been extended from one to three years; fifthly, power has been conferred on an Appellate Court or upon a High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction to make an order under section 562; and finally, the High Court has been empowered, either on appeal or in revision, to inflict a sentence of imprisonment in lieu of an order under this section"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1014). Sub-section (1A) has been added by the Cr. P. C. Second Amendment Act XXXVII of 1923. This amendment has been made on the recommendation of the Jail Committee.

1434. Scope and application of section :—Under this section the first offender need not necessarily be a youth; its operations are not limited to juvenile offenders. It applies to persons of advanced age—Tukaram, 2 Bom L.R. 817, Salim, 1916 P.R. 11, 17 Cr.L.J. 254; Pullabhotla, 18 Cr.L.J. 469 (Mad.); K E v Po Thein, 2 L.B.R. 314. The intention of the law is not to make it essential that the offender must be young or that the offence must be trivial in its nature etc., but merely to indicate the lines on which the discretion of the Court should be exercised—K. E. v. Ba Han, 2 L.B.R. 65, 6 C.W.N. ccli.

To enable a Magistrate to apply this section the first essential is that the accused is a first offender, and if he is one, the extenuating circumstances which entitle him to the indulgence of the Court are his age, character and antecedents—Tukaram, 2 Bom L.R. 817. In order to give a Court jurisdiction to release an offender under this section, there must co-exist two conditions, viz., there should be no previous convictions proved and the offence must be one of those specified in the section. If the two conditions are fulfilled, the Court has jurisdiction in the exercise of its discretion to act under the section. But in exercising the discretion the Court must have regard to the points specified in the section, namely the age, character and antecedents of the offender, and to the circumstances under which the offence was committed—K E v. Ba Han, 2 L.B.R. 65. This section is intended to apply to offenders (especially youthful offenders) who without being persons of depraved character may on occasions succumb to sudden temptation, and the legislature very humanely and very properly allows the Magistrate in such cases to give the young man a chance and to deal with him leniently under this section. But where an offence implies a good deal of preparation (e.g., the offence of illicit manufacture of liquor) it cannot be said that it is done in consequence of succumbing to a sudden temptation, and the section should not be applied to such a case—Crown v Sufan Singh, 1916 P.R. 19, 17 Cr.L.J. 310, Emp v Piara Singh, 7 Lah 32, 27 P.L.R. 221. Where a youth of 18 years enticed away a girl, and no attempt was made by him to seduce or ill-treat her, but on the other hand he wished honourably to marry her, held that it was precisely for this sort of case that sec 562 was enacted—Mukhran, 1929 Cr C 658 (All).

This section may be a very valuable section if properly applied, and it may very often happen that a juvenile offender who is sentenced to jail for a short period of imprisonment for a trivial offence may be practically ruined for life, whereas he would be saved by the due application of sec 562. But in passing an order under this section, at least two things are necessary to guard against, viz., danger to the public, and danger to the accused himself. The public must not be led to suppose that all juvenile offenders may commit any crimes that they like without any fear of punishment, because that would be an incentive to criminal parents to initiate their children into a life of crime. And even children themselves being immune from the fear of punishment might be tempted to go astray into the paths of crime. It is obvious therefore that before applying this section one must consider whether there is a good cause for its application or not. If the offence is by no means a simple crime such as is committed by children out of mere thoughtlessness rather than of criminality, but it shows a singular combination of design and ingratitude and a general character of craft and deceit, it would call for a severe punishment indeed, and resort should not be had to the provisions of this section—Daryalal v. Emp., 18 S.L.R. 61, 25 Cr.L.J. 1224. Magistrates should be very careful in applying this section and should not allow themselves to be misled into the use of this section by misplaced leniency and sympathy—Emp. v. Matho, 27 Cr.L.J. 209 (Sind). Thus, the fact that an offender is a lad of 17 years of age is no ground for taking action under this section, if the offence be a hideous and reprehensible one calling for condign and deterrent punishment (e.g. rape upon an infant girl of 5 years)—Sardha Ram, 29 Cr.L.J. 1096 (1097) (Lah.).

Petty squabbles of young persons should be dealt with under this section—Ma Kywe, 4 Bur.L.T. 68, 10 I.C. 772, 12 Cr.L.J. 242. Where the offender is a person of good position in life, he should rather be dealt with under this section than sentenced to whipping—1907 P.W.R. 9. Where the accused was a widow of over 45, and it appeared that in committing the offence (forgery, false personation) she was a puppet in the hands of the other accused, held that this was a case in which the Court instead of sentencing her to imprisonment should release her on her entering into a bond—K. E. v. Kiran Bala, 43 C.L.J. 79, 30 C.W.N. 373, 27 Cr.L.J. 409.

This section applies when no previous conviction is proved against the offender. A previous conviction is a technical bar to an order under this section; but if no such conviction is proved at the trial and an order under this section is passed, a subsequent discovery of a previous conviction is no ground for interference in revision—Emp. v. Partab Narain, 2 O.W.N. 593, 26 Cr.L.J. 1278.

The words in this section are "instead of sentencing him." Therefore where the Magistrate convicted the accused and passed a sentence of imprisonment and fine, and then added: "As the accused is a young man of respectable family, I do not think jail life would be suitable to him. Therefore, under sec. 562 I order him to execute a bond for Rs. 200 etc.," held that the order under sec. 562 was illegal. This section cannot be applied where the Magistrate has not only convicted the accused but has also sentenced him. The order under sec. 562 must be set aside—Misri Lal, 17 A.L.J. 426, 50 I.C. 1000 (1001), 20 Cr.L.J. 392. In another case, where the Magistrate fined the accused as well as passed an order under sec. 562, the High Court set aside the order as to fine—Karim Bakhsh, 10 Lah. 722, 30 Cr.L.J. 46 (47).

1435. Sub-section (1):—Under the old law this sub-section applied only where the offender was convicted of one of certain offences under the Penal Code, and not of an offence under any other law e.g. an offence under the Indian Railways Act—1 N.L.R. 139; or an offence under the Excise Act—Sujan Singh, 1916 P.R. 19, 17 Cr.L.J. 310 This restriction has now been removed.

The old sub-sec (1) could not apply where the offender was punishable with more than 2 years' imprisonment. Thus, it could not apply where the accused was convicted of criminal breach of trust—7 Bur.L.R. 14; or of receiving stolen property—Atmaram, 2 Bom.L.R. 343; or of lurking house trespass—Maruthi, 15 C.P.L.R. 11, or of using as genuine a forged document—17 Bom.L.R. 921, or of house breaking—Pullabholla, 18 Cr.L.J. 469 (Mad.); or of voluntarily causing grievous hurt—Abdul Lal, 4 L.B.R. 150; or of aggravated form of cheating under sec. 420 I. P. C.—Nga Pyi, 3 L.B.R. 95, Rab Natwaz, 1 Lah. 612; 41 Mad 533; or to an offence under sec. 381 I. P. C.—Bapu Rao, 4 N.L.R. 18. All these cases will now fall under the present sub-section (1)

No order can be made under this section where the accused has been convicted in the trial of an offence not falling under this section as well as of an offence falling under this section—2 Weir 731.

Who can pass order—An order under this section can be passed not only by the Court which convicted the accused but also by the Appellate Court, as well as by the High Court in revision—24 All 306; 29 Mad. 567; Abdul Kadar v. Monmohan, 25 C.W.N 720, 23 Cr L.J. 235 This is now expressly provided in the new sub-section (2)

1436. Bond.—The bond to be taken should be not only to keep the peace and to be of good behaviour, but to appear and receive sentence when called upon, and in the meantime to keep the peace and be of good behaviour—Q. E v. Yessu, 2 Bom L.R. 112. But it is not competent to a Magistrate to direct the accused to appear in Court on a fixed day to receive sentence; all he can do is to release the accused on probation of good conduct for a certain period and to direct him to appear and receive sentence when called upon during such period, if he does not observe the conditions of the bond—Q E v Rama, 2 Bom L.R. 702

Bond by minor:—It was held that the third proviso to section 118, providing for bond of minors to be executed by their sureties, applied only to bonds under that section, and did not apply to bonds of first offenders released under this section. A bond under this section had to be executed by the minor himself and not by his sureties (Cf the words 'on his entering into a bond')—4 L.B.R. 12 (overruling 2 L.B.R. 137). But this is no longer good law in view of the new section 514B.

Inability to furnish security.—If an accused person is ordered to give security under this section and he fails to do so, he should not be detained in prison till the expiration of the period for which security is to be furnished, but the proper course is for the Magistrate, before passing an order under this section, to ascertain whether the accused is likely to be able to give security immediately or within a reasonable time. If he fails to give security within a reasonable time, the Magistrate should pass a sentence which should be only nominal—Tun Gaung, 3 L.B.R. 2, 2 Cr.L.J. 374; Nasu Mea v. K. E., 2 Rang. 360 (361), 26 Cr.L.J. 285. The Magistrate should not imprison the accused under sec. 123, on failure to give security under sec. 562. Sec. 123 specifically applies only to sections 106 and 118 and not to sec. 562—Nasu Meah v. K. E., 2 Rang. 360 (361).

1437. Proviso :—Power of 2nd or 3rd Class Magistrate .—It is not open to a Second Class Magistrate, who has not been specially empowered to exercise jurisdiction under sub-section (1) of the section, to take proceedings under that sub-section, although he was invested by a notification issued under the 1892 Code with all the powers specified in the fourth schedule of that Code—2 Weir 731. If a Second Class Magistrate not empowered under this section is of opinion that the case is a fit one for the exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) of section 562, he should record his opinion to that effect and submit the case to a First Class Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate for orders—Crown v. Jawali, 5 Lah 36 (37), 25 Cr.L.J. 1124. The same remarks apply to third class Magistrates.

Power of the Magistrate to whom proceedings are submitted—See notes under sec. 380.

Joint trial of young and aged offenders :—Where the first accused aged nearly 50 and the second accused a boy of 11, were charged of theft before a Second Class Magistrate, and the Magistrate sent the case of both the accused to a First Class Magistrate so that the second accused might be dealt with under sec. 562, it was held that the Second Class Magistrate should have disposed of the case of the first accused according to law without submitting the case to the First Class Magistrate, and that he should have submitted the case of the second accused only—Q. E. v. Yessu, 2 Bom.L.R. 112. Under the present law, the case of the aged offender also falls under this section.

1438. Sub-section (1A) :—The offences enumerated in this sub-section are the same as those mentioned in the old section. It is restricted to offences under the Indian Penal Code, and does not apply to an offence under any other law, e.g. an offence under the Indian Railways Act—John Scott, 1 N.L.R. 139; or an offence under the Excise Act—1916 P.R. 19.

Again, the benefit of this sub-section is not extended to the aggravated forms of the offences mentioned herein. Thus, when this sub-section speaks of theft, dishonest misappropriation or cheating, it must be construed to mean theft etc. in its simple form, punishable respectively under secs. 379, 403 and 417 I. P. C., and does not include the aggravated forms of those offences. The offence of cheating means simple cheating not the aggravated form of it under sec. 420 I. P. C.—Nga Pyi, 3 Cr.L.J. 21, 3 L.B.R. 95 (F.B.); 41 Mad. 533; Rab Nawaz, 1 Lah 612; Deva Kantha, 5 P.L.J. 267, 21 Cr.L.J. 468. The word 'theft' can only mean simple theft; otherwise it would not have been followed by the words 'theft in a building' as well. A servant found guilty of theft and convicted under sec. 381 I. P. C. is not entitled to the benefit of this clause, as theft by servant is not one of the offences specified herein. It is an evasion of law to treat an aggravated form of offence as an ordinary offence and thus introduce a different jurisdiction or a lower scale of punishment—Bapu Rao, 4 N.L.R. 18, 7 Cr.L.J. 319. But the Allahabad High Court holds that the words 'dishonest misappropriation' and 'cheating' apply to and cover those offences in all their forms; thus 'cheating' covers secs 418, 419 and 420 I. P. C., and 'criminal misappropriation' includes offences under sections 404 and 405 I. P. C.; otherwise the words are a mere surplusage, because these offences are not punishable with more than two years' imprisonment. The words of a Statute should be given an extended meaning of which they are reasonably susceptible, when a restricted meaning would reduce those words to a mere surplusage—Har Narain v Ramji, 12 A.L.J. 465, 15 Cr.L.J. 375. The Nagpur Court holds the same view in Emp. v Jal Lal, 24 Cr.L.J. 251, A I R 1923 Nag. 158

This sub-section also speaks of any other offence punishable with not more than two years' imprisonment. In applying this sub-section to those offences, the term of imprisonment and not the nature of the offences is the test. If the offence is punishable with not more than two years' imprisonment, the clause may be applied, even though the offence be a serious one. Thus a boy of 18 years who attempted to cause hurt with a dangerous weapon may be dealt with under this sub-section, because the attempt to cause hurt is punishable with 18 months, though the offence of causing hurt itself is punishable with 3 years—Kra Pru Aung, 3 L.B.R. 30

The words "the Court before whom he is so convicted" occurring in sub-section (1A) should not be read as controlled by the proviso to sub-section (1), so that it is not necessary that the Magistrate passing an order under sub-section (1A) should be a first class Magistrate or a second class Magistrate specially empowered. Therefore an ordinary Magistrate of the second class who has convicted an accused under section 279 I P Code can order his release after due admonition—Murlidhar v Mahboob Khan, 47 All 353, 26 Cr.L.J. 624. But the Bombay High Court holds that the proviso to sub-section (1) governs the whole section, and is therefore applicable to sub-section (1A), so that a 3rd class Magistrate is not competent to release an offender after due admonition under sub-section (1A)—Emp v. Ranchhod, 27 Bom L.R. 1019, 26 Cr.L.J. 1461, A I R 1925 Bom 479

Distinct conviction must be recorded —Where the charge is in the alternative either of theft or of retaining stolen property, and the Magistrate while convicting the accused does not say of which of those offences he convicts the accused, held that in the absence of a conviction for theft, the Magistrate is not competent to pass an order under this sub-section—Bhagwant Gansh, 1 Bom L.R. 857

Sub-section (2) —Under sub-section (2), an appellate Court pass an order releasing the accused on probation of good conduct,

Where the High Court, on an appeal from a conviction and sentence by the Presidency Magistrate, ordered that the accused be released on entering into a bond, but the accused failed to execute the bond, the punishment originally awarded by the Presidency Magistrate would not stand, (because that sentence had been already cancelled by the High Court) but the Presidency Magistrate should treat the accused as a person who was convicted but not sentenced to punishment and is again produced before his Court for the purpose of a suitable punishment being awarded—In re Badsha, 21 L.W. 40, 26 Cr.L.J. 683, A.J.R. 1925 Mad 496.

1439. Appeal and revision—An appeal lies from an order under this section releasing a convict on his entering into a bond—Emp. v. Manohar, 1904 P.R. 24; Bahadur v. Ismail, 29 C.W.N 151, 52 Cal. 463, 26 Cr.L.J. 455. And the appeal may be preferred even after the expiry of the period of the bond—Hayata v Emp., 1917 P.R. 20, 18 Cr.L.J. 401. An appeal will lie to the Sessions judge from an order of a Magistrate of the first class passed under this section in a summary trial—Emp. v. Hira Lal, 46 All 828 (see this case cited under sec. 414).

So also, the High Court in revision can set aside the conviction and the order demanding security, even though the convicts have not moved the High Court to exercise that power—Radha Kishen, 67 P.L.R 1912, 13 Cr.L.J. 476, Chhaju Mal, 1914 P.L.R. 21. But unless the order passed by the Magistrate under this section is clearly mistaken or injudicious or amounts to a failure of justice, the High Court will not interfere in revision—Afuridhar v. Mahboob, 47 All 353, 26 Cr.L.J. 624. Where the Magistrate has passed an order of release after taking into consideration all the relevant circumstances of the case, the High Court will not interfere in revision, unless a strong case has been made out justifying such interference—Kesho Ram, 28 Cr.L.J. 255 (256) (Lah.). The High Court is reluctant to interfere with an order of a Magistrate passed under this section in the exercise of his discretionary jurisdiction—Parlab Narain, 2 O.W.N 593, 26 Cr.L.J. 1278; Abdul v Crown, 1910 P.W.R 19, 11 Cr.L.J. 389, 6-I.C. 639. In the latter case the High Court refused to interfere, even though the order had been passed in a case to which this section was wholly inapplicable.

It was held under the old law that in setting aside in revision the order under this section the High Court could not substitute in its place a sentence of imprisonment, because no 'sentence' had been passed by the Lower Court (the order under sec. 582 not being a 'sentence'), and the provisions of sec. 439 as to enhancement of sentence did not apply—Emp. v. Bhasite, 37 All. 31, 12 A.L.J. 1244, 16 Cr.L.J. 43. If the Appellate or Revisional Court considered that any sentence should be passed upon the accused, it could order a retrial—1911 P.R. 16; 37 All. 31. But the new sub-section (3) now empowers the High Court, in appeal or in revision, to pass sentence on the accused after setting aside the order as to security—Emp. v. Kesar, 24 A.L.J. 228, 27 Cr.L.J. 373.

563. (1) If the Court which convicted the offender, or a Court which could have dealt with the offender in respect of his original offence, is satisfied that the offender has failed to observe any of the conditions of his recognizance, it may issue a warrant for his apprehension.

(2) An offender, when apprehended on any such warrant, shall be brought forthwith before the Court issuing the warrant, and such Court may either remand him in custody until the case is heard or admit him to bail with a sufficient surety conditioned on his appearing for sentence. Such Court may, after hearing the case, pass sentence.

564. (1) The Court, before directing the release of an offender under section 562, sub-section (1), shall be satisfied that the offender or his surety (if any) has a fixed place of abode or regular occupation in the place for which the Court acts or in which the offender is likely to live during the period named for the observance of the conditions.

(2) Nothing in this section or in sections 562 and 563 shall affect the provisions of section 31 of the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897.

The words "sub-section (1)" have been added by the Repealing and Amending Act, VII of 1924 "This is intended to make it clear that section 564 (1) does not relate to the release of an offender under sub-section (1A) of section 562"—Gazette of India, 1924, Part V, page 59

Previously convicted offenders.

Order for notifying address of previously convicted offender

565. (1) When any person having been convicted—

(a) by a Court in British India of an offence punishable under section 215, section 489A, section 489B, section 489C, or section 489D, of the Indian Penal Code, or of any offence punishable under Chapter XII or Chapter XVII of that Code, with imprisonment of either description for a term of three years or upwards, or

- (b) by a Court or Tribunal in the territories of any Prince or State in India acting under the general or special authority of the Governor General in Council or of any Local Government, of any offence which would, if committed in British India, have been punishable under any of the aforesaid sections or Chapters of the Indian Penal Code with like imprisonment for a like term, is again convicted of any offence punishable under any of those sections or Chapters with imprisonment for a term of three years or upwards by a High Court, Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class, * * * such Court or Magistrate may, if it or he thinks fit, at the time of passing sentence of transportation or imprisonment on such person, also order that his residence and any change of or absence from such residence after release be notified as hereinafter provided for a term not exceeding five years from the date of the expiration of such sentence.

(2) If such conviction is set aside on appeal or otherwise, such order shall become void.

(3) The Local Government may make rules to carry out the provisions of this section relating to the notification of residence or change of or absence from residence by released convicts.

(4) An order under this section may also be made by an Appellate Court or by the High Court when exercising its powers of revision.

(5) Any person against whom an order has been made under this section and who refuses or neglects to comply with any rule so made shall be deemed within the meaning of section 176 of the Indian Penal Code to have omitted to give a notice required for the purpose of preventing the commission of an offence.

(6) Any person charged with a breach of any such rule may be tried by a Magistrate of competent jurisdiction in the district in which the place last notified by him as his place of residence is situated.

Change:—This section has been almost redrafted by section 158 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The main changes introduced are the following:—“Firstly, it extends the list of offences after a conviction for which a person may be required to notify his residence and subsequent changes of residence; secondly, on the analogy of section 75 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1910, provision has been made for previous conviction before tribunals of Native States which exercise their jurisdiction under the general or special authority of the Government of India or the Local Government, thirdly, all first class Magistrates, in place of those specially empowered, have been authorised to pass orders under this section; fourthly, the rule-making power has been extended to cover the provision of this section relating to the notification of residence, or change of residence, or absence from residence of released convicts, fifthly, the punishment of a breach of the rules made under this section has been enhanced, and lastly, Courts of Appeal or revision have been empowered to pass orders under this section”—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

1440. Application of section.—This section applies when the accused has been previously convicted, the passing of an order under this section on a first offender is illegal—8 M.L.T. 352

This section does not apply where either the previous or the subsequent conviction is for an attempt to commit the offence under Chap. XII or XVII of the I. P. C.—Harnam, 1907 P.R. 17, 6 Cr.L.J. 378

This section does not apply where the accused, upon the subsequent conviction, is sentenced to whipping—35 Bom. 137. An order under this section can be passed only when the accused is sentenced to transportation or imprisonment

This section does not apply where the subsequent conviction is a technical one. Where a person is found only technically guilty of theft, it is absurd to make his conviction for such a trifling offence the occasion for a long period of Police supervision under this section—Jawahir, 4 P.L.R. 1914, 15 Cr.L.J. 183

Where the previous conviction of the accused is set aside on appeal, though on technical grounds, the accused cannot be called an old offender and an order of restriction cannot be passed under this section on a subsequent conviction—Nga Po v. K. E., 3 Rang. 156, 26 Cr.L.J. 1344

Under the old law, this section did not apply where the previous conviction had been in a Native State, even though the law of that State was identical in terms with the Indian Penal Code—Ghasia Telu, 1 N.L.R. 137. But now this section does apply to such a case. See clause (b) which has been newly added

Under the old law, a first class Magistrate could not pass orders under this section unless he was specially authorised by the Local Government to do so—Crown v. Dino, 8 S.L.R. 340, 16 Cr.L.J. 469, 29 I.C. 101. Under the present law, all first class Magistrates can pass orders under this section.

Previous conviction need not be specified in charge:—An order under this section is not such punishment as is meant by the words of sec. 221. Therefore the provisions of sec. 221 (7) do not apply to an order under this section, and such an order can be legally passed without the previous conviction on which it is based having been mentioned in the charge. The omission is a mere irregularity cured by sec. 537—Jhagroo, 9 N.L.R. 88, 14 Cr.L.J. 390.

1441. Notification of residence:—Change of residence:—As long as a man retains his residence in the same place, his temporary absence from home for a day or two does not require notification. Whether he retains his residence must always be a question of fact, but provided a man leaves his family and household effects in the house in which he was residing, he would ordinarily be considered to retain his residence there. Where all that was proved was that the accused was absent from the notified residence for a single night, held that there was nothing to indicate that the residence itself was changed, and it was not necessary that he should notify such temporary absence for a single night—Naddi Chengadu, 40 Mad. 789. But under the present law, absence from residence must also be notified.

1442. Power of appellate Court:—Under the old law, it was held that an Appellate Court could not pass an order under this section, where the original Court did not or could not do so—Crown v. Dino, 8 S.L.R. 340. But now sub-section (4) gives such power to the Appellate Court and to the High Court in revision.

1443. Punishment:—Under the old law it was held that any person refusing or neglecting to comply with the rules made under sub-section (3) was punishable as if he had committed an offence under the first part (and not second part) of section 176 I. P. C.—Bhola, 1 N.L.R. 133; Husein Beg, 31 Mad. 548. Under the present sub-section (5) the use of the words "notice required for the prevention of commission of an offence" show that the punishment will henceforth be under the second part of sec. 176 I. P. C. In other words, the present section has enhanced the punishment.

ORDINANCE No. I of 1930.

[19th April, 1930.]

An Ordinance to supplement the ordinary criminal law in Bengal.

Whereas an emergency has arisen which makes it necessary to supplement the ordinary criminal law in Bengal

NOW THEFORE, in exercise of the power conferred by section 72 of the Government of India Act, the Governor-General is pleased to make and promulgate the following Ordinance:—

1. (1) This Ordinance may be called the Bengal Criminal Law Short title and extent Amendment Ordinance, 1930

(2) It extends to the whole of Bengal

2. (1) Where, in the opinion of the Local Government, there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person—
Power of Local Government to deal with certain suspects,

(i) has acted, is acting or is about to act in contravention of the provisions of the Indian Arms Act, 1878, or of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, or

(ii) has committed, is committing or is about to commit any offence specified in the First Schedule, or

(iii) has acted, is acting or is about to act with a view to interfere by violence or by threat of violence with the administration of justice;

the Local Government, if it is satisfied that such person is a member, or is being controlled or instigated by a member, of any association of which the objects or methods include the doing of any of such acts or the commission of any of such offences, may, by order in writing, give all or any of the following directions, namely, that such person—

(a) shall notify his residence and any change of residence to such authority as may be specified in the order,

(b) shall report himself to the police in such manner and at such periods as may be so specified;

(c) shall conduct himself in such manner or abstain from such acts as may be so specified,

(d) shall reside or remain in any area so specified,

(e) shall not enter, reside in, or remain in any area so specified,

(f) shall be committed to custody in jail and may at any time add to, amend, vary or rescind any order made under this section

(2) The Local Government in its order under sub-section (1) may direct—

(a) the arrest without warrant of the person in respect of whom the order is made at any place where he may be found by any police officer or by any officer of Government to whom the order may be directed or endorsed by or under the general or special authority of the Local Government,

(b) the search of any place specified in the order which in the opinion of the Local Government has been, is being, or is about to be used by such person, for the purpose of doing any act, or committing any offence, of the nature described in sub-section (1).

3. An order made under sub-section (1) of section 2 shall be served on the person in respect of whom it is made in the manner provided in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, for service of a summons, and upon such service such person shall be deemed to have had due notice thereof.

4. (1) Any officer of Government authorised in this behalf by general or special order of the Local Government may arrest without warrant any person against whom a reasonable suspicion exists that he is a person in respect of whom an order might lawfully be made under sub-section (1) of section 2

(2) Any officer exercising the power conferred by sub-section (1) may, at the time of making the arrest, search any place and seize any property which is, or is reasonably suspected of being, used by such person for the purpose of doing any act, or committing any offence, of the nature described in sub-section (1) of section 2

(3) Any officer making an arrest under sub-section (1) shall forthwith report the fact to the Local Government, and may, by order in writing, commit any person so arrested to custody pending receipt of the orders of the Local Government, and the Local Government may by general or special order specify the custody to which such person shall be committed

Provided that no person shall be detained in custody under this section for a period exceeding fifteen days save under a special order of the Local Government, and no person shall in any case be detained in custody under this section for a period exceeding one month.

5. (1) The Local Government and every officer of Government to whom any copy of any order made under section 2 has been directed or endorsed by or under the general or special authority of the Local Government may use any and every means necessary to enforce compliance with such order

(2) Any officer exercising any of the powers conferred by section 4 may use any and every means necessary to the full exercise of such powers

6. Whoever, being a person in respect of whom an order has been made under sub-section (1) of section 2, knowingly disobeys any direction in such order, shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine

7. (1) Every person in respect of whom an order has been made under sub-section (1) of section 2 shall, if so directed by any officer authorised in this behalf by general or special order of the Local Government,—

(a) permit himself to be photographed,

(b) allow his finger impressions to be taken;

(c) furnish such officer with specimens of his handwriting and signature;

(d) attend at such times and places as such officer may direct for all or any of the foregoing purposes.

(2) If any person fails to comply with or attempts to avoid any direction given in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1), he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

8. The power to issue search warrants conferred by section 98 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, shall be deemed to include a power to issue

Power of Search.

warrants authorising the search of any place in which any Magistrate mentioned in that section has reason to believe that any offence specified in the Second Schedule has been, is being, or is about to be committed, and the seizure of anything found therein or thereon which the officer executing the warrant has reason to believe has been, is being, or is intended to be, used for the commission of any such offence; and the provisions of the said Code, so far as they can be made applicable, shall apply to searches made under the authority of any warrant issued under this section, and to the disposal of any property seized in any such search; and an order for search issued by the Local Government under sub-section (2) of section 2 shall be deemed to be a search warrant issued by a Presidency Magistrate or the District Magistrate having jurisdiction in the place specified therein, and may be executed by the person to whom the order is addressed in the manner provided in this section

9. (1) Within one month from the date of an order by the Local Government under sub-section (1) of section

2, the Local Government shall place before

Scrutiny of case by two Judges.

two persons, who shall be either Sessions Judges or Additional Sessions Judges having, in either case, exercised for at least five years the powers of a Sessions Judge, or Additional Sessions Judge, the material facts and circumstances in its possession on which the order has been based or which are relevant to the inquiry, together with any such facts and circumstances relating to the case which may have subsequently come into its possession, and a statement of the allegations against the person in respect of whom the order has been made and his answers to them, if furnished by him. The said Judges shall consider the said material facts and circumstances and the allegations and answers and shall report to the Local Government whether or not in their opinion there is lawful and sufficient cause for the order.

(2) On receipt of the said report, the Local Government shall consider the same and shall pass such order thereon as appears to the Government to be just or proper.

(3) Nothing in this section shall entitle any person against whom an order has been made under sub-section (1) of section 2 to attend in person or to appear by pleader in any matter connected with the reference to the said Judges, and the proceedings and report of the said Judges shall be confidential

3. An order made under sub-section (1) of section 2 shall be served on the person in respect of whom it is made in the manner provided in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, for service of a summons, and upon such service such person shall be deemed to have had due notice thereof.

4. (1) Any officer of Government authorised in this behalf by general or special order of the Local Government may arrest without warrant any person against whom a reasonable suspicion exists that he is a person in respect of whom an order might lawfully be made under sub-section (1) of section 2.

(2) Any officer exercising the power conferred by sub-section (1) may, at the time of making the arrest, search any place and seize any property which is, or is reasonably suspected of being, used by such person for the purpose of doing any act, or committing any offence, of the nature described in sub-section (1) of section 2.

(3) Any officer making an arrest under sub-section (1) shall forthwith report the fact to the Local Government, and may, by order in writing, commit any person so arrested to custody pending receipt of the orders of the Local Government, and the Local Government may by general or special order specify the custody to which such person shall be committed.

Provided that no person shall be detained in custody under this section for a period exceeding fifteen days save under a special order of the Local Government, and no person shall in any case be detained in custody under this section for a period exceeding one month.

5. (1) The Local Government and every officer of Government to whom any copy of any order made under section 2 has been directed or endorsed by or under the general or special authority of the Local Government may use any and every means necessary to enforce compliance with such order.

(2) Any officer exercising any of the powers conferred by section 4 may use any and every means necessary to the full exercise of such powers.

6. Whoever, being a person in respect of whom an order has been made under sub-section (1) of section 2, knowingly disobeys any direction in such order, shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

7. (1) Every person in respect of whom an order has been made under sub-section (1) of section 2 shall, if so directed by any officer authorised in this behalf by general or special order of the Local Government,—

(a) permit himself to be photographed,

(b) allow his finger impressions to be taken,

(c) furnish such officer with specimens of his handwriting and signature,

(d) attend at such times and places as such officer may direct for all or any of the foregoing purposes.

(2) If any person fails to comply with or attempts to avoid any direction given in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1), he

8. The power to issue search warrants conferred by section 2 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, shall be deemed to include a power to issue warrants authorising the search of any place

Power of Search. which any Magistrate mentioned in that section has reason to believe at any offence specified in the Second Schedule has been, is being, is about to be committed, and the seizure of anything found therein thereon which the officer executing the warrant has reason to believe as been, is being, or is intended to be, used for the commission of any such offence; and the provisions of the said Code, so far as they can be made applicable, shall apply to searches made under the authority of any warrant issued under this section, and to the disposal of any property seized in any such search, and an order for search issued by the Local Government under sub-section (2) of section 2 shall be deemed to be a search warrant issued by a Presidency Magistrate or the District Magistrate having jurisdiction in the place specified therein, and may be executed by the person to whom the order is addressed in the manner provided in this section

9. (1) Within one month from the date of an order by the Local Government under sub-section (1) of section 2, the Local Government shall place before two persons, who shall be either Sessions Judges or Additional Sessions Judges having, in either case, exercised for at least five years the powers of a Sessions Judge, or Additional Sessions Judge, the material facts and circumstances in its possession on which the order has been based or which are relevant to the inquiry, together with any such facts and circumstances relating to the case which may have subsequently come into its possession, and a statement of the allegations against the person in respect of whom the order has been made and his answers to them, if furnished by him. The said Judges shall consider the said material facts and circumstances and the allegations and answers and shall report to the Local Government whether or not in their opinion there is lawful and sufficient cause for the order

(2) On receipt of the said report, the Local Government shall consider the same and shall pass such order thereon as appears to the Government to be just or proper

(3) Nothing in this section shall entitle any person against whom an order has been made under sub-section (1) of section 2 to attend in person or to appear by pleader in any matter connected with the reference to the said Judges, and the proceedings and report of the said Judges shall be confidential.

10. (1) When an order under sub-section (1) of section 2 has been made against a person, the Local Government may at any time, without conditions or upon any conditions which such person accepts, direct the suspension or cancellation of such order Power to suspend operation of orders under section 2.

(2) If any condition on which an order has been suspended or cancelled is in the opinion of the Local Government not fulfilled, the Local Government may revoke the suspension or cancellation, and thereupon the person in whose favour such suspension or cancellation was made may, if at large, be arrested by any police officer without warrant, and the order under sub-section (1) of section 2 shall be deemed to be in full force

(3) If the conditions on which such suspension or cancellation has been made include the execution of a bond with or without sureties, the Local Government may at once proceed to recover the penalty of such bond.

(4) A Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class shall in default of payment of such penalty issue, on application made in this behalf by an officer of the Local Government specially empowered, a warrant for the attachment and sale of the moveable property belonging to the defaulter or his estate if he be dead. On the issue of such warrant the provisions of sub-sections (3) and (4) of section 514 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, shall apply to such recovery.

11. (1) The Local Government shall, by order in writing, appoint such persons as it thinks fit to constitute Visiting Committees. Visiting Committees for the purposes of this Ordinance, and shall by rules prescribe the functions which these Committees shall exercise.

(2) Such rules shall provide for periodical visits to persons under restraint by reason of an order made under sub-section (1) of section 2.

(3) No person in respect of whom any such order has been made requiring him to notify his residence or change of residence or to report himself to the police or to abstain from any specified act, shall be deemed to be under restraint for the purpose of sub-section (2)

12. The Local Government shall make to every person, who is placed under restraint by reason of an order made under sub-section (1) of section 2, a monthly allowance for his support of such amount as is, in the opinion of the Local Government, adequate for the supply of his wants, and shall also make to his family, if any, and to such of his near relatives, if any, as are in the opinion of the Local Government dependent on him for support, an allowance for the supply of their wants suitable in the opinion of the Local Government to their rank in life.

Explanation.—In this section the expression “under restraint” has the same meaning as in section 11.

13. (1) The Local Government may make rules providing for the procedure to be followed regarding the notification of residence and report to the police by persons in respect of whom orders have been made under section 2, and for the place and manner of custody of all persons arrested or committed to or detained in custody under this Ordinance

(2) Such rules shall be published in the Calcutta Gazette, and on such publication shall have effect as if enacted in this Ordinance

14. No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against any person for anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done under this Ordinance

ORDINANCE No. II of 1930.

[27th April, 1930]

An Ordinance to provide for the better control of the Press.

WHEREAS an emergency has arisen which makes it necessary to provide for the better control of the Press;

Now therefore, in exercise of the power conferred by section 72 of the Government of India Act, the Governor General is pleased to make and promulgate the following Ordinance —

1. (1) This Ordinance may be called the Indian Press Ordinance, Short title and extent. 1930.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, inclusive of British Baluchistan, the Sonthal Parganas and the Pargana of Spiti

2. In this Ordinance, unless there is anything repugnant in the Definitions. subject or context,—

(a) "book" includes every volume, part or division of a volume, pamphlet and leaflet, in any language, and every sheet of music, map, chart or plan separately printed or lithographed

(b) "document" includes also any printing, drawing or photograph or other visible representation

(c) "High Court" means the highest Civil Court of Appeal for any local area except in the case of the province of Coorg where it means the High Court of Judicature at Madras;

(d) "Magistrate" means a District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate

(e) "newspaper" means any periodical work containing public news or comments on public news and

(f) "printing-press" includes all engines, machinery, types, lithographic stones, implements, utensils and other plant or materials used for the purpose of printing

3. (1) Every person keeping a printing-press who is required to make a declaration under section 4 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, shall, at the time of making the same, deposit with the Magistrate before whom the declaration is made, security to such an amount, not being less than five hundred or more than two thousand rupees, as the Magistrate may in each case think fit to require, in money or the equivalent thereof in securities of the Government of India.

Provided that the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, for special reasons to be recorded by him, dispense with the deposit of any security.

(2) The Magistrate may, at any time, cancel an order dispensing with security and require security to be deposited, and he may, at any time, vary any order fixing the 'amount of security under' this sub-section or under sub-section (1).

(3) Whenever it appears to the Local Government that any printing-press kept in any place in the territories under its administration, in respect of which a declaration was made prior to the commencement of this Ordinance under section 4 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, is used for any of the purposes described in section 4, sub-section (1), the Local Government may, by notice in writing, require the keeper of such press to deposit with the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the press is situated security to such an amount, not being less than five hundred or more than five thousand rupees, as the Local Government may think fit to require, in money or the equivalent thereof in securities of the Government of India.

4. (1) Whenever it appears to the Local Government that any printing-press in respect of which any security has been deposited as required by section 3 is used for the purpose of printing or publishing any newspaper, book or other document containing any words, signs or visible representations which are likely or may have a tendency, directly or indirectly, whether by inference, suggestion, allusion, metaphor, implication or otherwise—

Power to declare security forfeited in certain cases

(a) to incite to murder or to any offence under the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, or to any act of violence, or

(b) to seduce any officer, soldier, sailor or airman in the Army, Navy or Air Force of His Majesty or any police officer from his allegiance or his duty, or

(c) to bring into hatred or contempt His Majesty or the Government established by law in British India or the administration of justice in British India or any Indian Prince or Chief under the suzerainty of His Majesty, or any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India, or to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or the said Government or any such Prince or Chief, or

(d) to put any person in fear or to cause annoyance to him and thereby induce him to deliver to any person any property or valuable security, or to do any act which he is not legally bound to do, or to omit to do any act which he is legally entitled to do, or

(e) to encourage or incite any person to interfere with the administration of the law or with the maintenance of law and order, or to commit any offence, or to refuse or defer payment of any land-revenue, tax, rate, cess or other due or amount payable to Government or to any local authority, or any rent of agricultural land or anything recoverable as arrears of or along with such rent, or

(f) to induce a public servant or a servant of a local authority to do any act or to forbear or delay to do any act connected with the exercise of his public functions or to resign his office, or

(g) to promote feelings of enmity or hatred between different classes of His Majesty's subjects, or

(h) to prejudice the recruiting of persons to serve in any of His Majesty's forces, or in any police force, or to prejudice the training, discipline or administration of any such force, the Local Government may, by notice in writing to the keeper of such printing-press, stating or describing the words, signs or visible representations which in its opinion are of the nature described above, declare the security deposited in respect of such press and all copies of such newspaper, book or other document wherever found in British India to be forfeited to His Majesty

Explanation I—In clause (c) the expression "disaffection" includes disloyalty and all feelings of enmity.

Explanation II.—Comments expressing disapproval of the measures of the Government or of any such Indian Prince or Chief as aforesaid with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means, or of the administrative or other action of the Government or of any such Indian Prince or Chief or of the administration of justice in British India without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection do not come within the scope of clause (c)

(2) After the expiry of ten days from the date of the issue of a notice under sub-section (1), the declaration made in respect of such press under section 4 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, shall be deemed to be annulled

5. Where the security given in respect of any press has been declared forfeited under section 4, every Deposit of further security. person making a fresh declaration in respect of such press under section 4 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, shall deposit with the Magistrate before whom such declaration is made security to such amount, not being less than one thousand or more than ten thousand rupees, as the Magistrate may think fit to require, in money or the equivalent thereof in securities of the Government of India.

6. If after such further security has been deposited the printing-

Power to declare further security, printing-press and publications forfeited press is again used for the purpose of printing or publishing any newspaper, book or other document containing any words, signs or visible representations which, in the opinion of the Local Government, are of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1), the Local Government may, by notice in writing to the keeper of such printing-press, stating or describing such words, signs or visible representations, declare—

(a) the further security so deposited,

(b) the printing-press used for the purpose of printing or publishing such newspaper, book or other document or found in or upon the premises where such newspaper, book or other document is, or at the time of printing the matter complained of was, printed, and

(c) all copies of such newspaper, book or other document wherever found in British India to be forfeited to His Majesty.

7. (i) Where any printing-press is, or any copies of any newspaper, book or other document are, declared forfeited to His Majesty under this Ordinance, the Local Government may direct a Magistrate to issue a warrant empowering any police-officer, not below the rank of a Sub-Inspector, to seize and detain any property ordered to be forfeited and to enter upon and search for such property in any premises—

(i) where any such property may be or may be reasonably suspected to be, or

(ii) where any copy of such newspaper, book or other document is kept for sale, distribution, publication or public exhibition or reasonably suspected to be so kept.

(2) Every warrant issued under this section shall, so far as relates to a search, be executed in manner provided for the execution of search-warrants under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

8. (1) Every publisher of a newspaper who is required to make a declaration under section 5 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, shall, Deposit of security by publisher of newspaper.

at the time of making the same, deposit with the Magistrate before whom the declaration is made security to such an amount, not being less than five hundred or more than two thousand rupees, as the Magistrate may in each case think fit to require, in money or the equivalent thereof in securities of the Government of India :

Provided that the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, for special reasons to be recorded by him, dispense with the deposit of any security

(2) The Magistrate may, at any time, cancel an order dispensing with security and require security to be deposited, and he may, at any time vary any order fixing the amount of security under this sub-section or under sub-section (1).

(3) Whenever it appears to the Local Government that a newspaper published within its territories, in respect of which a declaration was made by the publisher thereof prior to the commencement of this Ordinance under section 5 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, contains any words, signs or visible representations of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1), the Local Government may, by notice in writing, require the publisher to deposit with the Magistrate, within whose jurisdiction the newspaper is published, security to such an amount, not being less than five hundred or more than five thousand rupees, as the Local Government may think fit to require, in money or the equivalent thereof in securities of the Government of India

9. (1) If any newspaper in respect of which any security has been deposited as required by section 8 contains

Power to declare security forfeited in certain cases

any words, signs or visible representations, which in the opinion of the Local Government, are of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1), the Local Government may, by notice in writing to the publisher of such newspaper, stating or describing such words, signs or visible representations, declare such security and all copies of such newspaper, wherever found in British India, to be forfeited to His Majesty.

(2) After the expiry of ten days from the date of the issue of a notice under sub-section (1), the declaration made by the publisher of such newspaper under section 5 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, shall be deemed to be annulled.

10. Where the security given in respect of any newspaper is declared forfeited, any person making a fresh declaration under section 5 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, as publisher of such newspaper, or any other newspaper which is the same in substance as the said newspaper, shall deposit with the Magistrate before whom the declaration is made, security to such amount, not being less than one thousand or more than ten thousand rupees, as the Magistrate may think fit to require, in money or the equivalent thereof in securities of the Government of India.

11. If, after such further security has been deposited, the newspaper again contains any words, signs or visible representations which, in the opinion of the Local Government, are of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1), the Local Government may, by notice in writing to the publisher of such newspaper, stating or describing such words, signs or visible representations, declare—

(a) the further security so deposited, and

(b) all copies of such newspaper wherever found in British India, to be forfeited to His Majesty

12. (1) Where any newspaper, book or other document wherever printed appears to the Local Government to contain any words, signs or visible representations of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1), the Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, stating the grounds of its opinion, declare every copy of the issue of the newspaper, and every copy of such book or other document to be forfeited to His Majesty, and thereupon any police-officer may seize the same wherever found in British India, and any Magistrate may by warrant authorise any police-officer not below the rank of Sub-Inspector to enter upon and search for the same in any premises where any copy of such issue or any such book or other document may be or may be reasonably suspected to be.

(2) Every warrant issued under this section shall, so far as relates to a search, be executed in manner provided for the execution of search-warrants under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898

13. The Chief Customs-officer or other officer authorized by the Local Government in this behalf may detain any package brought, whether by land, sea or air, into British India which he suspects to contain any newspapers, books or other documents of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1), and shall forthwith forward copies of any newspapers, books or other documents found therein to such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf to be disposed of in such manner as the Local Government may direct.

14. No newspaper printed and published in British India shall be transmitted by post unless the printer and publisher have made a declaration under section 5 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, and the publisher has deposited security when so required under this Ordinance.

Power to detain articles being transmitted by post.

15. Any officer in charge of a post-office or authorized by the Post-Master General in this behalf may detain any article other than a letter or parcel in course of transmission by post, which he suspects to contain—

(a) any newspaper, book or other document containing words, signs or visible representations of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1), or

(b) any newspaper in respect of which the declaration required by section 5 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, has not been made, or the security required by this Ordinance has not been deposited by the publisher thereof, and shall deliver all such articles to such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf to be disposed of in such manner as the Local Government may direct.

Application to High Court to set aside order of forfeiture.

16. Any person having an interest in any property in respect of which an order of forfeiture has been made under section 4, 6, 9, 11 or 12 may, within two months from the date of such order, apply to the High Court for the local area in which such order was made, to set aside such order on the ground that the newspaper, book or other document in respect of which the order was made did not contain any words, signs or visible representations of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1).

Hearing by Special Bench.

17. Every such application shall be heard and determined by a Special Bench of the High Court composed of three Judges, or, where the High Court consists of less than three Judges, of all the Judges.

Order of Special Bench setting aside forfeiture.

18. (1) If it appears to the Special Bench that the words, signs or visible representations contained in the newspaper, book or other document in respect of which the order in question was made were not of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1), the Special Bench shall set aside the order of forfeiture

(2) Where there is a difference of opinion among the Judges forming the Special Bench, the decision shall be in accordance with the opinion of the majority (if any) of those Judges.

(3) Where there is no such majority which concurs in setting aside the order in question, such order shall stand.

Evidence to prove nature of tendency of newspapers.

19. On the hearing of any such application with reference to any newspaper, any copy of such newspaper published after the commencement of this Ordinance may be given in evidence in aid of the proof of the nature or tendency of the words, signs or visible representations contained in such newspaper, in respect of which the order of forfeiture was made.

Procedure in High Court.

20. Every High Court shall, as soon as may be, frame rules for the practice and procedure in the case of such applications, and until such rules are framed the practice of such Court in proceedings other than suits and appeals shall apply, so far as may be practicable, to such applications.

21. Every declaration of forfeiture purporting to be made under this Ordinance shall, as against all persons, be conclusive evidence that the forfeiture therein referred to has taken place, and no proceeding purporting to be taken under this Ordinance shall be called in question by any Court, except the High Court on such application as aforesaid, and no civil or criminal proceeding, except as provided by this Ordinance, shall be instituted against any person for anything done or in good faith intended to be done under this Ordinance.

22. (1) Whoever keeps in his possession a press for the printing of books or papers without making a deposit under section 3 or section 5, when required so to do, shall on conviction by a Magistrate be liable to the penalty to which he would be liable if he had failed to make the declaration prescribed by section 4 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867.

Penalty for keeping press or publishing newspaper without making deposit

(2) Whoever publishes any newspaper without making a deposit under section 8 or section 10, when required so to do, or publishes such newspaper knowing that such security has not been deposited, shall, on conviction by a Magistrate, be liable to the penalty to which he would be liable if he had failed to make the declaration prescribed by section 5 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867.

23. (1) Where a deposit is required from the keeper of a printing-press under sub-section (1) or sub-section (3) of section 3 or under section 5, such press shall not be used for the printing or publishing of any newspaper, book or other document until the deposit has been made.

Power to declare printing-press forfeited if used before deposit is made

(2) Where any printing-press is used in contravention of sub-section (1), the Local Government may, by notice in writing to the keeper thereof, declare the press so used and any other printing-press found in or upon the premises where such press was so used, to be forfeited to His Majesty; and the provisions of section 7 shall apply.

24. Where any person has deposited any security under this Ordinance and ceases to keep the press in respect of which such security was deposited, or, being a publisher, makes a declaration under section 8 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, he may apply to the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction such press is situate for the return of the said security, and thereupon such security shall, upon proof to the satisfaction of the Magistrate and subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, be returned to such person.

Return of deposited security in certain cases

25. Every notice under this Ordinance shall be sent to a Magistrate, who shall cause it to be served in the manner provided for the service of summonses under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

Service of notices

Operation of other laws not barred.

26. Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prevent any person from being prosecuted under any other law for any act or omission which constitutes an offence against this Ordinance.

27. So long as this Ordinance remains in force, all declarations required to be made under section 4, section 5, section 8 and section 8A of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, shall be made, in a Presidency town before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, and elsewhere before the District Magistrate.

Power to detain articles being transmitted by post.

15. Any officer in charge of a post-office or authorized by the Post-Master General in this behalf may detain any article other than a letter or parcel in course of transmission by post, which he suspects to contain—

(a) any newspaper, book or other document containing words, signs or visible representations of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1), or

(b) any newspaper in respect of which the declaration required by section 5 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, has not been made, or the security required by this Ordinance has not been deposited by the publisher thereof, and shall deliver all such articles to such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf to be disposed of in such manner as the Local Government may direct.

16. Any person having an interest in any property in respect of

Application to High Court to set aside order of forfeiture, which an order of forfeiture has been made under section 4, 6, 9, 11 or 12 may, within two months from the date of such order, apply to the High Court for the local area in which such order was made, to set aside

such order on the ground that the newspaper, book or other document in respect of which the order was made did not contain any words, signs or visible representations of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1) the local official Gazette, declare to be public servants for the purposes of this Chapter.

Punishment for boycotting of a public servant.

8. Whoever boycotts or abets the boycotting of a public servant, or threatens a public servant with boycotting, shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both :

Provided that no person shall be convicted under this section if the Court is satisfied that his acts were not intended to prejudice the public servant boycotted, or proposed or threatened to be boycotted, in the discharge of the duties of his office, or to cause such public servant to terminate or withhold his services in the discharge of such duties, or to commit a breach of discipline

9. (1) An offence punishable under section 8 shall be non-cognisable, and, notwithstanding anything contained in the Second Schedule to the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, a case relating to such an offence shall, for the purposes of

section 204 of the said Code, be deemed to be one in which a warrant should issue in the first instance

(2) Where information is given to the officer in charge of a police-station of the commission within the limits of such station of an offence punishable under section 8, he shall deal with it in the manner provided in section 154 of the said Code, and, notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) of section 155 of the said Code, he shall investigate the case as if he had received an order from a competent Magistrate under sub-section (2) of that section.

CHAPTER III.

Supplemental.

10 No Magistrate other than a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class shall take cognisance of or try any offence under this Ordinance.

Jurisdiction

11. The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, declare that any offence punishable under section 183 of the Indian Penal Code, or any offence of criminal intimidation, when committed in any area specified in the notification, shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, be cognisable and non-bailable, and

Power to declare certain non-cognisable and bailable offences to be cognisable and non-bailable thereupon the said Code shall, while such notification remains in force, be deemed to be amended accordingly.

VICEROY'S STATEMENT

From the beginning of the civil disobedience movement it has been part of the programme of the Congress to use for various purposes the methods of picketing in order to make their will prevail. At the recent meeting of the Working Committee of the All-India Congress Committee held at Allahabad, resolutions were passed which urged the adoption of such methods on more intensive lines. The information received by my Government makes it plain that activities of this kind are now being pursued in various places in such a manner as gravely to interfere with the liberty of individuals in many directions.

2 The most common object with which picketing and other kinds of molestation and intimidation are being employed is for the purpose of preventing the sale of foreign goods or of liquor. It is no part of the duty of my Government, and certainly it is not their desire, to take steps against any legitimate movements directed to these ends. They are anxious to see the promotion of indigenous Indian Industries, and it is perfectly legitimate for any person, in advocacy of this object, to urge the use of Indian goods to the utmost extent of which Indian industry is capable. Nor have I anything but respect for those who preach the cause of temperance.

But what is not legitimate is for those who desire these ends, proper as they are in themselves, to pursue them by means amounting in effect to intimidation of individuals, and to endeavour to force their views on others, not by argument but by the coercive effect of fear. When resort is had to such methods, it becomes necessary for Government to protect the natural freedom of action of those who may wish to sell and those who may wish to buy.

3. Unscrupulous efforts are also being made by the organisers of the civil disobedience movement to bring pressure to bear on Government servants to resign their posts or fail in their duty. The methods employed include, not only various forms of molestation and intimidation, but also definite attempts to use the weapon of boycott against Government servants. Thus it is found that in different parts of the country, not only are the residences of Government servants picketed and they themselves and their relatives subjected to threats of injury to life or property, but organised attempts are made to refuse them necessary supplies, the use of transport and the tenancy of houses. These methods have reached their maximum intensity in Gujerat, but they are also being practised in other parts of the country.

4 In normal circumstances when intimidation is a comparatively rare offence the ordinary law suffices. But when, as now, intimidation in its various forms is carefully organised and constitutes an important part of the programme of a movement designed to paralyse the Government and to coerce the public, it is necessary to see that powers should be adequate to deal rapidly and effectively with a menace to the public liberty. I have accordingly thought it essential to promulgate an Ordinance which is designed to protect the public in general against molestation and intimidation and to check the boycott of Government servants. These powers will not be used to impede or interfere with the legitimate promotion of any economic movement which has for its object the furtherance of indigenous enterprise, nor will they be exercised in regard to any genuine labour dispute. The Ordinance is directed only at those movements which are being organised by the Government servants' movement. It will be withdrawn as soon as the Government servants' movement is withdrawn. The Ordinance, moreover, has been so drafted as to be applied only where the powers are actually required. It will not be applied to any province in which the local Government has not satisfied my Government that the activities of the civil disobedience movement has rendered its application necessary. Further, within a province, the powers to deal with molestation or with the boycott of Government servants will come into force only in those areas in which the local Government considers that the situation necessitates their application. But where the situation so demands, I have no doubt that it is my duty to empower local Governments to give protection to those who merely desire to carry on their lawful business and pursuits without let or hindrance, and to safeguard public servants, as far as may be, against the attempt to deprive them by means of boycott of the ordinary requirements of daily life.

ORDINANCE No. VI of 1930.

[30th May, 1930]

An Ordinance to provide against instigation to the refusal of the payment of certain liabilities.

WHEREAS an emergency has arisen which makes it necessary to provide against instigation to the illegal refusal of the payment of certain liabilities:

Now therefore, in exercise of the powers conferred by section 72 of the Government of India Act, the Governor General is pleased to make and promulgate the following Ordinance:—

1. (1) This Ordinance may be called the Short title and extent. Unlawful Instigation Ordinance, 1930.
(2) It extends to the whole of British India, including British Baluchistan and the South Parganas.

2. (1) The Governor General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, empower any Local Government to make declarations under sub-sections (2) and (3).
(2) A Local Government empowered in this behalf may, by notification in the local official Gazette, declare that any part of the province or the whole province shall be a notified area for the purposes of this Ordinance.

(3) Such Local Government may further, by the same or by subsequent notification, declare that in such notified area, land-revenue or any sum recoverable as arrears of land-revenue, or any tax, rate, cess or other due or amount payable to Government or to any local authority, or rent of agricultural land, or anything recoverable as arrears of or along with such rent, shall be a notified liability.

3. Whoever, by words, either spoken or written, or by signs or by visible representations, or otherwise, instigates, expressly or impliedly, any class of persons to refuse to pay any such notified liability and whoever that any words,

t to be likely such instigation shall thereby be communicated directly or indirectly to any person or class of persons in a notified area, in any manner whatsoever, shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both

4. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, an offence punishable under this Ordinance shall be cognisable and non-bailable.

(2) No Magistrate shall take cognisance of any offence punishable under this Ordinance except upon a report in writing of facts which constitute such offence made by a police-officer not below the rank of sub-inspector.

5. (1) Where—

Power to declare certain publications forfeited and to issue search warrants for the same

(a) any newspaper or book as defined in the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, or

(b) any document,

wherever made, appears to the Local Government to contain any matter the publication of which is punishable under section 3, the Local Government may seize the same, wherever found in British India, and any Magistrate may by warrant authorise any police-officer not below the rank of sub-inspector to enter upon and search for the same in any premises where any copy of such issue or any such book or other document may be or may be reasonably suspected to be

(2) In sub-section (1) "document" includes also any painting, drawing or photograph, or other visible representation.

(3) An order of forfeiture under sub-section (1) shall be deemed to be an order of forfeiture under section 99A of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and sections 99B, 99C, 99D, 99E, 99F and 99G shall apply thereto, with such modifications as may be required to adapt them to the provisions of this Ordinance.

VICEROY'S STATEMENT

At the meeting of the Working Committee of the All-India Congress Committee held recently at Allahabad a resolution was passed to the effect that the time had arrived for the inauguration of a no-tax campaign by non-payment of specified taxes in certain provinces. Previous to the passing of this resolution a movement for the refusal of the payment of land revenue had been started in certain districts of Gujerat in the Bombay Presidency, and attempts had been made in several other provinces to persuade revenue and tax payers to withhold the payment of their liabilities. The decision above referred to clearly contemplates a wide extension of the civil disobedience movement in the shape of an appeal to the masses which must if successful involve grave reactions upon the administration and the stability of the State.

2 The taxes against which the movement is at present aimed are sources of provincial revenue, and their non-payment would deprive Local Governments of a considerable part of the resources on which they depend for the efficient conduct of the reserved and transferred departments. Were the programme of the Congress to meet with any appreciable measure of success, its first result would be to deprive the people of the advantage of the beneficent activities in which Local Governments are engaged. It is clear, however, that no Government can tolerate the non-payment of its dues and that the Local Governments confronted with a challenge of this nature, must exercise to the full the powers of realisation with which they are by law invested. The consequences will inevitably be suffering and distress to those who respond to the incitements of the Congress. Thus, both in the interests of the State and of the persons whom it is the design of the Congress to lead astray it is necessary to stop in its initial stages a movement so fraught with dangerous consequences.

3 While the law gives powers to proceed against persons who refuse to discharge their public liabilities, it does not include provisions by which effective action can be taken against those who for political purposes, mislead and instigate others to their undoing. Having regard to these considerations and to the necessity of firm and prompt action against a movement, the object of which is to bring the administration to a standstill, I have deemed it necessary to promulgate an Ordinance, by which Local Governments may, as the necessity is established, be invested with powers to deal effectively with persons who instigate others to withhold the payment of certain lawful dues. I have thought it proper to include within the purview of the Ordinance certain liabilities (for instance, the rent of agricultural land) which although not included in the dues which form the present announced object of attack by the Congress, have been mentioned by them from time to time as coming within the scope of the civil disobedience movement and would indeed in many parts of the country form the inevitable object of attack if any movement were initiated to withhold payment of revenue to Government.

4 The powers taken under the Ordinance will not be used by Local Governments to modify their revenue policy or to attenuate in any way the concessions by way of suspensions remissions or otherwise which it is their practice to grant. Nor will the Ordinance be used indirectly to give assistance to landlords in the normal process of realization of rent or to facilitate enhancement of rent. It will be confined strictly to its declared purpose, namely, to prevent instigation in pursuance of a political movement to refuse payments lawfully due. I trust that in taking measures to check at the outset a movement which is intended to disorganise the administration and which must, if successful, damage the whole economic structure of society, I shall have the support of all those who desire to resist a plain threat to orderly progress and stable government.

ORDINANCE No. VII of 1930.

[2nd July, 1930.]

An Ordinance to provide for the control of unauthorised news-sheets and newspapers.

WHEREAS an emergency has arisen which makes it necessary to provide for the control of unauthorised news-sheets and newspapers,

Now therefore, in exercise of the power conferred by section 72 of the Government of India Act, the Governor General is pleased to make and promulgate the following Ordinance :—

Short title, extent and duration. 1. (1) This Ordinance may be called the Unauthorised News-sheets and Newspapers Ordinance, 1930

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, inclusive of British Baluchistan, the Southal Parganas and the Pargana of Spiti.

(3) It shall remain in force so long as the Indian Press Ordinance, II of 1930, remains in force

Definitions. 2. In this Ordinance, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(a) "newspaper" means any periodical work containing public news or comments on public news;

(b) "news-sheet" means any non-periodical document containing public news or comments on public news or any matter described in sub-section (1) of section 4 of the Indian Press Ordinance, II of 1930,

(c) "press" includes a printing-press and all machines, implements and plant and parts thereof and all materials used for multiplying documents;

(d) "unauthorised newspaper" means—

(i) any newspaper in respect of which there are not for the time being valid declarations under section 5 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, and

(ii) any newspaper in respect of which security has been required under the Indian Press Ordinance, II of 1930, but has not been furnished,

(e) "unauthorised news-sheet" means any news-sheet other than a news-sheet published by a person authorised under section 3 to publish it,

(f) "undeclared press" means any press other than a press in respect of which there is for the time being a valid declaration under section 4 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, and

(g) "document" and "printing-press" have the meanings assigned to them in the Indian Press Ordinance, 1930

Authorisation of persons to publish news-sheets 3. (1) The Chief Presidency Magistrate or the District Magistrate may, by order in writing, authorise any person by name to publish a news-sheet, or to publish news-sheets from time to time

(2) A copy of an order under sub-section (1) shall be furnished to the person thereby authorised

(3) The Chief Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate may at any time revoke an order made by him under sub-section (1)

Power to seize and destroy unauthorised news sheets and newspapers. 4. (1) Any police-officer may seize any unauthorised news-sheet or unauthorised newspaper, wherever found

(2) Any Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class may by warrant authorise any police-officer not below the rank of Sub-Inspector to enter upon and search any place where any stock of unauthorised news-sheets or unauthorised newspapers may be or may be reasonably suspected to be, and such police-officer may seize any documents found in such place which, in his opinion, are unauthorised news-sheets or unauthorised newspapers

(3) All documents seized under sub-section (1) shall be produced as soon as may be before a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class, and all documents seized under sub-section (2) shall be produced as soon as may be before the Court of the Magistrate who issued the warrant

(4) If, in the opinion of such Magistrate or Court, any of such documents are unauthorised news-sheets or unauthorised newspapers, the Magistrate or Court may cause them to be destroyed. If, in the opinion of such Magistrate or Court, any of such documents are not unauthorised news-sheets or unauthorised newspapers, such Magistrate or Court shall dispose of them in the manner provided in sections 523, 524 and 525 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

5. (1) Where a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate has reason to believe that an unauthorised news-sheet or unauthorised newspaper is being produced from an undeclared press within the limits of his jurisdiction, he may by warrant authorise any police-officer not below the rank of Sub-Inspector to enter upon and search any place wherein such undeclared press may be or may be reasonably suspected to be, and if, in the opinion of such police-officer, any press found in such place is an undeclared press and is used to produce an unauthorised news-sheet or unauthorised newspaper, he may seize such press and any documents found in the place which in his opinion are unauthorised news-sheets or unauthorised newspapers.

(2) The police-officer shall make a report of the search to the Court which issued the warrant and shall produce before such Court, as soon as may be, all property seized:

Provided that where any press which has been seized cannot be readily removed, the police-officer may produce before the Court only such parts thereof as he may think fit.

(3) If such Court, after such inquiry as it may deem requisite, is of opinion that a press seized under this section is an undeclared press which is used to produce an unauthorised news-sheet or unauthorised newspaper, it may, by order in writing, declare the press to be forfeited to His Majesty. If, after such inquiry, the Court is not of such opinion, it shall dispose of the press in the manner provided in sections 523, 524 and 525 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

(4) The Court shall deal with documents produced before it under this section in the manner provided in sub-section (4) of section 4

6. Every warrant issued under this Ordinance shall, so far as it relates to a search, be executed in the manner provided for the execution of search-warrants under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

7. Every declaration of forfe

Jurisdiction barred.

to be taken under this Ordinan
Court, and no civil or criminal any person for anything done or this Ordinance.
